A. Well, it would be very hard for me to estimate.

Q. Would it be as much as you had given him before? A. I didn't think so, no.

Q. Half that much? A. Possibly.

Q. Till about the time that trip was finished you had furnished Barber, let us say, 15 per cent of what you have testified to here, is that about correct?

A. That sounds like a fair approximation, but I am not too sure about it.

Q. You did not stay in Los Angeles any night that you were down there on that trip, is that right?

A. I don't believe I did on that trip. I may have.

Q. Did you meet any other persons at that time connected with either the CIO or the Government?

A. Yes, I ran into some officials of the CIO in the lobby of the Alexandria Hotel, I believe.

Q. Did you have any talk with them on this subject?

A. No, I just shook hands said hello to them. They were having some kind of conference.

Q. But no person that you had any contact with about these matters?

A. Nobody in the CIO, no, sir. [6614]

Q. So you apparently, during the four or five days that the ship was tied up down there, met Barber four or five times, is that correct?

A. I think that would be about right.

Q. That would be practically every day you had some contact with him?

A. Probably that is true, yes.

Q. On the occasion that you went to Long Beach you spent the evening with him? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Anybody else with you?

A. No, just he and I.

Q. On the other occasions that you went there how much time did you spend with him?

A. As I said previously, my recollection is the first time I spent a good part of an afternoon in his office, and then I may have gone to the office again, but I am not certain about that. If I did, it wasn't for any long period of time. And then we spent a couple of evenings together.

Q. Then your ship came back to San Francisco, I take it, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And arrived in San Francisco when?

A. Well, again relating it to Christmas, Christmas eve, I think the ship sailed from San Francisco early in March. That is my [6615] recollection. So that would be the latter part of February, probably.

Q. So the ship then returned to San Francisco either the latter part of February or the early part of March?

A. The schedule is available of that ship's movements.

Q. Can you get that?

A. I don't happen to have one. I suppose it can be gotten.

Q. After the ship returned to San Francisco—or on the way back did you talk to anybody, was there anybody on the ship connected with the Immigration Department?

A. No, sir, there was not.

Q. On any voyage that you took was there any person ~~aboard~~ connected with the Immigration Department? A. No, sir, there was not.

Q. When you returned to San Francisco did you again see Barber or Kaiser or somebody connected with the Immigration Service?

A. I believe I saw Mr. McGowan. I am not too certain about that.

Q. Was he the next person whom you did see?

A. About along in that period it is my recollection that I met Mr. McGowan.

Q. How long after you came back to San Francisco? A. You mean the ship came back?

Q. Yes.

A. Oh, probably a day or [6616] two.

Q. And where did you meet him?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. It is my recollection he came down to my home at Half Moon Bay.

Q. Was he alone? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have a talk with him?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Where did that talk take place?

A. I believe it took place in my home.

Q. Did you go over to the Miramar Hotel with him? A. I don't think so.

Q. How long did the conversation last?

A. Oh, only a few minutes. He had some message from Mr. Barber, as I recall it, wanting to know about when the ship was sailing or something, or where I could be contacted or something like that. He was merely——

Q. Conveying that message?

A. Conveying some message.

Q. Whom did you meet next then?

A. I don't recall meeting anybody else outside—my recollection is the ship sailed early in March, as I stated, and got back here to San Francisco about the end of April or sometime in April. As I say, if you get the schedule you can get the exact dates.

Q. The ship returning at the end of April, by whom were you [6617] next contacted?

A. When the ship got in San Francisco here, a gentleman came down aboard the ship from the Immigration Service and gave me a message to call Mr. Barber.

Q. What was his name?

A. His name, I believe, was Mr. McAlexander.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Who? A. McAlexander, I think it is.

Q. Did you get in touch with Barber?

A. Yes, I called him.

Q. Then when did you see Barber?

A. Sometime shortly after that.

Q. Where?

A. I believe in San Francisco. No, I think it was in San Pedro. I think—my recollection is I made the coastwise trip, what they call a coastwise trip, that is, from San Francisco back down to San Pedro and back.

Q. And you met him in San Pedro?

A. That is my belief, yes, sir.

Q. Did you go to his office again in Los Angeles?

A. No; as I recall it on that second trip—and I may be somewhat confused between the two times I was in San Pedro there on the ship, but my best recollection is I had—when I called him on the telephone, after Mr. McAlexander's message, I told him approximately when I would be in San Pedro, and my recollection [6618] is shortly after the ship docked he came down to the ship.

Q. Is Barber stationed regularly in Los Angeles, so far as you know?

A. My understanding was that he was at that particular time. He had an office in Los Angeles.

Q. So your phone call was then to Los Angeles?

A. That is correct.

Q. You phoned him long distance?

A. That is right.

Q. You told him when your ship was going to be in San Pedro, and when you got down there he came down to the ship? A. That is my recollection.

Q. Where did you go?

A. I believe we went to his office.

Q. Did you meet anybody else there then?

A. I believe I met Mr. Kaiser there.

Q. How long were you there?

A. You mean in the office?

Q. Yes, in his office.

A. Oh, probably a couple of hours.

Q. Did you give any further statement at that time? A. Not at that particular time, no.

Q. Did you on that trip? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many days were you down in Los Angeles on that occasion? [6619]

A. Approximately the same time as on the previous trip.

Q. Four or five days, right?

A. Four or five days.

Q. How many of those days did you meet Barber? Every day?

A. No, I think I met him two or three times on that trip.

Q. How many times did you meet Kaiser?

A. Well, I met Kaiser the same times as I met Barber.

Q. You did not meet them apart?

A. No, I met Mr. Barber separately, but I mean at times I was with Mr. Barber.

Q. Did you meet anybody else down there connected with the Immigration Department?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. No, sir, not as I recall.

Q. Or visit any officials of the CIO?

A. No.

Q. On any of those occasions did you furnish some further information?

A. Yes, up until that time I had not agreed to give testimony in any proceeding. When I got back there Mr. Barber said that the Government planned to call the grand jury into session and would I be willing to testify before the grand jury. Sometime during that particular trip down there I did not agree to testify, but I did give the additional information.

Q. How much additional information did you give? A. Quite a bit. [6620]

Q. As much as you had given before entirely?

A. I would say more.

Q. How much more?

A. Well, I would say twice as much. I mean, this is very rough.

Q. By that time you had given him about 45 per cent all together of the testimony you had given on the stand, is that right?

A. That is correct, That is my best recollection of it.

Q. So then, this being in the latter part of April, 1949, by the time the ship left——

A. Oh, yes, I am sorry. I made an error there. You asked me if I met anybody else in Los Angeles.

Q. Yes.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. At that time I met Mr. Donohue in Los Angeles also.

Q. Where did you meet Mr. Donohue?

A. I believe I met him in Mr. Barber's office.

Q. You are sure it was on this trip?

A. Yes, I am sure that was on the trip.

Q. Did you meet him by appointment?

A. No, here is the way it happened: Mr. Barber, when he got in touch with me, he told me this gentleman was coming out from Washington, D. C., sent out by the Attorney General to look into this case.

Q. To what?

A. To look into it, to investigate it, or something like that. [6621] I believe he used the words "look into it." He had been appointed special assistant to the Attorney General and he would be in his office the next day or the day after, anyway, during the time I was going to be there; would I come into Los Angeles. So I did come into Los Angeles and I met Mr. Donohue in Mr. Barber's office. That is my recollection of it.

Q. Was anybody else there at the time?

A. Mr. Kaiser may have been there. I am not certain as to that.

Q. How long did that meeting take place or last?

A. It lasted—we discussed things most of the afternoon and then it is my recollection we went out somewhere and they took me back to the ship that evening.

Q. Did you go to dinner with them?

A. I believe I did, yes.

Q. Both of them? A. I believe I did.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I believe I did. I don't recall it clearly.

Q. Was that the occasion upon which you furnished them some additional information?

A. That was one of the occasions, yes.

Q. Did you meet Mr. Donohue again during that trip to Los Angeles, or did you only meet him on the one occasion at that time? [6622]

A. It is my impression that Mr. Donohue left shortly afterwards for San Francisco. I may have met him again. I may have met him twice there.

Q. You may have met him twice? A. Yes.

Q. Was Mr. Donohue present at the time you furnished the additional information on that occasion?

A. I don't think Mr. Donohue was present at the time I gave a statement. I think I discussed some of the information with Mr. Donohue.

Q. Was the statement reduced to writing?

A. It was.

Q. Was it signed by you? A. It was.

Q. Did it include the previous statements you had made, or was it all new material?

A. It was an amplification of the previous statements.

Q. By the time you returned to San Francisco, including all the information you had given, you had furnished Mr. Barber or Mr. Donohue or both of them with about 45 per cent of the testimony that you have given on the witness stand on this trial; is that about right? A. I am not——

Q. Let us put it this way, Mr. Rathborne: You

first said——

A. I had given them—discussed the matter with them and given [6623] them, I believe, two signed statements containing information regarding the matters that are in this case here. What percentage it was, I am not really prepared to state, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. But according to your best estimate, without confining yourself too closely, it would be around 45 per cent of what you have testified, is that right?

A. I would say that might be approximately correct.

Q. We only want it approximately. It doesn't have to be exact. We won't hold you to it precisely. Then after Mr. Donohue left Los Angeles did you see Mr. Barber again down there?

A. I believe I did.

Q. Did you only go out to dinner on the one occasion with Mr. Donohue in Los Angeles?

A. I am not sure about the dinner. I am sure of the fact that Mr. Donohue, Mr. Barber and I drove back to the harbor, and the Lurline was laying alongside of the President Madison then, and Mr. Donohue and I walked down the dock and looked at the Lurline. He was very much impressed by it. That is the thing that registers in my memory as far as spending part of the evening with Mr. Donohue.

Q. Then you returned to San Francisco on that trip, and that would bring you to San Francisco approximately when?

A. I think it is around the early part of May.

Q. The early part of May. [6624]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Yes.

Q. Whom did you next see connected with the prosecution or the Immigration Department?

A. I believe I saw Mr. Donohue in San Francisco and also Mr. Barber. He had come to San Francisco.

Q. Who was the first one you saw?

A. I don't recall myself. I saw them both, but I don't recall which order I saw them in.

Q. Were they together when you saw them, or did you see them each separately?

A. Well, I saw them on some occasions when they were together.

Q. I want to get the first occasion after you came back up to San Francisco. Whom did you see first?

A. I believe it was Mr. Barber, but I am not——

Q. Where did you see him?

A. He was staying in a hotel here in San Francisco.

Q. What hotel?

A. I believe it was the Cartwright Hotel.

Q. How did you happen to go see him there?

A. He asked me to see him, to get in touch with him.

Q. In other words, in Los Angeles he asked you to get in touch with him when you got to San Francisco, is that correct?

A. That is my recollection, yes.

Q. And you phoned him and went to see him, is that right? A. That is true. [6625]

Q. And how long were you with him there?

A. Well, I was with him there quite a number of occasions.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Well, I want to get the first one, if you will.

A. Well, I don't distinctly recall the first one, because there were several occasion on which I saw Mr. Barber at the Cartwright Hotel.

Q. All right. Now, how many times—let's take the period from your arrival back in San Francisco until you first appeared before the grand jury. Do you know what the date was that you appeared before the grand jury?

A. It was some time early in May, I believe.

Q. Do you know what part of May?

A. I am not certain, Mr. Hallinan. There is another matter that the record could be produced on.

Q. It was in the early part of May, though, is that right.

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. Let's say some time in the first third of May, some place between the 1st and the 10th?

A. Well, sir, I left the ship, as I remember, on May the 9th and it was—my recollection is it was some time after that, a few days after that. But as I say, those matters can be established much better by the records.

Q. Well, we haven't any record on it, Mr. Rathborne. They don't give us that.

A. Newspaper reporters—— [6626]

Q. They don't give us any records of the grand jury or when anything happened there, so we will have to depend upon your recollection as far as may be. Now, apparently, then, your first appearance before the grand jury was not in the first third of the month, but in the first half of the month, let us say, some time before the 15th?

A. That would be my best recollection.

Q. All right. Now, how many times from your arrival in San Francisco in the early part of May, until your first appearance before the grand jury, did you meet Mr. Barber.

A. Oh, I met him almost daily.

Q. You met Barber almost daily?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?

A. Usually in the Cartwright Hotel.

Q. Were you living in San Francisco during that period? A. No, I was living——

Q. You were going back and forth each night?

A. That's right.

Q. How were you getting there.

A. Driving the car.

Q. Your own car? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how many times from the return to San Francisco in the early part of May until your first appearance before the grand [6627] jury did you see Mr. Donohue?

A. Quite a few times, several times.

Q. How many?

A. Oh, I don't know. Again, I am not certain. A number of times.

Q. Well, just what a "number" means is——

A. Well, a period, apparently, boiling down to about ten days or so between the time I left the ship and my appearance before the grand jury. And I would say that I saw him almost daily during that period, whatever it was.

Q. Where did you see him?

A. I saw him in a number of places. I saw him in the Cartwright Hotel, saw him at the St. Francis Hotel, among places I saw him.

Q. And on the occasion that you saw Mr. Donohue, was Barber present with him?

A. Sometimes.

Q. About what percentage of the time?

A. Well, there were occasions when I saw both Mr. Donohue and Mr. Barber, and then I would go somewhere with one of them and so on most instances when I saw Mr. Donohue and Mr. Barber, I saw them together. But during those instances there were occasions when I talked to each one of them separately.

Q. Was Kaiser present on any of those occasions?

A. I believe he was, but I am not certain.

Q. Any other agent or any other person connected with the [6628] department?

A. Mr. McGowan was around then, too. I don't know whether he—I believe Mr. Boyd was also in town.

Q. Boyd? A. Yes.

Q. And was he present at some of these meetings? A. That's right.

Q. Now, did you at any time between furnishing this last statement that you testified to in Los Angeles and your appearance before the grand jury furnish any of these gentlemen with a further statement? A. I did.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. When?

A. A short time before I appeared before the grand jury.

Q. How long before?

A. Oh, I would say a few days.

Q. Can you tell us how many?

A. No, sir, I can't.

Q. And did that statement contain additional information to that which you had already given?

A. It did.

Q. And about what percentage of the testimony that you have given on this witness stand was contained in this further statement?

A. I would say substantially all of it. [6629]

Q. In other words, you made up the remaining 55 per cent, is that right?

A. Well, if you insist on putting it 45 and 55 per cent.

Q. Well, I don't—I want to know approximately. I asked you, you were the one who fixed the figure.

A. Well, my reply is that I gave them substantially all of the information.

Q. So that by the time you were before the grand jury, then, you had furnished three statements containing all of the information that you have given on the trial here, is that right?

A. I would say—I mean, whether it contained every item of information I have testified to, no, but substantially all that information.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Now, where was that statement given?

A. My recollection is it was given at the Cartwright Hotel.

Q. Who was present?

A. I believe Mr. Barber, and I am not certain—I think maybe Mr. Kaiser may have been present and a stenographer.

Q. Not Mr. Donohue?

A. I don't think so, no, sir.

Q. Had you stated before that time to Mr. Donohue what the balance of your testimony was or what further information you knew?

A. I discussed the matter generally. I hadn't—I didn't know how fully I dicussed it. [6630]

Q. Now, these meetings that you had from the time you arrived in San Francisco in the early part of May up until your first appearance before the grand jury, on an average, how long did those meetings last? Would you stay here all day with those people?

A. No, sometimes they lasted a matter of two or three hours, sometimes for a few minutes.

Q. I see. Did you take your meals with them in the course of these meetings?

A. Sometimes; sometimes I did.

Q. And did you have any social contact with them over and in addition to the business meetings you were having?

A. Well, for example, if we had had a meeting in the afternoon, once in a while we would go out for dinner somewhere, or we would go out to lunch occasionally.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne:)

Q. Take your family along on any occasion or any part of it? A. No, I don't recall.

Q. Or the family or any of the other persons involved?

A. I believe Mrs. Donohue was in town then and she occasionally accompanied us out to dinner.

Q. That is Mr. Donohue's wife?

A. That's right.

Q. How many occasions was that?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Well, was it a half dozen, three, ten? [6631]

A. Possibly two or three.

Q. Was your wife along?

A. I don't think so.

Q. On any such occassion?

A. Not during that period, no, sir. Not that I recall.

Q. How about Barber, was his wife along?

A. I believe Mrs. Barber was in Los Angeles. I don't think she came up here. I could be wrong on that.

Q. All right. Then you made your first appearance before the grand jury, you gave some testimony, is that right? A. That's right.

Q. Now, between the time that you left New York and the time you appeared before the grand jury, did you have any talk about testifying in this case with any local, state officials of the CIO?

A. No, sir.

Q. None at all? A. No.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did you have any discussion with a member of any—with any officer of any union on the subject, any state officer or local officer?

A. I don't recall any.

Q. Did you discuss the matter with your wife?

A. I did.

Q. Tell her what you were going to do? [6632]

A. Told her what I was thinking of doing, yes.

Q. Then you testified before the grand jury.

Mr. Hallinan: Could we have the date of Mr. Rathborne's testimony before the grand jury? Any objection to that?

Mr. Donohue: I haven't it here. I will get it at the recess, if your Honor please. The record is upstairs.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Did you testify before the grand jury once or more than once on this subject? A. Twice, I believe.

Q. Twice. Now, you think that one of them was approximately the middle of the month of May?

A. That is my best recollection, yes.

Q. And how long were you in the grand jury room giving testimony?

A. I believe it was about, I believe about a few hours. Now, I am not—it might have been longer than that.

Q. And what part of the day was that, evening, daytime, what?

A. My recollection is it was in the morning.

Q. Did anybody accompany you to the grand jury room? A. To the room?

Q. Yes. A. Yes.

Q. Who? A. Mr. Barber did.

Q. Barber. Where had you stayed the night before? [6633]

A. I believe I stayed at the Cartwright Hotel here in San Francisco.

Q. Just for the one night, preceding your appearance before the grand jury?

A. My recollection is that I was at that hotel for several days.

Q. Continuously? A. Yes.

Q. In other words, you stayed at the Cartwright Hotel for several days continuously preceding your appearance before the grand jury?

A. I don't say—I don't think preceding it. Now, one of the nights might have been preceding it, I am not certain as to that.

Q. I see. But there was some time that you spent a series of days continuously at the Cartwright Hotel, during which period you testified before the grand jury?

A: That is my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. And how many days was that altogether, do you know? A. That I stayed there?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I don't, Mr. Hallinan. I think probably would be around three or four, but again, my memory is not too——

Q. All right. Well, after you testified before the grand jury, did you return to the Cartwright Hotel? I mean, did you stay there that same night [6634] again?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I think that's right.

Q How long after your first appearance before the grand jury did you make your second appearance before that body? A. Several days.

Q. Can you tell us about how many days?

A. No, I can't.

Q. What do you mean by "several"? Six or seven, ten?

A. Well, I think probably it was a week after my—it was about, as close as I can recall, I testified before the grand jury one week and then again the following week.

Q. And the intervening days, the days between your first appearance and your second appearance you lived at the Cartwright Hotel, is that right?

A. I am not certain that all of that time was spent there.

Q. Did your wife stay with you up there or did she remain in your home in Half Moon Bay?

A. She remained in Half Moon Bay.

Q. Did anybody occupy the room with you at the Cartwright Hotel? A. No.

Q. Anybody connected with the Immigration Department occupy an adjoining room?

A. There were—Mr. Barber was staying there, and I believe Mr. Kaiser was. I don't believe the rooms were adjoining.

Q. How far away from yours was their [6635] room?

A. To my recollection, it was on a different floor.

Q. It was on a different floor?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Yes. I may be wrong about that.

Q. All right. Now, you testified for a couple of hours before the grand jury on the first occasion. How long did you testify on the second occasion?

A. Rather a short period of time. I think maybe 20, 30 minutes.

Q. And on the second occasion, was it simply something you had omitted from your first testimony, or was it a new and different subject that was gone into?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor pleases. The substance of the witness' testimony before the grand jury is a matter which Mr. Hallinan has been instructed on prior occasions Your Honor would not permit him to go into.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I know it is a matter they won't permit us to see, I grant that. But I don't——

The Court: This is a general question as to the overall——

Mr. Hallinan: That is all.

The Witness: May I answer?

The Court: Yes, sir.

A. On the same general subject.

Q. On the same general subject. All right. Now, when you finished your testimony, that is the second testimony before the grand jury, did you continue to live at the Cartwright [6636] Hotel or did you go on home?

A. No, I lived—my recollection is that I lived, that I went back home. I mean, as I recall it, my stay at the Cartwright Hotel was a comparatively short time.

Q. After you had finished your second testimony at the Cartwright Hotel, which would be toward the latter part of May, when did you next talk to any of these gentlemen, that is, connected with the prosecution?

A. I don't remember exactly, Mr. Hallinan. I talked to Mr. Barber, I believe, in that intervening there, on several occasions. I believe he came down to see me once or twice. But I don't recall exact times and places. But there was contact between us during that period, rather infrequent. That is not on a daily basis.

Q. Well, let us take—you know when the trial started; it started on the 14th of November. Now, on an average, how often per month did you see Mr. Barber from the time that the case ended until the—that is, the testimony before the grand jury ended, your testimony, and the 14th of November, when the trial started?

A. Well, I say, during this past summer—that is, I guess I saw him four or five times.

Q. Altogether?

A. During the summer, yes, sir.

Q. And then how about the fall—September, October? Well, let's [6637] put it this way. Now take the month of June, 1949; you saw him during that month how many times?

A. Oh, I can't get that specific on it, Mr. Hallinan. My memory is just—doesn't break itself down to that month by month proposition.

Q. Suppose we take the three months of June, July and August; how many times would you say you saw him?

A. My best estimate would be I probably saw him four or five times during that period.

Q. Where?

A. Well, sometimes in San Francisco and sometimes down at the Miramar Hotel.

Q. All right. During that time how many times did you see him at the Miramar Hotel?

A. Probably twice.

Q. Ever see him in your own home during that period? A. I don't believe I did.

Q. Now, how about Mr. Donohue? How many times did you see him, if at all, during that period? That is, June, July and August.

A. I don't believe I saw him at all. I think Mr. Donohue had returned to Washington.

Q. I see. Now, during that three months did you see any of the other agents? A. Yes.

Q. Who? [6638] A. I saw Mr. Kessler.

Q. Who else?

A. I believe I saw Mr. McGowan, and when I visited Mr. Barber in San Francisco, I believe it was during that period I was introduced to a number of other men whose names I don't recall, and I believe I saw Mr. Kaiser during that period, too. I know that I saw Mr. Kaiser and Mr. McGowan, and these other gentlemen in the period between the grand jury proceedings and the time this case started.

Q. Well, now, let's get this. We are taking the period of June, July and August, 1949, that you call the summer months.

A. Yes. My best recollection is that I saw, as I said, Mr. Barber on about four occasions.

Q. How many times did you see Mr. Kessler?

A. On quite a number of occasions.

Q. How many in that period?

A. Oh, I would say almost every day. [6639]

Q. Where?

A. Usually down at Half Moon Bay.

Q. Was he living with you? A. No, sir.

Q. Where was he living?

A. He was living at the Miramar Hotel.

Q. Do you know when he started living at the Miramar Hotel?

A. I think it was in June. I am not certain of that.

Q. Did he have his family with him?

A. He had his wife with him.

Q. The Miramar Hotel is about two miles from your home, is that right?

A. Between two and three miles north of Half Moon Bay.

Q. Who first introduced you to Mr. Kesler?

A. Mr. Kesler did.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. Mr. Kesler himself.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did he just show up at your house, phone you, or what?

A. Mr. Barber informed me Mr. Kesler was coming down there to stay and he would be making himself known to me.

Q. And then one day Mr. Kesler appeared?

A. That is right.

Q. He identified himself; he had his credentials, I take it? A. That is right.

Q. Told you he had moved into the Miramar Hotel, is that [6640] right?

A. That is right, that is right.

Q. And then you went over to the Miramar Hotel and visited with him?

A. He came to my house. I went to the Miramar Hotel. We would go fishing together and went up cutting trees together, working together.

Q. Fishing, cutting trees, working—what kind of work?

A. Well, I was clearing a little land and occasionally he used to help me on Saturdays and Sundays.

Q. Do you know if he had any other occupation at that time other than working with you?

A. I don't know about that.

Q. During that period what portion of the day did you spend with Mr. Kesler on an average?

A. Well, during June I would spend probably maybe two or three hours a day with him. In July and August I saw him much less frequently. He was going to San Francisco every day, and I saw him, oh, probably two or three times a week.

Q. Did his wife continue to stay at the hotel at the times he visited San Francisco?

A. I believe she did.

Q. Did she visit back and forth at your home?

A. Occasionally, yes, they both did.

Q. And your wife visited her, did she? [6641]

A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. Taking Mr. McGowan during those three months of June, July and August, 1949, how often did you see him?

A. I don't think I saw him more than maybe two or three times.

Q. Where?

A. I think on one occasion he was with Mr. Barber when Mr. Barber came down to see me, and my recollection is on other occasions I saw him when I came to San Francisco and talked to Mr. Barber.

Q. How about Mr. Kaiser during this same period, June, July and August, 1949?

A. I don't recall seeing him very much then.

Q. About how many times?

A. Oh, probably about the same as Mr. McGowan.

Q. In other words, two or three times also, is that right? A. That is my recollection.

Q. Where did you see him?

A. I believe I saw him in San Francisco at the times when I came to Mr. Barber's—to see Mr. Barber.

Q. Getting away from that period and coming up to the time when the trial commenced—take August, September, October and November, up to the 14th, up to the time of the trial, or let us leave out——

A. There is one other thing I forgot there in that short period of time. That is why I don't like to break it down too close. [6642] I made a trip to Washington to see Mr. Donohue and saw Mr Donohue, I believe, in July.

Q. That was in July, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How were arrangements made for that trip?

A. Mr. Donohue had advised me, I think by letter or telephone—I am not certain—through Mr. Barber, some way he advised me he would like to have me come to Washington to talk to him. I was so advised; I will put it that way. I agreed to go, and I made a trip back to Washington, D. C.

Q. Who made the arrangements for you to make the trip? Mr. Barber, I take it?

A. I believe it was Mr. Barber, yes.

Q. How did you go? A. By plane.

Q. Who accompanied you to the airfield on that occasion? A. I believe my wife did.

Q. Did you meet Mr. Barber there again?

A. I am certain my wife and a couple of friends from Half Moon Bay, we drove over together.

Q. Did you meet Mr. Barber there again?

A. At the airport?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Yes. A. I don't think so, no.

Q. Where did you get your ticket? [6643]

A. Mr. Barber had given it to me previously.

Q. I see. And then you flew to Washington, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. Did anybody accompany you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You went alone? A. That is right.

Q. Arriving at Washington, whom did you meet?

A. I met Mr. Donohue.

Q. Did you meet him at the plane?

A. No. There was a fellow waiting at the plane, I believe, from Mr. Donohue's office.

Q. Who was that, do you know?

A. I don't know the gentleman's name who took me over to Mr. Donohue.

Q. So when you got off the plane you met somebody from Mr. Donohue's office; he had a car, I take it, and drove you to Mr. Donohue's office, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. Whom did you meet there?

A. Mr. Donohue.

Q. Anyone else?

A. I believe I met his law partner.

Q. What is his name?

A. You will have to ask Mr. Donohue that. I don't know. [6644]

Q. You do not remember the man's name?

A. I don't know.

Q. Were you introduced to him?

A. Yes, I was introduced to him and talked to him. Kaufman, I believe? I have forgotten the name. Anyway, it is the other partner in Mr. Donohue's law firm.

Q. You were introduced to him by Mr. Donohue?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he participate in the conversation that you had? A. No.

Q. Did you go out with him or have any social engagement with that man?

A. On one occasion I recall having lunch with Mr. Donohue and his present law partner and his former law partner, who is now a judge in Washington, D. C.

Q. Which is the one that you met on that occasion? The former law partner who is now a judge?

A. No; when I got to Mr. Donohue's office or shortly after, on arriving in Washington, Mr. Donohue showed me through his establishment there and in the process we went into his law partner's office.

Q. I say, is that the one who is now a judge?

A. No, no, the other gentleman——

Q. Did you meet that one? A. Yes. [6645]

Q. That one who is now a judge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is his name?

A. There I don't recall again.

Q. You don't remember his name?

A. No.

Q. Where did you meet him?

A. Well, during the time I was in Washington

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

I was in Mr. Donohue's office and he said, "Let's go to lunch."

I said, "O.K., swell."

He said, "I will get my partner."

About that time his former partner, who is now a judge there, came in and we all went to lunch together.

Q. Came into Mr. Donohue's office?

A. That is right. That is my recollection, and I remember we all went to lunch together.

Q. You all went to lunch together then?

A. That is right.

Q. How long were you in Washington on that trip? A. I think it was four or five days.

Q. Where did you stay?

A. I stayed at the Ambassador Hotel, Mr. Hallinan; that is my recollection.

Q. Did anybody occupy the room with you?

A. No, sir. [6646]

Q. Or any adjoining room? A. No, sir.

Q. No members of the Immigration Department there or any agent of Mr. Donohue's?

A. If they were they didn't make themselves known to me.

Mr. Hallinan: May we have the afternoon recess?

The Court: Yes, we will take the three o'clock recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.)

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Hallinan, the record shows that Mr. Rathborne testified before the grand jury on the 11th of May at two o'clock, on the 12th of May at ten o'clock——

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. On May 11——

Mr. Donohue: At 2:00 p.m.

Mr. Hallinan: May 12?

Mr. Donohue: 10:00 a.m.; June 1 at 3:25 p.m., and June 8 at 3:00 p.m.

Mr. Hallinan: Thank you.

Q. Go on about the Washington trip. You say you stayed at the Ambassador Hotel; you stayed there for four or five days, is that right?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. Well, now, you went to Mr. Donohue's office the first day, and how long did you stay there?

A. I can't recall day by day. I spent during the period I was [6647] in Washington, I spent a good part of the time in the daytime with Mr. Donohue.

Q. What part, on the average?

A. I believe it was about half of each, what we call working day, that is, half the period from, say, eight to five, or something like that.

Q. So you spent about half of each day at Mr. Donohue's office?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. That would be about three or four hours a day? A. That would be about right, yes, sir.

Q. So you spent on a total, then, some place between ten and twenty hours all together?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, then I saw him on a number of occasions in the evening, too.

Q. On the occasions that you were at his office did you meet any other person or converse with any other person on the subject of your testimony or what you knew about Mr. Bridges?

A. No, sir.

Q. Just Mr. Donohue alone?

A. That is right.

Q. Were the statements you were making there being reduced to writing? A. No, sir.

Q. You say you also spent some evenings with him? [6648] A. That's right.

Q. How many?

A. My recollection is all—except one evening when I was in Washington.

Q. So either three or four, depending on whether you spent four or five days?

A. That is approximately it.

Q. On the occasions you spent the evenings with him, where were those spent?

A. One evening was in his home, his apartment there, and another evening—two other evenings, I believe, we went out to dinner.

Q. On the occasion that you were at his home who else was present? A. Mrs. Donohue.

Q. Nobody else? A. Not that I recall.

Q. On the occasions you went to dinner was anybody else present?

A. I think just Mrs. Donohue.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. After dinner did you go any place with the Donohues?

A. No. On those occasions we spent most of the evening eating and talking. [6649]

Q. Where did you go, to hotels or restaurants?

A. Some restaurant there.

Q. Now, on that occasion that you were in Washington did you meet any other person connected with the government or the unions?

A. Yes, but not about this case.

Q. Who did you meet?

A. I talked to a couple of gentlemen in the Corps of Army Engineers down at Gravelly Point in connection with the proposed breakwater that the government was contemplating for Half Moon Bay and I also saw Mr. John Steelman.

Q. Who were the gentlemen that you met at the —what is the name of the place, Gravelly Point?

A. Yes, it is headquarters for the U. S. Army Engineers.

Q. G-r-a-v-e-l-l-y?

A. I believe that's right.

Q. The name sounded a little unusual. At Gravelly Point you met whom?

A. I met a lieutenant colonel there.

Q. What is his name?

A. The name escapes me for a moment.

Q. A lieutenant colonel and his name escapes you, Mr. Rathborne?

A. I only talked to the man for half an hour. I don't remember his name.

Q. What was this lieutenant colonel's [6650] position?

A. He has something to do with planning and programming of construction.

Q. He was with the Army Engineers, is that right? A. That's right, yes, sir.

Q. And do you know the name of the other gentleman you talked to?

A. In the Army Engineers?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I don't. I was introduced to him.

Q. Who took you down there?

A. Went down by myself.

Q. Did somebody make an appointment for you to meet them?

A. Yes, sir, I got the appointment through Mr. Donohue. He had some friends to make contacts there for me.

Q. I see. And that matter, however, did not relate to this case?

A. No, I was trying to find out——

Q. All right, we will come to that in a minute. But you say that Mr. Donohue had some friends who made an appointment with these two gentlemen, is that right? A. That's right.

Q. And do you know who the friends were who made the appointments? A. I do not, no, sir.

Q. Was it some judge? [6651]

A. No, sir, I don't know who it was. I merely asked Mr. Donohue if he knew anybody in the Army Engineers and he said he thought he had some friends, and he did. So——

Q. And he made the contact for you to go down. Where is Gravelly Point?

A. It is outside Washington, near the National Airport.

Q. I see. And these gentlemen, as I understand it, had charge or had something to do with the construction of the breakwater down at Half Moon Bay?

A. Well, my understanding is that their position is, they are the men who do the planning and the programming for the whole, the Army Engineers for the whole nation.

Q. I see. And what is that breakwater, what is that about?

A. What do you mean, what is it about?

Q. The breakwater at Half Moon Bay.

A. Well, in 1945 the Army Engineers held what they called a preliminary hearing in Half Moon Bay.

Q. In 1945? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What part of 1945?

A. I am not certain. Somewhere——

Q. Were you living there at that time, were you living in Half Moon Bay? A. No, I was not.

Q. Where were you living? [6652]

A. I was living in San Carlos.

Q. And in 1945 the Army Engineers held some sort of a——?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Public hearing to—I believe the purpose of which was to determine whether the Army Engineers would recommend the breakwater for construction there, whether there was a need for one.

Q. Did you attend that hearing? A. I did.

Q. And what happened?

A. Well, this colonel who was in charge of the Army Engineers out here—again I forget his name—conducted the hearing and stated that anybody that had any views to express on the breakwater would please come forward.

Q. I see. In other words, there was no opinion expressed at that time as to whether or not it would be constructed? A. No, this was the first step.

Q. I see.

A. As I understand it, in a procedure taken by the Army Engineers when they contemplate construction of a public works of that kind.

Q. I see. And then when you went out to Gravelly Point to meet these two gentlemen, what was it, to find out whether or not it was going through or what had been done?

A. Well, after this—I will have to give you a little bit of history to make this Gravelly Point clear. After this hearing in '45 the local district engineers recommended to Washington that [6653] the breakwater be built. And that recommendation was reviewed by what they called the board of review for rivers and harbors of the Army Engineers in Washington. They made a favorable recommendation to Congress.

Q. When was that? A. In '48, I believe.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Yes?

A. And in 1948 Congress authorized the breakwater for construction and then in 1949 Congress voted $75,000 to do the final engineering and planning work for the breakwater. And the purpose of my visit was to—I believe the $75,000 was hung up at that time in some—it had been referred to a conference committee of the House and Senate, and there was some wrangle between the members of the committee. And as I recall it, the $75,000 was hung up in that wrangle, and my visit to the Army Engineers was for the purpose of trying to determine first hand when and if the $75,000 for the engineering work was going to be voted by Congress and finally approved.

Q. What was the final result of your inquiry?

A. I was shown the document that they had there that showed their various appropriations, and they said that in their judgment, this conference committee would recommend it, they thought because——

Q. The breakwater was going in?

A. This particular $75,000 had been approved by both Houses, [6654] and the Senate, and there was no argument about this money. So they said they thought it would be approved and subsequently it was.

Q. They thought the breakwater would go in?

A. That's right.

Q. And it was just a matter of getting the money loose on this wrangle that they were having within the army itself?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. No, in Congress.

Q. In Congress?

A. The Senate and House had a difference of opinion.

Q. And in the breakwater the money was cleared and the breakwater is going in, is that correct?

A. No, this $75,000 was the final engineering and planning funds. Before the breakwater can be actually constructed, Congress again has to pass an appropriation for the actual construction funds.

Q. Well, did these gentlemen, however, inform you that their recommendation would be such that the breakwater would probably go in?

A. Well, they had already recommended—I mean, the Army Engineers had recommended strongly the construction of the breakwater, in a report made to Congress by the Secretary of the Army Kenneth Royall in 1948.

Q. But what I am trying to get at is just what advantage you derived from meeting these two gentlemen at Gravelly Point.

A. Well, I was a member of what they call the Breakwater [6655] Committee down at Half Moon Point, the breakwater committee.

Q. To try to put that breakwater in?

A. That's right. That committee has been functioning for 35 years.

Q. I see.

A. And I was making this trip to Washington, the committee was naturally concerned with what had happened to the $75,000 that the engineers had recommended and that had been passed by both houses and the Senate. And they knew it was some kind of a mixup, so with the approval of the committee I contacted the Army Engineers in Washington to find out just what the score was, what the latest information on the breakwater development was, for them.

Q. But you couldn't get it there?

A. I beg pardon?

Q. But you didn't get any information, so you had Mr. Donohue make this appointment with these gentlemen, is that it?

A. Well, the proper people to go to was the Army Engineers to get the information, and I didn't know anybody in the Army Engineers and I asked Mr. Donohue if he did and he said he thought he had some friends that knew somebody, and so he made this appointment. And I secured the information that I was after.

Q. In other words, you got a little inside information of what the situation was at that time, is that right? [6656]

A. Well, I got the opinion of the engineers who were handling those projects as to what they thought would happen, yes, sir.

Q. Do you own a number of lots down in Half Moon Bay? A. I do.

Q. Within the space that will be benefited by the breakwater project? A. That's right.

Q. You have been buying a number of lots like ~~that within the last couple of years, have you?~~

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. No, not in the last couple of years.

Q. You bought some in '48 and some in '49, didn't you?

A. I believe—I bought a few, yes.

Q. I beg pardon?

A. I believe I purchased some property in both '48 and '49 down there, yes.

Q. All right. Now, in addition to meeting these gentlemen, did you meet anybody else connected with the government on that trip in July of this year? A. Yes, I met Mr. Steelman.

Q. Who is Mr. Steelman?

A. He is the assistant to the President.

Q. He is what?

A. He is assistant to the President, is his title, I believe.

Q. And who introduced you to him?

A. I knew him for many years. [6657]

Q. I see.

A. He used to be the head of the Conciliation Service of the Department of Labor, and I had been in frequent contact with him.

Q. I see. Now, did Mr. Donohue introduce you to any other persons in Washington on that occasion?

A. I think he introduced me to several of his friends, yes.

Q. Any persons connected with this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the Department of—did you see Clark again? A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. On that occasion, or anybody connected with his office? A. I don't think I did.

Q. Did you see Carey or Murray?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or talk to them? A. No, sir.

Q. Or have any contact with any of the people in their office? A. No.

Q. And then on that four or five days that you were in Washington with Mr. Donohue, were you working on this case? A. That's right.

Q. Well, all right. Now, take the months of August, September and October of last year, 1949; now, what persons connected with the government, with the Immigration Department or this [6658] prosecution, did you see during those three months—remembering that that ends about two weeks before the case went to trial?

A. I saw quite a few people in that period.

Q. Who, for instance?

A. Well, Mr. Barber, Mr. Kaiser, Mr. Kessler, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Pardon me. Barber, Kessler, Kaiser, Donohue. Who else?

A. Quite a number of others. Mr. McGowan among them.

Q. McGowan. Who else?

A. Well, those are the ones that I saw most frequently and actually had contact with.

Q. I beg pardon?

A. I mean, those are the ones I saw most frequently and actually had contact with concerning this case.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. All right. Now take Mr. Barber. In those three months, now—August, September and October—how many times did you see him?

A. Quite a number of times.

Q. How many? A. Oh, I——

Q. Daily?

A. No, I didn't see quite daily, but quite frequently. Possibly, let's see; three months. Probably ten or twelve times, I would say offhand.

Q. And where did you see him?

A. Usually in San Francisco. [6659]

Q. At what place in San Francisco?

A. On Sansome Street, the Appraisers Building on Sansome Street.

Q. And when not in San Francisco, where?

A. Well, my recollection is, Mr. Hallinan, that during that period that is where I saw him. He may have come down my way, but I don't think so because I was coming up to the city quite frequently.

Q. I see. Now about Kaiser. How many times did you see him during that 90 day period?

A. I saw him quite frequently, too.

Q. How often?

A. Well, there was a while there I saw him almost every day and other times when I didn't see him so frequently.

Q. Well, would you say you saw him 40 or 50 times in the three months?

A. I wouldn't think it was quite that many.

Q. How many?

A. Quite a number of times. Let's see. Probably 20 or 30, maybe.

Q. 20 to 30. And then Mr. Kessler; how often did you see him?

A. I saw him quite frequently, too.

Q. Did he continue to live at Miramar?

A. That's right.

Q. I see. During the whole three months?

A. That is my recollection. [6660]

Q. And did you see him practically every day?

A. I would say almost every day, yes, sir.

Q. In other words, you came to San Francisco, then you would see Kessler in the evening at Miramar, or would you see him in San Francisco, which?

A. Well, occasionally I would drive to San Francisco with him.

Q. Did he drive you back and forth?

A. On a few occasions, when I didn't take my own car.

Q. I see. And was his wife continuing to live at the Miramar Hotel with him, too?

A. (Nodding in the affidmative.)

Q. And you saw her almost every day, is that right?

A. Well, I saw her quite frequently. I don't know whether it was almost every day.

Q. And were your wife and she visiting back and forth every day?

A. They used to see each other quite a bit.

Q. And then Mr. Donohue; how many times did you see him during those three months?

A. I don't recall when Mr. Donohue came out here the second time for this case. I don't know whether it was during that period or not.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Well, how about Mr. McGowan? How many times did you see him?

A. Well, I saw him quite a few times. When I come in to San Francisco I would usually be in touch with him or see him. [6661]

Q. Well, about how many times would you say in that 90 days?

A. I would say approximately the same number as Mr. Kaiser.

Q. That is, maybe 20 to 30 times?

A. Possibly.

Q. And any other agent that you were having contact with at that time?

A. Well, there are others I spoke to, men I spoke to.

Q. Just casually?

A. But I don't think there are any others that I actually——

Q. Did you stay in San Francisco during any of that period?

A. I don't know. My recollection is I did not.

Q. Did you live or stay at the Miramar Hotel on any occasion? A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't stay there. And when you came to the city to see these men, what were you doing at the Appraisers Building and talking to Barber, Kaiser, Kessler and McGowan? What was the nature of your activity?

A. We were discussing this case.

Q. Discussing the case?

A. Yes, sir. [6662]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. What do you mean by "discussing" it?

A. Well, they asked me certain questions about certain things, checking certain information, and I would give them my reply.

Q. They had records, I suppose, they went over with you, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. And verified from you their suggestions and statements that were made to them, is that correct?

A. Well, that is correct. For example, they had a certain paper and asked me if I recalled certain events that were depicted in that paper and I would say yes or no, as the case may be; things like that.

Q. I take it you are being paid some reasonable compensation for all your time, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And have been during that period, I suppose, is that right?

A. I believe the situation regarding that is this: When I left the President Madison in May, I believe it was, I took a trip off, a leave of absence, to join the ship—my intention at that time was to rejoin the ship when she returned, which would have been about July. I think it was July. Anyway, it would be about eight weeks afterwards, and during the time I was in Washington I discussed the situation about going back to the ship with Mr. Donohue, told him I would have to get back to the coast pretty quick, because I would have to let my [6663] union know in a few days whether I was going back on the ship or not, and I intended to go back. He said, well, at that time he didn't think it was—that I should go back. In addition to that, the WFTU had passed a resolution which in effect put a boycott on me for holding my job. I think the effect of the resolution was that all members affiliated to the WFTU should boycott any ship on which anybody appeared as a witness in this particular case for the Government.

Q. Thinking one thing and another, what was the compensation you agreed upon?

A. The compensation was to be the same approximately as I was receiving on the President Madison.

Q. How much was that?

A. It amounts to about $120 a week.

Q. Is that all they are paying you?

A. Well, that is the same money I was making when I was working on the ship.

Q. I say, is that all the compensation they have been paying you so far, $120 a week?

A. What do you mean, all they are paying me so far?

Q. Is that all the Government has been paying you for these services, coming up to San Francisco, going back to Washington?

A. Since July, yes, sir.

Q. What did they pay you prior to that?

A. The only other—all together I received expenses for going [6664] to Washington on the first trip—I think they were $8 a day or something like that. I know it cost me about $50 out of my own pocket on that first trip.

Q. Well, I would imagine.

A. I received the same—whatever the standard rate is. I think it is $8 a day for the trip that I made to see Mr. Donohue. And then I received a witness fee for testifying before the grand jury.

Q. So then for the months of May, June and July were you receiving only $8 a day?

A. I wasn't receiving anything except during the period of the grand jury testimony, when I was paid a witness fee.

Q. How much were you getting then?

A. I believe it was $30 a day.

Q. And for how long did that run?

A. That ran during the period of the grand jury.

Q. $34 a day, isn't it? A. I think it is.

Q. And $25 witness fee, and $9 sustenance?

A. I believe that is what it is.

Q. $34 a day for that period of five or six days that you were up here for the grand jury, is that all?

A. For the period of the grand jury proceedings.

Q. Do you know how many days that was all together?

A. My recollection is about twenty, Mr. [6665] Hallinan.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I think it was about twenty days.

Q. And then since July they have been paying you only $120 a week.

A. That is what it amounts to.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. What is the basis? What base do they use for fixing it?

A. The base they used for fixing it was the earnings that I had earned on the President Madison as radio officer. That is my understanding.

Q. Have you been receiving that money?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what form? A. Government checks.

Q. Do you know what the total is that you received to date? A. I do not, no.

Q. Have you been informed by Mr. Donohue or any of these other gentlemen that $25 a day is the amount that is allowed to experts on this kind of case? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you been studying Marxian dialectics, if that is the phrase?

A. No, the only time recently I have done any studying of that kind was when I was on a ship. I went back for my own purposes and re-read a lot of the so-called classics.

Q. When was that? [6666]

A. That was when—during the time I was on the President Madison.

Q. What year?

A. It must have been 1948, I guess.

Q. That was after you had gotten in contact with the Government officials or they had gotten in contact with you?

A. No, it started before that. I had been dropped from membership in the Communist Party and had decided that I had made a mistake in supporting the Communist philosophy and principle and ideology at the time I was in the Party, and I was rereading their material with a much more critical eye than I had in the past and trying to punch holes in it and find its weaknesses. In other words, I accepted this stuff as doctrine and as gospel for so many years I thought I would take another look at it from a critical point of view.

Q. There is a little matter on that that has puzzled me for some time, a couple of phrases I have heard; one is Hegel's dialetical materialism, and the other is Einstein's postulate of equivalents. One of them has something to do with mathematics and the other has something to do with Communism. Do you know which is which?

A. I do not know anything about Mr. Einstein's theory, but I do know that the dialetical materialism is a word that is used to denote the Communist approach to the study of history and events. [6667]

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Rathborne, and you can fix your own scope in it: On the witness stand here you have told the truth of what you know about this case, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have told all you know about it, is that right? A. Well, I don't——

Q. I mean, you have not concealed or kept hidden anything, have you? A. No, sir.

Q. And you have told everything you know about the case, haven't you?

A. Put it this way: I have been responsive to the questions that have been asked me.

Q. Have there been things about the case, things that you know about the case that have not been asked you?

A. I don't understand that question, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Let us put it this way: Did you have any agreement with Mr. Donohue or anyone else that there would be any subjects that he would not ask you about? A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any agreement that certain matters that might be favorable to the defendants would be omitted from the questions, that you would not be asked those matters? A. No, sir.

Q. Well, was there any agreement that you should not be asked [6668] certain matters that were detrimental to the defendants?

A. Well, yes. In other words, Mr. Donohue could have, if he wanted to go into every incident in the past that I could possibly have testified on, he could probably have had me on the witness stand under direct examination for ten days or so. So some of the matters which I could probably have testified on were not covered by Mr. Donohue in his direct examination.

Q. I see. Now, do you know why it is that you were not called on the case in chief? Was that explained to you?

A. No, I don't know for sure why I was not called, no, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You went down and saw a man who is the editor of the newspaper in San Mateo County and complained that the stories being told in his newspaper were not properly slanted to give you sufficient credit, isn't that right?

A. No, I didn't make that statement. I wrote the man a letter. He ran a story in his paper which I thought was not sufficiently objective, down the middle, and I wrote him a letter and criticized the article, pointed out my criticism, and in the letter I said, "I certainly do not expect to be favored or anything else, but I would like to see objective reporting in the newspaper."

Q. Now, you know at the present time there is a struggle on between the national CIO and the ILWU; that is right, isn't it?

A. I read about it in the newspapers. That is the extent of my knowledge. [6669]

Q. And the struggle converges pretty much upon the person of Harry Bridges, is that right?

A. Well, now, at the present time, Mr. Hallinan, I have no direct information about that. The only information I get is by reading the newspapers.

Q. Have you any agreement with Mr. Carey or Mr. Murray relating to their getting you some office in the CIO?

A. I have none whatsoever, no, sir. I have never discussed it.

Q. Did you have any discussions with them on that subject? A. I did not.

Q. Mr. Donohue tells us that you testified before the grand jury, not twice, but four times. Do you remember if that is correct?

A. Well, again I said at the time my recollection was I testified twice. Apparently I testified more than twice. Apparently I testified four times. My memory was—well, if that is what the record is, that is what it is.

Q. Did you testify on June 1?

A. I believe so.

Q. No, aside from what you have been told, have you any recollection of that yourself?

A. No, I don't recall that particular occurrence on June 1. I recall the first appearance and the last one.

Q. Do you recall testifying on June 8? [6670]

A. Yes, sir, that is the last time. I recall the last time I testified.

Q. You testified that you testified once on May 11 and then on the following day, May 12; at least the dates were filled in by counsel. You testified you appeared the first day and then the second day. You did not tell us anything about June 1 or June 8.

A. I believe I testified it was my recollection I had been before the grand jury twice.

Q. Yes.

A. Now, in that, what I had in mind was the first and the last time. That is apparently from the record I went on in an afternoon and continued the next morning. That to me is one session.

Q. I see. Then you remember testifying on June 8 again?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Yes, that was the last time I appeared. I remember, recall that.

Q. Let us take the period from October 31 to November 14, that is, until the day this case went on trial, were you in constant touch with these same gentlemen whom you have heretofore described, Messrs. Barber, Kaiser, Kesler, Donohue and McGowan?

A. I was in frequent touch with them. I would not say constant.

Q. Is Mr. Kesler still living at the Miramar Hotel? A. No, sir, he is not. [6671]

Q. When did he leave?

A. Let's see. It is my recollection it was shortly after Christmas, last year, last Christmas.

Q. Had you been told at that time that you would not be called as a witness in this case?

A. No.

Q. Were you ever told that? A. Yes.

Q. When?

A. I think sometime during the process of this trial.

Q. When?

A. You mean that I would never be called?

Q. Yes.

A. No, no, I thought you meant a witness on the main case. I believe they call it the case in chief, something like that. [6672]

Q. Were you told that you wouldn't be called as a witness in chief? A. Yes.

Q. Who told you that? A. Mr. Donohue.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. When? A. During this trial.

Q. Well, what part of it, do you know?.

A. Well, yes; my recollection is it was during the time George Wilson was testifying.

Q. I see. Can you relate it to the time that Kessler left the Miramar Hotel?

A. I think Mr. Kessler left the Miramar Hotel some time prior to that. I am not certain about that.

Q. All right. Now, has anybody replaced Mr. Kessler at the Miramar Hotel?

A. No, sir. You mean any Immigration——

Q. Agents, yes. A. No, sir.

Q. Any agent been living in your home since that time? A. No, sir.

Q. Or in Half Moon Bay, so far as you know or in that neighborhood?

A. No, sir. As far as Mr. Kessler is concerned, when some gentlemen from San Francisco came down and visited me—that is [6673] George Andersen and some of the others, apparently somebody in the government got a little bit jittery and they asked that somebody be sent down to my area to watch out for me. And that was done over my protest and objection. And so, as far as Mr. Kessler leaving, I was very happy to see him leave, although I think Mr. Kessler is a swell fellow. I like him. But I didn't particularly like the procedure of having someone down there.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You like him, but not so much in your neighborhood. Isn't there some other agent that lives down at Half Moon Bay named Maxwell?

A. I never heard of him.

Q. Gerald Maxwell?

A. No, sir, I never heard of him. He may live there, but I don't know him.

Q. Now, have you talked during the period that we have been discussing here, that is, last year or this year, with any of the other witnesses who testified in this case?

A. Yes, I have seen a few of them.

Q. Who? A. I saw Mr. Michener.

Q. When?

A. During the grand jury hearings.

Q. Anyone else?

A. Mr. Ross and George Wilson.

Q. Anyone else? [6674]

A. I don't recall seeing any of the others.

Q. Schomaker?

A. Oh, yes, I have seen John Schomaker.

Q. Schrimpf?

A. I met him once and said, "Hello, Henry, how are you?," about a week ago, I think.

Q. Krolek? A. Who?

Q. Krolek. A. Krolek, no, sir.

Q. Now, have you named all of the witnesses whom you have met in that time?

A. I believe I have, but I am not—frankly I don't know the names of all the witnesses that have testified here for the government——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. When did you last see Schomaker?

A. Oh, a few days ago.

Q. Beg your pardon? A. A few day ago.

Q. All right. Where did you see him?

A. I saw him down on Sansome Street in the Appraisers Building.

Q. What day was that?

A. I think it was last week. What day of the week it was I am not certain.

Q Was he with somebody else? [6675]

A. He was in an office there.

Q. Whose office?

A. I don't know whose office it was. It was one of the government offices.

Q. Was he working there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of work was he doing, do you know?

A. He was reading some back issues of the Longshoremen's paper, I think.

Q. And did you see any of the agents with him?

A. Well, I saw a couple of them talking to him, yes. I mean, coming——

Q. Did you have a conversation with him at that time? A. I talked to him, yes.

Q. I beg your pardon? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ask him what he was doing there?

A. Well, no, I didn't ask him what he was doing there. It was obvious he was doing some work.

Q. Obviously what?

A. He obviously was doing some work. So I didn't ask him what it was.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did you see him on more than the one occasion?

A. I think I had seen him down there on three or four occasions. [6676]

Q. When? What time?

A. Within the last two or three weeks.

Q. And did he appear to be working on each occasion?

A. On a couple of them, he did, a couple of them he was just around the office there talking to, I believe, McGowan and Mr. Kaiser.

Q. Did you talk with him about the facts of this case or any material in it, any records?

A. Yes, I discussed a couple of things with him. One was, I was confused on a couple of dates. I have forgotten them. And I asked him if he recollected them.

Q. Did he?

A. And I believe he did, yes.

Q. What dates were they?

A. They were the dates, one of them was the date of the first Maritime Federation convention in 1935, I believe, and another was the date of the tankers' strike, which was also in 1935.

Q. You had forgotten those and Mr. Schomaker—what did he do, look them up for you?

A. No, we were discussing them and he recalled them and related some other incidents that tied them in so I could—and by relating these other incidents, I refreshed my own memory.

Q. I see. Now, how about Schrimpf? Where did you see him?

A. I saw him in the same place.

Q. When? [6677]

A. Well, I believe it was last week.

Q. Once or more than once?

A. Just once.

Q. Was he working also?

A. No, he wasn't.

Q. What was he doing?

A. He was standing there talking to McGowan and I walked by and saw him and I said, "Hello, Henry, how are you," and he said, "Hello, Merve." And I went out the door. That was the extent of my contact with him.

Q. Where did you see Mr. Ross?

A. I saw him, oh, at that hotel, Cartwright Hotel.

Q. When? A. During the grand jury.

Q. Was he staying there?

A. I think he was. It is my recollection he was.

Q How many times did you see him there?

A. Oh, I think a couple of times.

Q. Did you see him subsequent to that?

A. No.

Q. Never since? A. No.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And how about Wilson?

A. I saw George in Los Angeles one time when I was down there on the Madison, and then again I saw him when he testified before [6678] the grand jury.

Q. And where did you see him when he testified before the grand jury, at the grand jury room?

A. At the Cartwright Hotel.

Q. Did he stay there also?

A. I don't know.

Q. And you say you saw him in Los Angeles on one occasion when your ship was down there, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. When was that?

A. I think it was the first time I was down there, the first time of these two I related here.

Q. Were you alone at the time you met him or someone with you? A. I was alone.

Q. Anybody else accompany the two of you in your discussion? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you talk about the facts of this case to Mr. Wilson?

A. No, I didn't talk about the facts of the case.

Q. Discuss them at all, mention them at all?

A. No, the only thing I mentioned to him, I said, well, the government people are after me to testify, George, and I am thinking about it. And I think that was the extent of the discussion.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. The government people were after you to testify and you were thinking about it, is that right? [6679] A. Yes.

Q. That is before you said anything to the government agents, is that right?

A. No, this would be after the trip I made back east.

Q. At least it is before you gave them any information, is that so?

A. I don't think it was; I think it was after.

Q. You think it was after. After you gave them the original ten per cent or whatever small amount it was?

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. Did he tell you whether or not they were after him? A. No, he didn't mention it.

Q. Then Michener, you saw only before the grand jury, is that right?

A. I believe I saw him in the Cartwright Hotel also, when he came up to testify before the grand jury.

Mr. Hallinan: It is now 4:00 o'clock, your Honor. I suggest we take the recess.

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen, and adjourn until tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock; the same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Thursday, March 2, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [6680]

Thursday, March 2, 1950, 10:00 o'Clock A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America vs. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The witness on the stand is Mervyn Rathborne, heretofore sworn.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. During the time that the grand jury was in session or that you were standing by to appear before the grand jury, you testified that you lived in the Cartwright Hotel, is that right?

A. I said my recollection, Mr. Hallinan, was that I lived there a portion of the time.

Q. You said that at the same time they were staying at the hotel Michener, Ross and Wilson, is that right? A. I met them, yes.

Q. At the hotel?

A. There is something wrong with this microphone, I think.

Q. And Schomaker. And you met Schomaker at the hotel, too, did you?

A. I am not certain about meeting him at the hotel, Mr. Hallinan. I met him but I am not certain whether it was at the hotel.

Q. During the time that the grand jury was in session that you were standing by to appear before it, how long a period of time was that that you were back and forth to the hotel? Was it [6681] some days before you appeared before the grand jury and some days after, or what?

A. It wasn't very long before because I had just gotten back to San Francisco on the President Madison, I believe, just a few days before the grand jury went into session. That is my recollection of it.

Q. At the time that you stayed at the Cartwright Hotel you met, for instance, Lawrence Ross, is that right? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Had you known Ross before?

A. I had.

Q. Was he staying at the Cartwright Hotel at that time, too?

A. I believe he was, Mr. Hallinan, but I am not certain.

Q. Did you have some conversations with him?

A. Yes, I talked to him.

Q. Concerning the case?

A. No, sir, not particularly concerning the case.

Q. Concerning any of the facts that you were testifying to before the grand jury?

A. No, sir, I didn't discuss that with him.

Q. Did you discuss any facts that he was testifying to before the grand jury?

A. No, our discussions were along these lines: first, recalling where we had met before and so on and so forth, more or less of a friendly conversation; and then we had some discussions with [6682] respect to recalling certain events, as to dates.

Q. What events?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, I believe I had talked to him about the time that he and I worked together in what was known as the United Labor Party here in San Francisco, I think in 1935. We discussed that to some extent.

Q. Did that relate to the testimony that either one of you contemplated giving before the grand jury?

A. I don't think it directly related to it. It is a subject matter that probably could have been brought up.

Q. Was Mr. Barber present at any of those conversations with Ross?

A. I believe he was—I think I saw Ross once or twice for a comparatively short period of time, and once I know I talked to him alone, and I believe the next time there were several people in the room.

Q. Was Barber one of them?

A. I believe he was.

Q. Who else?

A. I believe Mr. Donohue was present at least for part of the time.

Q. How about Kaiser?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Hallinan, whether Mr. Kaiser was there or not.

Q. Was there any discussion at that time concerning what [6683] testimony Ross was going to give? A. No, sir, there was not.

~~Q. Was there any discussion with you concern-~~ ing that episode in which Bridges was supposed to have gone to New York in June of 1936?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. No, sir, there was not.

Q. Was that ever mentioned to you at all?

A. Yes, it was mentioned to me.

Q. When?

A. I believe after or during Mr. Bridges' testimony here in this court.

Q. Not until then? A. No, sir.

Q. And then it was with regard to the minutes of the meetings, I suppose, is that right?

A. That is right, yes, sir.

Q. That you had signed?

A. That is right.

Q. The minutes were all correct, were they?

A. The minutes of the meeting were—I told, I believe, Mr. Kaiser and Mr. Donohue that if I was called upon to testify about those minutes I would say to the best of my recollection they were correct and proper. [6684]

Q. You read the minutes over? A. I did.

Q. Where?

A. Up in the Appraisers Building on Sansome Street.

Q. That is the minutes that had been produced in evidence here, is that right?

A. Well, I don't know about that. They were minutes of the District Council of the Maritime Federation No. 2 that I had kept of the Council meetings, and my signature was on them.

Q. And you read all those minutes over?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I don't think I read them all over, word for word.

Q. Well, let's skip that for the moment. But when was that?

A. I believe that was—my best recollection is, during the time Mr. Bridges was testifying.

Q. Yes, but how long ago?

A. Well, two or three weeks, I believe. I don't recall exactly the dates on which Mr. Bridges was on the witness stand.

Q. In other words, two or three weeks ago is the first time that that subject was called to your attention by anybody, is that right?

A. That's right. I had been asked previously if I knew anything about it and I said no.

Q. About what?

A. About any trip that Mr. Bridges might have made to New York about that time. [6685]

Q. Who asked you that?

A. I believe Mr. Kaiser; I am not certain.

Q. When?

A. Oh, I think after the grand jury's proceedings. I am not certain of that.

Q. How long after the grand jury?

A. I don't know, Mr. Hallinan. I have forgotten.

Q. And what did Mr. Kaiser ask you then?

A. I believe he said, "Did you ever hear about Harry making a trip to New York in June of '36 or in the middle of '36?" And I said, "All I know

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

I don't recall any such trip." Or words to that effect.

Q. Well, did he tell you that someone was testifying he had made such a trip?

A. No, sir, he did not. He just merely asked me the question.

Q. Well, did he tell you what the nature of the trip was supposed to be?

A. No, sir, he did not.

Q. Did he ask you if you had any records or any recollection that would verify whether it had happened or hadn't happened?

A. No, sir, he did not.

Q. Well, you read over those minutes at least to the extent of determining that Bridges was present at the meetings that you had signed as secretary; that's correct, isn't it?

A. The minutes that were shown to me—it would be better if you [6686] could give them to me and then I could——

Q. Well, presently. But just generally first.

A. We may be talking about different minutes, Mr. Hallinan. That is the only thing I want to be sure of.

Q. Here's what I am getting at. You never fabricated any of those minutes, did you, or any of the contents?

A. The way the minutes were kept, Mr. Hallinan, was this: I was the secretary of the Council. At the Council meetings I had a roll call book and I would make notes of the proceedings—not verbatim, but rather full notes. I would take that material back to my office and dictate it to the stenographer. She would write out a draft copy, which I would correct, and then she would put it on the mimeograph stencil. Then I would sign the stencil and the minutes would be mimeographed. And the minutes were kept accurately.

Q. And at the next meeting, then, those minutes were——

A. Those minutes were read and approved or——

Q. Read and approved?

A. Or amended, or whatever it was that was necessary.

Q. So they were kept accurately by you?

A. That's right.

Q. And where it appeared that Mr. Bridges was chairman at a particular meeting, he had been chairman, is that right?

A. Well, if the minutes showed it, it would convince me that he was there, yes. [6687]

Q. All right. Now, have you been reading the newspaper accounts of the trial?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Have you been reading the transcript of the testimony of witnesses? A. Parts of it.

Q. Did you read the transcript of the testimony of Manning Johnson? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you read the transcript of the testimony of Crouch? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know either of these people?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I don't recall ever having seen either one of them.

Q. Now, you never heard in the course of your dealings with the Communist Party that Harry Bridges had ever been elected to the Central Committee of that party, had you?

A. I had heard it, yes, sir.

Q. When? A. I believe in 1937.

Q. Who told you then?

A. Mr. Roy Hudson. [6688]

Q. Mr. Roy Hudson? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you tell that to these gentlemen when they spoke to you, to Mr. Kaiser?

A. I told them at one time, yes; I did. I don't know whether it was during the same conversation or not.

Q. Did you attend either of the Communist conventions in 1936 or 1938?

A. No, sir, I did not. You mean the national convention?

Q. Yes. A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did you ever hear that Mr. Bridges—Did you ever know Mr. Bridges in San Francisco under any other name than Bridges? A. I did not.

Q. Or know that he was supposed to have any other name in the Communist Party than Bridges?

A. Well, I heard something about it, but it was just—I believe it was brought up at one of his—at the trials.

Q. In other words, these were rumors that floated around in the other two trials, isn't that right?

A. Well, my information on that subject, I believe, came from the newspapers during the other trials, when somebody made a statement that Mr. Bridges was known by some other name.

Q. Now, I want to show you some of these documents.

Wait. I want to pass these for the time [6689] being.

Q. Now, where did you stay last night?

A. I stayed in a hotel on Market Street here.

Q. What hotel?

A. The name of it is Hotel Shaw.

Q. Anybody there with you? A. No, sir.

Q. Any of the agents or officials of the Immigration Service staying at the hotel?

A. Not, to my knowledge.

Q. Did you have any conversation with anybody connected with the prosecution after your testimony last night?

A. Yes. I went up to Mr. Donohue's office on the fourth floor and we had a general conversation.

Q. When did you go up there?

A. Shortly after court adjourned or recessed.

Q. And how long did you stay there?

A. Oh, I imagine about 45 minutes, possibly an hour. I think it was about five o'clock when I left, maybe a little after.

~~Q. About 45 minutes. Who was present?~~

A. Oh, I believe there was Mr. Donohue, Mr.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Paisley, Mr. Barber, Mr. Kaiser, and a young lady. And this other gentleman here (indicating). I have forgotten his name. Sitting next to Mr. Barber there (indicating).

Q. Have you met him before?

A. Yes. [6690]

Q. How long have you known him?

A. Oh, I met him, I think, about the time the trial started.

Q. And how many times have you seen him or met him?

A. I have seen him quite a few times.

Q. About how many?

A. I am trying to remember. His name just escapes me.

Q. Have you been to lunch with him?

A. I don't think I have.

Q. Dinner? A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, at the conference that you had last night was your testimony here discussed?

A. In a general way, yes.

Q. Was there a discussion about the testimony that you had given yesterday?

A. I mean we talked about the case and about the testimony, yes, generally.

Q. Was the discussion about the testimony that you had given yesterday?

A. There was some discussion of that subject.

Q. Was there any criticism of any of the testi~~mony you had given yesterday?~~

A. There was comments on it. There was no particular criticism.

Q. Were you told to change any of the statements you had made? A. I was not. [6691]

Q. Or to correct them? A. No, sir.

Q. What about the reference to John Schomaker being employed down at the Appraisers Building? Were you told to change that?

A. I was not.

Q. Was any comment made on that?

A. I believe Mr. Kaiser did comment on it, yes.

Q. He did? Did he tell you to change what you had said? A. No, sir, he did not.

Q. Did he tell you you were in error in what you said?

A. Well, I think his comment was along this line, "Well, I think you were wrong, that John was there for an interview," or words to that effect.

Q. But you saw Schomaker down at the Appraisers Building three or four times, didn't you?

A. I did, yes.

Q. And he was working there?

A. Well, I testified yesterday he was sitting at a desk and had some papers there and appeared to be working, yes.

Q. How long were you in the Appraisers Building? On how many occasions did you see Schomaker down in that Appraisers Building?

A. I believe three times.

Q. And when? When was the first time?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Oh, about two or three weeks ago.

Q. All right. You were down there doing your work, is that [6692] right? A. That's right.

Q. That is the work for which you are being paid $120 a week, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, that work is assisting in this prosecution, is that correct?

A. I believe you could say so, yes.

Q. And you are doing $120 a week's worth of work, are you? A. Well, I presume so.

Q. In other words, you are earning your hire and you are working as diligently as you can to help the prosecution in the case, is that right?

A. That's right. [6693]

Q. And on this occasion two or three weeks ago that you were down there, how long did you stay in that building? A. Practically all day.

Q. Did you see Schomaker there all day?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. How much of the day was he there?

A. I saw him, I believe, around 4:30 or so. He came in and spent a few minutes and went out.

Q. Were you talking to him?

A. Yes, I talked to him.

Q. Did you talk to him about the case?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Then when did you see him the next time?

A. It must have been a day or two after that.

~~Q. How long did you stay there on that occa-~~sion? A. I was there all day also.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Where did you see Schomaker then?

A. It was virtually the same thing. Around late afternoon he came in and talked for a few minutes with somebody—I believe it was Mr. McGowan—and then shortly after, he left.

Q. Then what was the third time?

A. The third time I walked into an office and I saw Mr. Schomaker seated at a desk reading some documents.

Q. When was this?

A. My recollection is that was about two or three days after [6694] this second incident.

Q. How long ago? How long ago from today?

A. It would be about approximately two weeks, I believe.

Q. About two weeks ago, and were you there all day on that occasion, too? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long was Schomaker there then?

A. I don't know.

Q. How long did you see him there?

A. Oh, I talked to him for maybe 20 minutes.

Q. You were talking to him about some events, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. For about 20 minutes?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you go over some records with him?

A. Yes, I read something in the Voice of the Federation. There were copies of the Voice of the Federation there. He had read and called my attention to a certain item about the date of the first convention of the Maritime Federation.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Every day, then, since July you have been working regularly for the Immigration Department, is that right?

A. Yes. I have not been working on all occasions full time every day, but I have been doing some work for them, yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Rathborne, when you started in dealing with the government agents you supplied them with the names of other [6695] persons to whom you sent them as possible witnesses, didn't you?

A. No—what do you mean, when I started in?

Q. I say, as you started working with the agents, you started sending them to certain people whom you suggested to them they might be able to use as possible witnesses, isn't that right?

A. I didn't start sending them, no, sir.

Q. What did you do in that behalf? Did you interview people yourself? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you talk to any person about testifying here?

A. Do you mean in the sense of trying to get them to testify?

Q. Yes. A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did you send Mr. Barber or Mr. Kaiser or give them the name of any person whom you recommended or suggested that he talk to?

A. I believe I did something like this: I would name some person and I would say, "In my opinion ~~he knows something about the particular situation."~~

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And did you pick out people, did you mention people who were hostile to Mr. Bridges?

A. No, sir, not necessarily.

Q. Who were some of the people to whom you sent him? A. I didn't send him to anybody.

Q. Whom you recommended, whose names you gave?

A. The way the situation arose, some point—some fact might [6696] be questioned and I would on occasions say, "I think so-and-so might have some information."

Q. Who were some of the so-and-sos?

A. I believe on one occasion I mentioned Mr. Pyle's name in that connection.

Q. All right. Anybody else?

A. I think I mentioned Mr. Krolek.

Q. Anybody else?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Hallinan. I don't think—there were maybe one or two others.

Q. Well, who? A. I don't recall, sir.

Q. Just one or two others? A. That is all.

Q. You suggested to whom that Mr. Krolek might have some information that would be of help? Whom did you suggest that to?

A. I believe Mr. Kaiser. I am not certain.

Q. When?

A. Oh, shortly after the grand jury, I believe.

Q. Let me ask you this: In the testimony that you read over that was given by witnesses for the prosecution did you read Schomaker's testimony?

A. No, sir, I did not.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You did not read it?

A. No, I did not. [6697]

Q. Did you read Schrimpf's?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Mrs. Harris? A. No, sir.

Q. Krolek? A. No.

Q. Hancock? A. No.

Q. Johnson? A. No.

Q. Crouch? A. No.

Q. Ross?

A. I believe I read a portion of Mr. Ross,' the last part of it.

Q. Michener?

A. Yes, I read Mr. Michener's.

Q. All of his? A. All of his testimony.

Q. How about Wilson?

A. No, I didn't read his.

Q. So you read a portion of Ross and all of Michener's testimony. That is all the testimony you read?

A. I also read a large portion of Mr. Bridges' testimony.

Q. Now, when you were working with these gentlemen did you help [6698] prepare the cross-examination of Mr. Bridges? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you give Mr. Donohue or any other person a list of statements or items that you thought he should ask Mr. Bridges? A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you give him any statements or items that you thought he should ask any person?

A. No, I did not.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did you see Schomaker, Schrimpf or any other person doing that?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. What was the name of the person in the apartment or flat, or whatever it was, on Bay Street that you attended all the meetings at?

A. On what street?

Q. Down near Ghirardelli's chocolate factory.

A. Incidentally, when I testified on that I made a mistake in the streets. My recollection is it is North Point Street rather than Bay Street. I don't know whose flat or apartment, or whose apartment that was.

Q. Have you seen it lately?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Have you been down trying to find it?

A. I went shortly after the grand jury proceedings—I went down in that direction looking for it. [6699]

Q. With whom?

A. I believe I went down with Mr. Barber.

Q. Had you testified concerning that building before the grand jury?

A. I am not certain, Mr. Hallinan. I may have, but I just don't recall whether my testimony before the grand jury included that or not. It is possible that I did.

Q. You and Mr. Barber, at any rate, went down to North Point Street and endeavored to find this building, is that right?

A. Yes, we looked for it.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. He looked for it, or you looked for it?

A. I looked for it. We both did. I was the one who knew where it was.

Q. Did you know what street it was near?

A. My recollection, as I have testified here, was it was just about across the street from the Ghirardelli's chocolate works. So I located the Ghirardelli's chocolate works and proceeded from there to relocate the place.

Q. Did you locate the building?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What was the address?

A. That I don't recall. I think it was nine hundred something.

Q. What?

A. I think it was nine hundred and something, but I am not certain as to that point. [6700]

Q. What was the nearest intersecting street?

A. I don't know the name of that street that runs down to the waterfront—to the bay there. I know it is not very far from Van Ness, maybe a block or two.

Q. A block or two from what?

A. Van Ness. That is my recollection.

Q. What color building is it?

A. It is an apartment house, as I recall it. It is a brick building, has a brick front, or has some brick work on the front of it.

Q. Did you go into the building?

A. I went into the lobby, yes, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did you find the apartment at which you say these meetings took place?

A. I found what looked to me, as I recall seeing the apartment, yes, sir.

Q. Were you able to identify the name of a tenant or anything of that kind?

A. No, sir, there was nothing that I recall showing the occupancy of the place, that is, the name of anybody occupying it.

Q. Did you talk to the manager or anybody there to get a list of the people who had been tenants?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Barber in your presence?

A. No sir—was he in my presence? [6701]

Q. I say, did he in your presence make any such inquiry?

A. I don't think any inquiry was made or we talked to anybody.

Q. Have you any information as to whether any inquiry has since been made?

A. I don't know about that.

Q. Or have you been furnished with any information as to who the person was who rented that apartment when those meetings took place?

A. I don't believe I have, no, sir.

Q. You can't remember now the name of the person who occupied the apartment.

A. I never knew it.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I never knew it.

Q. You never knew it? A. No, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Who did you say used to call those meetings there?

A. The way it used to be, I believe Mr. Lambert had a key to the place, and we would meet him there. When we got there he was usually there. I never recalled meeting the occupants of the place or knowing who they were.

Q. You told us here today, or a day or two ago, about a meeting that took place in the Venetian Square Apartments in Long Beach.

A. That is right.

Q. Can you describe that apartment to [6702] us?

A. Well, that is a fairly large apartment house, I think four or five stories, and it is in Long Beach. It is about, oh, I would say roughly a half mile from the amusement area there in Long Beach. I believe they call it the Pike.

Q. What about the apartment in which this meeting took place which you described? What did it look like or what is the interior method of getting to it?

A. I don't recall all of the details of the apartment. After all, I have not seen it since 1936. But my recollection is there was a window that looked out on the ocean and there were some doors that opened into the hallway.

Q. Do you remember a winding stair that led up to it? A. I don't remember, no, sir.

Q. Have you seen that apartment house lately?

A. I saw that apartment house, oh, I think the last time I was in Los Angeles or the one before that.

Q. When were you last in Los Angeles?

A. On the President Madison.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. When I was on the President Madison.

Q. How did you happen to see the apartment house then?

A. I went down with Mr. Barber to look for it.

Q. You went down with Mr. Barber to look for it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you found it? [6703]

A. Yes, sir, I found it. I was satisfied that that was the same place.

Q. Did he point it out to you as being the building?

A. No, he pointed out another place to me as the building he thought it was.

Q. Where did he say he had gotten the information that the other building was the one?

A. He didn't reveal that to me.

Q. He pointed out another building. How far away from this——

A. I believe it was in the same block.

Q. Another building in the same block, another apartment in the same block, he said he thought that was the building? A. That is right.

Q. Did he know the name of the person whose apartment you were supposed to have gone to for this meeting.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. No, sir. If he did, he didn't reveal it to me.

Q. Did you give it to him? Did you furnish him the name?

A. Just what name are you looking for now?

Q. The name of the person who rented the apartment or occupied the apartment in which you say that meeting took place in the Venetian Square Apartments.

A. My understanding at the time, the apartment was being occupied by Walter Lambert and Hazel Wood.

Q. Where did you get that information just before testifying here at the time you were talking to Mr. Barber? Did you [6704] remember that from your own recollection?

A. Yes, because I remembered kidding Walter Lambert about being in such a fancy layout there. At that time the officials of the Communist Party were getting something like ten or fifteen dollars a week and it was quite an elaborate setup he had there.

Q. You say that among the people that you put Mr. Barber onto was Mr. Krolek?

A. I didn't say that at all, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Well, you say that you suggested to Mr. Kaiser after the grand jury hearing that Mr. Krolek might have some information that he could get, is that right?

A. Yes; I was discussing this very meeting with Mr. Kaiser.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Had you spoken to Mr. Krolek about that matter before then?

A. No, I had not, not in the last two years.

Q. Not in the last two years. Before telling Mr. Kaiser that Mr. Krolek might have some information on that meeting, you had not spoken to Mr. Krolek, is that right? A. No, sir, I had not.

Q. He is your brother-in-law, isn't he.

A. That is right.

Q. Did Mr. Kaiser say whether or not he had been speaking to Mr. Krolek?

A. At the time of this discussion, no.

Q. Now, you remember when Mr. Krolek was called before the [6705] Federal Bureau of Investigation in April of 1941, don't you.

A. I remember that quite clearly, yes..

Q. Mr. Krolek made a statement to you as to what had occurred on that occasion, didn't he?

A. He complained very bitterly about what occurred.

Q. Then you made a memorandum of it and handed it over to the ILWU, did you.

A. I may have. I believe I did. I know I advised somebody about it.

Q. Well, now, did Mr. Krolek state to you that agents of the FBI had visited him at work and had asked him to testify as a government witness at the Bridges deportation hearing?

A. I don't know if he used those exact words——

Q. I mean the substance of it.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. There was a conversation about that time along those lines.

Q. Did he tell you that he had informed the FBI that in his opinion he had no evidence to offer which would be of any value in the case, and that he told the FBI agents when they got in touch with him in November, 1940, he had given them the same answer and asked why they were conducting the examination? Did he tell you that?

A. I don't have any clear independent recollection of the conversation. I know I had a meeting with Mr. Krolek in which he discussed the fact that the FBI had contacted him, and what particularly sticks in my mind is that both he and his [6706] wife complained very bitterly about the treatment that they got from the FBI, the alleged [6706-A] intimidation.

Q. What did they say about that?

A. They alleged intimidation.

Q. Beg your pardon?

A. They claimed they were intimidated.

Q. In what way?

A. By being taken down to the FBI office late at night and being held there for some hours and questioned very sharply.

Q. Threatened?

A. Well, that was their statement, yes, sir.

Q. And intimidated?

A. That is what they said.

Q. And Krolek was very frightened, wasn't he?

A. Both of them were.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And when you went down to visit Krolek, Krolek hid in his room because he thought the FBI agents were coming again, isn't that right.

A. Well, I don't recall that instance, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. All right. Now, at that time Mr. Krolek stated to you he told the FBI agents he knew nothing whatever about Harry Bridges or any Communist affiliation or connections of his at all, did he?

A. Well, as I say, I don't clearly recollect all the details of that conversation, but there was a conversation with Mr. Krolek along the lines of his contact by the FBI and concerning Harry Bridges. Now, just what the details were, Mr. Hallinan, I can't [6707[recall at this time.

Q. Well, let me ask you this: Didn't Mr. Krolek tell you that on that occasion he told the FBI that he had never attended any Communist meeting with Harry Bridges?

A. Well, the answer—I would have to give you the same answer I have just given, Mr. Hallinan. I do not recall all the details of that conversation.

Q. Well, was it aproximately that?

A. I don't know. I really don't remember now as to that particular point. I have given you the part of the conversation that stands out in my mind.

Q. Well, would you see if hearing this recital now will refresh your recollection as to what Mr. Krolek said?

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, at this time I think I should object. Mr. Krolek testified as a witness. Mr. Hallinan had a full opportunity to cross-examine him——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: He was questioned on these.

Mr. Donohue: ——as to what he said.

Mr. Hallinan: He was questioned on it.

Mr. Donohue: Any question that Mr. Rathborne may be asked as to what Mr. Krolek said would be purely hearsay from Mr. Rathborne, and I most respectfully say, if your Honor pleases, that as such hearsay, it is not admissible.

Mr. Hallinan: It has two purposes, of course, if the Court please. Krolek was questioned exactly on this same document, [6708] the exact questions put to him. Now, we are entitled to question this witness as to the responses that were made, and——

The Court: Well, Mr. Hallinan, this witness admits that he gave to someone shortly after conversation with Mr. Krolek a memorandum.

(To the Witness): That's correct, isn't it, sir?

The Witness: I made some kind of a report, your Honor.

The Court: All right. And that was provided to some person thus far unidentified. Now apparently this witness hasn't any quarrel with that memorandum.

Mr. Hallinan: That is all I ask. I only want to refresh his memory.

The Court: Show him the memorandum. If he hasn't a quarrel with it, all right; if he has, then take it up on that subject.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I am going to hold this for a moment. I want to test the witness' recollection, your Honor, in addition to the matters of proving these facts. I want to find out what the witness remembers of these incidents. He testifies to incidents that happened a long time ago, and I want to find out by testing his recollection as to events that happened more closely.

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Rathborne: At any rate, Mr. Krolek stated to you he had been very much terrified by this episcde with the FBI, isn't that right? A. That's right. [6709]

Q. All right. He testified that they did try to intimidate him and terrified him, isn't that right?

A. He didn't testify to that; he told me.

Q. I mean, he told you that?

A. He told me that, what I have related here before, substantially.

Q. And he also told you, substantially, that he told the FBI that he knew nothing whatever that would be of any help to them in connection with determining whether or not Mr. Bridges was or was not a Communist, isn't that right?

Mr. Donohue: Just a moment, Mr. Rathborne. I renew my objection, if your Honor please, to anything that the witness Krolek may have said in the presence of Mr. Rathborne and not in the presence of Mr. Bridges.

Mr. Hallinan: This is what—I mean, this is what he said to Mr. Rathborne, not what he said to the FBI.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: It is hearsay on the part of Mr. Rathborne.

The Court: It is, Mr. Hallinan. It comes within that objection. And whether or not you are attempting to test the credibility of Krolek or the recollection of the witness on the stand is not altogether clear in my mind. Now if you have any question directed to the recollection of events—time, place, circumstances, I will allow you, as I said, full latitude. But this is a sort of indirect way of testing the credibility of Krolek, as I see it, on the hearsay aspect. [6710]

Mr. Hallinan: Well, of course, this is not—what I am asking now is not what Krolek said to the FBI, but what Krolek told him he said to the FBI.

Mr. Donohue: And what probative value would that have?

The Court: How would that tend to prove anything?

Mr. Hallinan: Because Krolek was asked directly if he had stated these facts to Rathborne.

The Court: Krolek?

Mr. Hallinan: He was asked directly if he had.

The Court: Krolek, as I recall the testimony—I may be incorrect in this statement, but Krolek did testify on the stand that he did make some complaint to Rathborne.

Mr. Hallinan: That's right.

The Court: Concerning treatment accorded to him.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

The Court: Now, whether or not the degree of treatment attaches the importance that Mr. Rathborne said it does is a matter of testimony. But I can't see that we can impugn the integrity of Krolek or add to the recollection of this man by that type of examination.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, it also goes, Your Honor, to the question of this witness' testimony now as to this Venetian Square apartment building.

The Court: How?

Mr. Hallinan: Because—well, of course, if we argue the [6711] thing out in the presence of the witness, we might just as well——

The Court: All right, I will allow you to proceed, but I can't see that it aids or proves or tends to prove any matter in the case.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, you told Kaiser that Krolek could give him some information concerning this matter at the Venetian Square building, is that right?

A. I believe my statement was, we were discussing the meeting and who was there, and I believe he asked me if Krolek knew anything about it, and I said, "He certainly should; he was there." And that is about the substance of the conversation.

Q. You told him that Krolek was there?

A. Yes.

Q. Although you knew your brother-in-law was frightened and had been intimidated and bullied and third-degreed by these people, you still sicked them on to them as a potential witness to prove that fact, is that right?

A. That is not—I believe you are drawing a lot of conclusions there, Mr. Hallinan. I didn't say that at all.

Q. Is the $120 all you have been offered or promised in this case, the $120 a week?

A. I have testified as to that.

Q. No. I ask you, is that all you have been promised?

A. I haven't been promised a thing, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Have you received any other amounts of money other than the [6712] $120 a week and the $34 a day while you were standing by for the grand jury.

A. What do you mean, received any other amount of money?

Q. Have you received any money from the government or through the government or from any of these agents?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Did you have a thousand dollars in cash here a short while ago that you used in buying some property?

A. What do you mean by "a short while ago"?

Q. Well, within the last—since the grand jury met. A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Now, is your wife being paid anything?

A. No, sir.

Q. She isn't a witness? A. No, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And she isn't receiving any per diem?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know that Crouch's wife was a standby witness and getting $34 a day in addition to the $34 a day he was getting?

A. I never met Mr. Crouch or his wife, so the only knowledge I have about it is what I read in the newspapers in connection with this trial.

Q. Now, after Mr. Krolek, after you told Kaiser that Mr. Krolek was a potential witness for this meeting in the Venetian Square apartments did you talk to Mr. Krolek again? [6713]

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. How long is it since you have talked to Mr. Krolek?

A. I believe last time I saw him was a year ago Christmas.

Q. A year ago Christmas? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was any discussion had with him then about this case?

A. Not about this case. At that time he said, "Well, Merve, I am very glad to see that you finally got wise and got out of the party."

Q. Well, I don't want your testimony on that.

Mr. Donohue: I think, if Your Honor please——

Mr. Hallinan: Well, all right, let's hear about your getting wise.

Q. Yes, go ahead.

A. He said, "I am very glad to hear that you finally got wise, like I did, and got out of the party."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. That's right. That is it. Now let me ask you this. When you were back in Washington with Mr. Donohue, did Mr. Donohue introduce you to any other people who could do you some good or forward your interests in the breakwater?

A. The only persons other than in social occasions that Mr. Donohue arranged introductions for was this lieutenant colonel that I told you about, over at Army Engineers.

Q. Now, did you remember the name of the expartner of Mr. Donohue's that you say he introduced you to? [6714] A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. You don't remember that yet?

A. As I say, my recollection of his present partner's name is Kaufman.

Q. Kaufman?

A. I believe that is his name. You should ask Mr. Donohue that.

Q. Did you go out to dinner with Mr. Kaufman?

A. I went out, I think, one day we had lunch—Mr. Donohue, Mr. —, this gentleman whom I believe is Mr. Kaufman and Mr. Donohue's former law partner.

Q. Did the former law partner come along, too?

A. I testified to that yesterday, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. What was his name, Milton Kronheim, Jr.?

A. I think that was it.

Q. Well, are you sure?

A. I am not certain.

Q. How long ago was that?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That seems to ring a bell. I don't know about the Junior part.

Q. Do you hear bells ringing very often?

A. I was just using that as an expression, meaning——

Q. Oh, I see; excuse me.

A. ——you refreshed my memory.

Q. You were introduced to Mr. Milton Kronheim, Jr., went out to [6715] lunch with him?

A. I believe the record yesterday shows that I testified that I was in Mr. Donohue's office.

Q. No, I want to know what your recollection is now. Did you go out to lunch with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Well, now, were you told by Mr. Donohue that Mr. Milton Kronheim, Jr. is the son of Mr. Kronheim, Sr., who controls the liquor lobby in Washington? A. I was not.

Q. Were you told that? A. No, sir.

Mr. Donohue: Just a moment, Mr. Rathborne. May I ask your Honor to strike that question from the record?

Mr. Hallinan: I am entitled to show what inducements were made to this witness; I am entitled to question him about them. I am entitled to find what hopes and promises and illusions have been placed before him, and I don't care who the person involved is. I am entitled to find out about it.

The Court: Do you assert that he is interested in the liquor business?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes. Assert, Your Honor? He is the liquor lobbyist in charge of the liquor lobby in Washington.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

The Court: No, do you assert that this witness is interested in the liquor business? [6716]

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, I think so. I have another question I want to ask about that.

The Court: All right, you may pursue it.

Mr. Hallinan: All right.

Q. Well, didn't Mr. Donohue tell you that Milton Kronheim, Jr. could get your breakwater like that? A. No, sir, he did not.

Q. Did Mr. Donohue tell you that Mr. Kronheim is his chief client? A. No, sir.

Q. He didn't mention him at all?

A. I will be very happy, if you want me to, to tell the entire incident about this gentleman whom I have——

Q. No, just tell me what he said about Milton Kronheim, Sr. A. He never mentioned him.

Q. Never mentioned him at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you meet John Maragon while you were there? A. No, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Donohue tell you that he is an intimate of his? A. Who is John Maragon?

Q. He is the five percenter, the man who handles the bribes for getting government contracts. Don't you know who he is?

A. Is he the man that has been recently indicted for something or other? [6717]

Q. Yes, that is right.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Yes, I have heard about him. I read about him.

Q. Did you meet him?

A. No, sir, I never met him.

Q. And in the period you were in Mr. Donohue's office did Mr. Maragon come in there?

A. I wouldn't know Mr. Maragon if he did.

Q. You weren't introduced to him, anyhow?

A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't have lunch with him?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you meet Frankie Costello?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know who he is?

A. I have read about him in the newspapers.

Q. Well, did you read in the newspapers, in Mr. Drew Pearson's column, of the contract and tieup between Frankie Costello, Maragon, Kronheim and Mr. Donohue? A. I don't recall.

Q. You haven't read that?

A. I don't think—I believe I read an item in Mr. Pearson's column that made some reference to Mr. Donohue and somebody else, possibly Mr. Maragon, if my recollection serves me.

Q. Is that the column where it said that Mr. Bridges was entitled to a square deal and that it wasn't proper that Mr. "Jiggs" [6718] Donohue, with his alliance with the Maragon-Costello crowd, should be sent to prosecute Harry Bridges? Did you read that one?

A. I think if you will produce the column, Mr. Hallinan, it will speak for itself. I read a column in which Mr. Pearson mentioned Mr. Donohue's name and——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. In that connection?

A. And also mentioned Mr. Bridges' name.

Q. And in the connection that I have just stated, is that right?

A. I don't believe you are properly interpreting Mr. Pearson's column or properly quoting Mr. Pearson's column. I may be in error in that, but it doesn't seem that way to me.

Q. Say, who recommended to you to go and see Carey and Murray?

A. I did it on my own volition.

Q. Nobody mentioned it before that at all, is that right? A. No, sir.

Q. When you talked to Mr. Clark, did Mr. Clark suggest to you or did you have any discussion with Mr. Clark as to what would be the feelings of Carey and Murray on your testimony?

A. No, the only reference to that point made in the discussion with Mr. Clark, I asked him if Mr. Murray had any knowledge of it, and he said he didn't think so, and I said, "I am planning to see Mr. Murray."

Q. What did he say to that?

A. He said, "Go ahead." I mean, the matter then was whether the [6719] government's investigation should be made known to anybody, and I advised Mr. Clark I was going to discuss it with Mr. Murray so he would know about it.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did you tell Mr. Clark when you were in his office then that as of that time, if not as of now, you stood convicted of a felony?

A. No, Mr. Barber had that information; the information was shown on the record there.

Q. At that time?

A. It is my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. And was it discussed in front of Mr. Clark?

A. No, sir.

Q. I beg your pardon? A. No, sir.

Q. When had you seen the information in Mr. Barber's possession?

A. I hadn't seen it in his possession. I didn't say that. I said he had the information.

Q. How do you know he had the information?

A. Because I told him.

Q. You told him? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you tell him?

A. I believe shortly before we went to Washington.

Q. How long before?

A. Oh, it would be a short time. [6720]

Q. All right. Did you tell him you had committed perjury before the Un-American Activities Committee?

A. I told him—I don't recall exactly when, but I told him.

Q. Did you tell him before you went to Washington?

A. I am not certain of that, Mr. Hallinan. I may have, and again I may not.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Well, can you give it a little thought now and let's see if you can't remember if you told that to Mr. Barber before you went to Washington?

A. It is my recollection that I told him on that plane going back to Washington, but I don't——

Q. On the plane going back to Washington you told him you had testified falsely on the thirteen or fourteen occasions you had been asked certain questions before the Un-American Activities Committee, is that correct?

A. Well, my recollection of the conversation was, I said, well, I had appeared before the Dies Committee and testified that I was not a Communist and some time about 1940, or something like that.

Q. Was that mentioned in front of Mr. Clark?

A. No, sir, it was not.

Q. Did you tell—had you told Mr. Barber at that time also that you had similarly testified falsely before the Tenney Committee?

A. Yes, I did. I mentioned both of them. [6721]

Q. And was that mentioned in front of Mr. Clark? A. No, sir.

Q. You are sure it wasn't?

A. I am positive.

Q. No discussion about it? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, when Mr. Barber and yourself appeared before Mr. Clark, Mr. Clark apparently had heard something about the Bridges matter before, from the conversation, is that right?

A. Well, he gave the impression of being—he said that the government was conducting an investigation.

Q. Yes?

A. And that this investigation—said in so many words that this investigation "convinces us he is a Communist."

Q. And you were introduced to Mr. Clark by Mr. Barber, is that right?

A. Either Mr. Barber or by Mr. Boyd; I forget which.

Q. And Mr. Clark said he had heard something about you before, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And then I suppose you were praised to Mr. Clark by Mr. Barber and Mr. Boyd, is that right?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. But neither one of them in your presence told Mr. Clark that as of that time you stood convicted of a felony, did he? [6722] A. No, sir.

Q. And neither one of them told Mr. Clark as of that time that you were a perjurer, did they?

A. Not in my presence.

Q. And Mr. Clark told you then, you say, that without any help from you they had enough evidence to prove Mr. Bridges was a Communist, isn't that right?

A. I believe I stated before, and my recollection of it is this, that the government was conducting an investigation.

Q. That isn't what I asked you. I asked you this: You stated heretofore that Mr. Clark told you at that time that even without any help from you, they had enough information to prove that Harry Bridges was a Communist, isn't that right?

A. I don't recall him making such a statement.

Mr. Donohue: Just a moment, Mr. Rathborne. It does not properly state the testimony of the witness.

Mr. Hallinan: I will find it in the transcript.

Mr. Donohue: I have got the record here.

The Court: I suggest you read the transcript during the recess. We will take the recess at this time, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case.

(Recess.) [6723]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Am I to understand you have given up your intention of going to sea any longer? A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. You have not. You stated that you asked Mr. Clark or you suggested to Mr. Clark that he not institute any contemplated proceedings against Harry Bridges while the maritime strike was on on the Pacific Coast, is that right?

A. That is generally correct, yes, sir.

Q. Because you said it would be interpreted as a labor-smashing device, is that right?

A. I said that it might be interpreted—that is my best recollection, that I said it might be interpreted by the union at that time as an attack on labor, yes, sir.

Q. At that time the ILWU was out on strike, is that correct? A. I believe it was.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You believe it was.

A. I think that was the period of the 1948 maritime strike.

Q. And then when the ILWU went out on strike that tied up the ships along the waterfront, is that right? A. These ships were tied up, yes.

Q. And that put your people, your union, in the position where it was not able to operate. They were not sailing on the ships?

A. Our members were not working the ships.

Q. They were being paid their wages, however, weren't they?

A. No, sir, they were not. [6724]

Q. At the time that the ILWU settled the strike——.

A. That last question—possibly some of them were held on standby pay. I wasn't being paid.

Q. At the time the ILWU settled its strike, representatives of your union came to the ILWU and to Harry Bridges and stated that they wanted some increase in wages and some improvement of their condition and asked the ILWU to hang on a while longer, is that right?

A. I have no knowledge of that, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. You do not know that at all?

A. No, sir. It could have happened. I am not denying it happened, but I just don't know.

Q. You say technically your union was not out on strike, is that right?

A. That is the position taken by the union, yes.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. But actually your union did receive certain increases in pay; that is correct, isn't it?

A. I believe there were some benefits derived from the strike.

Q. And the way those benefits were derived from the strike was this—see if this is not correct—that the officers of your union were willing to return without any increase in pay, but a rank and file delegation from your union went up to the ILWU and asked Harry Bridges to induce or try to persuade the longshoremen to hold out until the radio operators could get some increase in pay? Do you remember if that is not so? [6725]

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please. This question is neither material, pertinent nor relevant.

Mr. Hallinan: I think it is all part of the subject that has been gone into.

The Court: You might answer it.

A. It is my recollection that I was present at a membership meeting where a committee was set up to call on Mr. Bridges or to call on the strike leaders, and I think Mr. Bridges' name was mentioned, to see what could be done for the settlement of the strike and get improvements for our membership, yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Although at that time your people were not out on strike? A. Yes.

Q. And the ILWU did hold out somewhat longer until the demands of the radio operators were met, isn't that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I believe that is right. I just don't—I wasn't close enough to the picture at that time to really have too good information.

Q. See if this refreshes your recollection now. I have here the martime industries' agreement with the Waterfront Employers, the Pacific American Shipowners' Association, agreement between the American Communications Association, the Marine Division, giving the wage rate effective June 19, 1947. At that time what was your position?

A. 1947? [6726]

Q. Yes.

A. I was secretary-treasurer of the State CIO.

Q. No, I mean as far as being a radio operator is concerned.

A. My government license had expired by virtue of the fact that I didn't have any sea service for a number of years, so I had no radio operator's license.

Q. What did you go back in as?

A. As a radio operator. What did I go back into what? Where?

Q. Let us get this: Your radio license had expired when?

A. I believe in 1937, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. In 1937? A. That is my recollection.

Q. When did you get your license restored?

A. As I said, I went to this radio school early in 1948 here in San Francisco and took a brush-up course, refresher course, and then I went down to the Federal Communications Commission office on

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Battery Street, the Customs House there, and took an examination, theoretical, technical, code examination, and successfully passed on that examination; shortly after that I was issued a license.

Q. When did you get that license?

A. I believe in either January or February 1948.

Q. January or February 1948?

A. Yes, very shortly after I left the CIO, yes, sir.

Q. Did you have to sign any affidavit that you had never been a [6727] member of any subversive organization?

A. No, sir, not that I recall. I think it was——

Q. Did you have to sign an affidavit that you had never been convicted of a felony?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure?

A. My recollection of the form I signed there was merely the date born, name, previous experience, and so on and so forth.

Q. When you started back to work what position did you have? What type of vessel were you on?

A. I was on what is known as a C-3 freighter, passenger freighter; that is, it carried twelve passengers.

Q. A C-3 freighter? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many radio officers were on that boat?

A. One.

Q. So your rate of pay at that time was $282.70 a month, isn't that right.

A. I don't exactly recall what the base pay was,

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan. It was in that neighborhood. My recollection is it was around $300 a month, but I may be wrong.

Q. Would you mind showing him the top line on that? The top line has the amount set out.

A. I believe that was the base pay.

Q. Show him this one, please, the top line also. Might I see them again? Now, this refreshes your recollection that when you [6728] returned, after leaving the CIO, that you started in with a base rate of $282.70 a month; that is correct, isn't it?

A. I believe that is right.

Q. After this strike, this maritime strike that you have discussed with Mr. Clark, your base pay was $323.41, is that right?

A. I believe that is correct in those documents, yes sir.

Q. And then all the other radio operators had received corresponding increases in pay, is that right? A. I believe that is correct, yes.

Q. And furthermore, they had received overtime adjustments and other improvements in working conditions, is that right?

A. My recollection is there was a wage increase and a slight increase in the overtime pay, and I think there was some extra overtime for keeping batteries or something like that.

Q. So at any rate, you got approximately $38 a month more as a result of the ILWU strike, this maritime strike, isn't that right? A. Yes.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. A month?

A. After the strike these improvements were in effect.

Q. Were put in?

A. Were put in effect and came as a result of the strike.

Q. Is that the same pay that you were earning when you left the ship in July of 1949.

A. I would like to state that the $323 or whatever it is is [6729] not the entire pay, because you get paid overtime, percentage, you see. You get a war bonus out beyond the 180th meridian, $2.50 a day, and there is a number of other provisions where there is quite a bit of overtime. So it amounts to considerably more than the base pay.

Q. Let us get to this. I take it you return an income tax each year, do you? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Do you keep a record of your pay for that purpose? A. I do, yes.

Q. How much did you earn as a radio operator in the year 1948?

A. I am not certain, Mr. Hallinan. I have not looked at the record for a long time.

Q. How many months did you work?

A. Well, I worked from March until the strike. How many months would that be? The strike started when?

Q. Were you continuously employed from March until the strike?

A. No, I took a trip off, I believe. My recollection is this: I made two trips and then I took a trip off, and during that trip off I took—the strike took place.

Q. What do you mean by a trip off?

A. Under our union regulations a man permanently assigned to a ship is permitted to take—what they call take a trip off; in other words, have the union put a relief man on the ship for one trip, and then when the trip is over go back to the ship. [6730]

Q. Have you ever been in Honolulu?

A. Yes, I have been in Honolulu lots of times.

Q. Did you ever make any observations or notice what the working conditions were in the Islands?

A. I never—the last time I was in Honolulu was 1945, and prior to that time I think it was 1935, and prior to that I think it was 1924 or 1925.

Q. You knew, did you not, that the working conditions in the Islands were pretty feudal?

A. Oh, yes, I knew the setup of the Hawaiian Islands was pretty much of a feudal setup.

Q. People terribly underpaid and overworked?

Mr. Donohue: I object to this line of inquiry, if Your Honor please. It is going far afield.

Mr. Hallinan: It is preliminary to a question.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Let me ask you this: You asked Mr. Clark or you suggested to Mr. Clark that he not file any proceedings against Mr. Bridges while the maritime strike was on because it would look like a labor-smashing device. Now, at the time you testified before the grand jury the big Hawaiian strike was on, wasn't it?

A. I believe that is right.

Q. And a big warehouse strike was on here in San Francisco, wasn't it? [6731]

A. I believe that is correct, yes sir.

Q. And Mr. Schmidt you knew had charge of the Hawaiian strike, isn't that right—Henry Schmidt? A. I beg your pardon?

Q. You knew that Henry Schmidt had charge of the Hawaiian strike, didn't you?

A. I don't know whether I did or I did [6731-A] not.

Q. Did you know that Bob Robertson had charge of the warehouse strike?

A. I thought the officers of that union had charge of it, the local union.

Q. Yes. But he was handling—one man ordinarily handles such a strike, doesn't he? Acts as an overseer, and——

A. I wouldn't say so in a democratic union.

Q. Well, did you know that Mr. Robertson was a very, very active man in the strike, then? Let's put it that way.

A. I mean, it would be a presumption on my part that the unions being on strike, why, naturally, the international officers concern themselves with it.

Q. And did you have any understanding or belief that Harry Bridges was vitally interested in both strikes?

A. Well, it would be natural to assume that,

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

and I didn't have any direct information about it, but——

Q. And that he was going back to the Hawaiian Islands and back here to San Francisco, and working very vigorously on the strike? Did you know that?

A. Excuse me (coughing). My knowledge of those strikes, Mr. Hallinan, was what I read in the newspapers.

Q. Yes? A. And——

Q. But you saw that, at any rate, didn't you?

A. Yes, it was in the newspapers about the strike, and in those [6732] items it mentioned particularly about Mr. Bridges.

Q. And you knew that the Big Five in Hawaii and their representatives in the United States Congress and every place else were charging Harry Bridges with being a red czar and the strike a Communist strike, and an attempt of the Communists to take over the Islands; you knew that, didn't you?

A. Again I will just have to say that generally what appeared in the newspapers that I read. I had information on it, because I read the papers. Now, some of those things you say I don't recall having any direct knowledge of them. I knew there was a battle on between the employers in Hawaii and the ILWU, and a strike.

Q. That was typical stuff on strike-breaking, wasn't it, yelling "Reds" and "Communists," and dragging the red herring out? That was a typical strike-breaking thing, wasn't it?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor pleases. I think we certainly ought——

Mr. Hallinan: Withdraw that question. All right, let's get this.

Q. Now, did you ever read this statement in the paper?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor pleases, whether he read it in the paper or not.

The Court: Let us find out. Ask him.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan, reading):

> "Hawaii is the only spot at the present time where our domestic Communist problem is serious. We may have to [6733] take some drastic action there. But I think that the case against Harry Bridges (president of the leftist CIO International Longshoremen's Union, who is under indictment for perjury) has already been of some help in the Hawaii situation. If we are successful in our prosecution of Bridges, as I am certain we will be, it may be we can break the Hawaiian situation without any other intervention."

Did you read of any United States cabinet member making that statement?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if Your Honor pleases.

Mr. Hallinan: That is preliminary to this gentleman's——

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Hallinan may remember that Mr. Bridges denied that he was correctly quoted——

Mr. Hallinan: All right, maybe——

Mr. Donohue: In several papers in the city of Seattle.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, we will give you that chance, to meet these implications.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Hallinan knows, if Your Honor please, that long before this trial ever began, the same question which Mr. Hallinan now asks of this witness was raised preliminarily before this Court and the matter was ruled out.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, that's a lot of nonsense, Your Honor. This goes to the statement that this man says—about his desire to see that the maritime strike wasn't damaged. I want to show [6734] that this gentleman was actively out to help smash the strike, that that was part of the program for which he was employed. Now, let's not be mealymouthed about it. I want to find out what he has got to say about this one question.

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor pleases, I object to the question on the grounds stated.

The Court: This question is taken from the text of a newspaper?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, Your Honor. I want to see——

The Court: You asked—— I was interrupted. You asked this witness whether or not——

Mr. Hallinan: If he read that statement in a newspaper.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

The Court: If he read it in a newspaper?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: Then you intend to follow that?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: All right, you may go ahead.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Did you?

A. Did I what?

Q. Read that statement.

A. I don't recall having read that statement.

Q. You know perfectly well, do you not, that that is the statement there that Tom Clark, the Attorney General of the United States, made at that time? Don't you know that?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor pleases. There is [6735] no evidence that Tom Clark or any other Clark ever made that statement.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, here's your evidence.

The Court: The objection is sustained.

Mr. Hallinan: Let me see. Ask him if this refreshes his recollection (handing to Clerk).

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Hallinan has been told time and time again that you can not——

Mr. Hallinan: I pay no attention to what you say.

Mr. Donohue: I quite understand that.

Mr. Hallinan: Will you show him the part that has been marked (document handed to witness by the Clerk).

Mr. Donohue: He has been told by the Court time and time again that you can not prove a fact by a statement in a newspaper.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: I haven't been told that. I don't try to prove facts by statements in newspapers.

Mr. Donohue: You try, but not too well.

Mr. Hallinan: You just get all gummed up. You don't know what is going on around here.

Q. Read the paragraph that is marked.

Mr. Donohue: I object to his reading it.

The Court: The objection is sustained. He may read it to himself.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, I only wanted him to read it to himself. [6736]

The Witness: I have read that part you marked.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): You have read it now, haven't you? A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, does that refresh your recollection that Clark said that at the time this indictment was returned? A. No, sir, it does not.

Q. It does not?

A. I have never read the Milwaukee Journal before, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Well, it was cited in the local papers. Didn't you read it here?

A. I don't recall having read it here, no, sir.

Q. Well, did it appeal to you that——

Mr. Hallinan: Might I have the paper again? (Returned to counsel by the Clerk.)

Q. Did it appeal to you that the indictment of Harry Bridges at that time would have the exact result that you say you warned Mr. Clark not to ~~bring about by starting anything while the maritime~~ strike was on?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, as I understand it, the situation was this, that the grand jury proceedings had been arranged for long before either the Hawaiian strike or the warehouse strike had broken or had come into effect. That is the—I mean, apparently you are trying to indicate that the grand jury proceedings were called to break the strike of the longshoremen in Hawaii and in the warehouses, and it is my recollection that the hearings before [6737] the grand jury had been decided upon before that time.

Q. Yes. That was in May, and when did the strike start? A. I don't know.

Q. Well, it started before that, didn't it? The strike was on when you were here before the grand jury, isn't that right?

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor pleases, as long as Mr. Hallinan is testifying, I think I should say to Your Honor that the record shows the Hawaiian strike began on the 1st of May, the San Francisco warehouse strike on the 16th of June, and that I came to California for the purpose of presenting the evidence to this grand jury in April.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, we won't accept your statement to that. You didn't know what you were doing when you came out here.

Q. At any rate, on June 27, Monday, June 27, was the date that Mr. Clark made a statement, the statement I just read; the Hawaiian strike started May 1st, and on June 27th Mr. Clark made that statement. Moreover, before these strikes take place, there is always a considerable period of discussion back and forth and attempts to settle them in advance, isn't that right?

A. That is the general procedure, yes.

Q. Yes. And in April when this gentleman came out here to do his strike-busting, they were already contemplating the strike in Hawaii and arbitrating to settle it in advance, isn't that right?

A. I don't know, because I was at sea, and I didn't have much [6738] access to news information then.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. May I interrupt a moment?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: Lest there be some misconception of the matter that distracted Your Honor's attention a moment ago——

The Court: Well, there is none.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, there is a man sitting directly behind Mr. Robertson who keeps talking in his ear.

The Court: Counsel, there is no occasion for——

Mr. MacInnis: Well, there is. Now, I think that while every person who is a member of the public has a right to come here, no one has a right to talk into the ears of any person at either counsel table and I think some admonition to that effect should be given.

The Court: Well, you are very courteous in directing my attention to that, Mr. MacInnis, and

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

I was only momentarily distracted by that. Apparently the reason for the distraction has subsided. Unless you indicate otherwise, I see no need for any action at this time. In the event you say otherwise, we may take the matter up at the noon recess and deal with it appropriately at that time.

Mr. MacInnis: I don't know who he is; he keeps talking, and I think his remarks, I have reason to believe his remarks are of an unfriendly nature.

The Court: It is very gracious of you to take it up with [6739] the Court, because I was momentarily distracted during the examination of Mr. Hallinan. I would suggest that we ~~take~~ the matter up at noon if it is of a sufficiently serious nature. We might take it up then.

Mr. MacInnis: I think a general admonition to the courtroom would be sufficient.

The Court: I will say this, Mr. MacInnis: Thus far in this courtroom I think we have had excellent decorum concerning the spectators, during the period that our friend Mr. Mitchell was the clerk here, and I hope and expect that will be the case likewise during the tenure of Mr. Schaeffer; that we will have no demonstration of any kind. It has been a happy privilege for me as a judge to sit in a case of this magnitude, wherein attention has been drawn, as it has, and to see the fine behavior of the spectators in the courtroom. If there has been any momentary discord, I will hear it at noontime. If it approaches the dignity of that which should be dealt with or that deserves my attention, I will hear it then.

Mr. MacInnis: I doubt if it approaches that. If Your Honor would instruct the public generally, I think that is all that would be needed.

The Court: I think they have heeded my advice, and that is my suggestion. They need no suggestion on my part. They behave beautifully.

Mr. MacInnis: I merely wanted to make it clear that Mr. [6740] Robertson was not starting a dispute.

The Court: That goes equally with the members of the laboring groups out in the corridors. I see them out here. They behave there and behave in this courtroom. It is a compliment to them.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, Mr. Rathborne, by the time you had dealt with these government people for a while, you arrived at the conclusion that Harry Bridges wasn't even entitled to a fair trial, isn't that right?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if Your Honor pleases.

Mr. Hallinan: It goes to his state of mind. He is an adverse witness.

Mr. Donohue: It is argumentative.

The Court: Overruled; he may answer.

A. I don't see—certainly not.

Q. Certainly not. You thought he was entitled to a fair trial, is that right? A. Absolutely.

Q. Now, at the time of the indictment or shortly after the indictment, what was your conception as to your position? Did you consider that you were an employee of the government at that time or that you were just a witness?

A. My conception of my position all along has been that I am appearing here as a witness, voluntarily, because I think it is [6741] a right thing to do.

Q. Wanting to be fair to both sides, is that right? A. That's right.

Q. All right. Now, for months before your appearance before the grand jury you had been giving the United States agents and the Immigration agents and Mr. Donohue, and all of these people, all the information that you had on the subject of Harry Bridges and his alleged affiliation with Communists, isn't that right?

A. I believe we covered that very well yesterday, Mr. Hallinan, and as to you questioning me in considerable detail as to different times and events; and my answers yesterday are——

Q. Well, your answer, then, would be "yes," that you had given them all that information, is that right?

A. Well, your statement now is somewhat different from your questions yesterday. That is why I said that.

Q. Well, but, is my statement substantially correct that up to the time you had testified before the grand jury you had answered at least all the questions addressed to you by any person connected with the prosecution as to any matters concerning which you testified before the grand jury?

A. Up to that time, yes, sir, that is substantially correct.

A. All right. Now, after you testified before the grand jury, a couple of gentlemen representing Mr. Bridges went down to see you to find out what you had testified to, isn't that right? [6742]

A. That's right.

Q. Did you know George Andersen prior to that time? A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Were you friendly with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had he ever done you any wrong or harm?

A. No, sir.

Q. How about Mr. Herbert Resner?

A. Same thing applies.

Q. And those two gentlemen went down to see you to ask you to please disclose to the defense what had been the nature of your testimony before the grand jury, isn't that right?

A. That is the general—another gentleman was along, Mr. Watson, too.

Q. Mr. Watson, yes. He is the editor of The Dispatcher, the ILWU paper?

A. That's right.

Q. You were friendly with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Never had any quarrel with him?

A. That's right.

Q. He had always treated you decently?

A. That's right.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. All right. Now, these three gentlemen went down to see you and tried to discover from you what was the nature of the [6743] testimony that was being offered before the grand jury against Mr. Bridges, isn't that so? A. That's right.

Q. And you knew that the government was bringing in witnesses like Ross and Schomaker and putting them on and spiriting them away, so that nobody could find out what they had to say? You knew that, didn't you?

A. I knew that the government was taking precautions to keep the testimony and who appeared before the grand jury from public knowledge.

Q. Secret? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to keep it from the defendants?

A. Well, certainly.

Q. Yes. Do you think that is fair?

Mr. Donohue: Oh, I object, if Your Honor pleases.

Mr. Hallinan: It goes to a state of mind of the witness.

The Court: Overruled.

A. Well, as I understand it, Mr. Hallinan, at least I was told——

Q. Will you please answer that one question?

A. ——it was the customary procedure by which federal grand juries operate. Now, that's—— [6744]

Q. I asked you: Do you think that is fair?

A. As part of our judicial system I think such inquiries are fair, yes.

Q. You think it is? A. Yes.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You stated to a reporter for the San Francisco News on the 31st of May that the two attorneys and Mr. Watson pleaded with you to tell them what you had testified to before the Federal grand jury about Mr. Bridges, and you refused to tell them, isn't that right? A. That is right.

Q. Then you told a reporter of the Chronicle that you told Mr. Andersen and Mr. Resner that you did not want to discuss any phase of the case, that they could draw any conclusions that they liked, did you?

A. That is substantially what I told them.

Q. You told them it was a friendly chat, and you poured a beer, "but upwards of thirty times Rathborne said Andersen and Resner took turns in veering the talk back to Bridges." And what was it Rathborne had said to Bridges? "They clearly indicated, Rathborne said, they wanted him to supply what he told the grand jury, but just as persistently Rathborne veered them back to chitchat about the weather, and that is as far as the excursion into that phase of the case got." Did you tell them that?

A. That is substantially correct. [6745]

Q. So when these men came down there to find out what this was all about, you veered it back into chitchat about the weather, is that correct?

A. I believe I told them something else, too. I believe I told them I had taken an oath before the grand jury not to reveal any of the evidence there.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. That you had taken such an oath?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that oath was a fake, too, wasn't it?

A. I didn't consider it was a fake. It was given to me by——

Q. By whom?

A. By somebody in the grand jury room.

Q. Didn't Mr. Andersen and Mr. Resner tell you such an oath had no binding force and that neither the grand jury nor Donohue nor anybody else had any right to impose such an oath upon witnesses?

A. I believe they said that was their opinion.

Q. They told you that, and you checked up with Mr. Donohue and found out that was true, didn't you? A. No, sir, I never did.

Q. With whom did you check up?

A. I don't think I checked with anybody. I inquired, I said, "I was told this, I was told that I was bound to keep secret what I had testified before the grand jury."

Q. Who told you that? [6746]

A. I believe it was Mr. Barber. I am not sure. It might have been Mr. Donohue now. I am not certain now. One of those two gentlemen did.

Q. When Mr. Andersen, Mr. Resner and Mr. Watson went down to see you, you told them that you had taken an oath not to reveal what you told before the grand jury?

A. That is my recollection.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You did not tell that to the reporters for the papers, did you?

A. I believe I did. I am not certain of that now.

Q. Well, don't you remember that you just said this, that you told them, "I don't want to discuss any phase of the case. You can draw any conclusions you like"?

A. I also made that statement, too. I recall making that statement.

Q. And didn't you make the statement that you veered them back to chitchat about the weather? Did you tell them that?

A. I believe I told them substantially that, yes.

Q. Did you know, did you read that Mr. Donohue had said in the columns of the same paper that it was the intention of the prosecution to surprise the defendants?

A. I don't know whether—I don't recall whether I read such a statement or not.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I don't recall that I read such a statement made by Mr. [6747] Donohue at that particular time or not. I may have, and then again I may not have. I just don't recollect.

Q. Will you give that a little thought? Don't you remember Mr. Donohue said in the papers about that same time, "We intend to surprise the defendants"?

A. The best answer I can give you, Mr. Hallinan, is I may have or I may have not. I haven't any clear recollection of reading that specific thing.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Aside from reading that, you knew, however, it was the prosecution's intention to surprise the defendants, didn't you?

A. Well, I knew it was the prosecution's intention to carry on these proceedings with as much secrecy as they could do it, but I also knew the persons involved were aware of what was going on, because they had stated so publicly.

Q. They were aware that there was an investigation going on, but they didn't know what anyone was testifying to, isn't that correct? Isn't that what Mr. Andersen and Mr. Resner told you?

A. I don't think they told me that. They told me they wanted to find out what I had testified to.

Q. By surprising the defendants, by the prosecution surprising the defendants, you understand that means blackjacking the defendants or stabbing them in the back, don't you?

A. I wouldn't interpret the word "surprise"—I don't define it that way, no, sir.

Q. Have you read of any of the surprises that they subsequently [6748] sprang on the defendants?

A. I don't quite understand your question.

Q. Did you read about people who were brought out here and who testified before the grand jury and then immediately left the State of California and did not reappear until the trial, so nobody knew what they were going to testify to or anything about them?

A. I read such comment in the press.

Q. And then you learned, did you, about Mr.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Crouch and Mr. Manning Johnson committing perjury on the witness stand here? You heard that, didn't you?

A. I read the accounts after—of that incident that you refer to in the newspapers.

Q. And you read the account of Mr. Ross committing perjury on the witness stand, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you were willing to make yourself part of a little conspiracy of secrecy against these men that had been your friends, is that right?

A. That is not a correct statement, no, sir. I made my position clear when I testified before the grand jury. I made a public statement on what my position was.

Q. You never said a single thing about what you were testifying before the grand jury, did you?

A. I didn't reveal any of my testimony, [6749] no, sir.

Q. You did not say one word as to any fact or circumstance that you had testified to pretending or intending to connect Harry Bridges with any Communist Party, did you?

A. At that time I don't believe I did, no. However, it was not secret. It is a matter of public knowledge. It was in the press.

Q. It was in the press that the prosecution had indicted Mr. Bridges for testifying falsely as to his connection with the Communist Party and membership, but ou did not read anything in the public press as to what any one single witness had testified in that connection, did you?

A. No, I don't recall. I don't think any of that testimony was made available.

Q. Even the names of witnesses, except for yourself and Schomaker, were not included in the press notices, were they?

A. I think a number of the names were included.

Q. Who? Who do you remember was included in the press notices?

A. I think Sam Darcy's name was mentioned.

Q. He was not a witness, was he?

A. I don't know whether he was a witness before the grand jury or not. You asked me whose name was mentioned in connection with that.

Q. Sam Darcy——

A. That is my best recollection.

Q. Who else was disclosed in the papers as having testified? [6750]

A. I believe Henry Schrimpf's name was mentioned in the newspapers, if I remember correctly. I think Henry made a public statement after he testified before the grand jury.

Q. I don't think so. Do you remember that pretty clearly?

A. That is my recollection. I made some comment on it that Henry came right up to the grand jury chambers, walked out, and talked with the newspaper reporters after he had testified. That is my recollection.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Anybody else?

A. That is all I can recall, Mr. Hallinan. I think there were four or five. I think there was some mention of George Wilson's name, but I am not certain of that.

Q. Then when these gentlemen went down and talked to you as you have testified, you refused to give them any information whatsoever?

A. That is correct.

Q. As to what the nature of your testimony had been? A. That is right.

Q. Didn't give them any writing or suggestion of any kind? A. That is right.

Q. Did not tell them whether you had testified that Mr. Bridges had some connection with or membership in the Communist Party or whether he had not?

A. I just testified I wouldn't give them any information at all, so obviously I didn't tell them that. [6751]

Q. You thought that was fair? You think that is a fair way of handling a case, do you?

A. Yes. I had taken a position and I was sticking with it. I think our legal procedure in this country is generally a fair and proper procedure.

Q. If you were in the position of the defendants you would think it fair to have people brought in without giving you an opportunity of knowing what they were talking about, what they had to say, or even who they were, is that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That is the process by which a grand jury works, as I understand.

Q. I just found that out. All right. Now, let me ask you this: In addition to refusing to give these gentlemen any information, you immediately ran to the prosecution to tell them they had been down to interview you, didn't you?

A. No, I did not. As a matter of fact, the first person I told about it was the reporter from the San Francisco Chronicle. They called me up and wanted to know what was doing, and I said I had some visitors this afternoon, or this evening, it was, and gave them the incident.

Q. Told them what they said?

A. I made it a point to tell them it was a friendly visit, and so forth.

Q. That you poured a beer?

A. Yes. [6752]

Q. Veered the chitchat back to the weather?

A. We have gone over that, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. I say, you told the reporters that, did you?

A. I issued a statement, or I mean I gave them information.

Q. A press release?

A. Well, I didn't give them a press release. I gave them information over the telephone on the lines of that statement that you read.

Q. Did you call up the reporters or did they call you up?

A. No, they called me up.

Q. Which reporter? The reporter of what paper?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. It was a fellow with a Swedish name from the Chronicle—no, he came down to my house. Eric——

Q. Von Stroheim? A. No.

Q. He came down to your house, the gentleman from the Chronicle, and you told him about the meeting with Messrs. Andersen, Resner and Watson? A. That is right.

Q. And you told them what you had said and what they had said? A. Yes.

Q. Fully and completely?

A. Yes, I discussed it. I don't know whether I told them every word, but I gave him the facts as I understood them.

Q. And then did you tell the same thing to other reporters on [6753] the same day?

A. Yes. My recollection is that this visit down to my house by this reporter—Nielsen, I think his name is, Eric Nielsen, is my recollection—was the day following the call on me, the evening call by Mr. Resner, Mr. Andersen and Mr. Watson.

Q. He just happened to drop down?

A. Well, at that particular time, if you will recall, I had issued a statement just shortly before that regarding my position, a public statement, and there was naturally—apparently the press was——

Q. You were a big shot.

A. They were interested in it, and this fellow came down to ask me some questions.

Q. So you told him all about it. Now, how did you happen to tell the other papers? Did you then call the other papers and tell them?

A. No, they called me.

Q. They called you also? A. Yes.

Q. And you told them all about this?

A. I told them, as I say, substantially what is in that paper.

Q. You didn't keep anything a secret from them?

A. I didn't tell them anything about what I testified before the grand jury.

Q. No, but you told them the conversation between Andersen and [6754] Resner; you did not keep any of that secret?

A. I had no reason to.

Q. And then you popped up before the grand jury and told the story of what you had said to Mr. Andersen and Mr. Resner before the grand jury, did you?

A. I didn't pop up there. I was requested to appear before the grand jury by Mr. Donohue, and I related to them what had happened.

Q. And you came up and told the grand jury that, did you? A. I told them of the visit.

Q. How did you happen to discuss the matter with Mr. Donohue?

A. I believe I saw Mr. Donohue and Mr. Barber some time the next day, or maybe they read it in the papers. I think they did. They read it in the Chronicle, about this visit, and they called me and asked me about it—they asked me. I wouldn't say they called me.

Q. They asked you about the visit they read in the paper. And then what happened?

A. Then, as I recall, the Attorney General made the statement about alleged intimidation of Government witnesses or something like that, and I was asked to appear before the grand jury.

Q. Well, Mr. Andersen or Mr. Resner or Mr. Watson made no effort to intimidate you, did they?

A. I made that very, very clear to the newspapermen, to the grand jury, to Mr. Donohue and everybody else, that in my [6755] judgment it was a friendly visit with no undue pressure or any method that could be remotely construed as intimidation.

Q. They came down and begged you to tell them? That is about what it amounted to?

A. That is about what it amounted to, yes.

Q. The statement you are talking about was not the Attorney General's; it was Mr. Donohue's, and you added in the Examiner this little gem: "Donohue, taking his first official cognizance of the visit of Bridges' attorneys, George Andersen and Herbert Resner with Government witness Mervyn Rathborne last Saturday night announced that 'the United States Government is prepared with every resource at its command to detect quickly and to punish severely any person or persons who may interfere with in any manner or to any degree molest any of its witnesses who have given or may be called upon to give testimony.'" Do you remember that that was the statement?

A. I recall such a statement. I was proceeding in error. I thought it came from Washington. Maybe I was wrong. It was my recollection the Attorney General made a statement on it, too.

The Court: We will take the noon recess, ladies and gentlemen, and resume at 2:15, 15 minutes past two o'clock this afternoon. The same admonition not to discuss the case under any conditions or circumstances or to form an opinion thereon.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:00 p.m. this date.) [6756]

Thursday, March 2, 1950, 2:15 o'Clock P.M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

MERVYN RATHBORNE

resumed the stand.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. When the attorneys for Messrs. Andersen and Resner, accompanied by Mr. Watson, called upon you, they wanted to know two things, did they not: one, what was the nature of your testimony before the grand jury; and, two, what was behind the resumption of the prosecution against Mr. Bridges. Is that right?

A. I believe that's right, yes, sir.

Q. All right. In other words, they asked you in addition to what you had testified to, whether or not you knew anything as to why this old persecution had been brought up again at this time.

A. I believe that they asked that. I am not—I don't recall the entire conversation.

Q. Now, you didn't tell them, you wouldn't tell them, you didn't tell them either, about your visit to Messrs. Carey, Curran and Tommy Ray, did you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't tell them about your visit to Clark?

A. The only thing I told them, I believe you made the statement [6757] there.

Q. Well, now, you hadn't taken any oath not to tell them about your visit to Curran, Ray, Carey and what's the other—Murray, had you?

A. No, I hadn't.

Q. You hadn't taken any oath not to tell them about your visit to Clark or your dealings with the agents, had you? A. No, sir, I had not.

Q. You said that the reason you wouldn't give them any information is that you had taken an oath before the grand jury not to?

A. I don't believe I said that. I said the reason I didn't give them any information concerning my testimony to the grand jury was for that reason. If I recall, that is what I said.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You didn't give any reason for not giving any information on the other subject, did you?

A. No, I just declined to discuss the whole thing with them.

Q. In other words, Philip Murray, James Carey, Joe Curran, Tommy Ray, all bitter enemies of Harry Bridges, had engaged in a slimy conspiracy to get him; you were part of it and you wouldn't warn him, would you?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if Your Honor please.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Hallinan: I think it goes to his state of mind. You mean the form of the question, Your Honor, or the content? [6758]]

The Court: The form, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: All right, very well.

Q. All right, you have testified heretofore, and you knew that Ray and Curran were bitter enemies of Harry Bridges, weren't they?

A. I don't believe I gave such testimony. I don't think so.

Q. Well, is that something you didn't know?

A. I don't think I said anything about Tommy Ray.

Q. Well, what about it now?

A. Who are you referring to? Ray, Curran or both of them?

Q. Yes, Ray and Curran, first.

A. As far as I know, there are disagreements between Curran and Mr. Bridges.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Would you call a murder a disagreement?

A. Well, I wouldn't call a murder a disagreement, no, sir.

Q. Well, how deep do you consider the disagreement, as you put it, between Curran and Harry Bridges to be?

A. Well, it is a considerable degree, I would say.

Q. Yes. In other words, Curran hates Bridges, doesn't he?

A. I don't think his disagreement extends that far, to actual hatred.

Q. And Ray, Thomas Ray—you know Bridges had him thrown out of a convention in 1948 as being a stool pigeon and a fink, didn't you?

A. I don't—never heard of that. [6759]

Q. Never heard that? Did Ray tell you?

A. 1948?

Q. Yes. A. No, sir.

Q. Did Ray tell you that?

A. No, sir, he did not.

Q. Did he tell you that any incident of that kind occurred at any time?

A. That is the first I have heard of it, as you are mentioning it here now.

Q. Now, as far as Carey and Murray is concerned, Carey and Murray are concerned, you know that there is a great hatred now between Carey and Murray and Mr. Bridges, don't you?

A. As far as Mr. Murray's attitude is concerned, I certainly would not characterize is as a great hatred.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Just a determination to get Mr. Bridges' out of the ILWU, isn't it?

A. A dislike; it is a dislike on Mr. Murray's part.

Q. A very active dislike. Now, although you had been a friend of Mr. Bridges for many years, he befriended you, he never had done you any wrong or any harm, you didn't let him know that this manipulation of Carey, Murray, Curran and Raye was going on, did you?

A. Well, in the first place, Mr. Hallinan, it was not a manipulation. I went to see these people of my own volition and my [6760] own motivation. I sought them out; they didn't seek me out.

Q. All right. So you didn't tell——

A. I went to them to get the benefit of whatever advice they cared to give me.

Q. But you didn't tell Mr. Bridges that that was behind the prosecution either, did you?

A. I don't understand your question.

Q. You didn't tell the lawyers when they went down to see you anything on that subject, did you?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. You weren't under any oath not to tell that, were you? A. That's right.

Q. All right. So far as the oath is concerned, you say that Mr. Andersen and Mr. Resner told you that such an oath is not binding, that the grand jury or the district attorney has no power to administer such an oath, didn't they?

A. They said that was their opinion, yes.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And then you checked up on that afterwards with Mr. Barber, didn't you?

A. I discussed it with him.

Q. And Mr. Barber told you that as a matter of fact the oath was not binding, didn't he?

A. He never told me any such thing.

Q. Well, what did he tell you?

A. I think—I don't think he explained the thing at all. He [6761] said, "Well, you took an oath and you are not supposed to talk about it." That is all, or words to that effect.

Q. Have you since verified that such an oath is not binding?

A. I have not, no, sir; I don't know.

Q. All right. Now, after we entered the case, and just some two or three weeks before the trial, we sent a young man down to see you, former lieutenant in the Army Intelligence, named Harold Lipsit. Do you remember him? A. I do.

Q. All right. Now, that was long after Messrs. Andersen and Resner had been down there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you refused to give Mr. Lipsit any information, didn't you? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you notify the attorneys for the prosecution that Mr. Lipsit had called upon you?

A. Yes, I told Mr. Barber he had been down to see me.

Q. Now, you say you went in and testified before the grand jury concerning Mr. Andersen, Resner and Watson calling upon you, isn't that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I was requested to do that and I did.

Q. Who requested you to do so?

A. I believe Mr. Donohue did.

Q. What were you trying, to get these people indicted? [6762]

A. No, sir. As I recall it, I believe Mr. Donohue told me that the Attorney General had called him, and to make a complete investigation of the case and report it to him, or words to that effect. And Mr. Donohue asked me to go before the grand jury and state what happened and I did, and that was it.

Q. What did he tell you, that he just wanted to terrify anybody from finding out what the case was against these defendants?

A. He said he wanted the facts produced. He wanted the grand. jury to know what happened. That is all.

Q. And you noticed the press releases that went out at that time that were read to you this morning?

A. You read a statement you had by Mr. Donohue this morning.

Q. Now, how long have you known Harry Bridges? A. Since 1935.

Q. Do you know his wife?

A. Yes, I have met her.

Q. His children?

A. No, sir, I know his oldest girl.

Q. His wife and yours have been friendly? Have they visited or met each other?

A. I believe they have.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. How long have you known Rob Robertson?

A. I think from 1937. I am not certain as to the first time——

Q. Do you know his wife Laura?

A. I have met her. I won't say I know her. I mean—— [6763]

Q. Has he always treated you with friendliness, courtesy and kindness?

A. I have no—yes.

Q. Do you know Henry Schmidt? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know his daughter?

A. I may have met her.

Q. Do you know his wife?

A. No, I don't know his wife. I may have met her, but either one I wouldn't know.

Q. And he has always treated you with kindness and friendship, has he not? A. That is right.

Q. I beg your pardon? A. That is right.

Q. And Harry Bridges—when you would go off on occasional drunks he would cover up for you at the CIO, wouldn't he?

A. That is not true. I mean, there was no occasion for him to cover up.

Q. Do you know a young woman named Jean Murray? A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. How long have you known her?

A. I think I first met her during the war. I am not certain of that.

Q. Can you tell us what year? [6764]

A. No, I can't. I can tell you the circumstances more or less, though.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Tell us the time approximately.

A. The best recollection I have is during the war, Mr. Hallinan, some time during this last war.

Q. Can you tell us the early part, the middle, or the late part?

A. Well, my recollection is probably about the middle. I am not positive about it.

Q. What year would you say? 1942, '3, '4—what?

A. My recollection is probably about 1944.

Q. 1944? A. I am not sure of that.

Q. And you say the circumstances under which you met her——

A. I recall that—I believe the warehousemen in Oakland were putting on a dance or something like that, and she was selling advertising for the program for the warehousemen's dance, and she did a very good job of that, and as a result of that I recommended her to Mr. Irvine to do advertising work for the Labor Herald.

Q. And did she do that?

A. I believe she did. It is my recollection that she worked for a while.

Q. And did you become acquainted with her?

A. Yes, I became acquainted with her. [6765]

Q. Did you ever visit her home?

A. On one or two occasions, yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever accompany her any place, to any place of entertainment, meals, or anything of that kind?

A. I think there was one year when I was in Sacramento representing the State CIO up there that we had dinner together.

Q. Just once?

A. I believe there was another occasion in Sacramento and also—I can't recall—there may have been a number of occasions in Sacramento when we had dinner.

Q. What year was that?

A. My recollection would be 1944, but I am not at all certain of it.

Q. What were you doing in Sacramento at that time?

A. I was the legislative representative for the State CIO.

Q. How long were you up there?

A. I was up there during the sessions of the Legislature. I used to go up there every year when the Legislature was in session.

Q. How long did you stay up there altogether in that year?

A. Well, in the first place, I am not certain as to the year, but I stayed up there during the period of the Legislature, or a large part of the period of the Legislature, which was a matter of months. That is, I didn't stay there continuously. I would sometimes go up there on Monday morning and come back on [6766] a Friday night. Sometimes I would make two or three trips from Sacramento to San Francisco during the week.

Q. How many months did it consume?

A. I think the Legislature——

Northern District of California,
Southern Division.

Phillips & Van Orden Co., 870 Brannan Street, San Francisco, Calif.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I attended, oh, eight or ten sessions of the Legislature up there, both special and regular, and my memory is not clear enough on each one as to know the exact time that they convened and adjourned, but the regular sessions were, as I recall them, some time in January and would adjourn some time in the summer, some time in June, I believe. And special sessions of the Legislature were usually for shorter periods of time. So I am not sure as to the exact period of time.

Q. What was her occupation at that time?

A. I don't know what she was doing at that particular time. I believe she was working in Sacramento for some legislative committee. That is my recollection, but I am not at all certain about it.

Q. Do you know hat kind of work she did?

A. I believe she did stenographic work.

Q. Did you know what her approximate age was?

Mr. Donohue: I think it is time to object, if your Honor please. I do not see possibly what the age of some woman whom he knew was to do with the issues in this case.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, we get all kinds of history in there [6767] of everything everybody does from the cradle to the grave, and I think this lady's age might be of some relevancy.

Mr. Donohue: I renew the objection, if your Honor please.

The Court: I will overrule the objection at this time.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Are you referring to her age at that time?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes. What is her age approximately at the present time, if you know?

A. I would say in her thirties.

Q. How old are you, Mr. Rathborne, again?

A. Forty-five.

Q. During the time that you attended this legislative session in Sacramento, you say you went out on numerous occasions with this young lady to dinner, and so forth, is that right?

A. I wouldn't say numerous.

Q. How many times all together?

A. Well, on all the times—I am not now just referring to the one session of the Legislature but all the times I probably went out with her were four or five times.

Q. Only four or five times all together?

A. Yes.

Q. And you visited her apartment on occasion, did you? A. No, sir.

Q. Neither in Sacramento nor elsewhere?

A. I did here in San Francisco on two or three occasions, yes, sir. [6768]

Q. Now, your relations with her were always friendly? A. Yes, sir.

Q. She treated you courteously and kindly, did she? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was your friend? A. That is right.

Q. Tried to advise you and help you out in every way she could?

A. My friendship with her was not to the degree where I discussed things that I needed advice on.

Q. When you were in trouble or difficulty didn't you go to this young lady and tell her your troubles?

A. No, sir.

Q. Never?

A. I don't recall any such event.

Q. Now, you know a young lady named Betty Texeira? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you first meet her?

A. I can't recall exactly. I think it was possibly 1940 or 1941, around in there.

Q. Under what circumstances did you meet her?

A. She for a considerable period of time was employed by the State CIO as one of the legislative representatives in Sacramento.

Q. And over what period of years did you know Mrs. Texeira?

A. Well, from the time she—I met her before she came to work [6769] for the CIO and became acquainted with both her and her husband.

Q. What is his name?

A. His name at that time was Mr. Green.

Q. What was his occupation then?

A. He was a supervisor here in San Francisco.

Q. You knew both her and her husband, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. Then she and her husband were divorced, is that right? A. I believe they were, yes.

Q. And she has remarried to a man named Texeira? A. That is my understanding.

Q. Do you know?

A. I have met him, yes.

Q. What is his first name, do you know?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Hallinan. I don't know that I ever knew it, as a matter of fact.

Q. In the interim between the two marriages did you get to know Betty Texeira pretty well?

A. Well, as I explained to you, she went to work for the State CIO as a legislative representative, I think in 1944 or 1945. I am not certain again as to the year. And during sessions of the Legislature she would go to Sacramento representing our organization.

Q. Then you would see her on these occasions?

A. Frequently, yes, sir. [6770]

Q. Did she work with you on any such matters?

A. Oh, a large number of matters.

Q. For how many years?

A. Probably two or three years.

Q. Had you been accustomed on occasion to visit her in her home, in her apartment?

A. I think I was—during that period I think I was at her home once.

Q. Did you take her out to dinner or places of amusement?

A. Well, we used to frequently have breakfast together, and after committee hearings we would go out and have dinner together sometimes.

Q. Do you know what her approximate age is?

A. I would say she is also probably in her early thirties.

Q. When had you last seen either of these young ladies before you testified before the grand jury?

A. I think I saw the first one, Miss Murray, a few days before that.

Q. A few days before you testified?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where? A. In San Francisco.

Q. At what address?

A. I don't know the address. It was on Geary Street.

Q. Whose place was it? [6771]

A. It was her place.

Q. It was her apartment, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir. When I returned from the trip on the Madison I called up a number of people that I had known, told them I was back and would like to see them, and she was one of the people I called at that particular time.

Q. So you called her up and made an appointment to come up and see her; that is correct, isn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. You called her at her apartment on Geary Street? A. That is right.

Q. And you had a conversation with here there?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you have any discussion with her then about this case? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with her about your appearance before the grand jury or that you intended to appear before the grand jury?

~~A. No, sir, I did not.~~

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Not at that time. It was just a friendly call that you made upon her, is that so?

A. She invited me to lunch, I accepted her invitation and had lunch with her.

Q. In her apartment?

A. That is right. [6772]

Q. Anybody else present?

A. Not at the time. During the time I was there another young man dropped in. I forget what his name was. A friend of hers, apparently, a neighbor.

Q. Did you call her again after you testified before the grand jury?

A. Not to my recollection, no, sir; I don't recall.

Q. Do you know anything about dictagraphing?

A. Dictagraphing?

Q. Yes. A. No, sir.

Q. You have never set up a dictagraph?

A. No.

Q. Have you ever been dictagraphed yourself?

A. I don't know—you mean—I have seen a dictagraph machine, if that is what you mean.

Q. Have you heard your own voice read off from one of them? A. No, sir.

Q. About what time of day did you get to Miss Murray's apartment?

A. I believe it was around noon.

Q. It was about 1:45 in the afternoon, wasn't it?

A. It might have been. I am not sure.

Q. You had a cocktail and you had lunch, isn't that right? A. That is right. [6773]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. But you had already testified before the grand jury, hadn't you?

A. I am not certain as to that date, Mr. Hallinan. It was about the time I testified before the grand jury.

Q. Now, you had some lunch and after lunch you had a conversation with Miss Murray on the subject of your testimony before the grand jury, didn't you?

A. I don't recall any such conversation. I had a conversation with her. I remember talking about Communism with her and my present attitude or my attitude at that time toward Communism and the Communist Party.

Q. Was she a member of the Communist Party, so far as you knew?

A. I believe she was not at that particular time.

Q. But she had been?

A. That is my understanding, yes.

Q. How about Mrs. Texeira?

A. I don't know about that. I don't know if she was ever a member or not.

Q. Now, your name had been in the paper already as far as it being announced that you were going to be a witness before the grand jury, is that right?

A. I have told you, Mr. Hallinan, my recollection is not clear on the point. It was around the time that I testified before the grand jury.

Q. Well, now, did you have in part this conversation with Miss [6774] Murray on that occasion in her apartment on Geary Street, where Miss Murray said to you:

> "Mervyn, why are you cutting off all your friends with such lies? You know Harry Bridges never joined the Party."

And you answered:

> "Well, maybe he never was in the Party as a member, but he certainly went along with men that may have been. I honestly consider him a Communist."

Did you say that?

A. I don't recall any such statement, no, sir.

Q. Would you say that that was not said?

A. I say I don't recall any such statement as that.

Q. What is your present impression as to whether anything to that effect was said?

A. I don't believe it was.

Q. You don't believe it was? A. No, sir.

Q. And you only had one visit at her apartment, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. Do you remember that Miss Murray said, "Well, they said that about Roosevelt. I can't understand what makes you become a traitor. Why did you sell yourself and to whom?"

And you answered, "I didn't sell myself. It was the right thing to do. I did the right thing and I will prove it to you." [6775]

And Miss Murray said, "What is your angle, Mervyn? Why are you doing this? Are you afraid to work for a living? It is like those Christmas eve sailings we used to talk about when the men had to work. But you never had to work on Christmas eve with the men. What are you trying to do, build a bankroll?"

And you answered, "You don't understand. If you had a home you would think differently. If you were in business you would know what I am up against. It is too tough. The pressure is too great. I have nothing against Bridges personally, but the Government against him this time is big."

Did you say that to her?

A. That—I am sure that I did not.

Q. You are sure you did not?

A. I am certain I did not.

Q. Did she say to you, "What do you mean by 'It isn't personal'? It must be terribly political, then."

And you answered, "Well, I am doing the right thing. You would see the right, too, if you would talk to the right kind of people."

Miss Murray said, "You mean talking to Government agents?"

You answered, "No, not only to Government agents. The national CIO had to make a decision on Bridges."

Did you tell her that?

A. I might have discussed the matter of the—that doesn't [6776] sound like my language at all. I might have discussed the national CIO with her and its attitude toward Mr. Bridges. [6776-A]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And its attitude toward Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, did she say this: "I know all about Philip Murray and Reuther and the squeeze play they are trying to work against the ILWU, but Mervyn, you know Harry Bridges was never foolish enough to join the Communist Party," and you answered, "I never testified he joined the Communist Party."

A. I don't recall that conversation, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Well, did you tell Mrs. Murray in any sort of words that you didn't know whether or not Harry Bridges ever had joined the Communist Party?

A. I don't recollect any such conversation, no, sir.

Q. You don't recollect whether you said it or not?

A. That's right. I remember discussing Mr. Bridges to some extent there, and when I talked to her, but I don't recollect any such statement.

Q. Well, do you remember Mrs. Murray telling you that she knew that he had never joined the Communist Party? A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. You don't remember that either?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you sober when you were there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have anything to drink at her apartment?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I think we had one or two cocktails before lunch. [6777]

Q. Had you had anything to drink before you got there? A. No, sir, I had not.

Q. Now, did you speak this way to her, did you say, "I didn't tell any lies to anybody. Everybody I have talked to says I am doing the patriotic thing." Did you say that to her?

A. I may have; I don't recall it, though, but I may have said it.

Q. Now, did she ask you this—didn't she say, "Mervyn, you know you are being a traitor to everything real in your life. However were you talked into doing this? Who bought you?" And you said, "I haven't gotten any money. All I want is the right to get along in the world." She said, "You don't have to get money. You probably have a promise from Philip Murray of a big job with the rightwing CIO. How about that, Mervyn? You told me when you shipped out an FBI agent sailed with you." Remember that?

A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. All right. Did any member of the Immigration Department board the ship at Manila?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or at any port where you stopped?

A. In San Francisco, yes, sir.

Q. But only at San Francisco?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did any agent of the Immigration Department come out on the [6778] sloop that meets the ships; the pilot sloop, or at any port that you stopped at on any of those trips?

A. There may have been Immigration agents coming out to take care of the——

Q. No, I mean one who spoke to you.

A. No, sir.

Q. You are sure of that?

A. I am positive.

Q. You never told Miss Murray so?

A. I don't ever recall telling her so.

Q. Now, did you tell her this, that you would be back in the CIO some day and she would see you do the right thing, that she shouldn't worry about Bridges and ILWU, that people don't have a chance these days, that the monopolies have everything so sewed up that you have to play ball, they are really going to get Bridges this time, "The only thing I can do is play ball with that part of the labor movement that wants to keep the old system going."

A. Certainly I never made such a statement as that.

Q. You didn't, huh? Now, did you tell her this, "Jean, they are going to get Bridges this time whether I go along with them or not."

A. I don't think so; I don't recall that.

Q. Well, did you tell her that you had received information that they were able to prove a case against Bridges without [6779] your help?

A. No, what I discussed with her very largely,

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan, she wanted to know my reasons, for either going or testifying or going to testify. And we discussed that. That was the main burden of the discussion.

Q. Well, what was said?

A. I told her my reasons.

Q. What did you tell her?

A. I told her that I thought that the Communist Party was harmful to American labor. That has been my—I finally reached that conviction. I thought, although I hated to contemplate it, that there was going to be trouble between this country and the Soviet Union, and that the Communists in this country would act in behalf of the Soviet Union in case that trouble took place. I told her I thought that Mr. Bridges made a very serious mistake in sticking along with the Communists, that he should have broken with them, and that I was not in sympathy with him in that respect, although I had no quarrel with him personally.

Q. What did you mean by "breaking with the Communists"?

A. Well, that is what I said, breaking with the Communists.

Q. Was that the expression you used?

A. It might not have been the exact expression, but it implies I——

Q. Well, what did Miss Murray say about that?

A. She said she thought I was wrong. She said she thought I [6780] would lose many friends, that

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

I was making a very serious mistake and words to that effect.

Q. What else did she say?

A. I think that was the—now, what I have just said are not her words. I mean, that is the impression she conveyed to me. And I think that was the general theme of her discussion during the time I was there.

Q. Did she use any expression such as "treason" or "traitor" to the working class?

A. No, I believe she said I would be looked on by many of my former friends as a stool pigeon.

Q. Did she use the word "traitor"?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Hallinan. She may have, she may have not.

Q. Did she ask you what you had testified to?

A. I am not certain because I don't recall whether that incident took place before or after my appearance before the grand jury.

Q. Well, did you tell her what you were going to testify to about Harry Bridges?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did she ask you?

A. She may have and she may have not. I am not certain on that point.

Q. Did she ask you if you were going to testify that Harry Bridges had ever been a member of the Communist Party? [6781]

A. I don't recollect any such question.

Q. Did she tell you that you knew that he never had been? I say, whether that is true or not, did she say that to you?

A. I don't recall whether she did or whether she didn't, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Did you have any argument with her other than the things you have already said here?

A. Yes, I had an argument with her to the extent that she was trying to prevail upon me not to embark upon this course of action or not to follow it, and that I said I was going to do it. And we argued about that for some time. She explained reasons why she thought I shouldn't.

Q. What reasons did she give you, what did she say?

A. Well, as I have related here, my best recollection is that she thought it was the wrong thing, she said she thought it would be harmful to the labor movement and that it was not the right thing to do.

Q. What did she say, how it would affect yourself, according to her judgment?

A. I don't—she said that I would lose a lot of friends. I remember that statement.

Q. Was she speaking to you in a kindly way, a friendly way, trying to persuade you out of the course you were embarking on?

A. To a certain extent, yes. She was, I would say, angry.

Q. But you didn't tell her either—if the conversation took [6782] place after your grand jury testimony, you didn't tell her what you had testified to; if it took place before your testimony, you didn't tell her what you were going to testify to, is that correct?

A. It is my recollection that I didn't discuss my direct testimony with her, yes, sir.

Q. She asked you, though, is that right?

A. She may have, but I am not certain.

Q. Don't you remember that she said, don't you remember that this took place, that she said that if you had testified before the grand jury that Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party, that that would be a lie and you said you didn't tell any lies, you didn't say Harry was a member of the Communist Party, you just answered the questions put to you?

A. I don't recall any such conversation as that.

Q. Think it might have occurred?

A. I just don't recall. My recollection would be that it didn't occur, but I just don't recall it.

Q. Did you have any discussion with her in which she handed you some money?

A. No, sir.

Q. Some small amount of money?

A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't she give you thirty dimes and tell you that that was the classic price for treason? [6783]

A. No, sir, she did not.

Q. She didn't do that? A. She did not.

Q. Didn't hand you thirty dimes and tell you that the labor movement owed you that?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. She did not.

Q. You are sure? A. I am certain of that.

Q. Did you remember the name of the young man who came in there while you were there?

A. No, I didn't, sir.

Q. How long were you there?

A. I guess for two or three hours. I don't recall exactly how long it was.

Q. It was in the early evening when you left, wasn't it?

A. My recollection is it was probably around 4:30 or 5:00 o'clock.

Q. All right. Now, when did you next meet Mrs. Murray?

A. I next met her in Half Moon Bay.

Q. When?

A. Some time in December, last December.

Q. And was she with anybody else?

A. Yes.

Q. Who?

A. Pardon me a minute, will you, please? [6784] (Coughing.)

Q. Whom was she with when you met her at Half Moon Bay?

A. She was with Mrs. Texeira.

Q. And do you remember what date that was?

A. About the middle of December, my recollection is, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. All right. And how long prior to that had you last met Mrs. Texeira?

A. I met her at a Democratic luncheon over in

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

San Mateo, I guess approximately a year before; I am not certain. It was——

Q. About a year before. Did she live some place down in San Mateo County, do you know, at that time?

A. I believe she did. I met her there with her husband at this luncheon and that is the time I saw her before.

Q. So under what circumstances did you meet these two ladies at Half Moon Bay that day?

A. In the evening, I think it was around—well, it was just before the time my wife was ready to get dinner, the telephone rang and my wife answered it, and the person at the other end said, "This is Betty Texeira," and she wanted to speak to me. So I spoke to her. She said she would like to see me.

Q. Had your wife known Mrs. Texeira before?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. So what happened?

A. So I made an appointment to see her at the restaurant nearby. [6785]

Q. What restaurant?

A. Place called Dominick's.

Q. You told her you would meet her at Downey's, is it? A. Dominick's.

Q. Dominick's? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far away from your home is that?

A. About a block.

Q. Did you come to the phone and answer the phone when—— A. I did.

Q. ——she said she wanted to talk to you and you told her you would meet her at Dominick's, is that right? A. That's right.

Q. All right. So then did you go to Dominick's?

A. I did.

Q. How did you get there, walk or drive?

A. Walked.

Q. Walked over. And was Mrs. Texeira there?

A. She was.

Q. Who was with her? A. Nobody.

Q. She was alone? A. Yes.

Q. All right. And was she in the building, in Dominick's?

A. My recollection is that she was waiting for me in front of [6786] the place.

Q. All right. And did you have a conversation with her then? A. We went inside.

Q. And sat down? A. Sat down.

Q. Have something to drink?

A. That's right.

Q. All right. And will you tell us what the conversation was with her?

A. She said she had come down to see me. She wanted to talk to me. And she asked me a considerable number of questions.

Q. What?

A. Well, was I going to testify in the Bridges case, and what were my reasons for taking this position that I would testify and——

Q. Did she ask you what your testimony had been before the grand jury?

A. I don't recall that she did.

Q. Did she ask you what your testimony was going to be on the trial?

A. I don't think she asked for any details about it.

Q. Well, didn't she ask you generally what you had testified to?

A. I don't recall that she asked that particular question, no, sir.

Q. You say she asked your reasons for [6787] appearing? A. That's right.

Q. Did you tell her what your reasons were?

A. I did.

Q. Did you tell her you had met Mr. Carey, had a message from Phil Murray, had talked to Mr. Curran and Mr. Ray? A. I told her——

Q. Or did you give her this general patriotic bunk that you have been talking about?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please, and ask your Honor to strike the remark.

The Court: Sustained. It may be stricken.

A. My recollection is that I told her that I had talked to the national officials of the CIO. I don't know whether I named them or not. Now, I am not sure.

Q. You told her you had talked to the national officials of the CIO? A. That's right.

Q. You don't remember whether you named them or not? A. That's right.

Q. How long did the conversation with her take place, how long did it last?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Oh, in that particular place it took place for, oh, I would say, 20 or 30 minutes.

Q. All right. Now, did she ask you what you had testified to before the grand jury? [6788]

A. Mr. Hallinan, I am not certain whether she did or whether she didn't. I just don't have any recollection of such a question.

Q. If she did, did you tell her?

A. No, I didn't tell her; I know that.

Q. Now, did you tell her the details of what Curran, Raye, Murray and Carey had said to you?

A. My recollection is that I made some statement along the lines that I have contacted the national officials of the CIO and as far as they are concerned, they do not consider the Bridges case an attack on labor, or on the CIO. That is my recollection of the extent of my discussion with her on that particular subject.

Q. That was all that was said? A. Yes.

Q. Now, did you also give her some other reasons why you were testifying? A. I did.

Q. The same ones that you have said that you gave Mrs. Murray? A. That's right.

Q. This cold war turning into a hot war, et cetera? A. That's right.

Q. Is that right? A. That's right.

Q. All right. And however, your recollection is definite that [6789] nothing was said as to the nature of the testimony you were going to give or had given?

A. I am reasonably certain, yes, sir. I don't——

Q. And are you reasonably certain that she didn't ask you?

A. I don't recall discussing any facts about what I was going to testify to, or if I had said this or hadn't said that. But it was generally a discussing regarding my reasons for testifying and her dislike for it. That was the general——

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions nor to form an opinion until it is submitted to you.

(Recess.) [6790]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Have you talked this matter over with anybody during the recess?

A. Not in any detail. I talked to Mr. Kaiser during the recess.

Q. Get a few suggestions?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. What the continuance of your testimony would be? A. No, sir.

Q. No corrections of any kind?

A. No, sir.

Q. Any little cream and sugar jokes to throw around? A. No, sir, not today.

Q. Now, you have told us the substance of what occurred in the conversations between you and Mrs. Texeira in Dominick's, is that right?

A. As I recall them.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And then did you go elsewhere with that lady?

A. Yes, she said Miss Murray was sitting out in an automobile and would like to see me and would I go out to talk to her. [6790-A]

Q. Was that the first time you knew Miss Murray was in an automobile?

A. When she told me, yes, sir. I mean, during the conversation.

Q. Where was the automobile stopped?

A. It was parked right across the street.

Q. From Dominick's? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it the only car on the block at the time?

A. It was parked out on the corner there. I don't recall whether in that particular block there were other cars or not.

Q. Was it parked right close to Dominick's?

A. Right across the street.

Q. Right across the street? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you first saw Mrs. Texeira she was standing in front of Dominick's, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you observe the car at that time?

A. I don't believe I did. It was a rainy night and was dark, and I didn't observe the car. I may have noticed it, but if I did, I didn't attach any particular significance to it.

Q. You hadn't noticed whether Miss Murray was in it or not? A. No, sir.

Q. Then after Mrs. Texeira had finished her conversation with [6791] you, you say she asked you to step out and see Miss Murray?

A. That's right.

Q. Then what did you do?

A. I went across the street and we got—the three of us got in the front seat of a car. It was a rather small car; it was crowded.

Q. How were you seated?

A. My recollection is I was seated on the side closest to the curb and that Miss Murray was next to me and Mrs. Texeira was on the side toward the road.

Q. What conversation took place now from the time you first got there until you left?

A. Mrs. Texeira related substantially in Miss Murray's presence the questions she asked me in Dominick's and the answers that I had given, and then there was some other discussion along the same general line.

Q. What was the discussion?

A. Well, about my testifying in this proceeding, about how they thought I was making a serious mistake, I shouldn't do it, and they said they were working with the defense.

Q. Now, wait. Who said they were working with the defense?

A. Mrs. Texeira, as I recall.

Q. Is that the first time she said that when you were in the car?

A. My recollection is yes, but I think she mentioned something [6792] about her being sympathetic to the defense in the restaurant, when we were talking there.

Q. While you were in the restaurant she said she was sympathetic to the defense?

A. That is my recollection, yes.

Q. But she didn't say she was working with the defense until you were in the automobile, is that right? A. That is my recollection.

Q. What did she say about working with the defense?

A. She didn't expand on it at all. She just made some statement about, as I understood it, my recollection is, working with the defense.

Q. Can you give us her language as closely as you can?

A. I have tried to do that, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. What did she say? "I," "we," or what?

A. That I don't recall.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. That I don't recall. The statement left the impression with me, as I say, she was working with the defense.

Q. But you can't remember what her language was nor the context of it, is that right?

A. Not the exact language, no, sir, I cannot.

Q. Then what was said?

A. Oh, there was some discussion about——

Q. What did you say when she said she was working with the [6793] defense?

A. I believe I said that everybody had the right to an opinion on this thing and to support or work with anyone they chose, and if she was working with the defense and for the defense, more power to her, or words to that effect.

Q. Well, go on. What else was said?

A. We discussed—went over the same ground, pretty much the same ground as in the restaurant.

Q. Did you participate in the conversation in detailing the same ground, or did Mrs. Texeira merely recite what had been said? Which?

A. For the most part she recited what had been said, and I believe on one occasion, possibly two, I corrected her. She said, "This is what Mervyn said."

I said, "No, this is what I said."

Q. What were those corrections?

A. That I can't recall.

Q. Well, approximately what did they relate to?

A. They related to some statement I had made to her in the restaurant.

Q. Do you remember what the statements were?

A. Not the exact statements. They had to do with my general reasons——

Q. Can you tell us what part of that subject they related to?

A. Let's see if I can remember it. No, my memory is not good [6794] on those particular points, Mr. Hallinan, but it was merely one or two corrections in connection with statements I had made to her in the restaurant.

Q. Were they very serious corrections or very minor? A. No, sir, very minor.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Very minor. Then what was said?

A. I believe it was Miss Murray said, "Well, we have talked this thing over, Betty and I, and if you testify in this Bridges case we are going to your wife"—Oh, no, before that they said, "How would you like to see your son discredited?"

Q. Your what? A. Son.

Q. Your son discredited?

A. Yes. "How would you like to have your wife leave you?" or words to that effect.

Q. Yes?

A. And I said I wouldn't like that.

Q. Well, go on.

A. And as I say, I believe it was Miss Murray said, "Betty and I have talked it over and we are going to fight you, and if you persist in testifying in the Bridges case we are going to your wife and we are going to tell her that you have been unfaithful to her with both of us, and we will each corroborate or each substantiate the other."

Q. You say these young women said [6795] that? A. Yes, sir, they did.

Q. Now, Mr. Rathborne, did you make up that lie, that infamous lie, yourself or did somebody make it up for you and give it to you?

A. That is not a lie, Mr. Hallinan. That is the truth. The incident happened and the ladies said to me——

Q. These two respectable young women suggested to you that they would go to your wife and say that you had been unfaithful with them and they would tell her, is that right?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Paisley: Your Honor, he is testifying now. He calls them respectable women. He calls it infamous lies. That is testimony.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, certainly nobody is safe. The fine, gallant Southern chivalry apparently does not even rise up to defend women but condemn them and back up this fellow's story.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): What else was said then?

A. I made some statement. I said, "If that is the way you are going to play it, goodbye," or something like that. I was very angry and I got out of the car.

Q. That was all that was said?

A. I believe I made some remark about being a very dirty way to do things, or words to that effect. I became very angry at that point and left. I made several—two or three remarks of that nature. [6796]

Q. That happened?

A. That actually happened, yes, sir.

Q. Mrs. Texeira, a married woman, told you that she would go over and tell your wife that you had been unfaithful to your wife with her, is that right?

A. My recollection is I believe I testified Miss Murray made that statement.

Q. Did Mrs. Texeira support her?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. One supported the other, yes, sir.

Q. Miss Murray was a married woman, too, wasn't she? A. I don't know.

Q. You never had been unfaithful to your wife with either one of them, had you?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor pleases.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): You never did have any intimacies or relationship with either of those two women, did you? A. No.

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor pleases.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Have you got some kind of deal with Donohue that he is to get up and object so everybody will think that you did [6797] have?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: I think that is a proper question, your Honor.

The Court: No, Mr. Hallinan. I sustained the objection properly under many decisions, and the objection was well taken.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Let me ask you this: When I put those questions to you, you did not answer them; you just sat there, and for the first time Mr. Donohue jumped up and objected, lending the implication that something like that probably did happen. Did you want to give that impression to people?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor please.

The Court: Sustained. [6798]

Mr. Hallinan: In other words, your Honor, counsel now is trying to leave some sort of an implication to the discredit of these young women that is not supported, and he won't let this man even state that there is no basis for any such implication.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Hallinan asks these questions, if your Honor pleases, not I.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, we deny that any such thing ever happened or that he ever had any such relations or that any such thing was ever said.

Mr. Donohue: Well, what were they doing down at Half Moon Bay?

Mr. Hallinan: Trying to find out what the scoundrel had to say; what do you think they were trying to do down there? Trying to persuade him he shouldn't destroy himself by being their tool.

Mr. Paisley: I move that your Honor admonish counsel and strike from the record his use of the word "scoundrel."

Mr. Hallinan: Counsel asked what they were doing down there; I am entitled to answer it.

The Court: As I said before, personalities are not going to help in this case or tend to prove any fact in the case. I will strike the statement from the record and admonish the jury to disregard the statement.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): This having happened, did you go running up to tell Mr. Donohue [6799] about it?

A. The first thing I did, I went home and told my wife about it.

Q. And then when did you tell Mr. Donohue?

A. The next day.

Q. You are sure you didn't tell Mr. Donohue before you told your wife?

A. I am certain of that, sir.

Q. Where did you tell Mr. Donohue the story?

A. I met him in Sharp Park.

Q. How did you happen to meet him there?

A. I called him on the telephone and told him I would like to see him.

Q. When did you call him on the telephone?

A. I talked to him the next morning.

Q. What time?

A. My recollection is it was rather early, around 8:00, 8:30.

Q. Beg your pardon?

A. I say, my recollection is rather early, Mr. Hallinan; around 8:00, 8:30, approximately.

Q. Where did you phone him?

A. I believe I phoned him at his hotel.

Q. And what did he, drive down immediately?

A. No.

Q. With screaming sirens and cops and things?

A. No, I have never seen Mr. Donohue play cops and robbers, Mr.—— [6800] I met him at Sharp Park, I believe it was about noontime the next day, or it might have been in the afternoon.

Q. How did you happen to meet him in Sharp Park? Why was the arrangement made for that?

A. Well, it was kind of a central place where he wouldn't have to drive all the way to Half Moon Bay and I wouldn't have to drive all the way to San Francisco. So I met him there.

Q. Anybody with him?

A. There was a gentleman with him, I believe.

Q. Who?

A. I think Mr. Kaiser was with him. I am not—yes, he was; Mr. Kaiser was with him.

Q. And a stenographer? A. No, sir.

Q. All right. And then did you have a conference with Mr. Donohue and Mr. Kaiser?

A. I talked to Mr. Donohue and I related the facts substantially as I have related them here, of this visit of these——

Q. Did you tell them everything they said?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you tell him this story?

A. I told him, to my best recollection, everything I have said.

Q. Did you tell him this story they said they would tell your wife that you had been unfaithful to her? A. I certainly did. [6801]

Q. You did tell him that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now, Mr. Donohue having picked up this little gem, left, I take it, did he?

A. That's right.

Q. And you returned down to your own home?

A. M-hm (affirmative).

Q. And when did you next see Mr. Donohue?

A. I think it was about a week afterwards or several days after that.

Q. On this same subject?

A. He called or had a call made. I don't know which. And asked me to come to the city to see him.

Q. And you went up? A. I did.

Q. And what did you do?

A. I talked to him.

Q. And then what happened? Was that taken—Where did you talk to him on that second occasion?

A. In this building here.

Q. In this building? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Anybody else present?

A. At the beginning of our conversation there was not, no, sir.

Q. Well, then, who entered? [6802]

A. A couple of gentlemen entered the room.

Q. Who?

A. A couple of men. They were FBI agents.

Q. You know what their names were?

A. I don't recall their names. I was introduced to them, but I don't recall their names.

Q. And what happened then? Is that when you wrote out the statement that you are telling us about? A. That's right.

Q. You had now had two conversations with

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue and then a couple of FBI agents entered and then you wrote out a statement for them, is that right? A. That's correct.

Q. And was Mr. Kaiser present at both of these conversations? A. No, he was not.

Q. All right. Then what was the next thing that happened on this subject?

A. Well, I read the statement, or I gave the statement to these gentlemen and—are you referring to that time?

Q. Well, what was the next step? What was the thing in the circus, the next act?

A. Well, it wasn't a circus.

Q. Well, whatever you call it.

A. Well, Mr. Donohue said that he was having the matter thoroughly checked and that he would refer it to Washington and see [6803] what Washington thought about it.

Q. All right. And then what happened?

A. Well, that is all that happened there then.

Q. How many days was that after this occurrence took place at Half Moon Bay, at Dominick's?

A. Not very many days.

Q. How many days?

A. Oh, my recollection is probably four or five.

Q. Four or five, all right. Then Mr. Donohue stated that he would have the matter thoroughly checked at Washington, is that right?

A. That is one error I want to correct, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Yes?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. My wife was with me, and my child, my little boy, when I came to call on him.

Q. How old is your little boy?

A. Ten years old.

Q. The little boy who was going to be discredited or something?

A. He wasn't present, however, at this meeting with Mr. Donohue.

Q. And your wife and little boy, where did you say they were?

A. My wife was with me when I was talking to Mr. Donohue and also when, while I was talking to the FBI agents.

Q. Not down at Sharp Park, but up here?

A. Up here, yes, sir.

Q. And then Mr. Donohue told you he was going to have the matter [6804] thoroughly checked and find out what Washington thought about it, is that right?

A. That is the general statement he made, yes.

Q. All right. And then when did you next hear from the incident?

A. Oh, several days after that.

Q. Now, let's see if I can tell you what happened after that.

Mr. Donohue: May I ask the Court if Mr. Hallinan is now going to testify?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, leading question. We will have the witness testify.

Q. Now, you tell me if this isn't the series of events that followed. You have been reading the newspapers as to what was taking place, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. On December the 20th there appeared in the newspapers the statement that the defense had produced documentary evidence that showed that Crouch and Johnson had committed perjury when they said that Bridges was in New York on June 27th, 1936; do you remember that?

A. I remember reading about it in the newspapers, yes, sir.

Q. All right, fine. And then on December 27th there was another article in the newspaper that the defense had transmitted photostats of all these documents to the federal grand jury, the presiding judge and the Attorney General, demanding the indictment of Crouch and Johnson. Do you remember that? [6805]

A. I recall reading the newspaper stories, yes, sir.

Q. And the next day you got a telephone call from Mr. Donohue as follows: "Merve, this is Jiggs. Get up here right away. They have caught Crouch and Johnson in perjury and we got him off the hook. I want those two dames indicted."

And the next day the two dames were indicted. That was the sequence, wasn't it?

A. I think you are letting your imagination run away with you, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. All right. The two girls were indicted on the 29th of December, weren't they?

A. I am not certain as to the date.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You came up and told this same story that you have told on the witness stand here, didn't you?

A. Now——

Q. You told the grand jury the same story about these two girls that you have told on the witness stand, didn't you?

A. I related the facts as I recalled them, yes.

Q. The girls weren't called before the grand jury, were they?

A. Not to my knowledge, no, sir.

Q. Well, you know they weren't, don't you?

A. I said not to my knowledge.

Q. And on your word alone they got those two poor women indicted, just to cover up the perjury of Crouch and Johnson, isn't that what happened, Mr. Witness? [6806]

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor pleases, because Mr. Hallinan——

Mr. Hallinan: Might I be heard on it, your Honor?

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Hallinan is testifying about something he doesn't know anything about.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I be heard about this? This gentleman has been working actively with the prosecution on all these matters. He is not just a witness here, he is part of the prosecution. He is part of that little scheme. And I am entitled to find out what he knows about it.

Mr. Donohue: I may say to your Honor that it just so happened that Mr. Hallinan's associate entered an appearance for these two young ladies. He is very anxious to find out what evidence there was before the grand jury, and I for that reason ask your Honor to hold——

Mr. Hallinan: Bring it in.

Mr. Donohue: ——that the question he just asked is highly improper, because he is stating something he doesn't know anything about.

Mr. Hallinan: Bring it in.

Mr. Donohue: Well, on the right day.

Mr. Hallinan: You will never show up with it; you know that.

Q. Now, let me ask you this, Mr. Rathborne.

The Court: The objection is sustained. [6807]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan, continuing): At the time the grand jury met and the two girls were indicted, you talked to the newspaper people, didn't you?

A. I refused to discuss it with anybody.

Q. Now, did you read the articles in the newspapers? A. Some of them I did.

Q. Yes. For instance, did you read in the San Francisco Chronicle for Friday, December 30th, "Rathborne testified that the incident occurred two weeks ago. One of the women telephoned him, he said, and advised him to meet her in a restaurant near his home in Half Moon Bay"——

Mr. Paisley: I object to his reading from the newspaper, your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh,——

Q. Does this refresh your recollection——

Mr. Paisley: Just a moment. I object, your Honor. I insist on counsel waiting for the Court to rule. He doesn't want to wait for anybody, even the Court.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I don't want to wait——

Mr. Paisley: I object to him reading from the newspaper, your Honor. It is not in evidence.

Mr. Hallinan: I am simply asking if he made these statements.

Mr. Paisley: You are reading from the newspaper.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, I am reading it and asking if he gave [6808] these statements to the newspaper.

Mr. Paisley: And you know that is not proper, lawyerlike conduct.

The Court: Proceed.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): "——to meet her in a restaurant near his home"——

Mr. Paisley: I object, your Honor,——

Mr. Hallinan: The Court said to proceed. Don't just be thinking of what you are going to say next.

Q. (Continuing): "——at the restaurant he said he met Mrs. Texeira who led him to a parked automobile in which Mrs. Murray was waiting. The proposition was advanced, according to Rathborne's testimony, as the three sat in the parked car. Rathborne said he told the women they were attempting to blackmail him, and he would not be shaken from his determination to testify in the Bridges case. Rathborne left the car and from a distance saw the two women go up to another car parked a short distance away and consult with two men."

Do you remember reading that in the papers?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Was that what you testified before the grand jury, substantially? A. I believe it was.

Q. All right. Now, you saw these headlines, "Two Women Charged in Bridges Case Fix. Major Witness Accuses Pair of Trying to Blackmail Him, Force Him to Revise Testimony at Trial." [6809]

You remember that, don't you?

A. I remember reading it in the newspapers, yes.

Q. And you saw the girls' pictures in the paper, didn't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you saw in the Examiner, in the more colorful language of Mr. Dick Pearce, "Two Women Were Accused yesterday of trying to use the sex bunco game to silence Mervyn Rathborne, major government witness due to appear soon in the Harry Bridges trial."

You saw that, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. All right. Now, let me ask you this, Mr. Rathborne. Where is all that secrecy that you were talking about that is supposed to attach to the testimony in the grand jury, that you talked about when you wouldn't tell the lawyers what your testimony had been before the grand jury?

A. Mr. Hallinan, I just finished testifying, before you started on your little newspaper reading undertaking there, that I had not mentioned the instance to anybody connected with the press.

Q. Well, do you know——

A. It happens——

Q. Do you know who gave this information to the press?

Mr. Paisley: Wait a minute. Your Honor, the witness was not through. [6810]

Mr. Hallinan: Go ahead and finish.

The Court: I can't hear both at one time.

Mr. Hallinan: Withdraw the question.

Q. Go ahead and finish.

Mr. Paisley: Object to it on the ground that he interrupted the witness, which he does constantly.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Paisley: At any time it suits him.

A. As a matter of fact, it was a matter that I asked Mr. Donohue about. I asked him, "How in the world did all that stuff get in the newspapers? Who gave it to them?"

Q. What did he say?

A. He said, well, it must have been somebody around here told them. That's all.

Q. Didn't he say who told them?

A. No, he didn't.

Q. Didn't say he did it himself?

A. No, he did not.

Q. Did you ask anybody else about it?

A. I don't recall asking anybody else about it. Newspapers called me, a number of them, and I said, "I have nothing to say about it."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Well, did this change your opinion now as to the sacredness of grand jury testimony and how secret it must be kept?

A. Well, I am not responsible for the fact that the newspapers [6811] got hold of a story and decided to use it.

Q. The newspapers got hold of a story? Well, don't you see, don't you believe that this is what happened, that when it was to their interest to conceal from Mr. Bridges the nature of the case they were building up against him, they preserved that secrecy; but when they wanted to put a smear on the defense and cover up their own two perjured witnesses, they spread this all over the newspapers. Don't you know that that was what the deal was?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, Your Honor.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Was that the agreement that you had with Mr. Donohue, Kaiser, et al.?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if Your Honor pleases.

The Court: Sustained. [6812]

Q. Have you ever in your life done anything dirtier than that?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor please.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): You say you never knew Paul Crouch, is that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. It is my recollection—I don't recall ever having met Paul Crouch.

Q. At any time up to the present?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have seen his picture in the papers?

A. I don't know whether I have or have not.

Q. I mean during the time that he was testifying did you see his picture in the papers?

A. I probably did, but I don't have any recollection of it.

Q. You do not recognize that you ever met that man? A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. What did you have to do with the 1941 CIO convention in Oakland?

A. 1941? Was that the State CIO convention?

Q. Yes.

A. I believe I was a delegate there. I am not certain of that.

Q. And weren't you chairman of one of the committees?

A. I believe I brought in a report on the Labor Herald on some matter connected with that paper. [6813]

Q. Were you on the resolutions committee?

A. I don't believe so. I don't recall being on the committee.

Q. Were you on the publicity committee?

A. I might have been.

Q. And you never met Paul Crouch?

~~A. No, I don't recall ever meeting Paul Crouch.~~

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)
The record of the convention will show what committees I was on and whether I was there.

Q. Now, you testified, reading from page 6355, of your break-up with the Communist Party and the reasons for it. You said, "Well, over a period of time I had a number of differences, that is, I came more and more to disagree with certain policies and certain actions and things that were espoused and to forward as the Party line, and one particular instance was the organization of a third party, political party." Do you remember that?

A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. And you gave a story to the Call-Bulletin on the 27th of June, 1949—no, May—as follows:

> "Rathborne's story told to the Call-Bulletin was one of a virtual Damon and Pythias friendship between himself and Bridges, which finally broke up over political ideologies. Rathborne, active in labor affairs here since 1931 and once national president of the American Radio Telegraphists' Association, admitted, 'I was closely identified with Communist Party elements in the early day.' " [6814]
> "Q. When did you first begin breaking with this group? A. During the war.
> " 'Q. When did the break become open?
> " 'A. It became irreconcilable in 1946 when Communist Party headquarters in New York handed down orders to form a third political party in California. I considered such a politi> cal party a betrayal of the labor movement as it would only have served the purpose of defeating many men in public office who have proved themselves friends of labor.' Rathborne said he ran for secretary-treasurer of the State CIO in 1943 at Bridges' request and insistence."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Do you remember giving that statement?

A. That sounds—yes, sir.

Q. Would that be about your testimony now if you were asked those questions?

A. That is right.

Q. Well, the Communist Party had a third party for many years, hadn't it?

A. You mean the communist Party itself?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, but this situation was considerably different from that.

Q. The Communist Party had a registered party that ran candidates, collected funds, and so forth, just like any other political party for many years, is that right?

A. My objection to the third party, Mr. Hallinan, was based on [6815] the fact——

Q. No, I asked you if it is not true that the Communist Party did maintain a political party, run candidates for office, canvass for votes, and do things that other political parties do?

A. They did in California.

Q. For many years? A. That is right.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne).

Q. Now, you in 1942 were elected a delegate to the Democratic State Central Committee, weren't you?

A. I was—I am not certain of the year, but I was elected, or I did attend meetings of the Democratic State Central Committee.

Q. And you have been a registered Democrat for a number of years, haven't you?

A. That is right.

Q. And when you were talking to these Democratic bigwigs that you met in Washington, one of the things that was suggested to you that you might do as a sort of side-swipe would be to smear the Progressive Party, isn't that right?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: I think it is proper, your Honor, to show purpose and motive. It is a leading question.

The Court: Overruled. [6816]

A. No such conversations took place, Mr. Hallinan. Put it this way: I may have discussed the third party with a great number of people.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): I mean when you were back in Washington on the conference that you had with Mr. Clark, you discussed the third party, didn't you?

A. I never mentioned it, no, sir.

Q. When did you discuss it?

A. I might have made the statement to Mr. Clark. I didn't discuss it with him. I might have said—the same statement that I made there—that one of the reasons I was opposed to the Communist Party was because of their efforts to try to force, shove down the throats of the people of California a third political party.

Q. Do you remember way back on July 23, 1935, at a regular meeting of the San Francisco Bay Area District Council No. 2, Maritime Federation of the Pacific, Chairman Harry Bridges, and you being secretary, the following matter coming up:

> "Brother Dietrich speaks on United Labor Campaign Committee and introduces the following motion, that this Council go on record as endorsing the ULTC."

What does that mean? A. ULTC?

Q. Yes. ". . . send delegates to its meetings, seconded by Wolf. Now Brothers Rathborne and Dietrich speak at length on [6817] desirability of a labor party and give reasons why the Maritime Federation should support political action by organized workers. Brother Markey, Kanning, Francour, Frietsche, Delagan, Olson, Wilson and Baker also spoke on the question. Brothers Kanning, Francour, Frietsche and Delagan opposed the motion on the ground that the constitution of their organization prohibits their union from engaging in political activities. Brother Bridges relinquishes the chair to Brother O'Grady to speak on the Labor Party. He tells about Labor Party in Australia and how it prevented the use of police and soldiers to break strikes and to enforce a selective service draft during the war. He recommends the Council adopt the motion."

Do you remember that?

A. I don't remember it, but I could say something in connection with——

Q. Do you remember a discussion——

Mr. Paisley: Just a minute. The witness can answer.

The Court: He asked him if he remembered it. (To the witness) You may make an explanation if you wish.

A. I don't specifically remember it, but I wouldn't quarrel with the record.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): In other words, if it is in the minutes you accept it?

A. I would like to say something in explanation of the answer if I may. [6818]

Q. What is your explantion of the answer?

A. My explantion is this: that at this particular time I am not opposed to a third party, and at that time I was not opposed. I have never been opposed to a third party as such. I think people have the right to organize a third party if they want to. What I was opposed to was the Communist Party coming here to California, Bill Schneidermann coming here from New York and saying, "We are going to have a third party in California, because it is the decision of the Central Committee back in New York. We are going to have it."

Q. You didn't care about the third party; it was the persons who put the third party in?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Another thing, at that particular time I considered we had a number of good pro-labor congressmen and other representatives who might lose their seats——

Q. All right, let's go on.

A. May I continue?

Q. Pardon me. Go ahead.

A. ——who might lose their seats by a third party and be replaced by people who would not be as friendly to labor. That is the basis of my opposition to a third party at that particular [6819] time.

Q. It was all right back in 1935 when you were down on the record, is that right, and it is all right now because you know we have a letter later than that in which you ask for advice on forming a third party, but as you have committed yourself on some discussion with the Communist Party in 1946. that was one time when it was not all right, is that it?

A. I said the objection I had to it was the way it was presented, the fact that the people in California here were not consulted about it. It was not a native grass roots movement, but it was injected from the top by Communist orders and at that particular time I thought it was dangerous because some of the people who had been friends of labor would have third party candidates and other candidates against them and stand to lose their seats in Congress, and thereby lose funds for labor.

~~Q. You were a member of the Communist Party~~ then, weren't you? A. When?

Q. In 1946.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Yes, I was, but I was in the process of breaking with them.

Q. All right. To get back to yourself now, "Rathborne and Dietrich speak at length on desirability of a labor party and give reasons why the Maritime Federation should support political action by organized workers." You did that, didn't you?

A. Yes, if you want, I will volunteer additional information.

Q. No, we will get to that after. Let us get these things [6820] first so we have it with a series of hammer blows, so you can't get away from something.

A. I will concede I was for and supported a third party in 1935, Mr. Hallinan, and I have no opposition to a third party as such if the people themselves organize it.

Q. In 1936 you supported one, didn't you?

A. I may have.

Q. The only thing you want is that the people themselves organize it? A. That is right.

Q. In 1935 you wanted the Maritime Federation of the Pacific to organize?

A. To help support it, I believe.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I believe the resolution is for endorsement, is it not?

Q. Now, at a subsequent meeting of the same organization, "Brother Rathborne, ARTA, reports that his organization today endorsed the new union labor party and made provisions for sending delegates to its next meeting." Is that correct?

A. Not only did that, but I was very active in the labor party campaign and helped it in every way I could.

Q. Say, incidentally, just as a kind of hors d'oeuvres along the line, I notice in one of these matters back in 1935, "Moved and seconded that secretary be instructed to write to all affiliated organizations requesting them to vigorously prosecute [6821] the Hearst boycott." What was that?

A. My recollection is during the 1934 strike or shortly thereafter that the Hearst newspapers were giving the unions a bad time with respect to the way they handled the publicity about the unions, and that the unions had to declare a boycott on the Hearst newspapers. Now, that was the maritime unions had. That is my recollection of it.

Q. Now, I notice in a subsequent session of the same organization, "Moved and seconded that this Council nominate a committee to attend the conference on July 16th for the formation of the labor party, and the committee determine the purpose of this meeting and report its finding to the Council." That would be consistent with what you have already said, is that right?

A. Yes, sir. I mean,——

Q. Now, I notice so early as 1935 that Mr. Bridges took the floor to explain meetings that had ~~taken place in the east which he had attended and~~ which had been said to be Communist meetings. Do you remember that? A. No, I don't recall that.

Q. All right. This is in June of 1935: "Newspapers reported that Bridges attended two Communist meetings while in the East. Bridges stated that one of these meetings was called by a group of A. F. of L. unions presided over by an official of the Typographical union. Brother Bridges was invited to speak at this meeting by Heywood Broun. The second was an official [6822] meeting of the ILA local in Boston. Brother Bridges states that the Boston ILA is bitterly opposed to Ryan for breaking a longshore strike in 1931 with negro strikebreakers. He states that the West Coast program was howled down by convention delegates from the East, several of whom were appointed. Six ILA locals in New York have not held meetings in one to five years. The convention increased Ryan's salary to $12,000 a year. Do you remember this?

A. I don't remember that particular thing. I don't even know what you are reading from.

Mr. Hallinan (To Mr. Donohue): Is there any question? Do you want to look these over?

Mr. Donohue: No.

The Court: Shall we take the recess, Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: Very well. We will hold that until the morning.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will take the afternoon adjournment until tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions or to form an opinion thereon.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Friday, March 3, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [6823]

Friday, March 3, 1950—10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial. The witness on the stand is Mervyn Rathborne, heretofore sworn.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. (Handing document to witness): Do you remember that document?

A. Yes, now that I have seen it, Mr. Hallinan, I recall it.

Q. Did you have any discussion with any person connected with the prosecution about it last night?

A. I asked, I believe, Mr. Paisley if he had seen the document and what was in it, and he gave me a a general outline of its contents.

Q. Did you have a discussion with him about it then? A. No, sir.

Q. What answers would be to questions touching it or anything like that?

A. No, I did not. I just asked for information concerning the contents of the document.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You wrote out the memorandum, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. You received the answer? A. Yes.

Q. And put it in your file? [6824]

A. That is right.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer this in evidence, if your Honor please, as defendants' exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: I object, only on the ground that it has no bearing, so far as I can see, on the issue in this cause.

The Court: This is as to the establishment of a third party?

Mr. Hallinan: That is right.

Mr. Donohue: I think the witness should be allowed to explain it if it is to be received.

The Court: He may upon redirect.

(The document referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit U-3 in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Were you given an explantion last night on it?

A. I would like to comment on it if I may.

Q. Let us get it this way: Were you told some explanation that you should give of this document?

A. I was not.

Q. Was there any discussion with Mr. Paisley on the explanation that would be given this document? A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing was said about it, but you do want to give an explanation of it, do you?

A. I would like to say—— [6825]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Wait a minute, please.

A. ——how the document came to be written, if I may.

Q. We will give you a chance to explain it. Let us get it this way: You talked to Mr. Paisley about it last night, did you? A. I did.

Q. Who else did you talk to?

A. I don't recall talking to anyone else.

Q. Did you talk to Mr. Donohue about it?

A. No, I believe he volunteered to me the information that was in it. I didn't ask him about it. He said, "It is some memorandum or paper to Gladstein asking what requirements were to set up a third party."

Q. And at that time was there some discussion about an explanation of the document?

A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing said about it at all? A. No.

Q. You did not tell them that you would make some explanation about the document?

A. No; all I said was, as I recall it, the document was merely a request for information, and the discussion was dropped right there.

Q. Can you tell me now how Mr. Donohue knew that you wanted to make an explanation of this document?

A. I do not know that he did. [6826]

Q. You just heard him get up here and say, "The witness should be allowed to explain the document." You heard him say that?

Mr. Donohue: I object to that, if your Honor please. It is apparent that counsel has introduced in evidence a document about which he has not asked a question except if the witness recalls it. It is not fair to the witness. He should be entitled to an opportunity to explain it.

Mr. Hallinan: I am going to give him the opportunity. All I want to know is, How did Mr. Donohue know, if all the conversation that you have told this jury is truthful, how did Mr. Donohue know that you wanted to make some explanation about this document?

A. You had better ask Mr. Donohue that.

Q. He won't tell me either, I assure you. Now, you left the Communist Party when, did you say?

A. My recollection is sometime in the early part of 1947.

Q. What part of 1947?

A. I think it was April. I am not certain. It was around in that period.

Q. In June, on June 7, 1946, you wrote a letter to Richard Galdstein, a memorandum on the stationery of the California CIO Council, President James G. Thimmes; Secretary-Treasurer Mervyn Rathborne; that is right, isn't it?

A. That is right, sure.

Q. Was James G. Thimmes—— [6827]

A. He was not president at that particular time, but that was a letterhead left over from his——

Q. From Mervyn Rathborne, Subject "Qualifying Political Party."

"Will you please send me a memo at your > early convenience containing information as to the necessary legal steps for qualifying a political party in the State of California. Keep your hat on. We are just asking for the information."

You sent that out to Mr. Gladstein, the attorney?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. And then you got a letter back on August 5, 1946:

> "To the California CIO Council,
> "150 Golden Gate Avenue,
> "San Francisco, California.
> "Attention Mervyn Rathborne.
> "Re: Qualifying Political Parties.
> "Dear Merve:
> "In reply to your memo of June 7, 1946, we wish to advise you that the California election Code provides for two alternative methods of qualifying new political parties in California:
> "1. A party is qualified to participate in a primary election if on or before the 75th day preceding the primary an examination of the Registrar's records indicate that voters equal in part to at least one per cent of the entire vote at the last preceding gubernatorial election had [6828] declared their intention to affiliate with such party; or
> "2. A party shall be qualified to participate in a primary election if on or before the 75th day prior to such election there has been filed > with the Secretary of State a petition signed by qualified voters equal in part to at least 10 per cent of the entire vote of the last preceding gubernatorial election declaring they wish a certain party named in the petition to participate in that primary election."

And don't try to explain that.

> "Obviously the first method presents the least difficulties. There were 2,000,423 votes cast at the last gubernatorial election. A registration therefore of 22,344 would be needed to qualify a new party.
> "Sincerely yours,
> "Richard Gladstein."

That was the answer you received, is that right?

A. Yes. [6829]

Q. Apparently, then, in the 1945 election, approximately two and a quarter million votes were cast for governor of California. Now, you have some kind of an explanation worked out with Mr. Paisley and Donohue on that subject, have you?

Mr. Donohue: I object to that.

Q. Let's have it.

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor pleases.

The Court: Sustained.

The Witness: The purpose of the memorandum——

The Court: The objection is sustained. Would you reframe the question?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne).

Mr. Hallinan: Well, they seem to have some desire to put in an explanation. I don't know what it is.

The Court: The witness may explain independently of any asserted influence exercised by counsel. There is no evidence in the record that counsel has exerted any influence over this witness at any stage of this particular examination this morning. You may make an explanation, Mr. Rathborne, if you have one.

The Witness: Thank you, Your Honor.

A. The purpose of the memorandum, I think, is self-evident; it was to secure information regarding certain sections of the state election code in connection with the organization of a third party, which was then a hot issue in the CIO, as I recall it. We were about to have a State CIO executive board meeting, at which the matter of a third party was to be discussed, and I was [6830] equipping myself with the information to make available to the executive board regarding certain issues, regarding the third party. And I asked the counsel of the state CIO, Mr. Gladstein, to supply me that information so it would be available to the membership of the state executive board, so whatever action they took on a third party, they would have this information before them. That is my recollection of why the memorandum was written.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): The CIO was interested ~~in forming a third party, is that right?~~

A. No, sir, the issue of a third party, as I said yesterday, was brought back from New York by Mr. Schneidermann after attending a meeting of the Communist Party in New York City, in which he laid down the post-war line of the Communist Party.

Q. For a third party?

A. For a third party and for rapid demobilization of all the troops and for creating all the upset and unrest in this country and other countries in the world, preventing capitalist encirclement of the Soviet Union, and a lot of other things that he made into a report.

Q. Was that good or bad?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Was that good or bad?

A. I thought it wasn't so good.

Q. Oh, I don't blame you a bit. I would go along with you on a [6831] lot of these things. Now, Mr. Rathborne, at that time, then, you began to have surges of conscience on this third party proposition; you were opposed to a third party, weren't you?

A. I was opposed to it, yes, sir.

Q. In other words, you were, if you were going to have a third party,——

A. I was opposed to the manner in which——

Q. I understand.

A. ——the third party was conceived and born and nursed, as a front organization for the Communist Party.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. In other words, instead of coming from the grass roots, where you like to see things come from, it was coming from above, where you don't like to see things come from?

A. The orders for the organization of the third party were coming from above, yes, sir.

Q. All right. Just passing, and parenthetically, so it won't be made a contention that any statement that Mr. Bridges made about the Hearst papers on the stand relates only to his own difficulties with them and the misinterpretation they have put on his activities, I notice in one of your minutes back in June the 29th, 1935, "Brother Olson spoke upon the Hearst paper boycott and requested the delegates not to patronize stands that deal with Hearst publications."

Remember that?

Mr. Donohue: Object to the question, if Your Honor pleases. [6832] I think we are going a little bit far afield in the trial of these three defendants.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, no, because this point——

Mr. Donohue: Any publication——

Mr. Hallinan: ——was raised by counsel himself. You brought that up yourself.

Mr. Donohue: I brought up no such thing.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, you just get into arguments. Counsel's memory is short, it is kind of difficult——

The Court: I don't see that this will be any aid in this case in solving any issue. Objection sustained.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Well, now, back in 1936 there was also considerable discussion about forming a third party, isn't that right?

A. At the Maritime Federation convention in San Pedro?

Q. Yes.

A. There was an issue of the Farmer-Labor Party in which I brought in a minority report from, I believe, the resolutions committee, favoring the organization of a Farmer-Labor Party which was voted down by the convention, is my recollection.

Q. Yes, sure you did. Did you get directions from the Communist Party to do that?

A. Certainly did. That was——

Q. Oh, you did?

A. That was one of the issues discussed at that meeting in the Venetian Square Apartments. [6833]

Q. Oh. Resolution 51a, minority report and resolution 11, substitute for resolution 51:

> "Whereas in the absence of a Farmer-Labor Party presidential candidate; many trade unions have gone on record in support of President Roosevelt for reelection, and whereas this support of President Roosevelt by organized labor is being used by the reactionary forces to prevent the reorganization of a Farmer-Labor Party during 1936 on the grounds that a Farmer-Labor Party would split the vote for President Roosevelt and possibly result in the election of a Republican as President of the United States. and

"Whereas, the Farmer-Labor Party will not have a presidential candidate in the field in 1936 but will confine its efforts to the election of workers and farmers to public office in city, county and state executive and legislative offices and to the Congress of the United States, and

"Whereas, the election of Farmer-Labor candidates to public office in municipalities, counties, states and the Congress of the United States will exert considerable pressure upon Democratic and Republican officeholders for the passage of legislation favorable to labor, for the enforcement of existing laws which favor workers and farmers, and for the repeal of such anti-social statutes as criminal syndicalism laws, et cetera, and

"Whereas the organization of local Farmer-Labor parties, [6834] based upon the trade unions, provides the only means by which organized labor can protect itself against those employers and reactionary politicians who openly oppose organized labor and who are responsible for the use of police, National Guardsmen and other public servants for the protection of strike-breakers and other anti-social purposes; now, therefore, be it resolved,

"That this second annual convention of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific Coast call upon all affiliated unions and district councils > to immediately, one, assume the leadership in organizing local trade union committees that will sponsor the formation of local Farmer-Labor Parties, and, two, work for the endorsement and sponsorship of local Farmer-Labor Parties, by other trade unions, Central Labor Councils, State Federations of Labor, and similar bodies; and be it further resolved,

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

> "That this convention endorse the formation of local Farmer-Labor Parties, with the reservation and understanding that the Farmer-Labor Party will not place a presidential candidate in the field in the presidential elections of 1936, and also that all labor candidates who are nominated by local Farmer-Labor Parties on the Pacific Coast must be members of a bona fide labor union and shall have worked at their trade under such union conditions for at least two years. [6835]
> "Submitted as a minority report by J. Stern, M. Rathborne and A. Pringle. Brother Rathborne speaks in favor of the minority report."

Do you remember that?

A. I certainly do.

Q. That was way back in 1936?

A. Well, Mr. Hallinan, as I stated yesterday, at that time and at the present time, I have no opposition or objection to a third party as such, if in the judgment of the people who want it, they want to organize one. But——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Let me ask you if this isn't the difficulty, if this isn't your difficulty: When you gave out these press releases that were read off yesterday, you said that the reason you broke with Harry Bridges and were doing the things you did, was over a third party. Remember that?

A. I said that that was one of the things that the Communist Party advocated that I disagreed with. I believe that was my statement.

Q. But in 1935, 1936 and 1946, you yourself were advocating a third party, weren't you?

A. Not in 1946, no, sir.

Q. Well, I just read off what you said in 1946. You sent a letter to Richard Gladstein about the formation of the third party?

A. I said—if you will read that memorandum very carefully, Mr. [6836] Hallinan, and read it the same way I do, you will see at the end there it says, "Hold your hat, we are just looking for information, we are not going to do anything about it." Now, if that is——

Q. Well, you wanted to make a report to the convention; you had taken it upon yourself to find out how to go about forming a third party, hadn't you?

A. In my capacity as an officer of the State CIO, I was securing certain information to place before the members of the executive board so that they would have factual information in their discussions of a third party.

Q. And then to make it more difficult and to give you the—the necessity of this matter, of your opposition to the third party, which was involved in that split, was because it came not from the grass roots, but from the Kremlin or the ivory tower, or whatever, wherever it was, in 1947; yet in August you were endorsing a third party, weren't you?

A. In August of 1947?

Q. Yes.

A. I believe what you have reference to——

Q. You what?

A. I say, if you and I are talking about the same thing, I made an amendment to a motion that was adopted by our executive board, I believe in Los Angeles, where there was a very violent disagreement at that time—— [6837]

Q. What was your motion, your amendment?

A. Well, can I——

Q. Well, tell us first and then explain it.

A. My amendment was, a third party is necessary—this motion was a motion on independent political action, and I made a trick amendment.

Q. A trick amendment?

A. In order to get the members of the Communist Party on the executive board to vote against a third party, which I knew was against their line. And I was putting them on the spot.

Q. Well, good for you. In other words, in 1947, when you advocated a third party, it was just a trick amendment, is that right?

A. You are very right. And if you read the record, you will see there was only one vote for it, and that is my own.

Q. Only one vote for it and it was your own?

A. That's right.

Q. All right.

A. Yes. And I would like to explain the situation in which that amendment was made.

Q. Well, if——

Mr. Paisley: Well, Your Honor, I submit that he ought to let the witness——

Mr. Hallinan: Well, we will let him explain it. I wanted to ask him the question I have first. [6838]

Mr. Paisley: Well, he can't just run the whole court.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I object to this "running the whole court."

Mr. Paisley: The witness ought——

Mr. Hallinan: As a matter of fact, I didn't recognize the voice coming along behind me. I have been hearing Mr. Donohue.

Mr. Paisley: Well, I just want to be fair to the witness, Your Honor.

The Court: There is no objection before the Court. The witness may make his own explanation.

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. Paisley is taking quite an active part lately with you in the trial of the case, you notice.

The Witness: Yes, I notice.

Mr. Hallinan: Glad to see that.

The Witness: I noticed he was on his feet a couple of times this morning.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: For a while I thought he had just been sent out to demonstrate why the people of the State of Tennessee don't believe in evolution.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, at this convention of the CIO that was held at the hotel,——

A. May I explain——?

Q. At the Hotel Clark——

A. Can I have the opportunity of explaining this?

The Court: Yes. Mr. Hallinan said you would have the [6839] opportunity.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, if you will just listen to it first, and then you can explain.

The Witness: I have already given an answer which I would like to amplify, if I may, before any further question——

Mr. Hallinan: An amplification is not an explanation, if the Court please. I think the statement——

The Court: You may explain.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): I will ask you this question, and you can explain the whole deal on it.

Mr. Donohue: No, he hasn't explained his last question, Mr. Hallinan. Now be fair to this witness.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Have you explained the question next preceding the last one?

A. If you——

Q. Hop to it, go ahead, let's hear the explanation.

A. At the time the amendment was made, there was a strong difference of opinion with the national

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

CIO and with a majority of our Political Action Committee out here who were carrying out the party line in connection with this party matter, the matter of a third party. The CIO had stated it was opposed to a third party, and it told us in effect that any resolution we adopted out here favoring a third party would be contrary to the national CIO policy. At this executive board meeting, as I say, I believe it was in Los Angeles, a resolution was brought in favoring [6840] independent political action. Now, this resolution was a resolution that was drawn up by a small committee to get the state CIO on record as far as they thought they could get without violating the CIO national—the national CIO policy, in favor of a third party. And my position at that time was opposed to a third party. And when the resolution got before the executive board, I offered an amendment to the effect that we should favor independent political action, including a third party, if necessary, because I stated at that time, as I recall it, "That is what you mean; now why don't you say so, and quit trying to bend the CIO policy line just as far as you can, to just the point where you think you can get away with it. And why don't you come out and say what you mean?" And I made the resolution, I made the amendment purposely to be able to—knowing it would be voted down and knowing that the Communist Party members of the executive board would vote against it; so I will be able to say,

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

"You guys are pretty hot third-partyites, and when an amendment is offered to a resolution for a third party, you guys go out and vote against it."

And that is the reason behind it. The party didn't want to break with the national CIO at that time on that issue. And so they brought in this resolution, which was a compromise. My amendment was to lay the issue right on the table there and bring it out in the open and see if they had the guts enough to vote what their line was and they didn't do it. They didn't—— [6841]

Q. Have you come in the back door yet or are you still running around the building?

A. I am giving an explanation of it.

Q. In other words, you were opposed——

A. The record will show that I was the only one who voted for it. [6841-A]

Q. You were opposed to a third party?

A. That is right.

Q. Or opposed,——

A. This particular third party I was opposed to.

Q. Just this particular one. So you offered an amendment recommending the formation of a third party just to put those other rascals on the spot?

A. I didn't offer an amendment recommending. I offered an amendment specifically mentioning the third party to put them on the spot, yes, sir.

Q. To put them on the spot? A. I did.

Q. And then it did not put them on the spot?

A. It certainly did. He had all these fine left-wingers there who were carrying out the Party line on record voting against an amendment favoring the third party, which is something they didn't like very well, I can tell you that. I have seen those kind of tactics engaged in in other places, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I am frank to confess that this awfully, awfully clever young man is too awfully clever for me, and what an awfully, awfully clever young man this clever young man must be. I don't know what he means by anything he said, and I therefore will pursue that subject no further.

Q. I notice on your cold war getting hot—did you notice [6842] last night that Senator O'Mahoney said there was no possibility of an aggressive war by Russia against the United States?

Mr. Donohue: I object to that unless he also wants to include what Mr. Symington said on the air last night, that this country is vulnerable to an attack by Russia with atom bombs or hydrogen bombs. If he wants to put both of them in the question, I have no objection.

Mr. Hallinan: I do not know who Mr. Symington is.

Mr. Donohue: Secretary of the Air.

Mr. Hallinan: When people like Senator O'Mahoney think there is no possibility of Russia attacking, I do not think Symington, or whatever his name is, has any chance of stirring one up.

Q. At the time when you were back in Washington and had your conversation with Mr. Clark, the maritime strike was on; that is correct, isn't it?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. Was that a legitimate strike?

A. I certainly believed it was.

Q. The longshore struck for better hours and higher wages and won them, is that right?

A. I believe—I am not familiar with exactly—what the exact issues were, the exact demands.

Q. You were interested in the labor movement at that time, weren't you? You still had some shred of interest, didn't you? [6843]

A. I wasn't acquainted with the exact demands. They were along the lines of wages, hours and conditions.

Q. And then the sailors also profited; they put in demands that were granted?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. And then your union, the radiomen, right at the end they came in with specific demands which were granted, is that right?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. Do you remember that among those demands that the radiomen put in and which were granted was that the spread of hours was narrowed, that it used to be that while you only had to work eight or ten hours, whatever it may be, that could be selected out of any of the 24 hours so that the radiomen were always on call, and in this strike that was narrowed down to a period of 12 hours, so that if they were called on special duty outside of that 12 hours they would get overtime pay?

A. I recollect a program of that kind, yes, sir.

Q. What was the name of the president of your organization? A. At that time?

Q. Yes.

A. I believe it was Philip O'Rourke.

Q. Do you remember Philip O'Rourke and a delegation of your union, the rank-and-filers, going up to the ILWU hall and Philip O'Rourke publicly stating their gratitude to the ILWU for holding out so as to get those benefits, and that without the [6844] assistance of the ILWU and Harry Bridges they would have gotten nothing? Do you remember that?

A. I remember that the matter was discussed in a membership meeting.

Q. I mean to that general effect.

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. You have been receiving that higher rate of pay based upon that gain that was gotten through the longshore strike; that is right, isn't it?

A. That is right, sure.

Q. And the $120 a week—is that what you are getting now as a Government agent, employee, or whatever you are? A. That is right.

Q. Informer—that rate of pay is based upon the increased wages that you got through this strike, is that right?

A. Well, it is based upon the wages I was receiving.

Q. As increased by that strike?

A. That is right.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Don't you think it would have been a kind of moral justice to have accepted a scale of pay based upon the rate that you had been receiving before Mr. Bridges and the ILWU got you the raise? A. I don't see any point to that.

Q. You make no point. When you were tossing out press releases after your statements to the grand jury, and on May 29, 1949, [6845] you gave this little statement, didn't you:

> "The 1948 waterfront strike was 80 per cent political, 20 per cent wages, hours and working conditions. It was directed primarily at the Marshall Plan."

Did you state that?

A. I don't know whether I stated those exact words.

Q. Do you want to refresh your recollection?

A. I expressed some sentiment——

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I expressed a sentiment along those lines. I don't know whether those were my exact words at the time. I say I expressed a sentiment along those general lines. I don't know whether those are my exact words at the time.

Q. In other words, the sentiment you expressed and publicized was this strike which you have testified about this morning, if your recollection serves you clearly, was a legitimate strike for wages and better conditions, and at that time you spread out to the general public that it was 80 per cent political, 20 per cent wages, hours and working conditions, and was directed primarily against the Marshall Plan, didn't you?

A. That was my opinion at that time.

Q. Is it now your opinion?

A. To a certain degree, yes.

Q. Where were you when you issued that press release?

A. I believe I gave it to somebody on the telephone from my [6846] home in Half Moon Bay. This is my recollection.

Q. Think hard now, Captain. Weren't you in Mr. Donohue's office? A. Me?

Q. Yes. Didn't you phone down to Mr. Wilson and read it off to him down in Los Angeles from Mr. Donohue's office?

A. Not that statement.

Q. You read off a statement from Mr. Donohue's office to Mr. Wilson over the telephone, didn't you?

A. That is right; I did.

Q. You phoned down at our expense—taxpayers generally—and told Mr. Wilson of this press release that you wanted him to run in the papers in Los Angeles, isn't that right?

A. I gave him a copy of the statement I had issued here in San Francisco.

Q. A big long statement?

A. I don't know how long it was. I think you have a copy of it.

~~Q. Mr. Wilson called your attention that this~~ was costing money reading all that over the telephone, and you said the Government was paying for it, didn't you?

A. I don't believe I ever made such a statement.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I don't believe I ever made such a statement. As a matter of fact, the Government was not paying for it.

Q. Did you pay for it? [6847]

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Who paid for it?

A. I called from Mr. Donohue's hotel room. I believe Mr. Donohue paid the bill.

Q. Please, please. When you go out to the El Prado with your wife and Mr. Donohue, and so forth, does he pay the bill?

A. As a general rule, yes.

Q. Always, isn't that so?

A. I think I have been to the El Prado twice with Mr. Donohue and both times he paid the bill.

Q. And on those occasions when you went out with Mr. Barber he paid the bill, didn't he?

A. Not always.

Q. Don't you know when Mr. Donohue pays that bill he gets it back from the Government and it comes under this heading, "Entertaining informers"? A. Is that right?

Q. Yes. A. I didn't know that.

Q. Have no illusions as to your standing and position with anyone.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: I move that that remark be stricken.

The Court: That remark may be stricken from the record.

Mr. Hallinan: That is a little discussion with the witness.

Q. Now, you say that part of your purpose in this case is not [6848] union-busting?

A. I certainly did, yes, sir.

Q. No part of it? A. No, sir.

Q. You have no desire to damage or hurt the labor movement at all? A. That is right.

Q. And you do not conceive that the actions you have taken here are detrimental to the labor movement? A. No, I do not.

(Document handed to Mr. Donohue.)

Mr. Donohue: Tell us what year this was.

Mr. Hallinan: It is either 1937 or 1938. He can probably tell it.

Q. You know generally what that document is, don't you? A. No, I don't recall it.

Q. Were you a member of that Maritime Council?

A. May I have an opportunity to read it?

Q. Before you do I will ask you a couple of questions that might enable you to determine what it is. Do you see the heading on it?

A. "New York Maritime Council"; yes, sir.

Q. Were you a member of that?

A. I was chairman of that organization.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. What years? [6849]

A. My recollection is 1937 and 1938, probably.

Q. And was Mr. Thomas Ray a member of that organization? A. He was the secretary.

Q. Was that organization fighting the Copeland Bill? A. Yes, very definitely.

Q. What was the Copeland Bill, generally.

A. The Copeland Bill was a bill introduced by Senator Copeland to require all seamen to carry what is known as continuous discharge books as a requirement——

Q. In a happier day you called them "fink books," did you not?

A. Well, fink books, continuous discharge books, as a condition of employment, and those books carried the record of the seamen. Our argument was that if somebody didn't like him he would put a bad record on it and he would have to carry his own blacklist.

Q. In other words, if he didn't like maggoty meat he didn't get a job on the next ship, is that it?

A. If he had a bad recommendation from his employer, or if he had engaged in union activities—it could have been used as a union-busting device, and we were fighting it.

Q. The Copeland Bill was to make those compulsory under the national law?

A. To make every seaman carry one of these books before he could get a job, and the way the Copeland Bill was rigged up was to require, as we put it, previous condition of servitude, [6850] his last employment, whether he was good, bad, indifferent character, and a lot of other stuff like that, which, as I say, in our judgment would have had the man carrying his own blacklist with him.

Q. It was your judgment, too, and of the Maritime Council that any labor activities, any legitimate labor activities on the part of the seaman would result in his being blacklisted so he was off the sea, is that right?

A. Yes. We believed that labor activities would be reason to cause employers to give certain hostile captains orders to make bad entries in the book and thereby blacklist him.

Q. The Copeland Bill also contemplated that the license of radio operators could be taken away for a number of things, including the word "misconduct," isn't that right?

A. I don't know whether that was in the Copeland Bill or in separate legislation, but my recollection is an issue of that kind was raised.

Q. The Copeland Bill with those facts as you contemplated would fix it so that any efforts that a man took on a ship to ameliorate bad conditions or to betterment of their situation or increased wages would result in being blacklisted?

A. Well, yes; any activities that the shipowners might consider detrimental to themselves, there was a very grave danger of a man being blacklisted if he had to carry a continuous discharge book. [6851]

Q. And the Copeland Bill was being put out,

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

supported and advocated upon the contention that it was out merely to catch Communism, isn't that right?

A. That was one of the contentions. [6852]

Q. That was the whole contention, wasn't it?

A. No, I believe there were other contentions. But it was the main contention. I wouldn't argue it wasn't one of the main contentions.

Q. And so the Maritime Council put out this long statement that you have here, showing that this red-baiting and charges of Communism were only a smokescreen and a disguise to hide much more nefarious purposes of people who were trying to support the Copeland Bill, isn't that right?

A. I believe that is right.

Q. You put out a number of such documents, didn't you?

A. Yes. Well, I concede that attacks on Communism and red-baiting are used as smokescreens for a considerable number of things. I wouldn't deny that.

Q. For destroying perfectly legitimate unions, aren't they? A. They could be, yes.

Q. They have been used to put militant trade labor men out of jobs, isn't that right?

A. Well, I don't recall any specific instances, but I wouldn't deny it.

Q. They have been used to put militant individual union leaders in jail, hasn't it?

A. It might have, during strikes, yes, sir.

Q. Yes. Now, do you recognize that as one of the documents that was put out at the time that the Copeland Bill was pending, [6853] discussing exactly the point I am just making?

A. If you will give me an opportunity to look it over a little bit, Mr. Hallinan, I will comment on it if you like.

Q. All right. Well, we have three of them, and as it will take some—hold that one for a moment, if you will, and I will show you these other two and see if you can identify them and identify your signature on them. (Documents handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

And then at the recess maybe you can look them all over and see if they are not——

A. You want me to hold these 'till after the recess?

Mr. Hallinan: May we have them marked for identification first?

The Clerk: The exhibit first shown to the witness is marked Defendants Exhibit V-3.

The Court: Are they marked separately or in one designation?

Mr. Hallinan: I think separately, your Honor.

The Court: So ordered.

The Clerk: The other two documents are marked W-3 for identification and X-3 for identification.

(Whereupon, documents designated as released under signature of Mervyn Rathborne, Harry Bridges and Mervyn Rathborne, and Mervyn Rathborne, respectively, were marked Defendants' Exhibits V-3, W-3 and X-3 for identification.) [6854]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, the first document, the long one that you looked at first, you see—what number is on that tag that the Clerk just affixed? A. You mean V-3?

Q. Yes, Defendants' Exhibit V-3 for identification. You want to read that over, but do you recognize it as a release that was put out by the organization of which you were chairman at that time?

A. I believe so. I would like to read it, if you don't mind.

Q. All right, take a look at the next one. What is that document marked by the Clerk?

A. X-3.

Q. Defendants' X-3 for identification. Will you look at the signature on it? Whose signature is that?

A. Harry Bridges and Mervyn Rathborne.

Q. Your own signature is attached to that, is that right? A. Oh, yes.

Q. So that was put out with your permission and consent, and it is partly, at least, of your composition?

A. I believe I wrote it. I am not certain.

Q. All right. Now, look at the third document.

A. That is W-3.

Q. All right. Will you look at the signature on that? A. That is my signature.

Q. Your signature also. So you put that document out, is that [6855] right?

A. I don't dispute it.

Q. All right. Well, now, if you will hold those and you can look at them at the recess, we will go to something else.

Well, suppose we identify that, and then you can look at that at the recess, too.

Mr. Hallinan: Might we have this document marked for identification?

> (Thereupon, document referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit Y-3 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, will you look at that document and will you look at the last page on it? Well, look first at what the heading is. Now, look at the last page. You see the name typed in there; whose name is that?

A. It is my name typed there.

Q. All right. Now, will you look at the side and see the stenographer's designation?

A. Oh, I would like to read it. I mean, I——

Q. Well, yes, I mean, but before—I will give you that chance to read it.

A. I don't recall who "G.:L." is.

Q. Who what? A. G. L.

Q. Miss Lee; don't you remember her? That was your stenographer at the CIO? [6856]

A. Oh, yes, Gloria Lee. I had forgotten the name.

Q. Gloria Lee. And she was your personal stenographer, was she? A. Oh, yes.

Q. And do you recognize that document now?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I would like to read it, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. I say, without reading it,—I am not holding you to, I just want to know if you recognize the document itself, without regard to all the contents?

A. No, I don't recall it.

Q. Do you remember giving a—dictating a statement to Miss Lee on your interview with your brother-in-law, Krolek, relating to his discussion with the FBI in 1941?

A. As I said yesterday, I believe—I recall making some report, but I didn't recall it at that time, yesterday, whether it was verbal or written or what kind of report.

Q. Well, now, does that refresh your recollection that it was written?

A. Well, I would have to read it. I just read the headline. If I wrote it, I will say so. I mean, I am not trying to——

Q. Well, we will hold it until the recess. You can hold it until recess also. Keep it with the other matters and read that over.

Now, do you remember offering a resolution at the CIO convention in Los Angeles in September, 1944, as follows? Do you remember getting up, giving this talk: [6857]

"Sister Chairman and Delegates:——" there was a lady chairman, remember?

"I know you are anxious to get on with the rest of the business. However, I would like to point out a few things. Much has been said about the leadership of Brother Bridges in the past. I think we should also look toward the future. We are now entering one of the most difficult stages of the trade union movement, and the American people are confronted with one of the most difficult problems they have yet had to meet, the problem of readjustment with peacetime programs. We are confronted in California with two courses: One of these will lead to the possible unemployment of more than half of our working people in this state; the other can lead to full employment and prosperity for all people of the CIO and all working men and women of this state. We need the kind of leadership that Brother Bridges has demonstrated he can give, that will help chart the course and carry out the program that will make us go in the direction of securing jobs and security for all of our people. And I think we have to give plenty of consideration, based on the record of the past, to the necessity of keeping with us and supporting the kind of effective leadership that Brother Bridges has proved he can give in this period to come. I think that is an aspect of this particular problem that we have to consider very [6858] seriously, because we all know Brother Bridges is on the beam on these issues. He also has been and he always has new ideas and suggestions, et cetera, every day. He is not only a sparkplug in the labor movement of California, > but in the national labor movement, in projecting new ideas that are in the interest of the American working men and women. I wanted to point out that particular phase of the problem, which to me is more important than what has gone on in the past."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Do you remember making that little talk at the CIO convention?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor pleases. There isn't any question. Mr. Rathborne has stated——

Mr. Hallinan: What?

Mr. Donohue: ——Mr. Bridges' efficacy as a trade union leader. If we attempt and permit in evidence every statement that has been made by Mr. Rathborne on that subject, there is no end to what the size or proportion of this record might meet.

The Court: The objection is overruled; he may answer.

A. I may say, I don't recall the exact words, but I am reasonably sure I made such a statement. I made many statements commending and supporting Mr. Bridges' leadership. We worked together very closely in those days, and I was certainly one of the ones that supported him most strongly.

The Court: We will take the morning recess, Mr. Hallinan. [6859]

Mr. Hallinan: Very well, your Honor.

The Court: The witness may have an opportunity to read these documents.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will take the morning recess. Same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any condition or circumstance, until the matter is submitted to you.

Those two little yellow papers you had better return to Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: They are of no importance. Just throw them away.

(Recess.) [6860]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): During a portion of that 1948 strike Curran's union did operate ships in and out of the port, didn't it?

A. I am not very familiar with that, Mr. Hallinan. I wouldn't say yes and I wouldn't say no. There was some comment in the newspapers, I believe.

Q. Has Curran ever visited you at your home?

A. Yes, he has.

Q. When?

A. I think it was this last summer. The last time he was out here.

Q. When was that?

A. My recollection is the summer of 1949, or maybe it was spring. He was out here about a year ago, I believe.

Q. Do you remember what month?

A. I can't recall the month, Mr. Hallinan, no.

Q. Do you know how long he was out here?

A. He was out here for several days.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. How many times did he call at your home?

A. Just once, he and his wife came down and paid us a visit.

Q. How long did they stay?

A. We spent the afternoon and evening together.

Q. Had dinner? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him on any other occasion during that visit of [6861] his?

A. I talked to him on the telephone. I don't recall having seen him.

Q. You did not visit him in San Francisco at all?

A. I don't think so. He was out here with some kind of conference and he was pretty busy.

Q. Have you seen him since the summer of 1949?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Did you see him between that time and your visit to him in 1948 in New York? A. No.

Q. I beg your pardon? A. No, I did not.

Q. When you visited him in New York in 1948 and discussed your testimony concerning Harry Bridges——

A. I didn't discuss that with anyone.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I said I didn't discuss my testimony of Harry Bridges.

Q. You told him, however, you were going to testify against Harry Bridges?

A. I told him I was considering it, and I related what I have testified.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And you told him the Immigration Department was about to stir up another action against Harry Bridges claiming he was a Communist, didn't you? [6862]

A. I related to him my conversation with Mr. Clark and also Mr. Carey and others.

Q. Well, did Mr. Curran express any surprise at that?

A. I wouldn't say that he did, no.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Curran that you intended or were asked to give information which would support a contention that Mr. Bridges was a member of the Communist Party?

A. I believe my statement to Mr. Curran was along the lines that I was seriously contemplating cooperating with the Government in this proceeding.

Q. But in the direction of attempting to prove that Mr. Bridges was a member of the Communist Party, is that right? A. That is right, yes.

Q. Did Mr. Curran express any surprise that such might be the fact?

A. What might be the fact?

Q. That Mr. Bridges should be a member of the Communist Party? Did he consider that a surprising revelation to him? A. No, sir.

Q. Did he seem to be, or didn't he express any surprise that there should be any serious contention that Mr. Bridges was a member of the Communist Party?

A. He didn't express that to me, no, sir.

Q. He did not? A. No. [6863]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You know that Mr. Curran testified in the second Bridges deportation hearing that he never knew of anything that would indicate that Mr. Bridges was or ever had been a member of the Communist Party? You knew that, didn't you?

A. I recall that Mr. Curran testified—I never heard his testimony. I never read it. But my understanding is it was favorable to Mr. Bridges.

Q. Yes, he testified on behalf of Mr. Bridges, didn't he? A. I believe he did.

Q. Give your recollection a little more work and see if you can recall ever having sent out any circulars describing in part what Mr. Curran's testimony was in the 1941 hearing before Sears.

A. I don't recall sending out any. I may have, because I was quite closely connected with the Bridges case at that time.

Q. Without going exactly into what you heard, you do know that Mr. Curran testified in the 1941 deportation hearing against Bridges as a witness for Mr. Bridges?

A. I believe it was 1941. I know he testified in a proceeding——

Q. And you know that at that time there were two matters in issue: (1) Was Harry Bridges a member of the Communist Party? or (2) Had he affiliated with Communists? You knew that those were the only two questions involved in that proceeding, isn't that right?

A. I am not—That is my recollection, [6864] yes, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And you knew that Mr. Curran had testified substantially that he had no information or knowledge of any kind to indicate either that Mr. Bridges had ever been a member of the Communist Party or that he had even affiliated with members of the Communist Party; you knew that, didn't you?

A. Mr. Hallinan, may I say this in answer to your question: I have stated the extent of my knowledge of Mr. Curran's testimony, that he testified favorably for Mr. Bridges. I believe the testimony will speak for itself. I don't recall the exact testimony. I wasn't there——

Q. I say, it was to the general effect of what I have just said, isn't that correct?

A. It may have been. I am not certain. I wouldn't deny it, however.

Q. In view of that circumstance didn't Mr. Curran express some surprise that his testimony had been in error in 1941?

A. We never discussed it.

Q. You did not go into it at all. When you told him the purpose that the Government was going to launch upon again, didn't Curran say, "Is it never going to end? I went out there and testified for him myself in 1941 that he had never been a member of the Communist Party, and I have never seen or heard of anything to indicate it"?

A. I never heard anything like that.

Q. Did you know Curran in 1941? [6865]

A. I have known Joe Curran since 1937, 1936.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did you meet him in 1941 when he was out here testifying?

A. I don't recall. I met him on several occasions when he came to the West Coast. If one of those was 1941, I can't pick it up. I could have met him; I may have met him, but I am not certain.

Q. After you visited Mr. Curran in New York in 1948 did Mr. Curran visit you in 1948?

A. No, he did not. I saw him twice when I visited him in 1948. I went down to his office and talked with him for a while and he said Loretta—that is his wife—"would like to see you. How about coming out and spending the evening at my home on Long Island?" We made the arrangement and went out to spend the evening.

Q. When was that?

A. That was when I was back East, I believe, in October, 1948.

Q. And you are sure Mr. Curran was not out here in November, 1948, is that right?

A. I don't think it was that soon after my visit to the East that I saw him.

Q. He came out here some time before the summer of 1941; he made two visits out here, didn't he?

A. The only visit I recall, Mr. Hallinan, was when he was out here and he got in touch with me and my wife; and I invited him and his wife down to our house. We spent an afternoon [6866] together. We had dinner that evening and he went back to San Francisco.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You recognize that document, do you not (handing document to witness)?

A. Yes, that is one of quite a number of letters we signed and sent out.

Q. What is that?

A. I said this is one of quite a number of letters of this general type that I sent out.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer it in evidence. The letter is the copy of the one that I have. This is the same thing. We offer it in evidence as defendants' exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: No objection.

The Court: It may be marked in evidence defendants' exhibit next in order.

(The letter was marked Defendants' Exhibit Z-3 in evidence.)

Mr. Hallinan: Now, Defendants' Exhibit Z-3, reads as follows:

"March 20, 1945

"Mr. Walter J. Fort
"California State Assemblyman
"Sacramento, California

"Dear Mr. Fort:

"Governor Mon C. Wallgren of Washington in a letter to President Roosevelt on March 3, said, 'I can see no justifiable reason for the continuance of these proceedings [6867] and recommend that the charges be dismissed.' Governor Wallgren referred to the deportation order issued by Attorney General Biddle against California CIO Director Harry Bridges. Other well known Americans recently have expressed similar sentiments. CIO President Philip Murray has characterized the Bridges case as a burden upon the conscience of the American people. California Attorney General Robert W. Kenny said on January 18: 'I urge seriously and respectfully that the Bridges proceeding, an unnecessary and dangerous obstacle to the full development of the United States as a nation, be immediately dismissed.' Similar comments by other prominent people are contained in the enclosed pamphlets. As a leader and as an informed and fair-minded citizen we ask that you join with these other outstanding Americans to bring to an end the ten-year persecution of one of America's great leaders, Harry Bridges. We urge that you (1) write to President Roosevelt and Attorney General Biddle requesting them to dismiss immediately by executive action the deportation order against Mr. Bridges.

"(2) Request the introduction of a vote for the enclosed resolution, which will be introduced into the Assembly of California when it receives the support of not less than 41 assemblymen. After you have had an opportunity to study the facts underlying the Bridges case we [6868] know that you as a fair-minded person can reach only one conclusion. This case should be ended now by the dismissal of charges against

Mr. Bridges so that the way will be clear for him to become a citizen of the country he has loyally served, the United States of America.

"Sincerely yours,

"JAMES G. THIMMES,
"President,

"MERVYN RATHBORNE,
"Secretary-Treasurer."

That was a letter that you sent out?

A. I sent out a number of letters like that, yes, sir.

Q. You sent out similar letters to almost all the members of the California State Assembly, is that correct?

A. Mr. Hallinan, I worked very hard——

Q. No, I asked you, did you send out such letters?

A. Yes, I did, and I would like to add an explanation that I worked very hard and very diligently in the defense of Harry Bridges in those particular proceedings, and you can probably produce a stack of documents a foot high——

Q. Three feet high.

A. ——with my signature attached to them showing——

Q. Three feet high.

A. ——showing that I acted in such capacity.

Q. You are just a liar whichever way you feel like going, aren't you, Mr. Rathborne?

Mr. Donohue: I not only object to that, if your Honor [6869] please, but at this time I say to your Honor I can personally withstand the insults of Mr. Hallinan——

Mr. Hallinan: We haven't come to you yet.

Mr. Donohue: A witness is entitled to the protection of this Court, and I ask your Honor at this time to advise Mr. Hallinan that his demeanor toward this witness is reprehensible.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, my demeanor. I think I have been courteous and kindly; don't you think so, Mr. Witness? Your Honor. I am entitled to ask the witness to characterize his own situation. Now, either these statements are true or they are lies. I want him to tell us himself what his state of mind is in regard to that. Will he tell lies when it suits him, or will he not?

The Court: I might say to the ladies and gentlemen of the jury, adverting only momentarily, as I said before, the credibility of this witness, Mr. Rathborne, is your task. Ultimately it will be your bounden duty under your oath to determine whether or not he is telling the truth on this witness stand. The characterizations made by Mr. Hallinan or by any other person in this courtroom concerning his credibility as bare; unadorned statements or charges may not be regarded by you as evidence. As I indicated earlier in the case, only yesterday, I told you the matter of personalities and characterizations would not suffice as evidence. Therefore, you are to consider the record of the evidence only, the testimony of this witness [6870] and other witnesses.

Now, may I have the question itself read?

(Question read.)

The Court: That is a blanket charge. It is objectionable. I strike it from the record and ask the jurors to disregard it.

Mr. Paisley: Your Honor, as I remember the record, the witness was in the process of testifying when Mr. Hallinan broke in on him as usual.

Mr. Hallinan: I don't think so. I think you were asleep.

Mr. Paisley: I think it is fair that the witness be permitted to continue.

The Court: Is that true, Mr. Rathborne? I can't recall now.

Mr. Hallinan: I think he had finished. He said he had worked very hard for Mr. Bridges, and that is all he said.

Mr. Paisley: He had not, your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: Did you know what he was going to say?

Mr. Paisley: No, but I do not like to see a witness bullied, your Honor, and that is why I am objecting. The witness was trying to make an explanation.

The Court: Mr. Paisley, it is the duty of this Court under countless Supreme Court pronouncements to protect this witness or any other witness from bullying and the like. If this witness feels at any time or made uncomfortable, I ask him to address himself to the Court and I will undertake any such measures as [6871] may be responsible in this case. We are reaching the closing stages now and there is feeling, naturally. There is a conflict of personalities, and I feel we ought to get on with the testimony. You may proceed now.

Mr. Paisley: Your Honor, may the witness continue his explanation?

The Court: If he has one.

Q. Mr. Rathborne, were you interrupted?

A. I was, your Honor, but I am perfectly willing to drop it where it is.

The Court: Was there a question before the witness now?

Q. Do you have a question submitted to you?

A. I don't recall any, your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: No, your Honor, there was none.

Q. You have that document now. May I have it? This was the resolution that you enclosed with the letter to the Assemblyman that has been referred to in the last letter, the last exhibit, is that correct? A. That is my recollection.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer it as defendants' exhibit next in order.

The Court: It may be marked in evidence, Schaeffer, as defendants' exhibit next in order.

(The paper was marked Defendants' Exhibit A-4 in evidence.)

Mr. Hallinan: This is on the heading of the California [6872] Council of the CIO, President

James G. Thimmes, Secretary-Treasurer Mervyn Rathborne. By the way, Mr. Thimmes was never a member of the Communist Party, so far as you know, was he?

A. Not so far as I know, so, sir. As a matter of fact, I am quite sure that he was not.

Mr. Hallinan (reading):

"March 19, 1945

"Memo to all local CIO Councils in California.

"From Mervyn Rathborne.

"Subject: Campaign to have State Assembly adopt resolution requesting dismissal of charges against Harry Bridges.

"Enclosed are copies of a resolution which will be sent on March 20 to each member of the California Assembly. It is urged that your organization immediately contact the Assemblyman or Assemblymen representing the areas in which your members reside and ask that they request the introduction of and vote for in the Assembly a resolution which calls upon President Roosevelt to immediately dismiss by executive action the deportation proceedings against Director Bridges. A follow-up by your organization is necessary if we are going to muster sufficient votes to have the Bridges resolution adopted by the Assembly. Attached is the proposed resolution. [6873]

"'Whereas, this assembly has twice, on January 31st, 1944, and again on June 13th, 1944, acted by resolution in praise of the war production effort and post-war program of the International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union; and

" 'Whereas, Harry Bridges, as president of the International Longshoremen & Warehousemen's Union, in large measure, is responsible for the leadership that has resulted in full support of the union in all phases of the war effort and in increased understanding and unity for the post-war management-labor-farmer-government cooperation, which will be necessary to a prosperous peace; and

" 'Whereas, there now pends against Mr. Bridges an order of deportation whose origin was in a period long since by-passed by historic events; and

" 'Whereas, such deportation of the ranking officer of a union which is deserving of the highest praise and cooperation for its efforts can add nothing of constructive nature to state or national unity or to the development of peaceful industrial relations in the crucial future ahead, but on the contrary can only do incalculable harm to these hopes; and

" 'Whereas, the deportation warrant was initiated by the executive branch of the federal government and can, as stated by the courts, be controlled by that branch;

" 'Therefore, be it resolved by the general > assembly of the State of California, that it be made known to the President [6874] of the United States and the Attorney General of the United States that we desire cancelation of the warrant and clearance of the way for Mr. Bridges to become a citizen of our country and our state.' "

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Do you remember that resolution?

A. I do.

Q. And it was the fact, was it not, Mr. Rathborne, that Mr. Bridges in large measure was responsible for the leadership that resulted in full support of the union in all phases of the war effort?

A. I think Mr. Bridges' record during the war as helping win the war and maintaining production was an enviable and excellent one. I have said so publicly many times, and I still think so.

Q. All right. And you also think this, don't you:

> ". . . and in increased understanding and unity for the post-war management-labor-farmer-government cooperation, which will be necessary to a prosperous peace"?

A. Well, that was a pious hope we expressed at that time. It didn't seem to work out that way.

Q. It hasn't worked out, is that right? You know that the employers, representatives of the employees, came up here and testified for Mr. Bridges on this identical trial, don't you?

A. I read it in the newspapers.

Q. Yes. And that he has helped establish peace and unity on the waterfront. You know that, don't you? [6875]

A. Well, according to the testimony. I mean——

Q. This was only a pious hope at that time, is that right?

A. Well, I will withdraw that statement. I will say it was something we were looking forward, something we hoped for.

Q. Now, what about this:

> "Such deportation of the ranking officer of a union which is deserving of the highest praise and cooperation for its efforts can add nothing of constructive nature to state or national unity or development of peaceful industrial relations in the crucial future ahead, but on the contrary, can only do incalculable harm to those hopes"?

A. In the light of the situation at that particular time, in the middle of the war and with the activity being carried on by the unions and by the Communist Party, I was all for it. I think we had a good program during the war, and it did a good job. And that expressed those sentiments very well at that time.

Q. Do you recognize that as a letter you also sent out?

(Document handed to witness by the Clerk.)

A. I don't recall the exact letter, but as I stated previously, I sent out a number of letters.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Would you like to see the whole group of them, to see if you can identify the ones of the letters you sent out?

A. I have no objection to it. I mean——

Q. They are all the same, but you might recognize some of the names.

(Handed to witness by the Clerk.) [6876]

A. I recollect that a group of such letters were sent out, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: All right; we offer one of them in evidence, if the Court please, as Defendants' exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: No objection, Your Honor.

The Court: It may be marked in evidence.

(Thereupon letter dated 3/16/45, ILWU to Hon. Hiram Johnson, was received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit No. B-4.)

Mr. Hallinan: In other words, Your Honor, I have a great number of them, but I am only offering one in evidence.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hallinan: As a sample. They are all identical.

The Court: All right.

(Whereupon Mr. Hallinan read Defendants' Exhibit B-4 to the jury.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): You sent that letter out, didn't you?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I believe I did. I sent a number of them out to different people.

Q. And it was the fact that Mr. Bridges and his warehousemen's union, or his union, led the way for the continuation of those harmonious relationships into the period after the war, to the end that the entire nation may achieve a permanent and prosperous peace: That was true, wasn't it? [6877]

A. That was the opinion and sentiment expressed at that time, and I believed that at that time, yes.

Q. Now, some of the letters were sent out to Hon. Cecil B. King, Clyde G. Doyle, U. S. Representative; Chet Hollyfield, Carl Henshaw, U. S. Representative; John Phillips, U. S. Representative; Edward V. Isaac, U. S. Representative; Gordon L. MacDonough, U. S. Representative; Harry R. Sheppard, U. S. Representative; Frank R. Havenner, U. S. Representative; John H. Tolin, U. S. Representative; George P. Miller, House of Representatives; John Z. Anderson, House of Representatives; Bertrand W. Gearhart, House of Repsentatives; Jerry Voorhees, House of Representatives; George Outland, Ned Healey, Helen Gahagan Douglas, Richard Welch, Ellis Patterson, all members of the House of Representatives; is that correct?

A. I wouldn't dispute the copies of the letters, Mr. Hallinan. As I say, I don't have any independent recollection, but I am certain it went out.

Q. Is your recollection refreshed that you did submit the memorandum that was shown to you as Defendants' Exhibit for identification Y-3, concerning the discussion between Charles and Esther Krolek and yourself?

A. Well, I don't recall the specific memorandum, but I wouldn't dispute it.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer it in evidence as Defendants' Exhibit [6878] next in order.

Mr. Donohue: I object to it, if Your Honor pleases. It purports to be a statement dictated by the witness with respect to a conversation he had with third persons, which is purely hearsay.

Mr. Hallinan: But it is on a subject that the third person was questioned about in the exact language of that document. It only goes to establish that this witness made that at the time.

Q. Did you make that at the time that you had the conversation with the Kroleks?

A. I don't recall when I made it, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Donohue: The only purpose it could have served, if Your Honor pleases—and it was employed for that purpose—would be to cross-examine Mr. Krolek, not to cross-examine Mr. Rathborne.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, Mr. Krolek was cross-examined on it, on the matter of the statements. Now, Mr. Rathborne is asked as to the subject for the purpose of——

The Court: And this witness was cross-examined yesterday on the subject?

Mr. Hallinan: In part, yes.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor, and I say, if

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Your Honor pleases, that anything that Mr. Krolek may have told Mr. Rathborne is hearsay, not binding on Mr. Rathborne; and to permit in [6879] evidence a written memorandum of Mr. Rathborne's recollection is hearsay evidence, and certainly doesn't give it any more value. Object to it, if your Honor pleases.

Mr. Hallinan: As I say, your Honor, Mr. Krolek was questioned on those exact things, right down the line on it. Now, Mr. Rathborne has stated substantially a considerable amount of what is contained in there, but I wanted to get it all. I wanted to have it all exactly, so there is no question that Mr. Krolek was asked the matters that were not substantiated.

The Court: I have a transcript of Mr. Krolek's testimony here; I was attempting to review it. I believe this is hearsay as to the present record, Mr. Hallinan. I will sustain the objection.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I have the record?

The Court: It may be marked for identification.

The Clerk: The document has been marked already Defendants' Exhibit Y-3 for identification.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): At any rate, you read this document?

A. That's right, I read it during the recess.

Q. All right. Now, does that refresh your recollection, does the reading of the document refresh your recollection that Mr. Krolek told you the following matters on or about April 13, 1941——

Mr. Donohue: Object to it, if your Honor

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

pleases, because he is now attempting to do indirectly what your Honor has already said he might not do. [6880]

The Court: No, he may examine on the statement. I see no objection to that.

Mr. Donohue: If he is permitted, if your Honor pleases, to read from the statement in the examination of this witness, we might just as well let it in evidence.

Mr. Hallinan: No, he can deny it. He can say it—Well, do you want it in?

Mr. Donohue: No, I objected to it as hearsay.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I am only reading parts, only the parts that were asked Mr. Krolek.

The Court: What was the question?

Mr. Donohue: Because the question he is asking this witness, if your Honor pleases, is, "Did Mr. Krolek say this to you?"

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, Mr. Krolek has already been questioned.

Mr. Donohue: You can ask him, but not Mr. Rathborne.

Mr. Hallinan: And then if he says "No," why, we just drop it, is that the idea?

The Court: I will allow the question.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, did Mr. Krolek state to you that agents of the FBI had visited him at work and asked him to testify as a government witness at the Bridges deportation hearing; that he informed the FBI that in his opinion he had no evidence to offer which would be of any value in the case; that he stated he also had told the FBI agents when they got in touch with him in November, 1940, and had given them the same answer and asked [6881] him why they were contacting him again; that a few days after the FBI agents had visited him at work, he was called by the FBI down to an office located at 111 Sutter Street, San Francisco, which he stated is the local headquarters of the FBI; that at this meeting at 111 Sutter Street he was cross-questioned by the FBI and it was obvious that the FBI agents were attempting to intimidate him; he stated that he advised the FBI agents that he possessed——

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, if I may interrupt you momentarily, I assumed you would address a question to the witness. Now, this is getting in by indirection over the objection——

Mr. Hallinan: Well, do you want me to ask him each sentence? I will do that.

The Court: Not necessarily. But I reiterate that I think my rule is correct, that it is hearsay. It is not proper cross-examination of this witness. Krolek was examined on the subject matter of the FBI contacts and this witness has been thoroughly examined. I can't see any purpose to be served.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, then, I will ask him if his recollection is refreshed that the statement——

Q. ——so far as I read it to you was made to you by Mr. Krolek.

A. Well, Mr. Hallinan, as I testified yesterday,

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

my direct recollection of that conversation was that Esther and Charlie, or Mr. and Mrs. Krolek, complained bitterly to me about the treatment they had received at the hands of the FBI, alleged [6882] they had been intimidated and undue pressure put on them, and so on and so forth. And also that they had been hauled down to the FBI offices. That was my general summary recollection of the conversation that I had with them. As a matter of fact, the memorandum there indicates three conversations; I didn't recall three conversations, I thought there was one.

Q. All right. Did the Kroleks tell you that these visits of the FBI had been repeated several times, that they had been called on at their home and at work?

A. Well, it is my recollection that he said the FBI was bothering him or after him or pestering him or—definitely I have a recollection of words to that effect.

Q. All right. Did Mr. Krolek tell you that he had been taken to the FBI headquarters at 111 Sutter Street a number of times?

A. Well, I mean, I didn't recall that. My independent recollection of that conversation is not to that effect, that he had been taken there a number of times.

Q. Well, having read this memorandum——

A. Or that he was taken.

Q. Is your recollection refreshed that he did tell you that? A. No, it isn't.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You don't deny that you made out this memorandum, do you?

A. No, I am not quarreling with what is in the memorandum. I am merely trying to give you and the Court and the jury what my own independent recollection of the conversation is. [6883]

Q. All right. But your recollection at the time this memorandum was written was better than it is now, isn't that right?

A. Well, naturally.

Q. And what you would have put in the memorandum would be nearer to the things that were told you than your independent recollection at this time, isn't that so? A. Why, certainly.

Q. All right. So if you put in the memorandum that Mr. Krolek told you that he had been taken to the FBI headquarters at 111 Sutter Street a number of times, that is probably what he told you, isn't that right?

A. I wouldn't quarrel with it. I wouldn't—I mean, I am merely saying my recollection at this time is that I didn't know he was taken there a number of times. It seems to be that, to me, he was taken there once late at night.

Q. All right. Do you remember that Mr. Krolek told you that he and his wife had twice been taken from their Belmont home to the FBI headquarters at San Francisco?

A. I remember the discussion about being taken, and I think even late at night from his Belmont home, to the FBI headquarters; but again, my recollection is that it was once. But as I say, I won't quarrel with it.

Q. All right. Do you remember now that Mr. Krolek told you that the FBI agents had really put extreme pressure on them to make statements which would be detrimental to Harry Bridges? [6884]

A. I believe I testified to that yesterday.

Q. Yes, you did.

A. Before I saw the memorandum.

Q. Yes. All right. Do you remember that both Mr. and Mrs. Krolek stated that they had been given the third degree by Mr. Delgurcio and approximately twelve FBI agents?

A. I don't recall that part of it, no, sir.

Q. Would it refresh your recollection if I show it in your——

A. No, my independent recollection is that extreme pressure part, but I don't remember Mr. Delgurçio being named or the number.

Q. I want you to refresh your recollection and tell us, as refreshed, the part that I have marked with the pencil. (Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

A. The point is, I am not trying to be cute about this, Mr. Hallinan——

Q. No, that isn't what I asked you.

A. I don't recall actually writing the memorandum.

Q. Would you mind reading what is marked in the memorandum? A. Yes.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. The part that is embraced in that little bracket in pencil that I put in the side?

A. Yes, I have read it. I read it at the recess.

Q. Well, now, does that refresh your recollection that Mr. Krolek told you that Mr. Delgurcio and twelve FBI agents had given him [6885] and his wife the third degree?

A. Well, I have no recollection as to the number of twelve or as to Mr. Delgurcio. My recollection is several or a number.

Q. All right.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I have it again, please?

(Document returned to counsel by [6885-A] the Clerk.)

Q. Do you remember Mrs. Krolek stating that the FBI agents fired questions at her from all directions, that she became nervous and upset and started in to cry?

A. My recollection is that she became quite upset. Maybe she said she became ill. I know at the time, one of the times I spoke to her or saw her she was crying.

Q. Do you remember this: Mr. Krolek telling you that Delgurcio told him that unless he testified as a Government witness against Harry Bridges he would be discharged from his job with the National Youth Administration?

A. I don't have any independent recollection of that; no, sir.

Q. Do you remember a discussion at all about his employment with the National Youth Administration? Now, the second bracket, if you will.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. No, I don't, because when I read this——

Q. That does not refresh your recollection that Mr. Krolek told you that?

A. No. I read this, but when I read it I was not conscious of the fact that he had worked with them in any way. I don't recall that fact. I don't know whether he did or did not.

Q. Did you say that Mr. Krolek was your brother-in-law?

A. At this point independently I don't know whether he did or did not work in the NYA.

Q. Do you remember he told you something about Mr. Delgurcio saying he would lose his job if he didn't testify? [6886]

A. I recall that he stated threats, intimidations and pressure was used on him.

Q. I want this one particular point now: Do you remember that Mr. Krolek told you Delgurcio said he would lose his job, whatever it would be, if he did not testify against Harry Bridges?

A. No, sir, I don't recall that specific statement.

Q. Mr. Krolek was your brother-in-law; that is right, isn't it? A. That is right.

Q. He was not employed by the ILWU or anything like that, was he?

A. No, sir, he was not.

Q. Do you know what his occupation was at that time or at the time he had the talk with you?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. It was my impression he was manufacturing X-ray tubes. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. Donohue: Just a minute, please. If your Honor please, at this time I should like to say that these papers are a carbon copy with no signature. If Mr. Hallinan is going to inquire further about this document, I would ask your Honor to ask Mr. Hallinan to produce the original which is signed by Mr. Rathborne, so we can determine whether we are talking about the original signed by Mr. Rathborne or a purported carbon copy.

Mr. Hallinan: All in good time. We are not trying to impeach the witness. [6887]

The Court: Do you have such a document?

Mr. Donohue: Where is the original?

The Court: Do you have it?

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, I want to see what Mr. Rathborne says about the copy. Now, it is a perfectly legitimate matter to inquire, to see whether a denial will be made on the copy, and then it goes to his recollection, his veracity, and then if necessary, and if available, another document will be produced.

The Court: No, I want you to produce the original if it is in your possession.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, it is the same old thing of forcing the defense to disclose its hand and disclose what it has to the prosecution, and, what is worse, to the prosecution's witness. That is what they want to do.

The Court: No.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: They want to use the Court to force you——

The Court: No one is using this court for any purpose.

Mr. Hallinan: I hope not. What they want you to do is get you to force us to disclose to them exactly what we have. They have done it before. They will do it again.

The Court: No, I am reminded of the interchange we had on Mr. Schomaker's testimony concerning a transcript.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, a perfectly proper device.

The Court: On that score we disagreed [6888] then.

Mr. Hallinan: Is your Honor still of the opinion that there was something wrong in that, that that should not have been done?

The Court: There is no immediate occasion to discuss that, but if you have an original, Mr. Hallinan, I respectfully submit to you that you should produce it for the witness' scrutiny. That appears to be a copy. Do you have an original?

Mr. Hallinan: I will tell you, Mr. Witness, you are perfectly safe in denying anything about it. I haven't any signed document. Now, go ahead and deny anything that is in it. There is the whole story. The only thing we have is a copy of it, a copy taken from Rathborne's files when he left the office. We haven't any signed copy. So you are perfectly safe to say none of the things that are in it were said by Krolek at all. Mr. Donohue has obtained the purpose he set out to do, and we are all through with that document.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, in fairness to the witness let us retrace.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, let's be fair to me a bit.

The Court: I have been eminently fair.

Mr. Hallinan: I want the right to find out from this witness what he had to say without disclosing to the witness whether I could contradict him. It is just the same as yesterday. He started out to deny a conversation he had with Miss Murray, until there was some suggestion that the [6889] conversation might have been dictographed, and then he shifted ground and admitted that he discussed the matter. He said first, your Honor, yesterday that there was no conversation with her at all touching Harry Bridges or his testimony before the grand jury or whether he was going to be a witness or not. I asked him then whether he had ever been dictographed, and he backed away so quickly he almost fell off the chair. We have no dictograph. We will tell you that, or tell them that, and we haven't any signed copy of that, and we will tell him that and tell them that, but we have a stenographer to whom he dictated it and we can prove this thing.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan,——

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, what I object to is being forced to disclose to the witness how far we will be able to contradict or impeach him. I have never seen it done before. I have never before had a court order me to disclose to the witness just how far he is safe in going.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, I think the record will disclose that in the course of your examination of Mr. Rathborne as well as every witness produced by the prosecution that I have given you more or less unbridled latitude in your examination. At times I have chided myself for the latitude I have allowed. Now I think we are talking at cross purposes. If I may suggest to you about this document, the document itself Mr. Rathborne does not dispute in general. [6890]

The Witness: I believe I testified I had no quarrel with it.

The Court: As to that subject matter I just asked you a simple question: If you have it, it should be produced. If you haven't an original, then you can produce secondary matter. We haven't any quarrel on that point. I do not think you should become——

Mr. Hallinan: I trust your Honor——

The Court: You should not chide the Court for what you may regard as an improper ruling. I think I have been extremely liberal with you as well as your colleague.

Mr. Hallinan: I hope I am not called upon to reply to that.

The Court: Well, all right. All right. All right. That is merely my feeling and I will rest on the record.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Do you remember Mr. Krolek stating that at previous meetings he consistently told the FBI that he could not testify in the Bridges case as a government witness, first, because he had no evidence which would be of any interest to either the prosecution or the defense?

A. I do not independently recall that statement.

Q. As I say, now you do not have to recall any of it.

A. Mr. Hallinan, I testified I had no quarrel with the document as such.

Q. The document is not in evidence. You know that. Did he [6891] state to you, did Mr. Krolek tell you that he had told the FBI that he had no particular use for Harry Bridges as an individual, and his refusal to testify did not arise from any personal loyalty or consideration for Bridges but from an aversion as a matter of principle to giving false testimony?

A. I don't recall such a statement, no, sir.

Q. Did he tell you that that was so, he so stated even though by giving such false testimony he was tacitly assured by the FBI that his job would be secure?

A. As I stated previously, I don't recall any discussion about his job. I just recall a discussion about, generally, he stated he was threatened, intimidated, coerced, pushed around, and that is my general recollection of what he told me.

Q. Now, the first visit was April 14, 1941. Do you remember that about April 23, 1941, you again visited Mr. Krolek and Mrs. Krolek at their home in Belmont?

A. As I stated previously, Mr. Hallinan, my recollection was it was one visit. Apparently that shows there was more than one. I am not disputing the fact that I might not have discussed it with him on more than one occasion.

Q. Do you remember that Mr. and Mrs. Krolek told you this, or this in substance: that they had been taken down to FBI headquarters in San Francisco on the preceding Sunday night, severely grilled by FBI agents for approximately four hours; that they had heard of the third degree but had never experienced it [6892] before, and that they were both in an extremely nervous condition?

A. That is substantially what I said yesterday.

Q. Is that substantially what they told you?

A. That is my best recollection of it, yes.

Q. Now, did they tell you that they had been served with subpoenas to appear as witnesses and that on Monday morning, April 21, Mr. Krolek had been brought down to the Post Office Building where the Bridges deportation hearings were being held? Do you remember that he said he was subpoenaed as a witness in the second deportation hearing?

A. No, I don't remember that. My recollection is that——

Q. Mr. Krolek has testified here he was subpoenaed.

A. I don't recall it; that is all. I recall he did testify.

Q. Did he tell you Mrs. Krolek was also supposed to have appeared at the same place on that morning, but because of the extreme pressure on her by the FBI she had suffered a nervous relapse, was sick in bed and unable to appear; that Mr. Krolek told you before he was supposed to appear on the witness stand he informed the FBI that he would make any statements he thought necessary to protect himself and would in his testimony put in an appeal to the trial examiner against the persecutions, intimidations and methods used by the FBI in their attempt to force him and his wife to give false testimony against Bridges against their will? Did they tell you substantially that? [6893]

A. I think—as a matter of fact, I advised him to do that, to do everything possible to refuse not to testify.

Q. And to notify the inspector that they had been put under pressure, third-degreed, persecuted and intimidated, is that right?

A. Yes. My mission at that time was to try to keep Krolek off the witness stand, and I was engaged in that activity, and my recollection is I advised him to object as strongly as he possibly could.

Q. Do you remember that Mr. Krolek told you that Mr. Delgurcio stated that he would communicate with the Department of Justice in Washington and advise the Department that Mr. Krolek was not a proper person to be working for the United States Government, that he was disloyal, unwilling to cooperate with the government agency in its efforts to deport a dangerous Communist and should be out of his job?

A. I don't recall any statement of that kind, other than under the general—I mean, my recollection, as I said, generally threatening and putting pressure on the man.

Q. Let me ask you this: Mr. Krolek did tell you, however, after being subpoenaed here that he had told the FBI he would inform the presiding officer of their actions and they did not call him as a witness; isn't that right?

A. Well, now, I don't remember quite how it came about. Anyway—— [6894]

Q. He didn't testify?

A. What was going on was a battle between myself and the FBI to see whether Krolek would testify or not——

Q. This memorandum——

Mr. Donohue: Let him explain his answer.

A. I say, what was going on at that time, as I recall it, was a kind of battle between the FBI and myself to see whether Krolek was going to testify or not.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Yes, I understand. Now, let me ask you this:——

A. Apparently our side won out on that one.

Q. What?

A. Apparently our side won out on that one.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. "Our side won out on that one." This memorandum you prepared for what purpose?

A. As I say, I don't have any independent recollection of preparing the memorandum, although I am not quarreling with. But it would have been for the purpose of aiding the defense in the case.

Q. Of aiding the defense? A. Yes.

Q. In other words, you gave this memorandum to the defense, a confidential memorandum to the defense from yourself, isn't that right?

A. That was the only purpose such a memorandum would serve. [6895]

Q. And you retained a copy of it yourself in your own files, didn't you?

A. Well, sir, I don't recall. I mean, I don't say yes and I don't say no. I don't recall.

Q. This memorandum was not for public consumption or publication, was it?

A. Obviously such a memorandum of that kind on the face of it is not for public use.

Q. Were you telling the defense the truth?

A. The——

Q. Were you telling the defense the truth?

A. Certainly; I was making a report. I say I reported to the defense, yes.

Q. And you did not put anything in that memorandum that you gave the defense as to what had actually been told you by Mr. Krolek, did you?

A. My report to the defense would, to the best of my ability, accurately reflect the proceedings between Mr. Krolek, his wife and myself at the particular time and as best I could reflect them.

Mr. Hallinan: Suppose we take the recess, your Honor, now.

The Court: We will take the noon adjournment and resume at 2:15, ladies and gentlemen of the jury. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:00 p.m. this date.) [6896]

Friday, March 3, 1950, 2:15 o'Clock P.M.

MERVYN RATHBORNE

resumed the stand;

Cross-Examination (Continued)

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Now, your brother-in-law, Mr. Krolek, you knew to be a naturalized alien, didn't you?

A. I don't ever know that I knew he was a naturalized alien; I knew he was born in Canada.

Q. How long is it since you have talked to him last?

A. My recollection is it is over a year, Mr. Hallinan. I believe about a year ago Christmas, or thereabouts.

Q. And then how many times did you see him in, let us say, the preceding year?

A. Oh, probably saw him three or four occasions,

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

two or three occasions, at my wife's parent's place.

Q. So your recollection is, then, that you last saw him, let us say, prior to December, 1948; is that right?

A. That is my recollection, yes.

Mr. Hallinan (To Mr. Donohue): Those are just answers to those letters. (Handing documents to Mr. Donohue)

(To Clerk): Would you ask him if he recognizes that batch of letters? (Documents handed to witness by the Clerk.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): They are all pretty much to the same effect, acknowledgments and comments on the letters that you wrote, that have been heretofore introduced in evidence. Do [6897] you recognize them as such?

A. Yes, I believe to the degree I have looked at them, that is what they are. Do you want me to look at them all?

Q. Well, just to verify that is what they all are.

A. Yes, they are letters in answer, replies from various Congressmen to the letters that I identified this morning.

Mr. Hallinan: We will offer them as one exhibit, Defendants' next in order, if the Court please.

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor pleases. These are——

The Court: May I see them? (Documents handed to Court by the Clerk.)

Mr. Donohue: ——responses to the letters which were identified this morning, and I think historically we know that despite the pressure they put on the Attorney General and President Roosevelt, he took no action.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, pretty tough when you are not on the side of wealth and power around these parts, I will tell you.

(To the Clerk): Would you show him that document? (Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

The Witness: Do you want me to look at some particular part——

The Court: These responses may be marked for identification. Objection sustained.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, then, I won't even offer them for identification. Withdraw the offer. [6898]

The Witness: If there is some particular section of this you want me to——?

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Right opposite there. What I wanted to do is see if I can establish one of these dates that you told me I could find by looking in the schedule of sailings of the Madison. Can you pick that out there?

A. These are dates after I got off the vessel, I believe.

Q. Yes, but you notice—now, for instance, the Madison there in July was due to sail from San Francisco at what time? You have some dates there. You fixed your trip to Washington, when you went to see Mr. Donohue, by some date that the Madison was supposed to sail, that you would have to notify your union in time, if you were going to make the next trip.

A. I believe it shows July 15th, here, to Manila, Cebu, Hongkong and so on.

Q. In other words, the boat was supposed to sail on that day, the schedule was on July the 15th, 1949, for what places?

A. Manila,—let's see; Manila, Cebu, Hongkong, Kobe, Nagoya and Yokohama.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I have it back again? (Document returned to counsel by the Clerk.)

Q. And now, could you tell us, using that as a basis, when it was that you made the trip to Washington in which you had the conference with Mr. Donohue? Let me ask you this: Did you make that trip on the 15th? [6899]

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. You didn't sail on that one at all?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Well, now, will you tell us when it was that you made the trip to Mr. Donohue's office?

A. Oh, my recollection on that matter is, I would say, late June or early July.

Q. Well, haven't you made any effort to check and find out just when it was from these gentlemen, from the airplane tickets or whatever it may?

A. I haven't made any effort at all, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. All right. Well, now, you told us that there was some discussion about what you would have to do toward accepting employment on this case, based upon the time you would have to notify your union whether you would make the next trip on the Madison. What did you say about that? What discussion did you have on that subject?

A. The discussion I had on that subject with Mr. Donohue was, I said, if I recall it, "I am going to soon have to let the union know whether I am going to return to the Madison or give up the job on the ship." Because the union's rules provided that you could only take a trip off, and if you didn't rejoin the ship or notify the union that you intended to rejoin the ship before it sailed, why, somebody else would be assigned.

Q. Well, had you taken a trip off? Were you on a trip off at [6900] that time?

A. Yes, sir, I was.

Q. I see. And when had that trip ended, do you know?

A. Well, it would be approximately eight weeks prior to July 15th.

Q. I see. A. That was, eight or nine.

Q. And then how soon before——

A. Pardon me. I have a little better recollection. Just before the grand jury proceedings.

Q. The trip ended? A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now, how soon before the ship sailed would you have to notify your union?

A. There is no specific regulations on it, Mr. Hallinan.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Well, what did you say, now, to Mr. Donohue on that subject?

A. Well, I said, "I am taking this trip off. I took this trip off the ship to appear before the grand jury, and I am going to have to rejoin her when—let the union know before she is ready to sail from San Francisco whether I am going to go back on the ship or not. And it is my intention to do it." And then he asked me some questions about the sailing schedules of the ship, where it was going and how long it would be gone and so on and so forth.

Q. Well, now, you told us that there was some discussion then [6901] about what compensation you would require or would be paid you to work for the government on this case. Now, what was that discussion in Mr. Donohue's office at that time?

A. I am not certain whether that was with Mr. Donohue or Mr. Barber, after I returned. I think Mr. Donohue. You want me to finish the conversation in Mr. Donohue's office first?

It is my recollection on that conversation, he said, "Well, I don't think you ought to go back to sea because we don't know when the case is coming to trial, and we want to be able to get a hold of you," or words to that effect. And that was about the extent of the conversation with Mr. Donohue.

Q. Well, what about the discussion on the WFTU barring you from going to sea again? What did you say to him about that, or what did he say to you about it?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I don't believe I discussed the matter with him at that time.

Q. Well, now, didn't you testify here yesterday that that was a discussion, that that fixed the necessity for paying you a salary?

A. I don't believe I testified in that way. I believe, as I recall my testimony, that I related a part of this discussion with Mr. Donohue and then I also mentioned the fact that the WFTU had passed such a resolution.

Q. Well,——

A. I didn't—I mean, I might have given the impression I mentioned that to Mr. Donohue, but if I did, I don't recall having mentioned it to [6902] him.

Q. Did you discuss it with Mr. Barber on the way back to Mr. Donohue's?

A. I didn't see Mr. Barber until I returned to San Francisco.

Q. Did you discuss it with Mr. Donohue at all, that WFTU resolution?

A. It is my recollection I didn't discuss it at that time.

Q. What?

A. It is my recollection that I didn't discuss it with him during that particular conversation.

Q. Who was the last person prior to your testimony now that you discussed the WFTU resolution with? I mean, yesterday or today whom did you discuss it with?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I discussed it with Mr. Kaiser yesterday.

Q. At what time?

A. During one of the recesses. I am not sure which one.

Q. You are not sure which one? Give it a little thought. What time did you have the discussion with Mr. Kaiser on that subject?

A. I would say the morning recess. I am not certain of that.

Q. It was after you testified on the subject of that discussion with Mr. Donohue?

A. I believe it was.

Q. In other words, you first testified you included that in the discussion you had with Mr. Donohue fixing your salary, and then after you had gotten off the stand Mr. Kaiser talked to [6903] you about it, is that right?

A. No, I asked Mr. Kaiser if he remembered the date of the WFTU resolution, because I was not sure of it.

Q. And he told you that the WFTU resolution had not been passed until after the 15th of July, didn't he?

A. He advised me it had been passed on the 15th of July.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. He advised me it was passed on the 15th of July.

Q. So you did not discuss with Mr. Donohue the matter of the WFTU resolution preventing you from working, did you?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Not in Washington during the visit, I did not. I had discussed the matter with Mr. Donohue and it was my impression I had discussed it at that time, but obviously I could not have done it, because the resolution was not passed until later.

Q. Here you say——

Mr. Donohue: What page?

Mr. Hallinan: 6663. You have the page marked already.

Q. You went over the record with Mr. Kaiser since that time, didn't you?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did you go over what you testified to in that connection? A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. With anybody? A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Donohue? [6904]

A. I have not seen the record in so far as that particular piece of evidence is concerned.

Mr. Donohue: Do you want to look at it (indicating transcript)?

The Witness: The extent of my conversation, as I told you, there was some question in my mind as to that date, and I asked Mr. Kaiser if he knew what it was, and he furnished the date to me.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, you say, "I believe the situation regarding that is this"—oh, pardon me. You had, however, made your arrangements for your salary with Mr. Donohue before you left his office on July, hadn't you?

A. I don't think I made any arrangements as to specific amounts. My recollection is he asked me what I was earning as a radio officer and I told him. As a matter of fact, when I left Mr. Donohue's office there was no understanding or agreement that I would be employed.

Q. Now, you said yesterday that there was, didn't you?

A. I don't recall that. I think I stated that I discussed with him my return to the President Madison and that he stated that he didn't think I should return to sea. That is my recollection of my testimony yesterday—I believe it was yesterday.

Q. Here you testified:

> "When I left the President Madison in May, I believe it was, I took a trip off, leave of absence to join the ship. My intention at that time was to rejoin the [6905] ship when she returned, which would have been about July; I think it was July. Anyway, it would be about eight weeks afterwards. And during the time I was in Washington I discussed the situation about going back to the ship with Mr. Donohue, told him I would have to get back to the coast pretty quick because I would have to let my union know in a few days whether I was going back to the ship or not, and I intended to go back. He said, well, at that time he didn't think it was—that I should go back. In addition to that, the WFTU had passed a resolution which in effect put a boycott on me for holding my job. I think the effect of the resolution was that all members affiliated to the WFTU should boycott any ship on which anybody appeared as a witness in this particular case for the government.

"Q. Taking one thing and another, what was the compensation you agreed upon?

"A. The compensation was to be approximately the same as I was receiving on the President Madison.

"Q. How much was that?

"A. It amounted to about $120 a week."

Did you so testify?

A. If the record shows it, I believe I did, but it certainly does not—as I pointed out, I didn't intend to indicate that I had discussed the WFTU resolution with Mr. Donohue, and I think the record bears that out. [6906]

Q. After you had so testified, then you had a conversation with this Mr. Kaiser, is that right?

A. I asked Mr. Kaiser what the date of the WFTU resolution was, because I was not certain about it.

Q. Why did you ask him that?

A. Because I was not certain about it.

Q. Because you knew you had testified that you had discussed the WFTU resolution with Mr. Donohue, isn't that right?

A. I don't think the record shows that, Mr. Hallinan, the record you just read.

Q. When you got off the witness stand you had the impression that it did show that, didn't you?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. No, sir, I was puzzled about the date of that resolution because I wanted to try to settle in my own mind where I had discussed the WFTU resolution with respect to my—this boycott being against me.

Q. Let's see if this was the situation, that you testified that you had talked to Mr. Donohue about going back to your ship, the necessity of informing your union in time before the next sailing, which would be July 15, and in the same conversation you discussed yesterday the matter, in addition to that, you had been boycotted by the WFTU, and after you got off the stand or while you were still on the stand you began to worry that maybe this WFTU resolution had not yet been passed; is that [6907] correct?

A. No, what I began to wonder about is that testimony that you just read there contains this statement that you read: "In addition to that, the WFTU resolution"—when I testified to that it appeared that it was part of the conversation with Mr. Donohue.

Q. That is what I say.

A. Which I didn't intend, when I testified, to put in that context. It might appear that I had discussed that with Mr. Donohue, when it actually had not been passed. That is what I was trying to check up on.

Q. So then you got hold of Mr. Kaiser?

A. Yes.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. So you said to him, "Kaiser, Bill, dear"—or whatever you call him—"when was the WFTU resolution passed," is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Did Kaiser go and get the WFTU resolution out of the exhibits?.

A. I believe he made a telephone call or something.

Q. Where did this conversation take place?

A. Upstairs in this building.

Q. Was it at the noon recess?

A. I can't recall, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Who else was there at the time?

A. I believe Mr. Donohue was present. I am not certain. I believe he was there. [6908]

Q. All right. When you got off the witness stand you went to the room upstairs, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. On that occasion how long were you in that room? A. A few minutes.

Q. Who else was with you while you were in the room?

A. I distinctly remember Mr. Kaiser, and I believe Mr. Donohue was there.

Q. You believe Mr. Donohue was there?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you seated or were you all standing?

A. Yes, I was sitting down, Mr. Kaiser was sitting down.

Q. Where was Mr. Donohue?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I believe he was sitting behind the desk.

Q. Was it in Mr. Donohue's office?

A. Well, it was the place he is using as an office.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. It is the place he is using as an office, yes.

Q. Anybody else there?

A. On that particular occasion I don't recollect.

Q. Is that where the discussion took place about the WFTU resolution? A. That is right.

Q. Was that the first time it was mentioned, or had you mentioned it to Kaiser in the [6909] court?

A. No, I said, "What is your recollection of the date that the resolution was passed?"

He said, "Wait a minute and I will check up and find out."

Q. Where did he phone?

A. I don't know where he phoned.

Q. Weren't you sitting there listening?

A. He was sitting at one end of the desk and I was sitting at another. He picked up the telephone, started dialing and got somebody.

Q. How did he address the person whom he got?

A. I think he called him Mac, if I recall correctly.

Q. What?

A. I think he referred to him as "Mac," if I recall.

Q. "Mac"? A. Yes.

Q. What was the conversation from that end of the line? What did you hear?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I heard Mr. Kaiser say, "Can you give us the date on the WFTU resolution?"

Q. Did he hold him on the line there? Did he hang up and someone call back, or what?

A. It is my recollection he held the line.

Q. How long did he hold it?

A. Maybe a couple of minutes, something like that.

Q. Then what did he say? [6910]

A. He said, "Well, it was July 15, 1949."

Q. Then what did Mr. Donohue do? That (placing hand on check)?

A. No, I said, "Thanks, Bill," and I walked out.

Q. That was all that was said about it?

A. That was all that was said about it.

Q. You did not tell him what your difficulty was, that there may have been some confusion in the minds of the jury that your discussion with Mr. Donohue in New York concerning salary included a discussion of the WFTU resolution?

A. There was some confusion in my mind on the point and I wanted to clear it up.

Q. Did you say that to Mr. Donohue?

A. I don't believe I did.

Q. Did you say it to Mr. Kaiser?

A. I believe I did.

Q. You believe you did?

Mr. Donohue: May I arise to say that Mr. Hallinan forgot to ask Mr. Rathborne whether he held the telephone in his left hand or in his right hand.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: That is like the sugar and cream thing; you know, trying to make a little fable on the witness' part seem of no importance or consequence at all. I do not think little shabby devices like that have any validity, and I think you might just as well cease bothering to employ them.

Q. Did you explain to Kaiser what your predicament was? [6911]

A. No, my recollection is I said something like that "Thinking that over, I am not certain whether I discussed the WFTU resolution with Mr. Donohue. Will you check on the date?" It was something along that line. I didn't have any lengthy discussion with him. I was disturbed in my own mind about the fact that I may have given the impression that the WFTU resolution or the matter—there was something wrong there, something that didn't quite fit in, and I wanted to check up and find out what was wrong, if anything.

Q. Then did you explain to Mr. Kaiser that difficulty? A. No, I didn't explain to him.

Q. What reason did you give him for asking him to call up and find out when the WFTU resolution was passed?

A. I have stated that. I talked with him and said, "I want to make sure of the date the thing was passed."

Q. A minute ago I asked you if you had explained that difficulty to him and you said no.

A. No, I didn't say no, Mr. Hallinan. I said I had mentioned the matter to him. I do not recall my exact language, but I believe he understood why I wanted the date on the resolution.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne:)

Q. Then he told you the date on the resolution was the 15th? A. That is right.

Q. Now, regardless of whether you talked about it to Barber, Donohue or anyone else, the WFTU resolution did enter into your calculations of accepting employment from the Government, is that right? [6912] A. Yes, it was a factor.

Q. And because of it you failed to notify your ship that you were going to sail on it, is that right?

A. Not entirely because of that, no, sir.

Q. As a matter of fact, it could not possibly have anything to do with your determination as to whether you were going to work for the Government at $120 a week or go back on the Madison, isn't that right?

A. At that time, that is, going back on the Madison, it couldn't have, no.

Q. Because the Madison was going to sail on the 15th, isn't that right?

A. It could have had a lot to do with my seeking other employment.

Q. Do you read French? A. No, sir.

Q. "Resolution et solidarite et sympathie envers." Would you understand that?

Mr. Donohue: Not with that accent.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): So the WFTU resolution had nothing whatever to do with your determination to accept employment by the Government and not to make the trip on the Madison, did it?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. In so far as the part about the Madison, that is correct.

Q. When did your pay start? You say your pay started in July, didn't it? [6913]

A. Yes. I am not certain as to what time in July.

Q. Well, it started before you went back to sea, Mr. Donohue, didn't it?

A. No, definitely not.

Mr. Donohue: (Returning document) Merci beaucoup!

Mr. Hallinan: That was French twice transmitted. In other words, Mr. Paisley, who can barely speak English, whispered to Mr. Donohue, who can't speak French.

The Witness: As a matter of fact, Mr. Hallinan, my recollection is that my compensation with the Government started after the WFTU resolution was adopted.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): The convention of the WFTU took place in Marseilles, France, from the 15th to the 18th of July, 1949. You found that out since, didn't you? A. No, sir, I haven't.

Q. And the resolutions were not printed and sent out here for at least a month after that?

A. However, there was an item in the newspapers, I believe, right around the time of the convention, because I remember reading it. I remember some of the fellows down at the union asking about it. [6914]

Q. So was anything further said then between you, Mr. Donohue and Mr. Kaiser relating to the attitude you would take on this information you had just learned? A. No, sir.

Q. In other words, if Hallinan asks you about it, then make this correction. But if nothing is said, then let it stay as it is and give the jury the impression that it was discussed at Mr. Donohue's office, and that is where the matter was arranged. Was that the scheme that was finally arrived at?

A. No. In response to your question, I would like to say I believe you have a very vivid imagination, Mr. Hallinan; and that no such discussion took place.

Q. No such thing was discussed. Well, when you came back on the witness stand here for the rest of yesterday and for today, you didn't disclose that there had been an error in this matter or that an erroneous impression might have been created due to your misconception on that fact, isn't that so?

A. That's right. As a matter of fact, I didn't distinctly recall the record on it.

Q. Now, the resolution wasn't distributed until August the 5th, 1949, isn't that right?

A. I don't know a thing about that.

Q. When did you first see it, if you ever saw it?

A. I have never seen it. That is, in resolution form. All I have seen is newspaper reports [6915] about it.

Q. Well, when did you see the first newspaper report?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, my impression, Mr. Hallinan is, right about the time or shortly after it was passed.

Q. What paper did you see it in?

A. I believe it was the Call-Bulletin.

Q. You read an article in the Call-Bulletin upon this resolution, is that it?

A. I am not definitely positive it was the Call-Bulletin, but it is my recollection it was.

Q. Well, was it one of the four San Francisco newspapers?

A. One of the San Francisco newspapers.

Q. Either the Examiner, Chronicle, News or Call-Bulletin? A. That's right.

Q. And can you tell us what it was?

A. My recollection on that is right around the time it was passed; I would say some time in the middle of July.

Q. About the middle of July?

A. Because my recollection is it was a report on some news story emanating from the convention. Now, that is the best I can——

Q. But that was after you had returned from your trip to Washington and seeing Mr. Donohue?

A. Yes, it must have been.

Q. And was it before or after you had agreed upon the compensation you were going to receive?

A. I don't remember whether it was before or after. [6916]

Q. Well, now, first, you furnished Kaiser or Barber, whoever it might be, with approximately 10 per cent of your testimony, as you testified here.

(Testimony of Meryyn Rathborne.)

That's correct, isn't it? A. That's right.

Q. And then you furnished an additional 5 per cent, isn't that correct?

A. Well, I mean, that matter of discussing—that is all in the record.

Q. Well, I say, you have so testified; isn't that right?

A. I believe you and I both recall the testimony, without——

Q. Yes, I recall it quite clearly; you do, I trust?

A. I do.

Q. Yes. And you place these percentages or proportions of your testimony out to the person who was questioning you, Mr. Barber I think it was; but during that time you hadn't arrived at any compensation or anything of that kind, is that right?

A. Well, of course these discussions you were referring to with Mr. Barber occurred, I believe, early in or during 1948. The period we are discussing now is in the middle of 1949.

Q. Well, let's say 1948. I don't care when it was. At any rate, when you furnished Mr. Barber the 10 per cent of your testimony, you didn't arrive at any figure that you would receive as pay or compensation, did you?

A. Well, there was no discussion of that sort.

Q. Well, that's all right. And then when you added the other 5 [6917] per cent, you didn't arrive at anything, did you?

A. There was no discussion of the subject.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. All right. Well, then, ultimately, having given him a little look at this, look at that, you finally got to a place where you did agree on a price, is that right?

A. I believe I stated that I entered into full cooperation with the government concerning the matter of working with the government in this case, in May or right around the time of the grand jury.

Q. Well, now, wait a minute.

A. That is my recollection of my testimony on that point.

Q. And before you arrived at this full cooperation, before you yielded completely—let us put it that way—a compensation had been agreed upon, isn't that right? A. It had not.

Q. No compensation was fixed until after that, is that so? A. That's right.

Q. Not until July? A. That's right.

Q. And now you tell us that the compensation was not fixed in this conversation with Mr. Donohue, but in a subsequent conversation with Mr. Barber, is that right?

A. That is my belief, Mr. Halliman. Now, in the talk with Mr. Donohue, he made the statement he didn't want me to go back to sea, and as I recall, he asked me how much I was making on the [6918] ship. He didn't offer me any employment, that I recall, or make any statement as to exact compensation.

Q. Were you on the $120 a week stipend or did you get $34 a day for the time that you were occupied with testifying against the two young ladies?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I was—present compensation.

Q. Beg your pardon?

A. Present compensation, $120.

Q. Now, any of your activities in the evening in that connection, did you get overtime for?

A. No, sir.

Q. And on the trip to the grand jury that was simply testifying against the two girls, that was simply included in your weekly stipend, is that right; no special or extra compensation?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ask for the $34 a day for that period?

A. I did not.

Q. Now, I showed you some documents today and asked you to look them over at the recess, and the file of those was marked Defendants' V-3 for identification. That was the release from the New York Maritime Council? A. Yes.

Q. You identified that as having been put out by the organization of which you were chairman, is that right?

A. I am reasonably sure it was put out. I don't recall the [6919] particular document, but I wouldn't say that we didn't put it out.

Q. You put out similar documents?

A. That's right.

Q. You embraced and accepted the sentiments contained in the document, is that right?

A. The sentiment contained in the document expressed the position we had at that time.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. That you took? A. Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: I offer it in evidence as Defendants' Exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: I object, Your Honor, only because it serves no purpose here. It does not tend to impeach or discredit the witness. It is not pertinent or relevant to any issue before this court, and I object to it. On the same theory we might just as well put in evidence every letter or document this witness ever signed while he was president of the union or a member of the CIO.

Mr. Hallinan: That is all right. Maybe it should be done. But if the Court please, this is the purpose on it now, to simplify the matter: This witness has testified that certain contacts, conversations that he had with Murray and Carey and Curran, Ray—enemies of Mr. Bridges and at loggerheads with the ILWU. We accuse him of being in a plot to help destroy that union; [6920] and now obviously also at the behest of those people, he has claimed here that his charges of red-baiting or that his red-baiting charges, his allegations that unions are Communist-controlled and so forth, and especially the allegations he has made against Mr. Bridges are not a union-breaking device, and that that is not the purpose of him making them. Now, I want to show that he has acknowledged, himself, in these documents that precise point.

Mr. Donohue: That isn't what he said this morning, Your Honor; he said this morning he thought in some instances the charge of red-baiting was used against a union.

The Court: Yes, he so testified.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, partly.

The Court: I will allow it.

(Whereupon Defendants' Exhibit V-3 previously marked for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, this Thomas Ray who is mentioned in this document is the same man that you went back to talk to before you decided to accept the compensation from the government and enter into the spirit of things, is that right?

A. Well, that question has about three barrels to it, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Well, I say, it is the same Thomas Ray, at any rate; let's have that part of it.

A. It is the same Thomas Ray I described in earlier testimony. [6921] Now, this is the New York Maritime Council of the CIO, 10 Bridge Street, New York City, Whitehall 3-4649. Release, a.m.s. Monday, March 20th.

Mr. Donohue: What year, Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: I am not sure whether it is '37 or '38.
It is either one of them.

"The Senate Committee to investigate the maritime unions was warned yesterday against attempts by Senator Royal S. Copeland and the shipowners to make the approaching inquiry > into a witch-hunt or red-hunt or fishing expedition designed to provide another forum for anti-union employer propaganda or to provide another weapon for the shipowners in their fight on the seamen. The warning came in a 3500 word letter dispatched by the New York Maritime Union, an affiliated organization of nine marine and harbor unions, to the five Senators on the committee: Royal S. Copeland, Arthur H. Vandenberg, Vic Doheny, Richard B. Russel, Jr., and Elbert D. Thomas. The letter was signed by Thomas Ray, secretary of the Council."

A

Then it gives portions of the letter in this part. But then it states, the letter follows, and I will only read out those portions that are pertinent:

> "You have been appointed as a committee authorized to conduct what has been described on the one hand as a full and complete investigation of all matters relating to [6922] existing conditions in the American merchant marine, and on the other hand, as an out-and-out red hunt. The New York Maritime Council, affiliated body of nine marine and harbor unions, has no objection to any investigations of its activities or of the activities of its component organizations, providing these investigations are confined to existing conditions as outlined by Senate Resolution 231.
> "We do object, however, to any organized witch-hunt or red-hunt or fishing expedition designed to provide another forum for anti-union employer propaganda or to provide a weapon for the shipowners in their fight to prevent the maritime workers from organizing in unions of their own choice.

"Our experience with the Senate Commerce Committee during its hearings on proposed amendments to the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, Senate Bill 3078, has made us apprehensive of any senatorial inquiry into the merchant marine. At the start of these hearings there was a pretense of impartiality, an attempt to give the impression that the hearings were open and above-board. As they progressed, however, this pretense was dropped and the so-called hearings degenerated into a series of labor-baiting orgies. The seamen and their organizations were placed on trial. The trials were conducted by the prosecution, Senator Royal S. Copeland and the shipowners. Every conceivable charge [6923] that could possibly be leveled against human beings seeking to win better working conditions were thrown in the teeth of the seamen. Since the whole procedure was cloaked with informality, there was no necessity, apparently, for observing ordinary rules of evidence or fairness.

"The inquiry on the proposed amendments thus gave way to an examination of the seamen's personal habits, their opinions of Senator

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

> Copeland and the shipowners, their efforts to build their own union and their political affiliations. The record of the hearings was deliberately sprinkled with a variety of strange documents having little or no bearing on the pending legislation. 1. There was inserted an hysterical anti-union article from the New York Sun by one of the shipowners' most articulate apologists, William McFee, a former novelist, whose continual plaint in the press is 'Communism, Communism, Communism.' Mr. McFee's fulminations have become so wild in recent months that the only persons still quoting him are Joseph F. Ryan and Senator Copeland. Mr. McFee sailed as an engineer back in the quiet, orderly days of the belaying pin and the bucko mate. To Mr. McFee there is no one quite so despicable as a union seaman, and no one quite as saintly as a shipowner—in spite of the revelations of the Black Committee.
> "Mr. McFee's chief complaint in the article in question [6924] is that the New York Maritime Council's report on the maritime commission's economic survey is clumsy and probably written by a Communist. What has such reasoning got to do with amendments to the Merchant Marine Act of 1936? The answer is, of course, obvious."

Then there follows a description of a letter from a boat called the "Black Falcon," describing some trouble with a cook, which has been inserted. And then certain letters from some owners of the steamship Hoover, and other matters not relating to the subject I have in mind, that I won't bore anyone with reading. But that can be read, and the document is in evidence.

All right. And then:

> "And then came the climax. The testimony of Joseph P. Ryan, an alleged labor leader. Just how much of a labor leader he is, of course, is evident from his efforts to break the Pacific Coast longshoremen's strike in 1934 and his support of the Mahoney anti-labor mayoralty campaign in New York last fall.
> "Again, the witnesses' attitude toward the proposed legislation was only incidental to his real testimony. His real testimony had nothing to do with legislation; it was directed solely at union seamen and their efforts to better the miserable conditions under which they have been forced to work. One would think that the Red Square would have been worked to death by that time. But not for Joe [6925] Ryan and Senator Copeland. The terrible beating that the red-baiters took in last year's mayoralty campaign has taught them nothing. The Red Square was good enough for their predecessors, it is good enough for them, they hope. Ryan admitted on the stand that he took money from the shipowners' to send our men down there with bats and try to break the last seamen's strike. It is no accident that Ryan is known among rank and file longshoremen as 'Judas Joe.' That affectionate soubriquet does not seem wholly apt, however, when it is recalled that Judas sold out for a paltry 30 pieces of silver. Joe is no piker when it comes to selling out. Now, that is the type of man brought down to Washington to testify regarding proposed amendments to the Merchant Marine Act of 1936. What possible bearing can such testimony have on legislation of any kind, let alone merchant marine legislation. Is legislation going to be passed or defeated because Judas Joe solicited the shipowners for money with which to break a strike? We doubt it.

"Our own witnesses were questioned as to their political affiliations, their economic views, their salaries and their opinions on existing political, social, economic and governmental institutions. This questioning descended in some instances to actual badgering. Senator Copeland asked Ralph Emerson, our legislative representative, if he [6926] would like to change our order. He also asked, 'Would you destroy the wealth and income of those men who are living in Palm Beach and Miami?' Senator Copeland read into the record a quotation from a statement of John L. Lewis regarding 'a communal form in which the whole people and not just a few are given consideration.' He then asked Mr. Emerson, 'Does that analyze your views?' and so on. May we ask what this has to do with legislation?"

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

And then skipping along:

> "An attempt will be made to show that some of our members are Communists. We won't deny it, because we don't think that the political affiliations of our members are anyone else's business. We have among our rank men with all shades of political belief. We have Republicans and we probably have anarchists. If a man is a seaman or a maritime worker, and not a paid stooge of the shipowners, he has a right to belong to our unions. We can not deny him that right and we don't wish to.
> "There will be an attempt to prove that the National Maritime Union is a red organization, that it is dominated by aliens and that its aims are un-American. Our aims, as everybody, including Senator Copeland and the shipowners, know, are decent wages and better working and living conditions aboard ship. But witnesses will be produced who will testify that these aims are un-American. To be [6927] un-American, apparently, one must be content to work for any old wage, eat any kind of food, sleep on boards and work twelve hours a day.
> "Our methods also will be attacked as un-American, particular emphasis will be laid on the sit-down strike. Witnesses will testify that the sit-down strike is un-American, that it is a red weapon, that all sit-downs are financed from that inexhaustible torrent of Moscow gold, which apparently has financed everything progressive since Wat Tyler's Rebellion. As a matter of fact, most seamen's strikes have been forced on the crew by the shipowners, hoping to replace militant crews with docile ones; because the seamen were successful in defeating these moves, they are red. This unconscious tribute to militance, we predict, will go unnoticed by the committee. [6928]

"Once this evidence is adduced the shipowners will set up a howl about signing agreements with the union. Then, of course, if the Red hunt is engineered properly there will be plenty of inspired propaganda calculated to support their position. Then will follow a campaign in the press, over the radio and in Congress to clean out the maritime unions. The shipowners will then have the moral justification for any acts of violence necessary to break the unions and beat down wages again. The Chicago Memorial Day massacre, if you remember, was perpetrated less than one year ago. We have no intention of being maneuvered into a position of defending the political affiliations or convictions of any of our members. We will, however, defend their rights to those convictions. The constitutions of our component unions forbid discrimination against any member because of his religious or political belief, his race or nationality. We believe this is just. Our organizations were built up by the mem> bers themselves for their mutual protection. Those organizations will continue to exist for mutual protection. Our program is better working and living conditions in industry. We intend to continue working for that program. If the investigation turns out to be nothing more or less than a new attack on our organizations, we shall be forced to meet it with every resource at our command. We have worked long and [6929] hard to build our unions and we are certainly not going to stand by and see them torn down by the shipowners or persons acting for them."

Do you remember that?

A. As I said, I don't remember the exact document.

Q. The statements in it were pretty true, weren't they?

A. At that time, yes. I think it was a good statement.

Mr. Hallinan: May we have the recess?

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition not to discuss the case.

(Recess.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Do you remember the meeting that you described took place at the Venetian Square Apartments at Long Beach?

A. Yes, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. What were the names of the people that were there?

A. The ones I recall being there were Walter Lambert, Hazel Wood, Charlie Krolek, Harry Bridges, myself and Earl King. I believe there were some others, but I don't recollect their names.

Q. How many were there altogether?

A. My recollection is probably twelve or fifteen people were there.

Q. How long did that meeting or that gathering stay together?

A. I would say approximately for about two or three hours. [6930] My best estimate would be about three hours.

Q. Have you gone over with anybody the names of the persons who were present there before testifying here?

A. I saw information regarding the names, for example, Mr. Krolek recalled being there, yes, sir.

Q. What is that?

A. I saw a paper, a document which showed Mr. Krolek's recollection of who was there.

Q. Was that a document that Mr. Krolek had signed or something to that effect?

A. I am not sure whether it was or whether it was not.

Q. When did you see that?

A. Oh, some time ago. A matter of two or three months, I believe.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Who showed it to you? A. Mr. Kaiser.

Q. It was some sort of document, you say?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it before the trial started?

A. I am not certain whether it was or was not. It could have been either before or just after.

Q. Was the memorandum in the form of handwriting, typing, printing or what?

A. It was typewritten. That is my recollection.

Q. Typewritten? [6931] A. Yes, sir.

Q. How large a piece of paper was it on?

A. The paper was the usual size of typewriter paper.

Q. Did it contain anything except a list of names?

A. Oh, yes, there was quite a lot of writing on the paper.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. There was quite a lot of writing on the paper.

Q. Did you read the entire thing?

A. I don't know whether I did or I did not.

Q. Did you have a copy of it?

A. Do I have one? No, sir.

Q. Were you given a copy of it?

A. I was given a file or a folder with this paper in it and asked to look it over.

Q. Did you take the file with you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you a desk or an office in the Appraisers Building? A. I have not.

Q. When you do down there to work where do you do your work?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. In one of the offices there.

Q. Is there a desk assigned to you?

A. Not particularly, no, sir.

Q. You just use any one that happens to be vacant? A. That's right.

Q. Is there a room containing several desks or are they [6932] offices with single desks in them?

A. There are quite a number of offices with desks in them and I usually, when I go down there, occupy one of the ones that are vacant.

Q. Who assigns you to the office you are supposed to use?

A. I look in an office and if it is vacant I say, "Is it O.K. to use this?" or something like that.

Q. The material with which you are working, where do you get that?

A. Well, it is usually furnished to me.

Q. By whom?

A. Usually by Mr. McGowan.

Q. Take a typical day, for instance. Did you work, let's say—take some day before you came up here and testified. What would be the nature of the documents or the matter that Mr. McGowan would give you to work on?

A. Well, for example, he will give me a volume of testimony and ask me to read it over, and I read it over, and offer any comments I may care to make on it.

Q. Whose testimony was the last that he gave you?

A. I believe it was Mr. Bridges'.

Q. Mr. Bridges' testimony? A. Yes, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. How long did it take you to read over Mr. Bridges' testimony? [6933]

A. I read it on several occasions.

Q. You mean you have read and re-read the testimony?

A. In some instances, yes, and in other instances I have read it once.

Q. And then have you read over other persons' testimony also?

A. A few of them, yes; sir.

Q. Whose, for instance?

A. My recollection is that I read the last part of Mr. Ross' testimony and Mr. Michener's and most of Mr. Bridges'.

Q. The last part of Mr. Ross'?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mean the part relating to his family and who he was?

A. It happened to be in a book containing or a volume containing Mr. Michener's testimony, where his testimony started later, and the last part of Mr. Ross' testimony was in this volume. So I started at the beginning and read all the way through.

Q. Then did you correlate the testimony with any other documents? A. No, sir.

Q. Any graphs of how things agree, disagree, what John Schomaker said and what Ross said, anything like that?

A. I haven't seen any such graphs.

Q. Have you seen any documents or anything like that that might contain such matters?

A. No, I haven't seen such documents. [6934]

Q. The testimony of witnesses divided in lines and showing how they correspond or disagree? Has that been called to your attention, anything like that?

A. I believe the testimony is indexed. I haven't had anything to do with anything like that.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I say I believe the testimony is indexed, or whatever is done.

Q. Have you helped prepare any of those indexes? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you used the indexes to discuss what you wanted in the testimony? A. I have not.

Q. This file of papers that was given to you by Mr. Kaiser, which contained a list of the people in that Venetian Square building, that is, about two or three weeks ago that was given to you, isn't that right?

A. No, I think it was longer than that, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Two or three months ago? A. Yes.

Q. That was given to you where? Down in the Appraisers Building? A. Yes.

Q. During your regular working hours?

A. Yes, sir. [6935]

Q. Did the file contain other material also?

A. It did. I didn't read it. I don't know. It was a rather thick file. [6935-A]

Q. Well, how did it happen that this was called to your attention or given to you?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I believe Mr. Kaiser was asking me about my recollection of who was present at the meeting, and showed me this thing Krolek had there, and I said, "Well, I didn't recall," or words to that effect. That my recollection was different than Krolek's.

Q. Did you memorize the names?

A. I did not.

Q. Your recollection was different from Krolek's, is that right?

A. That is my—as I recall it.

Q. In other words, some of the people whom Krolek mentioned, according to the best of your recollection, were not there, is that right?

A. Put it this way: Some of the people he mentioned I don't recall. I don't recall that they were present.

Q. Were there any persons whom he mentioned that you remember as not having been there?

A. Well, I don't remember who these names of the people that were on the list were now, that I was shown at that time.

Q. Well, without having read that statement of Krolek's, I daresay you wouldn't have remembered any of the names, would you?

A. That is wrong, because I had stated my recollection of the names a long time before I saw that document.

Q. When did you state them? [6936]

A. I believe just before the grand jury proceedings, is my best recollection.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And under what circumstances did you state them then?

A. I believe I gave them in a statement.

Q. Was it included in one of the statements that you made?

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. Now, you told us that this record of the difficulty that you had in Los Angeles was shown to you one time by Mr. Barber, was it?

A. That's right.

Q. All right. Now, after that event had happened in Los Angeles and your final appearances in the court down there, had you ever seen that record until you saw it in Mr. Barber's possession?

A. Not that particular record, no, sir.

Q. And when was that that you first saw it in his possession then?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Hallinan, exactly when it was. It was, I think it was in the summer of last year; now, that is the best of my recollection on the matter.

Q. What part of the summer?

A. I don't recall much more closely than that.

Q. Well, when did you first mention to one of these people that such an error, such a record, was in existence?

A. My first mention of the incident was to Mr. Barber, as I [6937] recall it, when I went back to Washington with him, or before I left for Washington. About that time, about the time he was—either just prior to or around the time of the trip to Washington.

Q. All right. Now, what did you tell him?

A. Well, I told him I had been in some difficulties when I was a youngster, and I explained what they were, as I recall them.

Q. I see.

A. I said I hadn't seen the record of them, but I gave him an outline of what they were.

Q. And you knew a man named Raymond Thompson, didn't you? Raymond F. Thompson?

A. I don't recall him. Is he in the advertising business?

Q. Well, do you remember Raymond Thompson, in 1947, being indicted in Alameda County for a felony; that is, having voted in the State of California after having been convicted of a felony? Remember that?

A. I have no recollection of any incident of that kind.

Q. Don't you remember discussing that matter with Paul Schlipf? A. No, I do not.

Q. Don't you remember telling Paul Schlipf that you were in the same difficulty?

A. I do not recall any conversation along those lines at all.

Q. You don't remember a man named Raymond F. Thompson at all?

A. I don't have any recollection of Mr. Thompson. [6938]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Well, you had voted continuously for many years prior to the time that that record was expunged, isn't that right? A. That's right.

Q. And you tell us that you had gone down and asked somebody in the probation office about your right to vote, is that right? A. That's right.

Q. And that occurred when?

A. My best recollection is around 1928 or '29, Mr. Hallinan. I know I returned from my trip to sea, and I called on some gentleman down there, whose name I have forgotten now and asked about it.

Q. And how long was that after the original conviction?

A. I would say approximately four years—four to five years.

Q. All right. Now, you told Mr. Barber either before or on your way to Washington about this conviction; that's right, isn't it? A. That's right.

Q. You told him the nature of it?

A. That's right.

Q. Did you tell him that you had been voting continuously since? A. I don't believe I did.

Q. Did you tell him that you had been elected on the Democratic Central Committee, San Mateo County?

A. I don't know whether I told him then or later. I believe I [6939] told him at one time. As to what occasion I told him, I am not certain.

Q. Now, then, some time in the summer of 1949 you saw a copy of the record in Mr. Barber's possession, is that right?

A. That's right; that is my recollection, yes.

Q. Was it a copy of the complete record?

A. No, it was the document that Mr.——

Q. Just the two pages?

A. ——Donohue had in court here the other day.

Q. Just those two pages?

A. Yes, sir, that is all I have seen.

Q. That is all he showed you?

A. That is all I had seen up until the time you showed me that file that you had.

Q. Yes. And you had a conversation with Mr. Barber about that at that time, did you?

A. Yes, I told him about it and he asked me some questions, and I answered them. My memory was not too good regarding details.

Q. Well, how long after your first conversation did you see this document in his possession?

A. Quite some time.

Q. How long?

A. Well, let's see. Oh, several months, I believe. That is my best recollection of the matter. [6940]

Q. You saw the document in his possession several months later; and did you have some further conversation with him? A. Yes, I did.

Q. And what was that conversation?

A. Well, it was along the line of, "here's the information or the stuff we have got from Los Angeles," and he handed it to me and let me look it over. And he said that it appeared to be, that there appeared to be no record of the matter having been expunged and that it should have been expunged.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Had you told him about your trip down to the office there in 1928 or '29?

A. I don't believe I did.

Q. Did you tell him at this time?

A. No, I don't think I did.

Q. All right. Did you tell anybody until you testified here? A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Who was the first person you told, connected with the department?

A. I believe it was either Mr. Barber or Mr. Donohue.

Q. And when?

A. Oh, about a week ago, I believe—something like that.

Q. Beg your pardon?

A. About a week ago, I believe.

Q. That means a week from today?

A. Approximately, yes. [6941]

Q. That is the first time you told anybody connected with the prosecution about this visit in 1928 or '29 to the probation office, is that right?

A. That is my best recollection, yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now, when you had the conversation with Mr. Barber in which he had this record, what was the rest of that conversation?

A. Well, he said that the matter—that something should have been done about it or words to that effect, and apparently there was no record of any expungement or anything. And that was about all at that particular time.

Q. And then was any recommendation made or statement made ~~as to~~ what would be done on it?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, he said, "We will check up on it," or words to that effect.

Q. All right. And then when did you next hear from it? A. Oh, some time later.

Q. How much later?

A. I don't know. Maybe a matter of a few days, probably a couple of weeks.

Q. All right. And then what happened?

A. Well, he had a paper he wanted me to sign in connection with it.

Q. What was the paper?

A. I believe it was a request for expungement. [6942]

Q. Have you a copy of that? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever get a copy?

A. I never did.

Mr. Hallinan: Could we have a copy of it?

Mr. Donohue: Copy of what?

Mr. Hallinan: The document that he signed for Mr. Barber.

Mr. Donohue: If there is such a document, I will be glad to get it.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well. If we could have it on Monday?

Mr. Donohue: I might say I also have a photostat of the record in the probation office showing the case dismissed as of the 11th of November, 1927. I will be glad to let you have that, too.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes; when was that done, this week?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: It was done the 11th of November, 1927.

Mr. Hallinan: Nuts!

Mr. Donohue: I will bring it down here.

Mr. Hallinan: You mean you have one that is dated back, nunc pro tunc?

Mr. Donohue: I may say I have a photostat that was sent me, if your Honor pleases, by the probation office in Los Angeles, with a covering letter. I will be glad to let Mr. Hallinan have both.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, we will take a look at it. [6943]

Mr. Donohue: Be glad to offer them in evidence, too.

Mr. Hallinan: All right.

Q. You signed some document for Mr. Barber, then, is that right? A. That's correct.

Q. What was the nature of that document?

A. I believe it was—my recollection is it was a request for expungement.

Q. Was it a long document or a short one?

A. One page.

Q. One page? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What size page?

A. My recollection is it was just an ordinary size.

Q. Letter size? A. Yes.

Q. Size of an ordinary letter, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And how much language was on it, very much language or just a little?

A. I believe maybe 10 or 15 lines.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. 10 or 15 lines?

A. Something like that.

Q. To whom was it addressed?

A. I am not certain.

Q. Was it an affidavit? [6944]

A. I didn't swear to it.

Q. It wasn't sworn to at all. And there was no space for a notary's signature?

A. Not that I recall. As I remember it, I just put my signature on it.

Q. Well, can you tell me what was stated in that letter?

A. Well, my general recollection is the letter was some kind of a form that is required to be gone through in that process, a request or——

Q. Well, was this a printed form?

A. No, sir, it was typewritten.

Q. Typewritten letter. It was already typed when you saw it, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Was it on a letterhead?

A. Let me see, now. I may have written it out in my own handwriting. I am not—I recall signing a document, a one page document for Mr. Barber. I am not certain whether it was typewritten or in my own handwriting. There was no letterhead on it.

Q. What did it say?

A. Beg pardon?

Q. What did it say?

A. I think it said I either authorized somebody to take these proceedings or I requested the proceedings be taken, or words to that effect. [6945]

Q. Authorize who to take the proceedings?

A. That I am not certain, Mr. Hallinan. I don't recall the document clearly enough to give you other than the general—my recollection.

Q. Did you say it was or was not on a letterhead?

A. My recollection is there was no letterhead.

Q. Where did you sign or write out this document?

A. I think it was down in a place called Princeton, near Half Moon Bay.

Q. I see. Now——

A. One other point of correction, I might make. The document might not have been on regular, ordinary—you know, writing paper. The shape of it or the size of the paper might have been slightly different. I don't know. But it was a piece of paper that I signed.

Q. Now, before you went back to Washington, you had also told Mr. Barber about committing perjury before the Dies Committee, is that right?

A. That is my recollection, either before or during the trip.

Q. All right. During the trip. All right. And then when did you first see a copy of your testimony before the Dies Committee?

A. Oh, it is quite a long time after that. I am not certain as to when it was. But I saw Mr. Barber in San Francisco.

Q. Approximately when?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Prior to this trial and prior to the grand jury, I believe. [6946]

Q. How long prior to the grand jury?

A. I am not certain, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Did you read it? Did you read your testimony?

A. This was the House Un-American Activities Committee?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, I did. [6946-A]

Q. Well, now, with relation to the expurgation of that record, you signed this letter; you did not go down to Los Angeles yourself?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. You did not sign any other document?

A. Not that I recall.

Q. What is the next that you heard of it?

A. Mr. Barber advised me sometime after that that the authorities in Los Angeles had taken the expungement action apparently on their own motion because they—with apologies, because the thing should have been done many years ago and they overlooked it, or something like that.

Mr. Hallinan: Could I see that expunging record?

Q. This order is dated September 12, 1949?

A. I believe it is.

Q. So then it must have been sometime shortly after this that that was done, is that right?

A. That sounds logical, yes, sir.

Q. Was the letter that you signed—well, you said it was—before this date, though, is that right?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. You signed a letter at Princeton sometime before September 12, 1949. Can you tell us how long before? A. I cannot.

Q. Was it a month or two months, or just a few days before, or [6947] what?

A. It is my recollection it was in the summertime. I can't relate the two, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Then Mr. Barber told you that the Court had done it of its own accord, is that right, or the probation department had done it of its own accord?

A. He didn't say the court; he said the authorities—I don't remember his mentioning actually who the people were.

Q. What did he say to you about it?

A. He said—the conversation along these lines: We contacted those people down there and they—something—a lot of the records were missing, and checking up on it, and their proceeding on this expungement thing, apparently on their own motion, or words to that effect. They overlooked it. That was the general tenor of the conversation.

Q. Then what happened? What was the next that you heard?

A. I believe the next I heard was the expungement had come through or had been granted.

Q. Were you shown this document, that is, U. S. Exhibit 40?

A. No, the first I saw of it was the other day, shortly before it was introduced here.

Q. Now, in the record that was sent down, in the letter that was sent down to the Court for the expunging, did it call attention to the fact that your probation had been completed?

A. Not that I recall, Mr. Hallinan. [6948]

Q. Did it say anything about that you had complied with all the terms of your probation?

A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing of that kind?

A. I don't recall anything like that. My recollection is it was simply a request for somebody to do it, or a request for it to be done. It was a comparatively short thing.

Q. It did not contain any information that even before this expunging had gone through you had been voting regularly, did it?

A. No, sir, it did not.

Q. It did not contain any information that in the period between your conviction and the letter you had signed, you had testified falsely under oath before the House Un-American Activities Committee, did it? A. It did not.

Q. Did Mr. Barber state that he was, however, conveying that information to Judge Robert H. Scott, who was going to sign this expunging order?

A. No, we didn't discuss it.

Q. Did Mr. Barber tell you that he had notified Judge Scott that you had been for many years a member of the Communist Party? A. No, sir.

Q. And he didn't tell you that he was calling to Judge Scott's attention the fact that you had testified falsely under oath on [6949] thirteen separate occasions before the Un-American Activities Committee? He didn't tell you that?

A. That matter was not mentioned.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. That matter was not mentioned.

Q. And you did not have to sign any affidavit, you did not have to ~~appear~~ before the court, you did not have to appear before the probation officer to prove that you had complied with the terms of your probation, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Nothing like that at all?

A. That is right.

Q. When you went back to Washington and talked to Mr. Clark in Mr. Barber's presence, Mr. Barber, I think you have already testified, did not inform Mr. Clark that you stood as of that time convicted of a felony?

A. Not in my presence he did not.

Q. And he did not tell him in your presence that you had testified falsely under oath before the Un-American Activities Committee, did he?

A. No, we covered that yesterday, I believe; not in my presence he did not.

Q. When you appeared before the grand jury here, you did not tell them and you were not asked if you had been convicted of a felony or stood convicted of a felony as of then, were you? [6950]

A. No, sir.

Q. And you were not asked and you did not tell the grand jury that you had committed deliberate perjury on thirteen different occasions before the House Un-American Activities Committee, did you? A. I did not.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. First Mr. Barber took you back and goldbricked the Attorney General and then Mr. Donohue took you down here and goldbricked the grand jury, is that it?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, first because of its form and second because, as usual, Mr. Hallinan does not know what he is talking about.

The Court: I will sustain the objection.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): You own some premises down at Half Moon Bay that is improved with a two-story building, is that right?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: Preliminary, your Honor.

Mr. Donohue: What this witness may own by way of property is neither pertinent nor relevant to the issue.

Mr. Hallinan: The next question will show the relevancy of it.

Q. Is that right?

The Court: You may answer.

A. Yes, I own a home down there. [6951]

Q. (Mr. Hallinan): Is part of that building rented to some agency of the United States Government?

A. Yes, sir, it was rented to the United States Government when I bought it.

Mr. Hallinan: Do you see the relevancy?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: Yes, I see it.

The Witness: When I purchased it in 1946 it was rented.

The Court: What is that?

A. When I purchased the property in 1946 I believe it was rented to the Government then, so I just took over.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Is the Government agency only occupying the same amount of property now that it was in 1946? A. That is right.

Q. What rent is paid by it?

A. The Government pays $50, Federal Government.

Q. $50 per month? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the same rent it was paying when you took the place over?

A. No, I believe it was—my recollection is they were paying $40 at that time when I took it over.

Q. When was it raised?

A. Oh, about a year ago, I believe.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. A year or a year and a half ago is my recollection. [6952]

Q. They were paying $40, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Which was it, a year or a year and a half ago?

A. I don't recall, Mr. Hallinan, as to exactly when that change took place.

Q. In the strike of the maritime unions in 1948, which you described in the newspaper story that you gave as 80 per cent political and 20 per cent wages, hours and working conditions, and that it was directed primarily against the Marshall Plan, do you know whether or not that strike had been held pursuant to a vote taken under the auspices of the United States Government?

A. I do not know that fact, no, sir, one way or the other.

Q. You do not know one way or the other?

A. No, sir. [6953]

Q. Do you know that on a secret ballot, concluded in accordance with the United States Government's plans and arrangements, 95 per cent of the employees voted for the strike?

A. I do not recall any such information. I may have read it in the newspapers at the time.

Q. You did not bother to find out before you released a smear on the unions, as you did when you gave them that writeup on May 29, 1949, is that right?

A. The basis of my information regarding that was the fact that I had been present at a meeting where Mr. Schneidermann made a report in which he said that, "The job we have to do now is to prevent the clear crystallization of a foreign policy of this country that will be hostile to the Soviet Union, and we have to produce all kinds of activity to prevent the crystallization of that policy, both in this country, France, China and a number of other places."

Q. That sounds something like what Mr. Ray said they were going to say about the effort to amend the Copeland bill, doesn't it? The thing I just read before the recess, that you had sent out back in 1938.

A. You can make the comparison yourself, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. The release put out in 1938, wasn't it?

A. That release?

Q. Yes.

A. My recollection is '37 or '38. [6954]

Q. Wasn't that Memorial Day massacre in 1937, and the release says that was a year ago? Do you remember that is the fact?

A. The Memorial Day massacre—I don't recall the exact date—it was around 1937, I believe.

Q. While you were in Mr. Donohue's room in the St. Francis Hotel you phoned to Mr. George Wilson, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. And you read out to him the same statement that you gave to the newspapers here in San Francisco, isn't that correct? A. That is right.

Q. And there was some discussion between Mr. Wilson and yourself as to who was paying for this long telephone call, isn't that right?

A. I don't know as there was any discussion as to who was paying for it.

Q. Was Mr. Donohue present while you were having the conversation with Mr. Wilson?

A. Yes, he was.

Q. Who suggested phoning down to Wilson and getting that printed in the papers?

A. I don't recall who suggested it or whether anybody suggested it.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Was anybody else present in the room besides you and Donohue?

A. I don't recall anybody there.

Q. Did he suggest to you to phone down to Mr. Wilson and give [6955] him this information?

A. I just told you, Mr. Hallinan, I don't recall whether it was my idea or his suggestion or how it came about.

Q. What was the purpose of it? Why should either of you be bothered phoning down to Wilson and giving him this?

A. Well, I wanted to get it in the newspapers, that is why.

Q. You wanted to get it in the newspapers?

A. That is right.

Q. It was your personal desire, is that right?

A. That is definitely right, yes, sir.

Q. In other words, you had a personal desire now, aside and apart from anything that Donohue said, to get this matter in the newspapers?

A. That is right.

Q. And you were not content with getting it into the newspapers in San Francisco; you wanted it in the newspapers in Los Angeles, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And you also wanted to have Mr. Wilson spread it around in the newspapers down there; that is right, isn't it?

A. No, my recollection—the reason for calling Mr. Wilson was undoubtedly there would be some wire stories on the thing coming to Los Angeles. I wanted him to have the text of the statement just the way I put it out.

Q. The Hawaiian strike was on that time, as we have agreed [6956] already, is that right?

A. I am not certain. I believe it was.

Q. The warehouse strike was on in San Francisco at that time, as we have agreed already, isn't that right?

A. I believe that is correct.

Q. That strike extended all up and down the Coast, didn't it? A. That is right.

Q. At that time and in that period and with those strikes on you wanted to get not only in San Francisco papers, but in the Los Angeles papers the statement that the 1948 maritime strike was also 80 per cent political, 20 per cent wages, hours and working conditions, and directed primarily against the Marshall Plan, didn't you?

A. I didn't mention that in my conversation with Mr. Wilson.

Q. Why didn't you put it in that it was financed with the inexhaustible flow of Moscow gold, Mr. Rathborne?

A. I will be glad to get a copy of this statement I phoned to Mr. Wilson, if you would like to see it. I believe it is in evidence here. If it is not, I will be glad to get it for you.

Mr. Hallinan: Might we defer further examination until Monday?

The Court: We will adjourn the case until Monday morning next at 10:00 o'clock, and the same admonition to you, particularly over the weekend period. May I ask you not to read news accounts or radio reports of the trial and to refrain from discussions with any members of your family or other person on [6957] any subject of the trial and not to form or express an opinion until the matter is submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to Monday, March 6, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.)

Monday, March 6, 1950, 10:00 o'Clock A.M.

The Clerk: The United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The witness on the stand is Mervyn Rathborne, heretofore sworn.

Cross-Examination

resumed

By Mr. Hallinan:

At this time, if the Court please, I offer in evidence Defendant's Exhibit X-3 for identification, being the release that was made on January 26, 1936, and relating to the attacks upon labor under the guise of red-baiting. It has been already identified by the witness.

The Court: Is there any objection?

Mr. Donohue: No objection, your Honor.

The Court: It may be marked in evidence.

(Defendants' Exhibit No. X-3, heretofore marked for identification, was thereupon received in evidence.)

Mr. Hallinan: And a similar document made about the same time which was marked Defendants' Exhibit W-3, which has been identified by the witness, we offer in evidence at this time.

Mr. Donohue: No objection.

The Court: Same order.

(Defendants' Exhibit No. W-3, heretofore marked for identification, was thereupon received in evidence.)

Mr. Hallinan: This document that I have here is a release by the Maritime Federation of the Pacific Coast, San Francisco Bay Area District Council No. 2, Harry Bridges president, Mervyn Rathborne secretary-treasurer.

"January 26, 1936. Press statement for immediate release. The resolution adopted by the California State Chamber of Commerce on January 17 and not released to the press until January 25, is further evidence of the charge made by the San Francisco Bay Area District Council of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific Coast that shipowners have aligned themselves with Chambers of Commerce, industrial associations and other reactionary groups to bring about the destruction of the waterfront unions on the Pacific Union.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Awards and agreements which resulted from the 1934 maritime strike were not intended to last forever. These awards contained the machinery for obtaining amendments. Shipowners have consistently refused to consider or negotiate a single amendment to the awards, although amendments have been repeatedly requested by maritime unions. The arbitrary attitude of the employers has brought about many stoppages of work which could have been prevented had the owners been willing to negotiate. In addition, the continuous practice of the employers of violating and chiseling on the working rules and agreements has led to quickie strikes. The employers' outstanding violation of the award—of the government longshoremen's award—was their [6959] refusal for eight months to pay the retroactive wage increase ordered by the government arbitrator, Judge Sloss. Employers have denounced waterfront unions for uniting in a maritime federation. At the same time shipping interests, shippers, industrial associations and Chambers of Commerce and bankers have formed their own federation designed to precipitate a coastwide lockout of thousands of members of marine unions, to destroy organized labor on the Pacific Coast, to institute an industrial upheaval which would discredit the Roosevelt Administration during an election. The democratic makeup of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific makes it impossible for any group, radical or otherwise, to dominate the federation. A significant fact is that the clause of the federation's constitution which is objected to by both the shipowners and international officials of the I.S.U. is the one that provides that no strike may be called or terminated without a referendum of the membership of the unions comprising the federation. This section absolutely prevents minority groups, radical or otherwise, from calling strikes, or which is much more important, terminating strikes by means of a sellout."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Is that fact true?

A. To the best of my recollection, the Maritime Federation constitution contained those provisions, yes.

Q. "The constitution of the Maritime Federation provides that [6960] all affiliated unions must conform to the principles of the American Federation of Labor. The Maritime Federation is founded upon the same principles as the United States, majority rule.

"As stated in their campaign, shipowners, Chambers of Commerce and allied interests have attempted to boycott the Chronicle, leading San Francisco morning newspaper, and other publications which have attempted to present the truth. This boycott was an effort to force their newspapers to publish highly colored and anti-labor stories."

Do you know if that was true?

A. I don't recall that particular incident, Mr. Hallinan. [6961]

Q. Well, don't you remember that an effort was made on the part of the shipowners and allied interests to put no advertising in the Chronicle, in the San Francisco Chronicle in this year, around the end of 1935 and the beginning of 1936, because the Chronicle was giving a fair resume of what the controversy was between the maritime unions and the shipowners?

A. Well, the only point I make, Mr. Hallinan, I don't dispute it at all. I just don't recollect such an instance. But I recall that the Chronicle was running stories side by side in adjacent columns, one representing the employers, shipowners' point of view, and the others representing the unions' point of view. I remember that.

Q. And then on the other hand, you remember references that were made to a boycott of the Hearst newspapers running through these things; the Hearst newspapers were refusing to give workers' side of the story, isn't that right?

A. That was the belief of the union at that time, and the position, I believe, of the—I am not sure whether it was the Federation Council's, but it was certainly the position of many of the unions that some of the newspapers, including the Hearst press, were giving more weight to the shipowners' side than they were to the unions' side.

Q. Just like on this——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That is my recollection of it.

Q. You have been reading the newspapers of this trial? [6962] A. I have.

Q. Well, have you noticed that if you read, let's say, the Call and the Chronicle, you wouldn't know it was the same trial they were talking about?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor pleases.

The Court: Sustained.

> Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): "Waterfront employers and allied interests have attempted to bully and coerce certain steamship lines into participating in the contemplated lockout of all marine unions. The Grace Line has been threatened with a boycott by all shippers of freight unless it agrees to the shipowners' plans for a coastwise lockout. This action was taken because the Grace Company at times has adopted a policy of dealing fairly with waterfront unions.
> "The General Engineering Company also has been boycotted by waterfront employers because it signed an agreement with the International Machinists Union, a member of the Maritime Federation. Because of the boycott, General Engineering, which performs repair work on ships, has been forced to close its local plant and discharge several hundred workers."

Do you remember that incident?

A. Not the specific incident. As I say, I just don't recall that particular incident. [6963]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. But you do remember instances of the industrial association and the Waterfront Employers Association boycotting people who were originally members of their business, and competitors, and so forth, to force them to join in this lockout; do you remember that?

A. My recollection along those lines, Mr. Hallinan, is that it was a bitter fight going on between the unions and the shipowners and the unions at that time were in more or less of an organizational stage and were trying to maintain and improve the gains they had made in the very tough 1934 strike. My recollection is that both sides, the unions on one hand and the employers on the other, were using all kinds of tactics and devices and pressures and everything they could possibly do, one to offset the other's program. That is my recollection. Things were very tough in those days and conditions were very bad on the waterfront and on the ships.

Q. Except that the workers only had the organized men, poor working men, organized; and the employers had the wealth, had the federal government to fall back on, police department, industrial associations, and all those sort of things. Isn't that right?

A. Well, I think the record speaks for itself.

Q. Do you agree with what I just said?

A. No, I don't exactly, not in every word. I agree generally with the characterization. [6964]

Q. And originally, from what you knew about the story, just a couple of years before this or a year and a half before, the unions on the waterfront, the maritime unions, were very weak and very helpless, isn't that right?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor pleases.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, he has testified on those matters.

Mr. Donohue: So what, if your Honor pleases? Can we at some time come to the issue in this trial and stop trying the '34 and '36 strikes?

Mr. Hallinan: This gentleman has said that the '36 strike was dictated by the Communist Party and that the——

The Court: Objection overruled. You may answer.

The Witness: I didn't——

The Court: Do you understand the question?

The Witness: I don't remember it.

The Court: Have it read.

Mr. Hallinan: I will repeat the question.

Q. Prior to the '36 and during '36 the union, maritime unions on the waterfront and down the coast, had been very weak, hadn't they?

A. I would like to answer that question at a little length, your Honor, if you don't mind.

Q. Go ahead.

A. The situation, as I recall it, was this, that the country was [6965] emerging from a depression or was in a depression around that time, and that after the 1921 strike, no effective organization had existed on the Pacific Coast among the seamen, the longshoremen and other maritime workers; and that after the election of President Roosevelt, an effort was made to build trade union organizations. Conditions were very bad. We had the shapeup on the waterfront, we had low wages, poor conditions on the ships, and the conditions of the maritime workers were very, very bad at that time. And that effort to organize the unions on the waterfront was vigorously opposed by the employers, by the shipowners, and in that connection, I was blacklisted myself a couple of times for engaging in union activities. And it is also my recollection that during the time I was in there, that the Communist Party was very active in helping build these organizations and that their trade union program at that time was one that I supported and worked with, and it was one of the major reasons that I joined the Communist Party: because they were doing a good job, in my judgment, at that time, in building the unions and helping overcome some of these abuses which I believe everybody will agree today were abuses that should have been corrected. So at that time, Mr. Hallinan, that is my recollection of the situation, and it was certainly, in my judgment, an excellent thing that the unions were organized. They were able to get the gains that they did win for the maritime workers, including myself, and it was a needed and necessary thing [6966] to bring some balance into the situation with respect to the bargaining power and the influence of labor on one hand and the employers on the other. Now, does that answer your question?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That is all right. And at that time the influence, or at least the efforts, rather, of the Communist Party, were quite benign, weren't they?

A. I believe today, sir, that the work carried on by the Communist Party members on the waterfront was work in the direction of helping the working people, the maritime workers, overcome these terrible conditions that existed then; and I certainly have no quarrel with it and I think that some of the things that they did were excellent. I still believe that today.

Q. Then the members of the Communist Party who helped on that strike and who worked and went on the picket lines, they worked hard and they worked diligently so far as you know, isn't that right?

A. I believe I previously testified, sir, that one of the main requirements of the Communist in a trade union was to be a good trade unionist.

Q. Yes, all right. And the efforts that they were making, the hard work that they put in, was directed toward getting rid of these, what you described as terrible conditions; isn't that right?

A. The immediate efforts, the immediate tactical program of the party was to build strong and effective unions on the waterfront [6967] and to win gains for the workers, as I understood it at that time.

Q. And to get it down to specific things, to get them decent wages, decent hours and decent working conditions, isn't that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That was part of the program.

Q. To get them more than $10 a week wages, keep them from having their work spread out over a period of 16 or 17 hours, the shapeup and all the atrocious things you have testified to. The Communists who were working on the strike had that same purpose in mind, didn't they?

A. Those issues that you mentioned, my recollection is that at least at the time that I joined and the time they were talking to me about joining, these were reasons give to me why I should join the Communist Party.

Q. And you came out to the coast when?

A. I came out to the Coast—what do you mean?

Q. When did you come to San Francisco?

A. My recollection is some time during 1934 in the early part, before the first half of the year.

Q. Yes. Now, do you give Harry Bridges any credit for the work that he did in those strikes and in helping organize those unions?

A. Certainly I do. I don't deny that he worked effectively and hard along this program, for these unions. [6968]

Q. Well, do you think that his work was very important?

A. Well, I think that the work of everybody there that was doing that, carrying on that activity, was important and he occupied quite an important place in the picture. I don't credit him as being the savior of the working class or being the guy that, singlehanded, organized the unions.

Q. He didn't say that either.

A. Well, I say, I am trying to show a difference, the way I approach it. As I say, I think the entire work, the entire organizing of the unions and correcting these unions, was important and that Mr. Bridges occupied an important place in that picture.

Q. And then that union continued to get stronger and stronger, didn't it, all those unions?

A. Over a period of time, they did, yes, sir.

Q. And then finally they got strong enough that the conditions of the waterfront workers is now a comparatively good one, isn't that right?

A. As far as the wages, hours and working conditions, they are comparatively good.

Q. Well, of course, the port is paralyzed now because there is no trade with China, isn't that correct?

A. Well, I wouldn't——

Q. I mean, relatively. There is a lot of the work——

A. My observation is that there is much less shipping now than [6969] there used to be.

Q. There is more?

A. I say there is much less shipping out of the port of San Francisco than there used to be.

Q. That is the reason, though, isn't it?

A. I wouldn't say entirely. I am not familiar with all the reasons, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. All right. And you know that Harry Bridges has worked continuously all those years in the ILWU and in its affiliated unions?

A. Yes, I know that.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. All right. And would you say that his influence has been a good one?

A. The only quarrel on that point that I have, and I have stated it here before, is that I believe, I am certain that Mr. Bridges has consistently supported and followed the line of the Communist Party, and I think that that differentiating between '34, '35 and '36 and today, that following that line is inimical to the best interests of the labor movement, inimical to the best interests of this country, and something that a man who is really an American labor leader should not do. That is the——

Q. I understand.

A. ——point of departure.

Q. Now, as far as his influence up until the time that you [6970] arrived at this decision is concerned, his influence was a good influence, wasn't it?

A. Generally speaking, in so far as wages, hours and working conditions for the people, yes. But there were situations where political matters injected themselves into the picture and where in my judgment now, looking back on it, unions took positions from political motivations directed from the Communist Party, rather than from trade union motivations. And in those situations the results were not always beneficial to the union, in my judgment.

Q. In other words, he would see that a stevedore sat down and ate a steak dinner, but he talked some kind of improper economic ideology to him, is that about it?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That is not exactly it, no, sir.

Q. Well, all right, let's get this, then. Finally, the unions, of which Mr. Bridges is the head, became so strong——

A. Well, now, Mr. Bridges wasn't the head of all the union, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. No, but this ILWU, let's take, for instance.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That ILWU became so strong, it was able to go over to the Hawaiian Islands and break the terrible conditions that had existed there for a century, isn't that right?

A. Well, I don't deny it, but I am just not very familiar with the Hawaiian situation. My information along that line is that [6971] the ILWU carried out an organizing campaign over there, did secure quite a number of members, engaged in several kinds of negotiations and strikes, and so on and so forth, and got some agreements which improved the conditions of the people. That is my general knowledge of the situation.

Q. You didn't know anything about the pick-handles and the gas bombs over there, or the bullets, or anything? You never heard of those? They just went over there and made a few discussions with employers and the employers made these concessions to them, is that it?

A. No, Mr. Hallinan: I am not so naive and you are not so naive as to believe that a trade union organizing campaign is not accompanied by a considerable struggle to try to establish a union, particularly in an area that has been previously non-union. But I don't have the——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. By a "considerable struggle," you mean that they resort to violence, murder, all sorts of terrible things, to keep the working men from getting the increases in wages and what they are entitled to, don't you?

A. As far as my information in the Hawaiian situation, Mr. Hallinan, I am not—it is derived from reading the newspapers, labor and commercial papers, and it is rather limited. So I don't know the details of what went on there.

Q. All right. Now, to continue with this exhibit:

> "Any leader of a maritime union who is not a United States [6972] citizen and whose actions are found to be in violation of any law by a regularly constituted court of justice may be deported. However, the California State Chamber of Commerce should not be the body to interpret the law. Courts have been established for this purpose. If any significance could be attached to the label 'radical' as applied by the California State Chamber of Commerce and the attaching of this label was sufficient ground for persecution, then President Roosevelt and Secretary of Labor Perkins, who both have been labeled 'Reds' by similar reactionary forces, would have been prosecuted long before this."

Remember that statement?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I don't remember the exact statement. [6973]

Q. Do you remember that Franklin Roosevelt and Mrs. Perkins were called Reds?

A. I distinctly remember the election campaign that President Roosevelt was called a Red, a Communist, a horrible man, and a lot of other bad names.

> Q. "As for aliens, at least one large employer, member of the Waterfront Employers' Association, is an unnaturalized alien. In addition, an investigation will reveal a plan of American interests to use foreign shipowners and foreign finance to bring about a national upheaval in the maritime transportation industry. This disturbance will vitally affect the interests of thousands of American workers and their families."

Do you remember that there was uncovered around that time a plan of the shipowners to involve foreign shipowners in an effort to break unions all over the world?

A. It could well be, but I mean I just don't recall the details. Apparently that statement was put out by Mr. Bridges and myself, was put out on the basis of information we had at that time, but I just don't recollect the specific thing.

Q. You don't, I take it——

A. It woud be my recollection that that charge was made, but I don't just recall the actual incident, that's all.

Q. You don't, I take it, think it improper for working men all over the world, marine workers, to unite in such an organization as the WFTU for their protection, do you?

A. I think that an effective trade union organization on a [6974] local, State, national and international basis to achieve the legitimate aims of labor is perfectly proper, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Now, to continue:

> "It is because of these facts that the leaders, alien and otherwise, of Pacific Coast marine unions are demanding that Congress investigate the subversive and un-American activities of the shipowners, Chambers of Commerce and allied interests.
> The record of any alien labor leader is open to investigation.
> The Maritime Federation has not violated any anti-trust law. It urgently requests and welcomes Congressional investigation, strict enforcement of ship subsidy laws, regulations governing safety of life at sea and other statutes which are being openly violated by shipowners." [6975]

Do you remember the demand for a Congressional investigation by the unions?

A. Yes, I believe there was a demand at that time for——

Q. Did you testify before the Lafollette Committee when it held its hearings out here?

A. I don't believe I testified, no. I may have, but I don't recall any testimony. I know I was in contact with the Lafollette Committee. Whether that contact actually went to the point of testifying, I am not certain. I helped them in their investigations, and I am not certain that I actually testified.

Q. All right. Did you read the findings of the Lafollette Committee?

A. I read some of the Lafollette Committee documents. I recall there was maybe 30 or 40 volumes they put out, and I read some of the testimony and some of the findings, but I am not—I don't recall it all.

Q. Did you read the finding that there had been an active campaign among the shipowners to get rid of Harry Bridges by claiming he was a Communist?

A. I don't recall that I did or I did not.

Q. Did you know this——

A. I was familiar with the procedure—I mean, I knew that to be a fact at the time.

Q. Now, let me ask you this——

A. I mean, I knew the shipowners were after Bridges, and they [6976] were trying to get him deported and the charges they were using were Communism. I knew that.

Q. And you knew that they were having articles written in the newspapers and trying to build up a popular hatred against Harry Bridges as being a dangerous alien and a dangerous Communist?

A. I didn't have any direct knowledge of that, no, sir.

Q. Do you know this—now, see if you can remember this: that the reason that they were going to boycott—that the employers wanted to boycott the Chronicle that Paul C. Smith, the managing editor of the Chronicle, supported Harry Bridges in his demand for an investigation of the Un-American activities of the shipowners?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That could have been. I mean, I just don't—I don't recall it, that is all.

Q. Do you know Mr. Smith?

A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. Did you ever have any discussion with him on this subject I am talking about around that time?

A. I am not sure whether I did or did not. I had a number of discussions with Mr. Smith around that time on the general subject, as I recall it, of the objectivity of the Chronicle, and as a result of those discussions, and I believe other discussions Mr. Bridges had, Smith, I believe, finally adopted the device, if you want to call it that, of running in adjacent [6977] columns statements made by the employers and statements made by the unions so that the public could read both sides and draw its own conclusions. That is my recollection of the conversations with Mr. Smith around that time.

Q. Don't you remember that Mr. Smith went much further than that, and that he, as managing editor of the Chronicle, editorialized that Mr. Bridges' demand for a congressional investigation should be granted and a congressional investigation should be held?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I don't recall it. It could have happened, but I am not—I mean, I am not——

Q. Do you remember a finding of the Lafollette Committee that the efforts of the shipowners through the papers had been so successful that almost all the public entertained the false belief that Mr. Bridges was a Communist and a dangerous alien?

A. I just don't recall any such findings, Mr. Hallinan; they may have been made.

Q. Well, do you recall some language to that effect?

A. I don't think those hearings of the Lafollette Committee were ever published.

Q. Yes, they were.

A. I am not sure. Anyway, I recall reading a great many things about the situation at that time, and, as I testified here, it was my opinion at that time, and still is, that there was an endeavor on by the employers to try to have Mr. Bridges [6978] deported and that Communism was one of the charges. Now, that is my recollection. All the individual different things that happened in connection with it, I just don't recall.

Q. That isn't what I am talking about now. What I am talking about now is the organized campaign of publicity to defame Mr. Bridges among the public and cause it to so dislike and hate him that it would be easy to procure his deportation. Do you remember that that was the subject of the discussions and testimony?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. In the Lafollette Committee hearing, you mean?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I just don't recall that.

Q. Well, aside from wheher you recall that, was that the situation?

A. Well, I had no specific evidence of any organized procedure. I will say this: that the newspapers generally were very hostile to Mr. Bridges and represented in my judgment, now and then, the employers' point of view over and above the unions' point of view.

Q. And do you remember this: that whenever the charge was made in a newspaper that Mr. Bridges was a Communist or in any way connected with Communists, it was always done as narrating something that carried a privileged communication so that the newspaper could not be sued for libel and slander?

A. Well, now, I really don't know what a privileged communication [6979] in a legal sense is.

Q. I mean something said in a court or something said in Congress or in some body of that kind so that if it were repeated in a newspaper Mr. Bridges would not be able to file suits against them.

A. Well, Mr. Hallinan, my recollection is that the newspapers were generally——

Q. I know that; you answered that.

A. ——were hostile, were antagonistic toward the unions and also Mr. Bridges. I don't remember every article that appeared, and I don't remember all the specific details. The general policy or the general approach I certainly do recollect.

Q. Well, you have never seen any article in any newspaper which intimated or charged that Mr. Bridges was a Communist or a member of the Communist Party upon which an action for libel could be based, have you?

A. Well, now, Mr. Hallinan, I am not an attorney or a lawyer, and I don't know when material is libelous and when it is not.

Q. Don't you know——

A. I repeat that I saw a lot of charges and a lot of accusations against Mr. Bridges. Now, whether they were libelous or whether they were not, I just couldn't judge.

Q. Don't you remember that there were——

A. I think some of them were libelous.

Q. Don't you remember that there were discussions with the [6980] attorneys for the union about the instituting of actions for libel by Mr. Bridges and it was pointed out by the attorneys that even though false, the statements were privileged and hence a suit could not be maintained on them?

A. It is my recollection that Mr. Bridges filed a couple of libel actions against the newspapers.

Q. Do you know what happened to those?

A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. The filing of the actions were for calling him a Communist, isn't that right?

A. That could have been.

Q. Yes.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I think it was generally attacking his character, and, as I say, I believe one of those—one of the allegations was that, to my recollection.

Q. Don't you remember that the only answer that the papers made was not that the statement was true but that it was privileged?

A. Well, now, sir, I don't recall that. It is my recollection that they were disposed of, dismissed, or anyway, I don't ever recall them coming to trial. What the disposition was I don't recall.

Q. Do you remember in the Hawaiian strike that the papers recited statements that had been made in Congress by one or two senators of the Copeland type that Mr. Bridges was the Red czar of Hawaii? Did you notice those things? [6981]

A. Well, I may have read something about it in the newspapers. I don't deny that I did or that I did not. I read casually pretty much about the Hawaiian strike and the other situations, whatever appeared in the newspapers at that time about the situation. That is, I didn't read every newspaper every day, but over a period of time I probably read six or eight newspapers a week, and what appeared in the papers is what I learned about the strike.

Q. Did you ever notice this after the Hawaiian strike started, right in line with the discussion we have been having about damaging that strike, that a certain representative stood up in Congress and called Mr. Bridges the Red czar of Hawaii, and then the Hearst papers ran as a headline "Bridges

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Red Czar of Hawaii" and in small print "says Congressman So and so"? Did you notice that at all?

A. I don't recall reading that statement.

Q. Would you consider that an anti-labor device? A. Yes, I would.

Q. Did you consider that the Hawaiian strike was a proper strike and a legitimate strike?

A. Well, here with my position on the Hawaiian strike as I discussed it with a number of people. I said, in my judgment, knowing what I did about it, which wasn't very much, that it was certainly time that the people in the Hawaiian Islands should be organized and their conditions should be [6982] improved, and that it is unfortunate that this strike for wages, hours and working conditions is tied up in these other issues.

Q. In what issues? A. Of Communism.

Q. You had no knowledge or information that the strike in Hawaii had anything to do with Communism, did you?

A. I have just been pointing out that a lot of charges about Communism were made.

Q. I say, you have no belief——

A. No, I did not.

Q. You don't think that the employers, the big five in Hawaii, were dong anything different toward their employees than the Waterfront Employers had been doing in 1934 to theirs, do you?

A. Well, I had no information as to what the employers were doing in the Hawaiian strike other than what I read in the newspapers.

Q. And from what you read in the newspapers did you make any effort to question it, or to determine whether those statements were true or false?

A. No, sir. My estimation of the situation, though, was generally favorable to the strikers and to the union, and my own personal attitude—I argued that position.

Q. Did you argue that with Clark?

A. No, but I did argue it or state it to Mr. Donohue and Mr. Boyd. [6983]

Q. What position did they take?

A. I believe they just said—I don't think they took a position on it.

Q. You say you argued it to them?

A. I presented my point of view to them.

Q. And what point of view did they present to you?

A. I don't believe they presented any. I believe they just——

Q. Didn't they tell you that it was a Communist-instigated and controlled strike and that the whole issue down there was the Communists taking over Hawaii?

A. No, sir, they never told that to me.

Q. When did you have this argument with them?

A. Well, it wasn't an argument; it was a discussion.

Q. I am using your own phrase; you say you argued it.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I would say it was more of a discussion than argument.

Q. Where did that discussion take place?

A. To the best of my recollection, the discussion with Mr. Barber took place in the Appraisers Building.

Q. Did you have separate discussion or just one discussion? A. Well, that I don't recall.

Q. When was it?

A. It must have been during the strike. My recollection is it was during the strike.

Q. When did the strike start and end, do you know?

A. I believe the strike started in May of last year, didn't it? [6984]

Q. And when did it end?

A. Some months later; I don't remember the exact date.

Q. Now, when did you have the conversation with Mr. Barber in the Appraisers Building?

A. During the period of the strike.

Q. What part of it?

A. I can't—I don't recall every day of the strike, Mr. Hallinan, and every conversation I have had with Mr. Barber with respect to the particular date it took place on.

Q. Well, I don't care about that. Was it in the early part of the strike, the middle of the strike, or what?

A. My best recollection would be in the middle of the strike; I am not certain.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Would you say it was in the month of May that it happened?

A. I wouldn't say because I don't know.

Q. Place it by the grand jury hearing. Was it before you went before the grand jury or after?

A. I am reasonably certainly it was after.

Q. How long after?

A. Well, now, my best recollection of the date would be about the middle of the strike, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. About the middle of the strike?

A. I just don't remember.

Q. Anybody else present at the time?

A. I don't believe there was. I don't [6985] remember.

Q. Just you and Mr. Barber. Now, you had this discussion about the strike in which you took the position that the strike in Hawaii had nothing to do with Communism or the Communist Party, is that right?

A. No, he asked me, he said, "Merve, what do you think about that Hawaiian strike? What is your opinion of the Hawaiian situation?" or something like that. He listened—I mean he made an inquiry about my position. [6985-A]

Q. And then you told him what you thought?

A. I did.

Q. What did you say?

A. Well, I told him substantially what I said here before.

Q. Tell us again. I didn't get it.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Generally, that it was time that the people were organized down there and it was time their conditions were improved, and that from what I observed in the Hawaiian Islands the conditions were not good; and as far as the trade unions' objectives of a strike are concerned, that I was in sympathy with them and that I thought it was long overdue that the people down there had their conditions improved. And I also said it was unfortunate, or too bad, that this other issue, in the interest of the people there——

Q. What other issue?

A. This other issue of Communism and all this thing, had got involved in the situation, because from the viewpoint of effective trade union organization and better wages, hours and conditions for these people, it was way overdue. And that generally my sympathy was in the direction of hoping they won the strike and came out of it all right and got better conditions.

Q. What did you tell him about it being too bad that these other issues like Communism became involved in it? What was the discussion on that? In what way was that unfortunate?

A. Well, I don't remember the exact details, but in connection [6986] with the fact that there had been Communist activity in connection with the strike. That is about as far as——

Q. Did you tell him that there had been——

A. In my opinion, there had been.

Q. I thought you said you knew nothing about it.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, again, I told you that my information regarding the strike came from the newspapers, and I was expressing a judgment based on my information received from the newspapers.

Q. That there was some Communist influence in the strike in Hawaii, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And in other words, the newspapers were charging that this was an example of Communist infiltration and domination of workers in Hawaii, is that right?

A. Well, that is the general position they took.

Q. And you read that? A. That's right.

Q. And you believed it? A. Not entirely.

Q. You believed some of it?

A. Some of it, yes.

Q. What percentage?

A. Well, now, Mr. Hallinan, I can't be that specific. You asked me about my information, and my opinion of the strike. I gave it to you. Now, I can't be more specific at the present [6987] time.

Q. And then did you see any distinction between that situation, in which the newspapers were saying that the Hawaiian strike was a Communist infiltration and dominated by the Communists, the difference between that and the strikes that took place on the waterfront in '34 and '36, in which the papers were saying identically the same thing about the longshoremen and sailors?

A. Well, there was a very definite difference, because in the waterfront strikes of '36 and '37, and during '35, I was actively engaged in union work and I was actively a member of the Communist Party, and I had information as to what was going on and had that specific and definite, detailed information. In connection with the Hawaiian strike, most of my information, as I have related here, came from the newspapers and based on my previous ideas and experience plus what I read in the newspaper, I reached the conclusion which I told you I expressed to Mr. Barber.

Q. Well, now, what was Mr. Barber's opinion on that? What did he say, that he did think it was Communist controlled and Communist infiltration? What did he say to you?

A. I don't believe he said very much of anything. He asked for my opinion, as I recall it, and I expressed it.

Q. Well, did he agree with you or disagree with you?

A. I don't believe he agreed with me.

Q. You don't believe he agreed with you?

A. No, sir. [6988]

Q. Well, then, he disagreed with you, did he?

A. If he did, it wasn't any violent disagreement. He said, well, he didn't think so, or his opinion was otherwise, or words to that effect.

Q. His opinion was that it was Communist-dominated, is that right?

A. Well, my recollection is, Mr. Hallinan, that he made some expression or expressed an idea that he didn't agree wholly with the opinion that I had expressed.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did he claim to have some information from the inside on it, from the Big Five, for instance?

A. No, sir, he did not.

Q. Well, where did he say he got his information that caused him to differ with you?

A. As I recall, he merely said it was his opinion.

Q. Well, by that time, now, you were an active anti-Communist, weren't you?

A. That's right.

Q. Yes. And your position was certainly no more favorable to the Communists than Mr. Barber's was, is that right? A. That's right.

Q. But Mr. Barber went further than you did on the situation in Hawaii and disagreed with you. Now, didn't he tell you what information he had that enabled him so to contradict you?

A. As I said, Mr. Barber expressed disagreement in part with the [6989] statement I had made, but he did not reveal to me any information that he may have had or may not have had regarding whether he formed the opinion from reading newspapers or from other sources. He didn't——

Q. Well, did Mr. Barber——

A. He didn't, for example, produce a file and say, "Well, here's proof that the Communists are running the strike," or anything like that.

Q. When did you talk to Mr. Donohue on this same subject?

A. I believe it was during that same period; around the time that the Hawaiian strike was mentioned in the newspapers, quite commonly.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. When did you have a talk with him?

A. I don't recall exactly, Mr. Hallinan. My best recollection would be either in the Cartwright Hotel or some place where I had seen or met Mr. Donohue.

Q. Was it before or after you talked to Barber?

A. I would say just about the same time. I am not——

Q. Just, you mean, a day or two separating the two conversations?

A. Well, I can't place the two conversations either in order or in time they took place, other than my recollection is, they took place about the middle of the strike.

Q. Now, where did Mr. Donohue—what was the conversation with Mr. Donohue?

A. I believed I instigated and expressed the same opinion to him [6990] as I did to Mr. Barber.

Q. What did he say?

A. I think he said he didn't know anything about it.

Q. Now, he said he didn't know anything about it, is that right?

A. That is my recollection, or that he wasn't—he didn't have too much information on it, or something.

Q. Did he say he had any information on it?

A. Not that I recall.

Q. Did he say he had any opinion on it?

A. I don't recall him expressing any opinion. I believe—my recollection is that I volunteered the information or the discussion and that he—I don't recall him expressing any opinion particularly.

Q. Well, did he tell you that the opinion of Mr. Tom Clark on that subject was as follows:

> "Hawaii is the only spot at the present time where our domestic Communist problem is serious. We may have to take some drastic action there. But I think that the case against Bridges has already been of some help in the Hawaiian situation. If we are successful in our prosecution of Bridges, as I am certain we will be, it may be that we can break the Hawaiian situation without any other intervention."

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor pleases, for the reason that there is no proof that the Attorney General ever made that statement. [6991]

Mr. Hallinan: I am asking. I am not suggesting this is proof; I am asking this gentleman.

Q. Did Mr. Donohue tell you that Mr. Clark, that that was Mr. Clark's opinion on the Hawaiian strike? A. He did not, no, sir.

Q. Well, did anybody tell you that?

A. You did, yes, sir.

Q. Is that the first time you heard it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you checked up since I [illegible] you, to find out whether on June 27, 1949, in the city of Milwaukee at the German Relief Day Festival at Old Heidelberg Park, Mr. Tom Clark said exactly that language? A. No, sir, I have not.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You made no effort; did you ask Mr. Barber?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Ask Mr. Donohue?

A. The information I have about that particular statement in the document you have here appears in the testimony in this proceeding. The only information I have about it.

Q. Would you look at the middle picture in this and tell me if you can identify Mr. Tom Clark? (Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor pleases. What difference does it make whether it is a good or a [6992] poor resemblance to Mr. Clark?

Mr. Hallinan: We are not concerned with that; I don't care about the artistic end of it.

Mr. Donohue: Unless Mr. Hallinan suggests the witness doesn't know Mr. Tom Clark?

Mr. Hallinan: I don't know. Let's see if it is the same Tom Clark he met in Washington.

The Witness: From the picture here it appears to me Mr. Clark is the gentleman in the white suit.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): In the white suit?

A. Yes. Not a very good reproduction, however.

Mr. Paisley: Let's take a look.

Mr. Donohue: May we see it?

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, sure. You should have read that long ago. It might change your outlook.

Mr. Donohue: I may say, if your Honor pleases, I read it at the time that your Honor ruled in the preliminary stages that this was no proof that the Attorney General of the United States ever said any such thing.

Mr. Hallinan: How long ago was that, might I ask?

Mr. Donohue: Prior to your employment and during the period when Messrs. Gladstein, Resner, Andersen and Sawyer argued a great number of motions.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, then, Mr. Clark has had ample opportunity to deny it if he didn't say it, hasn't he? And I haven't [6993] seen it denied.

Mr. Donohue: You haven't seen him, either.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, might we inquire this. This Barber—what is his occupation, so far as you know? A. At the present time?

Q. Yes.

A. He is, I believe, head of the Immigration Service here in San Francisco.

Q. That is the outfit you are working for now, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. And he is head of the Immigration Service. Was that his business or occupation at the time you had this conversation with him?

A. I am not certain.

Q. Well, did he ever tell you or express to you why it was any of his business what was happening in Hawaii? A. No, he never did.

Q. Well, did he ever tell you why it was any concern of his as a member of the Immigration Department whether there were Communists in Hawaii or not? A. He never did.

Q. Did he ever tell you why it was any business of his whether the unions in this country were dominated by Communists or Communism or not?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. He never did. Mr. Clark did. [6994]

Q. Yes. Did he express any reason why he should be junketing all over the country trying to get rid of Communists and trying to get rid of labor leaders who are charged with being Communists?

A. He never made such a statement to me.

Q. Did he express to you any belief that that was involved in his duties as immigration officer?

A. Well, Mr. Barber, I believe, told me on perhaps one occasion, perhaps more, that he had instructions to secure certain information and certain evidence in connection with the proceedings that are now going on here.

Q. From whom did he have that direction?

A. He didn't tell me.

Q. All right. Now, let me ask you this: Are your duties at the Immigration Department confined strictly to working on this case?

A. That's right.

Q. You haven't gone up in that jail that they have on the upstairs floor of the Appraiser's Building, where a great number of people are confined awaiting what they call "processing" of their right to enter the country?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Hallinan: I think it goes to his activities in the matter.

The Court: The objection is sustained. [6995]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, may we some time come back away from the case of Hallinan v. Rathborne to the case of the United States v. Bridges?

Mr. Hallinan: No, you are going to be a long time on it.

Mr. Donohue: I think the Court has something to say about that, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

Q. Now, let me ask you this. Now, did Mr. Barber have any discussion with you about that Chinese woman who jumped off the Appraisers Building here a few months ago after being locked up there for a year and a half, trying to have her case proceed?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor pleases. I ask your Honor to instruct the jury to disregard it and I ask your Honor to require Mr. Hallinan to conduct his cross-examination according to the rules.

Mr. Hallinan: I wish your Honor would hold that for just a couple of questions now, because it will lead directly to what I want to ask, as to the Immigration Department's activities in this case.

The Court: The objection is sustained, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: All right.

The Court: I admonish the jury to disregard the statement made by Mr. Hallinan concerning the incident of the Chinese lady, for the simple and obvious reason that apparently it thus far hasn't anything to do with this case. [6996]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Now, we will take the morning recess, and the same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [6996-A]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, in his discussion with you on the Hawaiian strike did Mr. Barber tell you that the immigration authorities had been moving around among the strikers in Hawaii and arresting and deporting any who would not return to work who were aliens? A. No, sir he did not.

Q. He didn't say that to you? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, did you know that your friend Joe Curran ordered his men to work the ships that were entering the Hawaiian port?

A. No, I did not know that.

Q. You didn't check on that at all?

A. No, sir. I told you the information I had about the Hawaiian strike was derived very largely from reading newspaper accounts of it.

Q. Well, did you know this: Did you know that the only issue in the Hawaiian strike was the issue of arbitration?

A. I did not know that that was the only issue. I knew that it was an issue, because it was mentioned in the newspaper reports that I read. My recollection is that the union was demanding arbitration and the employers were refusing it. That is my recollection.

Q. Correct; the union was demanding arbitration and the employers were refusing it?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne:)

A. That is my recollection of what I read in the newspapers. [6997]

Q. And do you know that the United States Government proposed the arbitration which the union accepted and which the employers rejected?

A. I probably read it at the time, but the fact doesn't stick in my memory. The thing that sticks in my mind is that the union were favoring arbitration.

Q. You know that the arbitration was to be before an officer of the United States Government, or by an officer of the United States Government, isn't that right? A. That I don't know.

Q. That is ordinarily true?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. Isn't there an arbitration and conciliation department in the Department of Labor?

A. No, sir, there is not. There is a mediation and conciliation service, but not arbitration.

Q. And you know that the unions in Hawaii offered to submit every issue of wages and hours and conditions to arbitration?

A. Well, Mr. Hallinan, I don't know that as a positive fact. I may have read it at the time, but it doesn't stick in my memory. I have told you my information about the Hawaiian strike was none too complete.

Q. Let us take your information on that. Your information was to that effect?

A. I may have read it in the newspaper, but it doesn't stick [6998] in my mind at the moment.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did you have this information: That the employers put full-page advertisements all over the country, even in the New York newspapers, in which they said that arbitration was a Communist scheme imported directly from Moscow. Did you see any of those advertisements?

A. I don't recall seeing them.

Q. Do you believe that they did it?

A. I don't believe it and I don't disbelieve it. I don't think—the thing that amazes me, if they did, why they would be so stupid to do a thing like that.

Q. When there is hysteria, anything can happen —a Red scare, getting people whipped up, that is why.

A. I have heard lots of employers hollering for arbitration on lots of occasions, so I don't know why they were so stupid to bring in or make a remark like that.

Q. I will bring in one of the pages of the New York Times, a full page that cost them $18,000.

Mr. Paisley: Is that a question, or is that Mr. Hallinan's testifying?

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. Rathborne asked me, and out of courtesy and kindness to him I felt compelled to answer, that is all.

Mr. Paisley: He has already said half a dozen times that he didn't know.

Mr. Hallinan: To keep Mr. Paisley busy, might we ask this: [6999] Would you bring in, Mr. Paisley, the canceled checks that have been paid to Mr.

Rathborne during the time he has been employed by the department? May we have those?

Mr. Paisley: Pardon me. You know how to subpoena evidence, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I ask the Court—

Mr. Paisley: If you want evidence, subpoena it.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I ask the Court to require that the prosecution do that?

The Court: Yes, they may be produced.

Mr. Hallinan: Thank you. I want all the checks paid out, particularly the first ones that were paid to this gentleman, to show the date on which his employment commenced.

Q. Now, did Mr. Barber, in his discussion with you in which he stated that he had been employed to or directed to gather information on this subject did he state what percentage of the Department of Immigration was to be turned over to that occupation?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: It goes to this man, an employee of the Department of Immigration, and the Department of Immigration interest has been directly involved, and I think it is a pertinent inquiry. It goes to his interest.

The Court: I think there may be some limit or delimitation to the employment on the part of the Immigration Department of [7006] this man. He so delimited his employment, at least in his testimony, and over all questions I believe would not aid any particular purpose. I think that I have allowed all questions pertinent to this particular proceeding. I will continue to allow them, but I think that any policies of the Department would not be disclosed to this man nor would he be able to testify to them.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Let me ask you this, then, Mr. Rathborne: In addition to Mr. Kessler living down at Miramar and chopping down trees for you on Saturdays and Sundays, have you been favored with the services of any other employees of the Department? A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. No baby-sitters?

A. I don't know what you mean by "favored with the services," but——

Q. Haven't you had the use of any baby-sitters?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Schomaker has, you know. Didn't you know that? A. No, I didn't.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, yes.

Mr. Donohue: I object to that statement, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. Schomaker said that the Department of Immigration official on three separate occasions was taking [7001] care of his children while he was engaged in the work of testifying here. He said that.

The Court: I think, Mr. Hallinan, in fairness, the record will disclose there were security reasons why Mr. Schomaker then disclosed or at least asserted.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: No, not on the baby sitting. Security reasons were for Mr. Crouch.

The Court: Maybe the record will disclose that. In connection with Mr. Schomaker's testimony there were certain security reasons outlined. However, I will pass it now.

Mr. Hallinan: As far as Mr. Kessler being two and one-half miles away from you at Miramar, did you know that Mr. Crouch had one sleeping opposite his room and one sleeping on each side of his room?

Mr. Donohue: Object to the question, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: I asked him as to his activity.

Mr. Donohue: It is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial to this issue.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Any of the agents go help your wife shopping, buying shoes, as was done to Roza Schomaker? A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing of that kind? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, do you know any of the immigration agents who are [7002] spotted here and there throughout the courtroom as spies and informers upon what people may have to say?

Mr. Donohue: Object to the question.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Did you know the gentleman that was planted behind the counsel table here in the first weeks of the trial, a big, tall fellow named Maxwell?

Mr. Donohue: Object to the question, if your Honor please.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, is there any purpose or object in Mr. Kaiser being right in a dead line with the witness sitting up here that you know of? A. I didn't——

Q. Do you look to him for any nods?

A. No; I was just looking to see where he was.

Q. Do you look to him for nods or hints or tips as to what you shall say? A. Of course not.

Q. Well, are you taken in when you are involved in these matters down at the Immigration Department on the stratagems and devices that are to be employed upon the trial?

Mr. Donohue: Object to the question, if your Honor please.

The Court: Overruled.

A. I am not.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Because you know when we want to put him on [7003] a wild goose chase we just whisper things aroind and they act in accordance. A. I am sure you are very clever.

Q. That explains the parachutist dropping down in your lots in Half Moon Bay that night.

Let me ask you this now: You have seen, have you not, dozens of immigration officers from the Department of Immigration running around on searches in this case, haven't you?

A. Well, I think you ought to get your question a little more specific.

Q. Well, there have been people named, McGowan, Kessler, Kidder and some other "K," and just dozens named. Do you know all of those people? Have you been active for all of them working on this case?

A. I believe I have testified here as to my general acquaintance with the people who are working on this case.

Q. Their activity—their co-activity in the case?

A. Well, now, that is a—the people that I have testified to here in my observation have been working toward securing a case for the Government.

Q. You people have not organized any union down there entitled "The American Association of Persons Who Make a Living Trying to Ruin Harry Bridges," have you?

Mr. Donohue: Object to the question.

Mr. Hallinan: He might have. He might [7004] have.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): On this job that you have, is it fixed in hours of the day; I mean, is your activity limited to any particular hours of the day? What is the spread?

A. No particular spread, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Any number of hours a day that you are supposed to work?

A. Not necessarily, no, sir.

Q. No overtime or anything like that?

A. No, sir; no, sir.

Q. You better get the ILWU to throw a picket line around that Immigration Department.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I am sure they would be happy to do it.

Q. I beg pardon?

A. I am certain they would be happy to do it.

Q. To get you some better hours and conditions. To go on with this document that we were reading, Defendants' Exhibit X-3, it continues:

> "The recent loss of the steamer Iowa is but one example"——

We were talking in the preceding paragraph at the time that Mr. Paisley interrupted me, about the violations of the regulations governing safety of life at sea and other statutes which are being openly violated by shipowners.

> "The recent loss of the steamer Iowa is but one example of the shipowners' disregard for anything except profit. This ship proceeded to sea at midnight, without [7005] a pilot, in the teeth of a 90-mile gale at a spot popularly known as the 'graveyard of the Pacific.' Storm warnings had been posted prior to the time the Iowa passed the Columbia River bar. The slight extra expense of employing a pilot for the Iowa would have probably saved 34 lives."

Do you remember that incident?

A. I don't clearly recall it, no, sir. I was thinking that ship was sunk outside the Golden Gate. About the Columbia River, I don't recall [7006] that.

Q. Your recollection does not retain the memory of the 34 poor sailors who perished on the Iowa, is that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I said I did not clearly recollect or even recollect the particular incident. When you read it and started to read it, I thought it was the ship that sailed out of San Francisco here, or was coming in, an American Hawaiian ship, that sunk right down, oh, at Seal Rock. That one I don't recall.

Q. You don't remember that the Iowa was sunk and 34 crewmen lost their lives because they were too cheap, the owners were too cheap, to hire a pilot to take them through the bar?

A. Well, obviously, if I don't remember or recollect the sinking of the Iowa, I don't recollect the incidents connected with it.

> Q. To continue: "The portion of the resolution adopted by the California State Chamber of Commerce states that this Chamber of Commerce cooperate with other industrial and commercial bodies and with the public generally, by whatever means the directors of this chamber shall determine, to bring about a cessation of such restraints and restore the free flow of commerce.
> "As further proof of the charges made by the San Francisco Bay Area District Council of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific Coast that shipowners have aligned themselves with Chambers of Commerce, industrial associations, and other reactionary forces to bring about the destruction [7007] of waterfront unions through coastwise vigilante organizations which will take over the enforcement of the law on the Pacific Coast. Such action will inevitably result in the destruction of all trade unions. It is highly significant that the State Chamber of Commerce adopt this resolution on January 17th—ten days before the contemplated attack on marine unions by shipowners and their cohorts. The resolution of the California State Chamber of Commerce is a direct threat to every worker in the state. It means that organized capital is on the verge of launching a general attack directed against the entire labor movement and the New Deal policies of the Roosevelt administration."

Signed: "San Francisco Bay Area District Council, Maritime Federation of the Pacific Coast, Harry Bridges, President; Mervyn Rathborne, Secretary-Treasurer."

Now, what do you mean by the statement that "industrial associations and other reactionary forces will bring about the destruction of waterfront unions through coastwise vigilante organizations, which will take over the enforcement of the law on the Pacific Coast"?

A. Mr. Hallinan, as I have pointed out to you previously, I don't recollect the details of every one of the possibly hundreds or maybe thousands of documents and statements that I participated in during the twelve years that I was actively serving in the labor movement. And as I further pointed out to you and [7008] this Court and jury, at that particular time when this document refers to, there was a violent and bitter fight, battle, going on between the maritime unions and the employers. And in that fight, in that battle, we made many charges and many counter-charges were made. Now, I am very glad to admit that I participated on the side of labor and that I helped——

Q. That isn't what I asked.

A. I am trying to give you——

Q. I only want to get this definition of one term. A. I don't recall——

Mr. Paisley: I think the witness might continue, Your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, I ask that the answer be stricken as not responsive. I asked him the one thing, what did he mean by "vigilante organizations taking over the enforcement of law on the Pacific Coast.

The Court: I thought he had about completed his last statement. In any event——

The Witness: May I finish?

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): The one thing I wanted to know is what did you mean by that?

A. I will answer the question, if you will permit me to continue.

The Court: You may answer it.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. (Continuing): I don't recall what I meant. I don't even recall making the statement. But I certainly would not deny that I [7009] did make the statement.

Q. What would that mean, that language?

A. Well, that would be—you want me to give my opinion at this time, now?

Q. Yes. A. Of what I meant?

Q. Yes.

A. My opinion at this time, now, is that we probably had some information that a group of employers were trying to get together and break the organizations we were then in the process of establishing, and that they possibly, or they probably—we had information they intended to use vigilante activities. Now, that would be my opinion today.

Q. What does that mean?

A. As to what we meant there, then.

Q. What does "vigilante activity" mean, and why were you fearful of it in suggesting it?

A. Well, we certainly had examples of vigilante activity during the early days on the waterfront where our union halls were wrecked and where individuals were accosted and beaten up by groups of people. Now, that——

Q. What kind of groups of people? Who hired them? Who were they? I don't know, at least, what you mean by "vigilante organizations."

A. Well, I don't specifically remember what kind, or what, who—[7010] I don't believe I ever knew who hired the people. I knew, we made certain allegations, but——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Well, what were some examples that would illustrate the phrase?

A. Well, as I recall it, around '35 there was numbers of union halls that were broken into by groups of men, and that the furniture was busted up and destroyed and people were molested and, generally the attacks were made on union halls. And on the individual persons of union members. And we designated that then, and it certainly was in my judgment, vigilante activity.

Q. What do you mean by "molested"?

A. Well, I mean beaten up or pushed around or threatened.

Q. With what purpose?

A. Well, the purpose appeared to be the purpose of intimidation.

Q. To what end? I don't get it. People don't go around just to intimidate people generally, I take it. What was the purpose of the intimidation by the vigilantes?

A. My recollection of the purpose is that it was to—alleging that the unions were "wrecking the city" or something like that, the waterfront unions were; and it was anti-union activity, in my judgment.

Q. Well, was it to break strikes?

A. Well, my recollection is at the time I was here, when those attacks took place, there was no strike on.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. In other words, people hired by interested persons, probably [7011] shipowners——

A. I don't know whether they were hired or not, or whether they did it on their own motion, or how they did it; because I never had any information along those lines.

Q. But a crowd of men would descend upon a union hall, wreck the furniture, beat up the persons present—officers and so forth, is that right?

A. Yes, they descended on the headquarters of the Communist Party, is my recollection, and also upon a number of union halls.

Q. Communist Party also? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the Communist Party people ever go out and land on the shipowners' offices?

A. Not that I—I never heard of it.

Q. Before they had any Communists, the thugs used to go around and beat up the union men, didn't they?

A. Well, Mr. Hallinan, I testified that my recollection as far as the San Francisco situation was concerned, started when I became active in the labor movement here, in 1935, and that is all I can testify to.

Q. Well, we'll go into it a little further. I have some more statements by you of a similar nature by you that might refresh your recollection.

Now, reading from Defendants' Exhibit W-3, a statement issued by the San Francisco Bay Area District Council of the [7012] Maritime Federation of the Pacific. And they have a pair of hands clasping; was that their trademark (indicating)?

A. Yes, that appeared on the letterhead.

Q. Underneath, "An injury to one is an injury to all"; remember that?

A. That was the slogan.

Q. That was their slogan?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It wasn't true, though, was it?

A. It certainly was.

Q. It isn't true now?

A. Well, I think it certainly is.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I think it certainly is.

Q. Well, an injury to Bridges isn't an injury to all, is it?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): An injury to Robertson isn't an injury to all?

Mr. Donohue: Object to the question.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): An injury to Schmidt isn't an injury to all, is it?

Mr. Donohue: I object to that question.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, I notice in this release, they were calling on the United States Government, too, for some arbitration [7013] and protection. Do you remember that?

A. Could I look at it?

Q. The workers——

A. Could I look at the document?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You read it already and it has been introduced in evidence. I will read some of it.

A. Yes, would you read some of——

> Q. "Unless the United States Government intervenes, there will be launched on the Pacific Coast within a month a struggle which will inevitably achieve the proportions of civil war.
> "This situation will result from the attempt of shippers and waterfront employers to repudiate all existing agreements with the maritime unions, to withdraw recognition from them and to institute open shop conditions, which will be maintained by force and coercion."

Do you remember that statement? Withdraw that.

Do you remember that that was the situation you felt yourselves actually threatened with?

A. Yes, yes, I do.

Q. Well, there wasn't any Communist propaganda in that, was there? You actually believed that the shipowners were going to try to repudiate the agreement they had made as a result of the 1934 strike and reestablish the open shop in San Francisco; isn't that right?

A. It was our opinion at that time that the shipowners were [7014] trying to bust the unions that had been organized in 1934, yes.

Q. Yes. And reestablish the open shop?

A. Well, that would follow, naturally.

Q. And that they were going to try to do it by force and violence, isn't that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I guess that was our belief, yes, sir.

Q. All right. And it was a sincere belief, wasn't it? A. It certainly was.

Q. And you had good reason for believing it, didn't you?

A. Well, if we made the statement, we certainly should have had good reason for believing it.

Q. Continuing:

> "We set forth the matter in the following order: First, the steps the employers proposed to take to obtain their objectives; secondly, the evidence of these intentions; thirdly, the arguments advanced by them as justification of their intentions; and finally, our contentions as to the merits of their arguments.
> "On a date yet to be decided, probably in February, waterfront employers associations of all Pacific Coast seaports will take the following steps: One, full page advertisements will appear in the larger daily newspapers, which will state the intention of the employers and present argument in support of their actions; two, in an effort to maintain an appearance of peaceful resistance, they will [7015] then evict seamen and longshoremen from their jobs by laying up ships, ostensibly because 'exorbitant' union requests make operations financially impossible; three, all awards to and agreements with maritime unions will be publicly repudiated in the advertisements; four, > recognition of all maritime unions will be withdrawn and the shippers will attempt to deal with the men only on an individual basis; five, shippers will attempt dictatorial control of wages and working conditions. Representatives of almost every shipping company of the United States have met secretly and frequently in the offices of the Waterfront Employers Association of San Francisco for the past two months. They met, for instance, on December 9, 1935, and on January 7, 1936."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Do you remember that you had been able to obtain inside information as to what was going on in the employers' councils?

A. That is my recollection, that we had at that time, yes, sir.

Q. Yes. In other words, this wasn't just a guess, this was information you actually had; isn't that right?

A. We received quite a bit of information about what the employers were doing in those days.

Q. "At the December 9th meeting they set out their complete plan in a resolution, the few copies of which have been guarded jealously. The date for the opening of the attack has been postponed time and again, because certain ship [7016] owners with integrity are unable to bring themselves to participate in the affair. The utmost pressure is being brought on these men, however, to force them to join forces with the less ethical majority.

"In preparation for the attack, Elisha Hanson, attorney for the ship operators in Washington, has for weeks been demanding that the Department of Labor and Department of Justice prosecute the Maritime Federation of the Pacific for illegal conspiracy in restraint of trade."

Remember that? A. I believe I do; yes.

Q. In other words, they tried to bring in the Antitrust Department of the Department of Justice to break up the Maritime Federation, isn't that right?

A. My recollection is that this shipowners' lobbyist in Washington was making demands to that effect.

Q. Continuing:

"While Pacific Coast newspapers have at all times remained silent, the Atlantic Coast press has presented evidence of collusion between shipowners. Louis Stark, labor editor of the New York Times, said in a byline story on December 31, 1935: 'Employers on the Pacific Coast virtually have completed a coastwise vigilante organization to protect their interests in the event that they find themselves unable to obtain redress from the government. Pacific Coast owners [7017] are said to be in constant contact with Atlantic operators, and it is probable that a meeting of both groups will be held in San Francisco.'

"That meeting was held on January 7th. A committee of three eastern steamship executives was in San Francisco at the time. The New York Times telephoned Harry Bridges, Federation District President, asking for comment on the coming lockout. One prominent eastern ship operator warned a West Coast maritime union official of what was planned. The shipowners have sought and been promised the aid of industrial associations, chambers of commerce, and other such organizations all over the Coast. Every conceivable agency that can be of use to them will be employed.

"Early in September the industrial association of San Francisco called a meeting at the Chamber of Commerce. Executives of all the larger industries attended, including publishers of San Francisco newspapers and executives of the press associations. The story of that meeting was set in type at two papers and sent out by the Associated Press. When the mistake was discovered, the Associated Press sent out a mandatory order to kill.

"Foreign shipping lines have been offered full compensation for any losses suffered during the lockout, solely as an inducement to cooperate until the unions are broken." [7018]

You remember that those facts were true?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I remember that general situation. The shipowners had planned to lock out the unions, and I believe those were some of the steps.

Q. In other words, this isn't something that either the unions or the Communist Party or anyone else was starting, but the shipowners themselves were starting it?

A. Certainly they were. There was a real battle going on there.

> Q. "In the advertisements these arguments will be presented: One, the unions are 'irresponsible and fail to keep their agreements, thereby disrupting the free flow of American commerce'; two, the unions are run by Communists, reds and radicals, whose objective is the destruction of American shipping; three, ships can be run only at a loss if owners have to pay living wages; four, shipowners would be willing to keep agreements with 'responsible unions.'
> "To these charges, repeated many times, we answer: One, the unions are not irresponsible. For every dispute or ship tieup, there is definite evidence of discrimination, bath faith or violation of agreements by shipowners. Men do not strike for the fun of it. They strike when they are being treated unfairly. Filthy sanitary conditions we can list as one very good cause for recent disputes. Yet seamen who object to such things are termed 'irresponsible.' Companies keeping the agreements > do not have strikes or [7019] tieups. Witness the case of the Grace Line, whose ships run regularly, simply because its executives play fair; two, that the unions are run by their members, not by Communists, reds, or radicals. It is a peculiarity of Pacific Coast maritime unions that officials must submit every action of the slightest importance to a majority vote of the membership. And that is precisely what the owners object to. They do not like democracy. They profess admiration for the Atlantic Coast maritime unions, where the members have absolutely nothing to say as to the functions of their own organizations."

And that phrase is underlined, "where the members have absolutely nothing to say as to the functions of their own organizations."

That includes your friend Curran's union, doesn't it?

A. I wouldn't say it did, because Curran's union wasn't even organized at that particular time.

Q. What happened here a week or two ago when Curran's goons went in with pickax handles and broke up the rank and file revolt against him? Do you remember that?

Mr. Donohue: I object to that question, if Your Honor pleases. That is something with which this witness has no concern.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Well, do you have any part in advising [7020] Mr. Curran as to going in there with pickax handles and kicking out the rank and file rebelling people?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if Your Honor pleases, and suggest that Mr. Hallinan's examination is trifling with the time of the Court and the time of the jury.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, you are still getting in a hurry.

The Court: Objection is sustained.

Mr. Hallinan: I told him if he waited spring time would be here—very pleasant and nice. We will be around here a long time yet. So don't be in a hurry.

Q. All right. At that time did the Atlantic Coast maritime unions—did the Atlantic Coast have maritime unions whose members had absolutely nothing to say as to the functions of their own organizations?

A. It is my opinion they did, yes, sir.

Q. That was a true statement, wasn't it?

A. Oh, I believe it was, yes, sir.

> Q. "Obviously this is the core of the whole matter. It is democracy the shipowners dislike. It is autocracy they desire."

Was that true?

A. In very large part, I think it was.

Q. In an undemocratic union, all they would have to do is buy up one or two leaders, isn't that right?

A. Well, in an undemocratic union, the membership is not given [7021] opportunity of voting on certain things that affect people very directly.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And I say, all that the owners would have to do is buy up one or two leaders?

A. Well, that might be one of the methods, yes.

Q. Beg your pardon?

A. I say, that could be one of the methods.

Q. That has often happened, hasn't it?

A. I believe it has, yes.

> Q. "Because they do not like democracy, they call it Communism, in an effort to obscure the real issue."

You find that to be true?

A. Well, that was true in part, yes. It wasn't completely true. [7022]

> Q. "3. Owners do not run ships at a loss if they pay decent wages. Under mail contract subsidies alone the shipowners received approximately $28,850,000 in 1935."

Is that true? A. I believe it was.

> Q. "This is more than the combined annual wages, subsistence, maintenance and repair cost of the operation of all American flag vessels on ocean mail routes, these costs amounting to $28,460,000 a year according to the operators' own estimates."

Was that true?

A. I know they were receiving tremendous subsidies, and these subsidies were finding their way in their own pockets instead of paying decent wages or providing decent conditions for maritime employees.

Q. Who were doing that?

A. The shipowners were.

Q. In other words, aside from any monies they were receiving from the operation of their ships carrying cargoes and passengers, the shipowners were receiving from the United States Government in 1935 $28,850,000, and the total cost of all wages, subsistence, maintenance and repairs on the operation of all the American flag vessels on ocean mail routes amounted to $28,460,000 a year, according to the operators' own estimates, is that [7023] right?

A. Well, on that point, Mr. Hallinan, a committee of the United States Senate made an investigation. It was known as the Black Committee, headed by a gentleman who is now a Justice of the Supreme Court, Hugo Black, and they made a very detailed inquiry into the amounts of subsidies paid the various shipowners, the way these subsidies were spent, and the Committee concluded that the shipowners were not employing these subsidies properly but were almost practically bleeding the Government blind on these things, and as a result of that recommendation and investigation of the committee I believe the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 was passed. I am not certain.

Q. Of course, they never indicted all these shipowners for fraud on the Government, did they?

A. I don't believe they did.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You know very well they didn't?

A. The matter was brought before Congress and was corrected by it as Congress saw fit.

Q. To continue:

> "With all the above expenses met with mail contract pay, the operators have left only the expenses of fuel, incidentals and overhead to meet out of cargo and passenger revenues. Their losses would be slight if they never carried a single ounce of freight or a single passenger. Their profits, which they carefully conceal, must be tremendous." [7024]

Was that your honest opinion?

A. I believe it was. I think we got that information from Black's report, if my memory serves me correctly. I may not be completely right on that.

> Q. "4. When shipowners say they would be 'willing to keep agreements with responsible unions,' they mean they like to deal only with unions controlled by themselves. They cannot control democratic unions, they admit; it is a logical deduction that they are able to control autocratic unions.
> "In closing, we quote from the preliminary report of the special committee of the Senate of the United States to investigate air mail and ocean mail contracts (Report No. 898 Senate, 74th Congress, 1st Session):

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

> "'The subsidy does not always reach its intended beneficiary.
> "'While the clamor has always been made that our marine subsidy would provide funds for the payment to American seamen of wages set at a proper level, and substantially in excess of foreign wages, in many instances, the proper wage scale has been cut and money transmitted to mail contractors in constructive trust for American seamen has been diverted by the contractors to their own private profits for exorbitant salaries and unearned bonuses. This practice and result is wholly indefensible.'"

That was the finding of the Black congressional committee, [7025] wasn't it?

A. That is my recollection. I believe that is the incident I testified to a couple of minutes ago.

Mr. Hallinan: "This statement authorized by San Francisco Bay Area District Council No. 2 on January 14, 1936.

> "Issued by Harry Bridges, President, Mervyn Rathborne, Secretary."

Now, would it be possible that we get the checks that are to be brought in by this afternoon, for the opening of the session of this afternoon?

Mr. Donohue: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Hallinan: Could we get the checks which the Court ordered brought in this afternoon?

Mr. Donohue: I will have to say to your Honor that I don't know. I don't know enough about the mechanics of government to know where the checks are that were paid Mr. Rathborne. I will have to make inquiry.

Mr. Hallinan: If there aren't checks, if we could have a copy of the account, whatever shows it most accurately.

Q. When you issued the statement from Mr. Donohue's room at the St. Francis Hotel which you phoned down to Mr. Wilson down in Los Angeles, had that statement been reduced to writing?

A. Yes. You have—all the time, Mr. Hallinan, here you are referring to one statement and I am referring to another. I think that situation ought to be corrected, because I think [7026] we are getting at cross purposes on that one.

Q. You didn't think we were playing on the same team all along, did you?

A. I don't believe I have any illusions on that point.

Q. Well, you made out a statement, some statement originally, is that right?

A. I prepared a written statement at the time that I testified before the grand jury.

Q. A written statement for the newspapers?

A. That's right. That is the statement that I phoned to George Wilson from Mr. Donohue's room. It isn't the statement that you read to me here yesterday.

Q. It is the same statement that appeared in the San Francisco papers, isn't that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, again, there were probably several results reported of inquiries to me that appeared here in the San Francisco newspapers, and what I am trying to do is to find out which statement we are talking about.

Q. Fine!

A. Because it could have been any one of six or eight statements that you may have seen in the newspapers. That is the only statement that I reduced to writing, this one that I am referring to now that I phoned to Mr. Wilson.

Q. So that when you made a statement—when you testified before the grand jury you wrote out a statement, did you? [7027]

A. That's right.

Q. Have you the original statement?

A. No, sir, I do not; not to my recollection. I believe I typed out three or four copies and I gave it to newspapermen.

Q. You gave it to newspapermen and then you read that statement over the phone to Mr. Wilson?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, before you gave the report or the statement to the newspapermen did you discuss it with Mr. Donohue?

A. I believe I told him that I was going to issue a statement and I showed him a copy of the statement that I either had or was about to issue.

Q. Oh, well, now—— A. I don't recall.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You wouldn't have issued it without first having him read it, would you?

A. I don't see why not.

The Court: We will take the noon recess and resume at two o'clock.

Ladies and gentlemen, I might say to you that the Court has a criminal case on at three o'clock, a matter that has been pending for some time, and accordingly have in mind that we will adjourn court this afternoon at three o'clock. We will resume, however, at two o'clock this afternoon. The same admonition to you.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:00 p.m. this date.) [7028]

Monday, March 6, 1950—2:00 P.M.

MERVYN RATHBORNE

resumed.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Now, you notice the double-page ad in the Washington, D. C., newspaper, Mr. Rathborne, on the Hawaiian strike?

A. Well, I haven't noticed what the subject is yet, Mr. Hallinan. Do you want me to read it?

Q. Just take a glance at it. I don't suppose you have to read it all. You see the center block there, the last paragraph about the Communist strike; while they can't prove it is a Communist strike, they know it is, et cetera, et cetera.

A: Yes, I have read that, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Did you see advertisements similiar to that at the time of the Hawaiian strike disseminated over the country?

A. I don't recall having seen any.

Q. What date is that screed there?

A. It is the Evening Star, Washington, D. C., Thursday, June 23, 1949.

Q. Thursday, June 23; that is four days before the Clark release that I told you about, is it?

Mr. Donohue: Is that evidence, if your Honor please?

Mr. Hallinan: I would like to just show it to the jury, not to introduce that in evidence, but as an example of the [7029] extent to which advertisements were being disseminated to establish that contention that this Hawaiian strike was some sort of a Communist strike that was being engineered in the interest not of the working men. As I say, I don't want to introduce it; I would like to show it to the jury.

Mr. Donohue: That is an inconsistency I don't understand, but I object to it——

Mr. Hallinan: Well, I will introduce it.

Mr. Donohue: ——as irrelevant and immaterial and not pertinent to this issue, certainly not binding on the witness.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Did you know that in addition to the charge of Communist influence that the dear Hawaiian newspapers were stating that this strike——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: I object to reading from any newspaper, if your Honor please, which isn't in evidence.

Mr. Hallinan: I won't read it from the newspaper; I will stand back here—that the Hawaiian strike was being fostered solely for the purpose of establishing Harry Bridges as the dictator of Hawaii?

A. Unfortunately, at that period I wasn't reading the Hawaiian newspapers, so I don't know anything about it.

Q. You don't know one way or the other?

A. I didn't read the Hawaiian newspapers.

Q. Did you ever read any of those cards saying, "Harry is going [7030] to need dough, Joe"—Joe being the Hawaiian field worker, and the good newspapers were only interested in the welfare of that field worker and were telling what a menace Harry Bridges was?

Mr. Donohue: Just a moment. I object to this line of inquiry as being immaterial and irrelevant, and not pertinent to any inquiry here.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Mr. Hallinan: Did you see in an issue of Life the pictures of the wife of—Mrs. Richard Cook, the wife of one of the executives of the Big Five, out with a housemaid's apron on and a broom counter-picketing the Hawaiian strikers? Did you see that?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor please, as being——

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): In one of the exhibits that you were shown here, a series of letters that you wrote to the California State Assemblymen, you stated in that letter, in which you say that "CIO President Philip Murray has characterized the Bridges case as a burden upon the conscience of the American people." You say, "Similar comments by other prominent people are contained in the enclosed pamphlets." Do you remember that?

A. As I stated, I recall the letters, generally, Mr. Hallinan—the sending of such letters to members of the State Assembly. [7031]

Mr. Hallinan: There is an exhibit that is an exact copy of this, but there is no use of digging it out.

Q. Now, you see that line (showing document to witness)? A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. These three pamphlets were enclosed with that letter, were they not?

A. I would say this in reply to that: They could have been; I don't recall.

Q. Come a little closer now. As a matter of fact, you have read—look at the other two also, if you will.

A. As I say, the only comment I could make on it, Mr. Hallinan, they could well have have been; I don't specifically recall they were, but I certainly wouldn't deny them.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You are familiar with those three pamphlets, at any rate, are you not?

A. I recall having seen those pamphlets or ones similar to them.

Q. And you did hand these to the Assemblymen, did you not?

A. I helped in distributing them.

Q. You helped distribute them? A. Yes.

Q. You adopted and embraced the language of them, didn't you?

A. Oh, yes; I was vigorously fighting in behalf of—against the deportation of Mr. Bridges at that time.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer the three pamphlets, if the Court please, as the defendants' exhibits next in order. [7032]

Mr. Donohue: Are you offering them for identification?

Mr. Hallinan: No, I am offering them in evidence.

Mr. Donohue: I object to them, if your Honor please, No. 1, they are purely hearsay; No. 2, they are self-serving declarations; No. 3, this witness has stated many times in the past week that during the time he was a member of the Communist Party and during the time that Mr. Bridges' deportation proceeding was pending, that he gave every possible aid and service. He hasn't denied that. And for that reason, if your Honor please, these matters are wholly self-serving; they are not admissible in evidence.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, he said he adopted and embraced the language in the three documents.

Mr. Donohue: If they sought to impeach or contradict anything this witness has said.

Mr. Hallinan: They do serve—that is the purpose of them—to impeach the testimony of this witness, certainly.

The Court: The objection is sustained, and they may be marked for identification.

The Clerk: The documents are marked as a group——

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, may I have that last answer of the witness to my question on these documents read again?

The Court: He said he adopted in part at least——

Mr. Hallinan: No, not in part. May I have it read, and then may I be heard further on it? [7033]

The Court: Let us assume that he said that he adopted each and every part of the memorandum.

Mr. Hallinan: And distributed them, sent them out to people. Suppose he wrote a letter and signed his name to it, wouldn't that be admissible in evidence? Suppose he puts out a press release and doesn't sign his name, isn't that admissible in evidence?

The Court: Were you the author of these letters?

The Witness: No, sir, I was not.

Mr. Hallinan: Suppose he takes a document that some other person wrote and he says he embraced it and hands it out to others, isn't that admissible as an impeachment?

The Court: I heretofore ruled, I think, during the testimony of Mr. Schrimpf along the same line. We had a similar situation wherein you sought to introduce the subject matter of circulars or letters that Mr. Schrimpf testified that he had no quarrel with, but he wasn't the author. I think it had to do with certain waterfront circulars. I sustain the objection upon the same theory that I sustained the objection therein.

The Clerk: The exhibits are marked Exhibits C-4, D-4 and E-4 for identification.

(The pamphlets referred to were marked Defendants' Exhibits C-4, D-4 and E-4 for identification.) [7034]

Mr. Hallinan: Well, did you believe at the time you wrote this letter, on March 20, 1945, that Harry Bridges was a symbol of incorruptible labor action and that his deportation would be the signal for an attack on all progressive labor in the country?

A. That is the position that I took at that time, yes, sir.

Q. All right. Was it your opinion that the only thing behind the persecution of Harry Bridges was the desire to get Bridges because he was an honest labor leader?

A. That was the position I was taking at that time, yes, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Well, did you believe that to be so? Not the position, but was that your actual belief?

A. Well, I know a little more about it than I say there.

Q. You knew he wasn't an honest labor leader, is that right? A. No, I didn't say that.

Q. Well, is there any——

A. I wasn't telling all I believed at that particular time.

Q. Well, is there anything, any place along the line that anything that you said to the unions of which you were a member of the CIO of which you were a member, or anything you wrote or published or uttered, publicly or privately, anything that you testified to under oath before any court or any Congressional committee or any place else, that a person could rely upon as being the truth?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if Your Honor [7035] pleases.

Mr. Hallinan: We are entitled to get a statement——

The Court: Well it encompasses a great deal of territory and a great number of hearings, I suppose, but I will allow it.

A. Well, Mr. Hallinan, at that particular time that you are talking about in those particular documents, I, as I have testified here before, was active in the trade union movement, I was also a member of the Communist Party. I was associated with and working with Mr. Bridges at that time. I was following both the line, if you want to call it that, of the Communist Party and the policy of the trade unions, and it so happened out here in California, the California CIO, those two happened to coincide rather exactly. However, at that time the national CIO was also on record in support and on behalf of Mr. Bridges, and because I may have changed my opinion and my attitude today—at that particular time I was following out just what I have told you.

Q. But you have changed your attitude and opinion today; but was your attitude and opinion at the time you expressed it in any sense true? Did it reflect anything that you actually felt?

A. Well, it certainly did. It might not have reflected everything I felt, but it reflected certainly a substantial part of it.

Q. Well, you cited here a little while ago Philip Murray's statement about Harry Bridges. Do you remember discussing that? [7036]

A. I believe I testified yesterday that I heard him make a speech supporting the case against Mr. Bridges' deportation.

Q. And did you support the sentiment contained in his speech? A. Oh, I did.

Q. Did you believe it to be true?

A. I believed it on the basis of the information Mr. Murray had, yes, that he was expressing what was in his mind.

Q. And did you concur in what Mr. Murray had to say in that respect?

A. Oh, very definitely.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And embraced it as your own?

A. Well, I concurred in it, I supported it.

Q. Approved of it?

A. Yes, I applauded when he made the speech, if I recall correctly.

Q. Now, might I ask you if this is partly what Mr. Murray said, if this——

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor please, to Mr. Hallinan reading from a document which Your Honor has said is not admissible in evidence.

Mr. Hallinan: When a person makes a——

The Court: He may read it in part.

Mr. Hallinan: Just the part that applies to this. Just that part of it, not the rest of it.

The Court: All right. [7037]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, skipping by a portion of it, introductory, this is Mr. Murray's speech, or is this Mr. Murray's speech:

> "In the course of the last convention I took occasion to talk to the delegates about this matter, and I had this to say, that as president of this organization, I would not attempt to defend any man or woman in the United States who sought to undermine our country or our form of government; but that I had taken a great deal of time to investigate Mr. Bridges' record and that so far as I was able to glean from such information that I can get, Bridges' conduct as a member of a CIO union comported itself to all the requirements of a good > member of a labor organization in the United States, and that there was nothing subversive in any of his activities."

You remember that part of his speech?

Mr. Donohue: I would like to ask Mr. Hallinan to state the date on which Mr. Phil Murray made that speech.

Mr. Hallinan: November 4th, 1943, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

A. I don't recall that one. I wasn't present on that occasion, I don't believe.

Q. Beg your pardon?

A. I wasn't—I don't recall that I was present.

Q. You read it afterwards. You said you heard it and applauded [7038] it, didn't you?

A. I didn't know you were referring to that particular speech. I heard Mr. Murray make a number of speeches about Mr. Bridges.

Q. Well, let me ask you if you heard him say this, this part.

A. Well, Mr. Hallinan, obviously I couldn't have heard him if I wasn't there.

Q. He said it more than once.

The Court: Will you show it to the witness, Mr. Hallinan, please?

Mr. Hallinan: Well, just the part marked with the pencil, I want. (Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

The Witness: Yes, I have read this part you marked there,

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

(Document returned to counsel by the Clerk.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): I will ask you if you also embraced and accepted this part.

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor pleases. What difference does it make whether he embraced it or didn't embrace it? You might ask him if he embraced the more recent speech of Mr. Murray of Mr. Bridges.

Mr. Hallinan: I am going to come to that.

Mr. Donohue: The one in 1949.

Mr. Hallinan: I am going to ask him that, and whether the speech was made after Mr. Bridges wanted to know why he was paying $15,000 for a penthouse rental.

Mr. Donohue: That is Mr. Bridges' [7039] explanation.

Mr. Hallinan: I am coming to that. You will get a bellyful of Mr. Murray by the time you are through.

Q. Now, to continue:

"Now, my decision was not based on what Mr. Bridges has been doing since the war started, but also upon what Mr. Bridges had been doing before the war got under way. The record will show that Mr. Bridges was largely responsible for the building of a mighty labor organization of longshoremen on the West Coast, a militant organization, a progressive organization; that he wrung substantial con> cessions out of the interests controlling the shipping industry, of a beneficial nature to the longshoremen; that he improved their conditions of employment; that he increased their wages; that he shortened their hours of labor and that he instituted many other improvements of a beneficial character to the longshoremen.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

> "The fight was a tremendous uphill fight against mighty corporations on the West Coast. Finally he developed an organization out there that won for itself the respect and admiration of most of the citizens on the West Coast."

Now, I asked you this morning about your opinion of Mr. Bridges' contribution to the struggle of the longshoremen on the West Coast. You didn't give him as much as Mr. Murray gave, did you?

A. No, but I believe I expressed the same general sentiments.

Q. In other words, your general sentiments would coincide with [7040] what I just read, is that right?

A. At that particular time, yes, sir.

Q. All right.

> "Later the war came along and with the coming of the war he conceived ideas designed to expedite the shipment of goods to our armed forces overseas. He advocated the CIO industrial council plan. He not only advocated the plan, but he was largely responsible for its institution in the shipping industry out on the West Coast.

"He won for himself the respect and the admiration of the employers out there. He was commended at employers' meetings and at the meetings of certain business groups on the West Coast for the great work that he was doing. The Kilgore Committee recently completed a report, which it submitted to the United States Senate, the substance of which contains many of the suggestions made by Mr. Bridges to the shipping industry in the United States. He has appeared repeatedly before the Maritime Commission and other government agencies in the city of Washington advocating the institution of agencies designed to help our nation successfully prosecute this war."

Did that coincide with your sentiments?

A. I believe I so testified here two or three days ago, that it was my opinion, along the lines that Mr. Bridges' record, as far as helping win the war, was a very excellent record. I still [7041] think so.

Q. Was it——

A. It happens to be that it coincided also with the line of the Communist Party along that time.

Q. Yes, I get that. If we just leave the little additions out, it would sound more like a witness and less like a lawyer, an employee of the agency.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

But you can do it if it makes you feel better.

Now, let me ask you, finally, if you agree with this paragraph:

> "Now, it can not be charged under those circumstances that Mr. Bridges' conduct was subversive before the war or that it has been subversive since the war started. As a matter of fact, the reverse has been true. His conduct as an officer and a member of the CIO union has been good, exceptionally so. Now, is it to be that because one man, whose name is Lundeberg, and who is an officer of a rival union out on the West Coast, wants Harry Bridges to be deported and his organization thereby destroyed, that the government of the United States should accept that individual's testimony and have Bridges deported and the longshoremen's union perhaps destroyed?"

What is your sentiment on that?

A. I agree with that sentiment.

Q. Well, suppose we substitute for Lundeberg—Murray, Carey, [7042] Curran and Ray. Think that would change it?

A. That particular document you are reading from, as is shown on it, and the sentiments expressed there, apparently was issued around 1943. There was considerable difference——

Q. Things are different now?

A. ——in my judgment.

Q. We are not sleeping in the same bed any more.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Between 1943 and 1950. You may not agree, but I believe that is true.

Q. Well, as of this time, the time it was being said, however, you agreed with the sentiment, is that right?

A. I agreed with the general sentiment. I have said that I believe, at least half a dozen times, that I was actively working in behalf of Mr. Bridges and against his deportation at that time, and expressed similar sentiments.

Q. All right, then a paragraph:

> "The whole case against Bridges is built on hatred and prejudice."

Do you believe in that?

A. No, because I have a little more information than Mr. Murray had there.

Q. But regardless of what information you had, you still knew that the whole case against him was built on hatred and prejudice, didn't you?

A. No, sir. [7043]

Q. You didn't have any conception that the government cared whether Mr. Bridges was a member of the Communist Party or not; you knew that what the Immigration Department was concerned about was smashing the labor unions, isn't that right, in 1942, now? I am not talking about now.

The Court: Will you permit the witness to answer the question? You had three questions in one.

Mr. Hallinan: All right. I will withdraw the question and ask it this way:

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. In the year 1942, now—passing up what has happened since—you knew that the reason that they were trying to deport Harry Bridges actually had nothing to do with whether he was a member of the Communist Party or not, isn't that right?

A. I didn't fully know what the government's motives were in that particular proceeding, or the one before it. I wasn't——

Q. Well, you knew this——

A. I wasn't advised by the government what their motives were.

Q. But you had arrived at the conclusion, and I mean a conclusion in your own mind, that whoever was behind the persecution of Bridges, whether it was the Immigration Department or the shipowners or whoever it might be, or rival unionists, that they wanted Bridges out, so as to break the ILWU, and that the issue of communism was only the excuse that they used. Isn't that correct?

A. My position at that time was that it would have been harmful [7044] to the labor movement here on the West Coast if Mr. Bridges would have been deported, yes, sir.

Q. Think it would have been harmful to the country generally? A. I don't—'42?

Q. Yes.

A. It could have had an adverse effect on the waterfront, yes.

Q. Could have had? Would have had; isn't that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I said it could have had. That is my judgment.

Q. Didn't you say yourself in a convention after the war that the three persons in the United States who had most contributed, who had contributed the most effort to winning the war were Franklin Roosevelt, Philip Murray and Harry Bridges?

A. I made a statement to that effect, yes, sir.

Q. And you made a statement to that effect to people who were working with you and Bridges, and who would know whether you were telling the truth or not, isn't that right?

A. I made it at a convention. It was a public speech, yes, sir.

Q. Now, to continue:

"The whole case——"

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor pleases, I again rise to say to Your Honor that Mr. Hallinan persists in reading from a document which Your Honor some time ago said would not be admitted in evidence.

Mr. Hallinan: We didn't admit it. The Court said I could examine him from the document and that is all I am doing. The [7045] document has not been admitted in evidence.

Mr. Donohue: And may I say further to Your Honor, that anything Mr. Phil Murray may have said in 1942 or '43 or any date, up till this moment, has no probative value before this Court and jury on the question as to whether or not Mr. Bridges was a member of the Communist Party when he falsely swore that he was not.

The Court: Mr. Donohue, I think that Mr. Hallinan is entitled to examine the witness as to his views then as compared to his views now, and to make comparative analyses, testing the credibility and the like. But I am inclined to agree that reading from Mr. Murray's statement may not be the proper manner, because whatever this man said and whatever he did, and whatever conduct he engaged in, would be evidence against him with respect to his present state of mind, or at least clarify his present state of mind. But he may well adopt, reject or modify the views of Mr. Murray, or embrace them. He may embrace the views of many other people. I can't see that it has——

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): All right. Did you attend the 1942 convention in Boston?

A. It is my recollection that I did. Now let me see. 1942 in Boston?

Q. Well, you did.

A. It is my recollection I did, Mr. Hallinan. If I could——

Q. I will show it to you. [7046]

A. If I could see the record of the convention, I could tell you right away.

Q. Now, do you remember Mr. Murray making a statement there that he had personally investigated Harry Bridges and the charges, had discussed the matter with the Attorney General and found there was not a shred of evidence to support the charge that Harry Bridges was a Communist?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor pleases.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Hallinan (To the Clerk): Will you show him this document, please? (Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

Q. Do you recognize that?

A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. That is the speech that you delivered at the labor-management conference, is it?

A. It is my recollection, yes, sir.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I have it, please? (Document returned to counsel by the Clerk.) [7047]

Q. Now, yesterday when you were testifying here, do you remember that you testified as follows:

> "A. I think Mr. Bridges' record during the war as helping win the war and maintaining production was an enviable and excellent one. I have said so publicly many times, and I still think so."

That is what you testified, do you remember?

A. That's right, I remember.

Q. You repeat that today?

A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. And that is a fact, isn't it?

A. That is so.

Q. That during the war his record in helping win the war and maintaining production was an enviable and excellent one; correct?

A. That's right; I still believe that.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You also testified yesterday, on page 6877:

> "Q. And it was the fact that Mr. Bridges and his warehousemen's union, or his union, led the way for the continuation of those harmonious relationships into the period after the war, to the end that the entire nation may achieve a permanent and prosperous peace. That was true, wasn't it?
> "A. (By you): That was the opinion and sentiment expressed at that time, and I believed that at that time, yes."

You so testified? [7048]

A. That is my recollection, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Fine. Now, your testimony as of now is that Mr. Bridges' efforts during the war were excellent and for the benefit of the country, isn't that right?

A. That's right.

Q. That he did all that he could do, and it was a great deal, to help win the war?

A. Yes, from Pearl Harbor to the end of the war, yes.

Q. That is, getting munitions out, getting the ships out, and seeing that there were harmonious relations, getting the men to stay at the job, is that correct?

A. Correct. I made several speeches on the subject, and I think I—there is one of them on the table, and I can tell you where you can get some more, if you want them.

Q. All right. Well, I think we will have enough of these, and I don't want the jury to feel discouraged by the statement I made this morning that we would stay here a long time, because we won't. We will let you off fairly shortly.

Now, you testified also yesterday that when you appeared before Mr. Tom Clark and had a conversation with him in the presence of Boyd and Barber, as follows, page 6577:

> "Q. And at that time who brought up the subject of Harry Bridges?
> "A. (By you): The Attorney General.
> "Q. Clark himself? [7049] A. Yes.
> "Q. Said they were trying to get something on Harry Bridges, is that right?
> "A. No, he said that they were making an investigation and it was their opinion that on the basis of as far as the investigation had proceeded, it was the Government's opinion that Mr. Bridges was a Communist and that something should be done to remove his influence, because they figured it was dangerous to the country."

Do you remember that?

A. I recollect the testimony.

Q. Now, going back from this conversation with Mr. Clark to the time that you were making these speeches about Mr. Bridges' ability, which you now confirm, and his efficacy, at that time, if Mr. Bridges had been removed it would have been a positive detriment to the country, wouldn't it?

A. It would have hurt the war effort.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Might have cost the lives of a great many soldiers who fought in the Pacific, mightn't it?

A. That could have been the result.

Q. That is, from the slow-up of production?

A. Yes, if it would have had the effect of causing a slow-up in getting the ships loaded, it would have.

Q. Going on with this conversation with Mr. Clark:

> "Q. All right. And he told you also that they wanted to [7050] get Mr. Bridges out of the labor movement, is that right?
> "A. Well, he didn't—I don't recall he put it that way. He said they wanted to remove the influence of Mr. Bridges and other Communists.
> "Q. From the labor movement?
> "A. From the labor ranks, yes.
> "Q. All right. So Mr. Clark told you, then, that their information convinced them that Mr. Bridges was a Communist, he was detrimental or dangerous to the security of the country, that he wanted to get him out of the labor movement, is that right? Is that the substance, is that substantially correct, or they wanted to remove his influence from the labor movement, is that right?
> "A. That is substantially correct."

You so testified, is that right?

A. That is my recollection, yes.

Q. So Mr. Clark then told you that the reason that they were making this investigation of Mr. Bridges was that they wanted to get rid of Mr.

Bridges because they considered him a detriment to the country, is that right?

A. I believe my testimony on that point was that they wanted to remove his influence from the labor movement.

Q. Because he was a detriment to the country?

A. That is my recollection of it, yes, sir.

Q. Now, you said this to him, didn't you—by the way, have [7051] you ever heard your voice over a dictograph? Excuse me; we used that. You said this to him, didn't you—you said, "Now, Mr. Clark, if you do that, nobody will believe you, because back in 1941, when Mr. Bridges was an absolute necessity to the country, when he was by no means a detriment, when he was helping the war effort and of great benefit to the country, you wanted to get rid of him, too"? Did you say that to Mr. Clark?

A. Why don't you play the dictaphone record?

Q. Did you say that to Mr. Clark?

A. Play it back and see what I said to Mr. Clark. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Didn't you say to Mr. Clark, "Well, Mr. Clark, if you try to pretend now that you are trying to remove or that the forces trying to get rid of Mr. Bridges are trying to get rid of him because he is now a detriment to the country, then everybody is going to say, 'Why, seven or eight years ago when he was not a detriment to the country but a great aid to the country, they were trying to get rid of him, too,' so nobody will believe that fable"? Did you say that to Mr. Clark? A. I did not.

Q. Well, why didn't you?

Mr. Donohue: I object to that, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: Withdraw the question.

Q. Why didn't you say to Mr. Clark, or did you say to Mr. [7052] Clark this: Did you say to Mr. Clark, "We will have to find some other excuse. Let us say he has fleas or something like that."

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, shouldn't Mr. Hallinan wait until the proper time to make his argument to the jury? This is nonsensical. Mr. Hallinan knows that no such questions were either stated by Mr. Rathborne or by the Attorney General of the United States, and he is making a joke of it.

Mr. Hallinan: No, I have reason to believe they either were or should have been.

Q. Did you say any of those things to Mr. Clark?

A. You mean just what you got through saying?

Q. Yes. A. No.

Q. Nobody thought of that, did they, at this conference that you were having?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Nobody mentioned this inconsistency in taking the position that they would now put him out of the country because he was a detriment against—that they wanted to put him out of the country when he was not a detriment?

A. Nobody mentioned it, and I don't believe there is any inconsistency in it. If your Honor pleases, I would like to explain now why I think there is no inconsistency in the position then and the position in '43 or 1944, whenever it was. [7053]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

The Court: You may.

A. In the particular reference to the time Mr. Murray made that speech, this country was at war. At that particular time we were allies with a number of nations. I think the prime concern of everyone was the winning of the war. It so happened that the policy of the United States Government, the policy of the Allies, the policy of the CIO, the policy of the Communist Party and the policy of the trade unions was to do the most effective job to win that war. And, as I have testified, I think Mr. Bridges did a very effective job in that connection. Following the war the Communist Party changed its line and the line of the Communist Party then became the matter of trying to prevent throughout the world a situation developing where there would be what they termed capitalist encirclement of the Soviet Union; to prevent the crystallization in this country of a foreign policy which would be hostile to the Soviet Union. And in connection with that they put down or they recommended a program. That program, as it was explained to me by Mr. Schneidermann, was to create within every area in the world that it was possible, a situation where it would be impossible for the governments in the chaos and the disruptions attending the end of the war to have an anti-Soviet policy; to create strikes, to create political unrest, to bring about situations that would maintain chaotic conditions for the dual purpose of preventing so-called capitalist governments or [7054] governments unfriendly to the Soviet Union from securing a firm and holding and maintaining a firm position against the Soviet Union, and for the second purpose of creating situations of insurrection and revolution whereby the Communist elements in those countries could take over power or could make decisions on the part of the government.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): You have missed the point.

A. I am trying to explain, your Honor.

Q. Here is what I am trying to get——

A. There was a big point why I changed my position.

Q. I am not talking about your position. I am talking about the Government's position. Now, you have just told us that back——.

A. May I complete my answer?

Q. No, I will give you a chance to explain this other answer. This is what I want.

The Court: He is explaining the last one.

Mr. Hallinan: He has explained it.

The Court: If he wishes to continue, I will permit him. He is entitled to make his explanation.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Have you some further explanation on that?

A. My explanation is that with regard to the changing of my position in this matter was because those policies were advocated, and those policies were policies with which I did [7055] not agree and quite a few other people do not agree, and it was my judgment continuing following those policies within the labor movement and within this country is detrimental to the interests and welfare of this country.

Q. You have missed the point entirely. If you will listen, I will explain what I mean. Back in 1941, if it had not been for the Supreme Court decision Harry Bridges would have been deported, isn't that correct?

A. I believe that is correct.

Q. In other words, they had a hearing out here in which a man named Sears made a ruling against Harry Bridges, eh?

A. Yes, I recall the process; and finally the Attorney General——

Q. Then the appeal board—the Attorney General overruled the board and reversed Sears and said he should not be deported; that they had no proof that he was a Communist, is that correct?

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Hallinan is testifying, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: I am entitled to lead. These are leading questions on cross-examination.

A. Mr. Hallinan, I recall the general process from the Sears hearing up until the Supreme Court decision.

Q. That is what I am asking you.

A. At which time the Supreme Court did not affirm Mr. Biddle's decision but in effect Mr. Bridges became a citizen; I recall that. [7056]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. The Supreme Court decision didn't come down until 1945; do you remember that?

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir.

Q. So all the time there from 1941 until the Supreme Court decision in 1945 it was obviously the intention of Biddle to have Harry Bridges deported from the country; that is right?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if your Honor please, as to the intention of the Attorney General.

The Court: The objection is sustained.

Mr. Hallinan: As far as you knew.

A. Well, the intention of the Attorney General was made clear in his statement, I believe in 1942 or '43 when he said Bridges ought to be deported.

Mr. Hallinan: That is what I wanted.

The Witness: That is my landmark or flag as to the intention of the Attorney General.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): That is right. And it was the intention of the Attorney General to have him deported even though at that time his deportation would have been a bad blow to the shipping of American arms and munitions, and so forth, and might even, if it resulted in some slow-down or taking away of his efficacy and his efficiency in loading ships, might have resulted in the death of a great many American soldiers? You said that already, didn't you?

Mr. Donohue: I object to that. We would have won the war [7057] even without the aid of Mr. Bridges.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: You certainly would have when you charged up San Juan Hill, as was brought out in this proceeding before. That doesn't affect this. This goes to the truth of the statement that a certain cause, a certain reason, was assigned to this gentleman by the Attorney General.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please——

Mr. Hallinan: It is inconsistent with reality. I want to point that out and find out if it happened.

Mr. Donohue: It is also inconsistent with reality that we would have lost the war if Bridges had been deported.

Mr. Hallinan: No, nobody has said we would have lost the war if Bridges had been deported, but this gentleman said——

The Court: This witness has said that Mr. Bridges, according to his testimony, served well and was effective in his labor work, and so forth. What the Attorney General may have had in mind or what this man may say he had, is entirely——

Mr. Hallinan: I am trying to get his conversation with the Attorney General at that time. I think he has forgotten it. I think he left out some essential parts of it.

The Witness: I never talked to Mr. Biddle.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): To Mr. Clark. You told Mr. Clark that—see if you can't remember that you told Mr. Clark this, as a logical man, "Mr. Clark, when Mr. Bridges was of positive help to the country and when his help was important to the [7058] country, in furthering the war effort, when he was working night and day to help win the war, your predecessor, Biddle, tried to kick him out of the country"; did you tell him that?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. No, I didn't tell him that.

Q. You didn't tell him then, "And the reason that your predecessor, Biddle, wanted to kick him out of the country was that the forces that wanted to get rid of Harry Bridges cared more about getting his influence out of the country than they did about the lives of American soldiers"? Did you tell him that?

A. What I told Mr. Clark in that connection—I believe I have previously testified to that—was that I thought that the Government had made a mistake in the second deportation hearing.

Q. Then didn't you tell Mr. Clark: "Now, if you pretend that the reason you want to throw Bridges out of the country is that he is a detriment, nobody will believe that tale; we will have to make up something a little more reasonable"? Did you tell him that? A. I certainly did not.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer at this time the address of Mr. Rathborne that he identified as having been given, as the defendants' next exhibit in evidence.

Mr. Donohue: I object to it for two reasons, if your Honor please: No. 1, because it does not in any way or to any degree impeach the testimony of Mr. Rathborne. No. 2, Mr. Rathborne has said that in 1942, if that was the date of the [7059] speech, the line of the Communist Party coincided with the opinion of the trade union movement that Mr.

Bridges should be retained in the United States at all costs, and that he did everything humanly possible within his own power to see that that result was accomplished. Therefore, that speech or any number of speeches he or anyone else may have made is not or are not admissible; they are merely self-serving declarations, and for that reason I object to them. [7060]

The Court: You might, if there is any part hereof that is the subject matter of impeachment or that may be used on asserted impeachment—I will allow it for that purpose, Mr. Hallinan. Otherwise I——

Mr. Hallinan: That is the purpose, Your Honor.

The Court: ——sustain the objection.

Mr. Hallinan: It is for that purpose, of course—impeachment. In other words,——

Mr. Donohue: I would like to ask him to point out wherein the document impeaches the witness in anything he has said on the stand.

The Court: I may be mistaken, but I thought that when you read excerpts, he said he had no——

Mr. Hallinan: I haven't read any of this.

The Court: Pardon me. I thought you had.

Mr. Hallinan: No, that was a different document.

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor pleases, if Mr. Hallinan contends that the purpose of asking the admission of this document is for the purpose of impeaching the witness, I ask him to point out to the Court wherein that document impeaches anything the witness has said.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

The Court: The witness is entitled to be confronted with the subject matter of impeachment and may make any explanation or admit or deny it.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, he read that and said he gave that [7061] speech and that that was the sentiment at the time.

Mr. Donohue: Wherein does that impeach him?

Mr. Hallinan: It impeaches what he has said on his direct examination.

Mr. Donohue: Well, I think, if Your Honor pleases, if it is sought——

Mr. Hallinan: If it doesn't impeach him, what harm does it do?

Mr. Donohue: It serves no purpose.

Mr. Hallinan: Then why get so excited about it? The very fact you get so hot about it is some additional reason why I think it probably should get in there. But at any rate, if the Court please, in that document are contained sentiments and statements at variance with what the witness testified on his direct examination. It is true that on cross-examination he has taken back a lot of those or amplified, changed or modified them, but this sort of completes the thing. Now, I want——

Mr. Donohue: I think Mr. Hallinan is giving his cross-examination a greater degree of efficiency than, perhaps, it deserves.

Mr. Hallinan: I haven't any such pride in myself as that.

Mr. Donohue: But I think if you ask him to point to the record, if Your Honor pleases,——

The Court: I will mark it for identification at this time.

> (Whereupon speech referred to above was marked Defendants' Exhibit F-4 for identification.) [7062]

Mr. Donohue: If he can point to any statement in the record which is impeached by that——

Mr. Hallinan: I don't care about having it marked for identification.

Mr. Donohue: I will withdraw the objection if he will show in the record any statement impeached by that speech.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, go and sit down!

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Witness: When you were talking about Mr. Clark now, you had this discussion, as you testified on page 6577. I asked you part of it just a few minutes ago:

> "A. No, he said that they were making an investigation and it was their opinion that on the basis of as far as the investigation had proceeded, it was the government's opinion that Mr. Bridges was a Communist and that something should be done to remove his influence, because they figured it was dangerous to the country.
> "Q. Well, did he tell you also that they contemplated trying to get Mr. Bridges indicted for perjury?
>
> "A. No, sir, they did not.
> "Q. Didn't tell you that?
>
> "A. No, sir."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Is that correct?

A. I believe that is correct.

Q. That wasn't mentioned at all?

A. No, not that particular subject. [7063]

Q. In other words, Clark's position was that Mr. Bridges, and I suppose the ILWU, followed policies which Mr. Clark considered to be Communistic, is that right?

A. I believe that what Mr. Clark said along those lines was that they had been doing a lot of investigating of Communist and Communist activities in this country and reached the conclusion that they were definitely—that is, the Communists were definitely detrimental to the country.

Q. Communist policies were detrimental to the country? A. That's right.

Q. And that Mr. Bridges and the ILWU had been following a Communist policy, is that right?

A. No, I believe he said he had conducted an investigation and had proceeded sufficiently far to convince him that Mr. Bridges was a member of the Communist Party.

Q. Now, "a member of the Communist Party" or "a Communist"? Or was a "Communist"?

A. My recollection is, "was a Communist."

Q. Yes. In other words, you can be a Communist without being a member of the Communist Party, isn't that right?

A. Well, I guess a distinction like that can be made. I presume it can.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Well, a person can have Communist ideas and be entirely sold on the principles of Communism, but still not a member of the Communist Party, isn't that correct? [7064]

A. That is possible.

Q. And that is what Mr. Clark said—not that Mr. Bridges was a member of the Communist Party, but that he was a Communist; isn't that right?

A. That is my recollection of the conversation, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. All right. And nothing was said at all about Mr. Bridges having testified falsely on any proceeding, was there?

A. No, sir, there was not. I am sure of that.

Q. All right. Then you went over and saw Mr. Carey. Now, here is your talk with Mr. Carey, at page 6588:

> "A. I told him about the conversation with Mr. Clark, and I asked Mr. Carey—I told him the government was in the process of making another investigation against Harry Bridges, and I asked him what the attitude of Phil Murray was and what the attitude of the national CIO would be in this situation with regard to how the CIO, as a labor organization, would view this kind of proceedings, if they would consider it as an attack against labor, and what position they planned to take, if any, and if they knew about it, and what Mr. Carey personally thought I would do and thought I > should do, and I would also like to find out what Mr. Murray's attitude was."

So at the time you talked to Mr. Carey you did not know exactly what the nature or the direction of the government's investigation of Harry Bridges was going to be, did you? [7065]

A. No, I didn't learn that until quite a long time later.

Q. Yes. And you didn't tell Mr. Carey, because you didn't know, that it involved any alleged perjury on the part of Mr. Bridges?

A. I had no information; I merely told Mr. Carey what I talked about with Mr. Clark.

Q. All right. (Continuing):

> "Q. What did he tell you?
> "A. Mr. Carey said—well, as far as he was concerned personally he did not consider proceedings of this kind, if they were conducted properly by the government, to be an attack against the CIO, that the CIO itself had the same problem with Communists and it was handling it in its own way; that as far as—I said I had planned, if I got into this thing, planned to come out openly and publicly and not work in any undercover sort of way.
> "And he said, well, I ought to make up my own mind on it. He said, however, he would check with Phil Murray and find out what Phil Murray's ideas were with respect to this kind of proceeding, as to whether Murray would > consider it as a hostile act by the government against the CIO as a labor organization."

Do you remember that testimony?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. All right. And you further testified——

Mr. Paisley: Your Honor, are we going to have to listen to [7066] Mr. Hallinan read what the witness testified before? It seems like to me, that is unnecessary, we can dispense with that.

The Court: I assume he is coming to a point that he has in mind.

Mr. Hallinan: Surely.

Mr. Paisley: Well, he must have read that last one for about five minutes, and that certainly is unnecessary.

Mr. Hallinan: So what I am getting at is this. Counsel having apparently not heard most of the matter—he takes a short nap after lunch.

Q. The thing is that you had these discussions with Mr. Clark, with Mr. Carey, and at that time you didn't know, nobody had said anything to you, what direction the investigation against Harry Bridges was going to take. That's correct, isn't it?

A. What the exact conclusion would be. Let's put it that way.

Q. And what direction it was going to take. You didn't know that either, did you?

A. I knew it was in the direction of him finding as to Communist activities.

Q. Yes, as to Communist activity. So that as far as you knew at that time, the complaint against Mr. Bridges or the matter that concerned Mr. Clark did not relate either to Mr. Bridges' membership in the Communist Party nor any perjury that he had committed on that matter, but to his general Communist sympathies and activities, is that [7067] correct?

A. Well, I believe Mr. Clark was concerned, and I believe I testified to that effect that in the event of any hostilities, that the Communists in this country might act as a fifth column.

Q. Yes.

A. And cause trouble within the country which might prevent it from properly defending itself or carrying on and conducting war activities.

Q. And that included Mr. Bridges?

A. That's right. I mean, that is my understanding of it.

Q. In other words, Mr. Clark's concern at that time was this, that the cold war might turn into a shooting war, is that right?

A. That is substantially right, yes.

Q. And that if we get into a war with Russia, then Mr. Bridges could not be counted on, safely, to support the United States, is that right?

A. That is generally the impression he conveyed to me, yes.

Q. All right. So for that reason, his influence on the labor movement should be removed?

A. That is my—I believe I testified to that.

Q. Yes, you did. And nothing was said about punishing Mr. Bridges for being a member of the Communist Party?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Not that I recall. There was no——

Q. Mention of that?

A. No. He said, "Proceedings of some [7068] kind."

Q. And nothing was said about punishing Mr. Bridges for having committed any perjury, is that right?

A. I am definitely sure that's right, yes.

Q. And then in your conversation with Mr. Carey at page 6590, you were asked, I asked:

> "Q. Did Mr. Carey tell you so far as he was concerned he thought it was the right and proper thing for you to do? To go ahead and testify against Harry Bridges?
> "A. He said he thought it would be the best —the right thing for me to come out openly on this issue, yes.
> "Q. And take the stand and testify against Harry Bridges?
> "A. It was not in that form at that time. I didn't know what the proceedings would be as far as Mr. Bridges was concerned.
> "Q. Yes, but you told Mr. Carey now that you had had a conversation with Tom Clark in which Clark had asked you to testify against Bridges? A. Yes."

Do you remember so testifying?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. Yes. And:

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

"Q. You asked Carey if it would be all right with him or if it would be considered inimical to the CIO if you did testify against Bridges, isn't that right?

"A. No, I didn't put it that way. I asked him what his [7069] opinion was as to what I should do. He said 'Well, better make up your own mind on that, but I think you would probably be doing the right thing if you follow Mr. Clark's advice or request.'"

Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I remember testifying to that.

Q. And:

"You told Mr. Carey that the matter you were interested in was this substantially: that the government was undertaking some sort of proceeding against Harry Bridges, accusing him of being a Communist and removing either him or his influence from the labor movement; is that corerct?

"A. I related to Mr. Carey as well as I could the substance of Mr. Clark's conversation with me.

"Q. That was substantially in the question I just asked you. A. Yes, that is right."

Is that correct?

A. That's right, I recall it, yes, sir.

Q. All right. And then on page 6591, you said you called back again, "And he must have checked with Phil Murray, because subsequently I called him on the telephone and he told me he had talked to Phil about that matter and Phil had no objection and felt the same way he did." And then a paragraph and then:

> "During our conversation he said he was certain Mr. Murray [7070] would feel the same as he did, but he wanted to check with him and find out. Those were the two points I discussed with Mr. Carey."

That is correct, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. All right. So then not only with Mr. Clark, but with Mr. Carey and with Mr. Murray, the questions that you addressed to them and upon which you asked their opinion, and the matters they recited to you, were not involving any membership, actual membership of Harry Bridges in the Communist Party nor any perjury that he might have committed, but that of being a Communist and following the Communist line, let us say, following their policies; they wanted him removed from the labor movement, is that right?

A. That is substantially correct, yes, sir.

Q. And that is what we are here for, isn't it? You understand that that is what you are trying to do now, isn't that right?

A. No, I don't quite follow you. Will you——

Q. You understand that the role you are playing here is to assist in removing Mr. Bridges from the labor movement, isn't that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: I object to that question, if your Honor pleases.

Mr. Hallinan: It goes to the witness' state of mind.

Mr. Donohue: His role here is to testify to the truth as a [7071] witness called by the government.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, if that were the truth, the case wouldn't have lasted a week; if you were only going to have truthful witnesses it would have gone long ago. Your Honor, we are entitled to know his state of mind.

The Court: Yes, you may answer the question.

The Witness: Would you read the question for me? I have forgotten the exact language.

(Record read.)

A. That is not my understanding, complete understanding of why I am here, no, sir. It is not.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): What do you understand that you are doing? Now, I mean not what you are doing here; I know we will hear a lot about telling the truth and patriotism and so forth. But the ultimate purpose for which you are here, the ultimate purpose for which you are here, the reason you came in here, the reason that you volunteered your help was, was it, to put Harry Bridges in the penitentiary? A. No, sir, it was not.

Q. Was it to remove him from the labor movement?

A. It was to remove, to help remove what I consider today subversive influences from the labor movement, yes, sir.

Q. To remove Harry Bridges' subversive influence from the labor moement?

A. That was part of it. [7072]

Q. That was what you think you are doing up there, isn't that right? — A. That is part of it.

Q. Do you think or do you realize that what you are up there for is to put this man in the penitentiary?

Mr. Donohue: I object, your Honor. That is improper.

Mr. Hallinan: It goes to his state of mind again, your Honor.

Mr. Donohue: The question of punishment has always been a matter for the court to determine.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, there won't be any question about that.

Mr. Donohue: I object to it.

Mr. Paisley: Your Honor, suppose we were trying a homicide case here and the witness happened to be at the scene of the homicide; would he be asked such questions as this, "Are you trying to put my client in the penitentiary?"

Mr. Hallinan: This isn't a homicide case; you have got it mixed up with some other case.

Mr. Paisley: That is not fair to a witness, your Honor. It is not fair to a witness.

Mr. Hallinan: Counsel obviously doesn't understand the case.

The Court: The objection is sustained, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: It is now 3:00 o'clock.

The Court: We will take the adjournment, ladies and [7073] gentlemen, in this case until tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions or circumstances, not to form an opinion thereon.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Tuesday, March 7, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [7073-A]

Tuesday, March 7, 1950, 10:00 o'Clock A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial. The witness on the stand is Mervyn Rathborne, heretofore sworn.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I ask if he have the canceled checks that were supposed to be brought?

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, the checks are, of course, in Washington. They could only be obtained from the Treasury Department, but ~~I have~~ a statement which was prepared by the Immigration Service, and as I hand it to Mr. Hallinan, I now ask your Honor to ask Mr. Hallinan to produce for the United States an itemized statement of the expenditures made by the Bridges-Robertson-Schmidt Defense Fund.

Mr. Hallinan: We do not care to accept this statement, if the court please. Any statement produced by the Immigration Department we look upon with the gravest suspicion. If they have some records from which they can compile this statement, we want to see the original statement.

The Court: The original records?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, the record itself.

The Court: May I see it, Mr. Hallinan?

(The document referred to was handed to the court.)

The Court: Would this serve your purpose at the present time subject to the production of such records as may be [7074] available here?

Mr. Hallinan: I have not examined it closely enough.

The Court: It might serve your purpose, subject to whatever additions you may require in the light of the production of any records that may substantiate the memorandum.

Mr. Hallinan: This statement is obviously not correct because the witness testified he received monies prior to July 18, 1949. He received monies when he came up before the grand jury at $34 a day. This thing starts with July 18th, and it is just to get rid of a point we make. I am not interested in it.

Mr. Donohue: There are two things I would like to say, if your Honor please: number one, any monies that were paid Mr. Rathborne prior to the 18th of July were monies paid for his appearance before the grand jury. Mr. Hallinan knows those monies were paid out of United States funds by the United States Marshal's office here——

Mr. Hallinan: I know nothing about it.

Mr. Donohue: If Mr. Hallinan wants those records, the marshal's records in this court are as available to Mr. Hallinan as they are to us, and he is free to get them.

Mr. Hallinan: I do not believe this is a correct and true statement. I think it is another fraud.

Mr. Donohue: I renew my request to your Honor for the same purpose as this document was required. I ask your Honor to require Mr. Hallinan to present us with a statement of all the [7075] expenditures made by the Bridges-Robertson Defense Fund since the inception of the trial.

Mr. Hallinan: When we charge you with fraud, why don't you say, "What about Stalin?" That is the classic answer. Might we see the original, the book from which these are compiled? Where is it?

Mr. Donohue: I do not know where there is a book, if your Honor please. I shall be glad to procure for your Honor such records as there are from which this is taken. If Mr. Hallinan wants the checks, they are in the custody of the Treasurer of the United States and he knows how to get them.

Mr. Hallinan: You have been ordered to bring these things in. What I want to see is how much money this man has been paid, and I particularly want to find out when his pay started.

The Court: Mr. Donohue, do you represent to the court that this statement, so far as you know, is a compilation of all the items over which you had any direction or control?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor, except for monies paid as witness fees for this witness before the United States grand jury. Those are not paid by the Immigration Service or the Department of Justice. They are paid by the marshal.

The Court: I ask you that question only as a preliminary to a request to the marshal's office, if I may direct my attention to the marshal, to ask the marshal to produce such additional records as may be available. [7076]

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: And then I ask you to bring into court, Mr. Donohue, such supporting documents as you may have for the memorandum.

Mr. Donohue: I will be glad to.

The Court: Thank you. [7076-A]

Mr. Hallinan: That would include the expenses to Washington on the trips that he made.

The Court: Is that reflected there?

Mr. Hallinan: I don't know. One of these was for certain vouchers. The rate of pay seems to be $25 a day.

Q. Is that what you are getting?

A. The first time I knew it was $25 a day was when I saw the piece of paper this morning, Mr. Hallinan. I was told that I would be paid at the rate of what I was getting on the President Madison, and the checks indicated no daily rate or no period for which the compensation was paid.

Q. Let's get this, then. We might use these for the purposes that——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

The Court: That is what I had in mind: that you pursue the matter with these, and for such matters as you may require further I will make an appropriate order.

Mr. Hallinan: Thanks; I will be satisfied with it.

Q. The first voucher that these gentlemen tell us about here purports to be one dated July 25, 1949, at Washington. Were you in Washington on July 25, 1949? A. No, sir, I was not.

Q. What date were you back there going over with Mr. Donohue the records preparing this case, and so forth?

A. My recollection was the latter part of June or the early part of July. [7077]

Q. Well, now; here you are getting a check dated 7/25/49, they say, "Period covered July 18, 1949, to August 5, 1949, 15 days at $25 a day, $375." Now, is that the first check you got?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are sure of that?

A. I got a—no, I got a check after that for the travel expenses.

Q. I asked you if this was the first check you got.

A. On that—on this arrangement that we are talking about.

Q. On this arrangement? A. Yes.

Q. In other words, you had this arrangement for employment at the same rate you were getting on the ship?

A. That was my understanding of it, yes, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You were getting $25 a day on the ship, were you?

A. It averaged between five and six hundred dollars that I was earning on the ship, my gross pay.

Q. How much a day was that?

A. I never broke it down on a daily basis.

Q. Did you go over any records yesterday or the day before with anybody connected with the Immigration Department from which these statements were compiled? A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Were any of them shown to you—any document or any record or statement of any [7078] kind?

A. I believe I saw the first voucher; that is the one covering the period you just mentioned there.

Q. When did you see that?

A. Oh, I think it was yesterday.

Q. Who showed it to you?

A. I think Mr. Barber did.

Q. What did it look like? What kind of a form was it?

A. It is a standard—my understanding of it, it is a standard Government form for that purpose—voucher.

Q. By "voucher" do you mean a check?

A. No, sir, it is a printed document.

Q. Is it the document you take to the bank to deposit or cash? A. No, it isn't negotiable.

Q. Was it payable to you?

A. No, it is—I think they call it a voucher, and its purpose seems to be an authorization for payment.

Q. Authorization for payment?

A. That seems to be the purpose.

Q. Was this the original copy you saw, Mr. Rathborne?

A. This was the one I had signed, so it must have been the original.

Q. It had your signature on it, did it?

A. That's right.

Q. In addition to signing that paper did you also receive a check? [7079]

A. My understanding of the process, Mr. Hallinan——

Q. I asked you what you received; I am not interested in the process. Here on some day during the month of July, 1949, you apparently received $375. You say you remember that that was the first one you received, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Are you sure of that?

A. I am sure of it in this particular situation. I have received other checks drawn for traveling expenses and things I told you about. On this particular arrangement, that is the first one.

Q. Then yesterday you saw the voucher that you had signed in Mr. Barber's possession?

A. That's right.

Q. In addition to signing the voucher did you sign some other document at that time?

A. Not at the time I signed the voucher, no, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did you sign a voucher each time you received a payment?

A. I signed a number of vouchers at one time and gave them to Mr. Barber, and he kept them in his possession. They were blank forms; there was nothing filled in on them except my signature.

Q. How many?

A. My recollection is five or six; something like that.

Q. When did you sign those?

A. Oh, I think it was at the time I signed that first voucher, [7080] the first one, I think.

Q. You signed five or six in blank?

A. That would probably be the latter part of July.

Q. You signed five or six others in blank?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. And gave them to Mr. Barber?

A. That's right.

Q. In what form was the money paid to you that you received?

A. In a check drawn on the Treasury of the United States, regular Government check.

Q. What did you do with the first one that you received?

A. I think I deposited it in the bank. I am not certain. I may have cashed it.

Q. What bank?

A. I believe the American Trust Company in Redwood City.

Q. You say you believe?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I am not certain. I may have cashed it or I may have deposited it. I am not certain of that.

Q. Have you accounts in more than one bank, deposit accounts?

A. No. I have an account in the American Trust Company.

Q. In what name was the deposit made?

A. If I recall correctly—I am not certain that I deposited it. If it was deposited, I think it was deposited in my wife's bank account there.

Q. In whose bank account? [7081]

A. My wife's bank account.

Q. What name is that under?

A. That is under my name and my wife's name.

Q. What are the names?

A. Mervyn and Lenay.

Q. I beg pardon?

A. Mervyn and Lenay Rathborne.

Q. Is the name "Rathborne" used?

A. Yes.

Q. It is a joint account? A. Yes.

Q. You said your wife's account.

A. I refer to it as my wife's account. She is the one that uses it. I don't.

Q. Did you deposit any of these checks in that account at Redwood City?

A. It is my recollection, yes, Mr. Hallinan. Some of the checks I gave to my wife, and I don't know at this time whether she cashed them at the bank or whether she deposited them in the account, or how she disposed of them. I didn't inquire. I am not certain as to just what happened as far as whether the actual checks were deposited or not.

Q. At any rate, at the time you received the first payment of money from Mr. Barber on this arrangement that you have, you signed about five blank vouchers, is that correct? [7082]

A. No, that is not correct.

Q. At the time the first voucher was sent in——

A. I am going to tell you my understanding of the process. As I understand it, these vouchers or requests for payment are signed and transmitted to Washington, and then checks are drawn in Washington and sent back here. That is my understanding of it. So the first voucher, I believe, was signed in the latter part of July, and it is my recollection that the first check did not arrive until sometime in August. I may be in error in that.

Mr. Hallinan: May we see that voucher?

Mr. Donohue: I don't have them here.

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. Barber has the voucher; the gentleman saw it yesterday.

Mr. Donohue: He doesn't carry it around in his pocket.

Mr. Hallinan: May we have it at the recess this afternoon?

Mr. Donohue: I have told the Court I would bring every record there is in the Immigration Service.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): The voucher is dated, according to this list that we are given, Washington, D. C., 7/25/49—the 25th of July, 1949, is that right?

A. I don't know. I don't recall the date on the voucher. I mean, I didn't read it carefully enough to recall it; the voucher when I signed it, or this document when I signed it, there was nothing on it, no date or no amount or no anything. [7083]

Q. At any rate, you had already made your agreement with the prosecution as to the rate of your pay at that time, hadn't you?

A. It was generally—I mean, it was understood that it would be generally the same compensation as I received on that ship. Now, that wasn't spelled out in actual detailed amounts, and it was my understanding at the time it would be—I believe the terms we discussed it in was in the neighborhood of 500 a month, and from——

Q. Well, now, according to the record that we have produced here the other day, your pay as a radio operator after the increase that the ILWU and Bridges had gotten you, ran to around $325 a month, isn't that right?

A. No, sir. That was the base pay.

Q. How much overtime did you get on the last trip you were on at sea, the last month you worked?

A. My last trip, my recollection is, Mr. Hallinan——

Q. Pardon me. Might I say, well, try to be accurate, because we will have to go down and bring the records of the shipping company.

A. Why don't you do that?

Q. I want to see how far you will go to helping us along first. Now, what was it?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. It was over a hundred dollars. I don't know how much.

Q. How much over a hundred dollars?

A. That I don't remember. [7084]

Q. Was it——

A. I made a number of trips on there and I don't recall.

Q. A number of what?

A. I made a number of trips on that ship. Each time I made out the overtime I don't recall the hours or time for which it was.

Q. A trip took six weeks, didn't it, or eight weeks?

A. The pay period, I think, was around six or seven weeks.

Q. Was it a hundred dollars or over?

A. A hundred hours, I said.

Q. A hundred hours, you said?

A. It was around a hundred hours; that is my recollection.

Q. That was taken on the entire trip, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much was that? Would that be one month?

A. You can't break it down that way, because you make out records for the trip.

Q. Let's put it this way: How long was the trip?

A. My recollection is it was about six weeks, the pay period for the trip. It may have been a little more; I am sure it wasn't a little less. [7085]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. It was about six weeks, and in that six weeks on that trip you put in something like a hundred hours overtime?

A. That is what—I had to make an overtime report.

Q. What was the overtime rate?

A. I think $1.60. Again, I could be wrong.

Q. $1.60? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So there would be $160 overtime?

A. That is low, if anything.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. That is low, if anything. And then, of course, there was the war bonus.

Q. Let's say at $160 it would be around $27 a week. What was your base pay?

A. Right around $325.

Q. What do you mean by "right around"? Do you know what it was?

A. I don't recall exactly what it was. It was $324 or $325, something like that.

Q. And then you say a war bonus?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you still getting a war bonus?

A. They are still paying it, yes.

Q. How much?

A. $2.50 a day west of the 180th Meridian.

Q. How many days were you west of the 180th Meridian on the last [7086] trip?

A. Probably about 30 days.

Q. About 30 days?

A. Yes. That could vary.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. So that would be about $75 for the trip and about $50—and that would average about $50 a month. So at that time, taking overtime, base pay and war bonus, you would make about $483 in the month?

A. My recollection, it was right around $500 a month and that is what I advised Mr. Barber.

Q. I noticed on this list that they gave me the first period covers July 18, 1949, to August 5, 1949, with a note above it, "No pay for Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. 15 days at $25 a day, $375." The next check covers the period of August 8, 1949, to August 19, 1949, ten days at $25 a day, $250. So that is exactly one month between those two checks. Do you observe that? A. I do.

Q. Do you see now that that is true? In other words, the two checks cover from July 18 to August 19, 1949, and they total $625, one of them for $375 and the other for $250; that is $625.

A. I think if you take that entire period, Mr. Hallinan, shown on that thing there and divided by the number of weeks, you will find——

Q. That it comes out to that. [7087]

A. I have never done it myself because I never knew exactly the exact period for which each check was, so when I testified here I said it was about $120 a week, and I think if you will take the total number of weeks and the total payments, you will find it comes out pretty close.

Q. The next check is August 22nd, ten days at

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

$25 a day, and the next one is September 6th and it is nine days at $25 a day, and the next one is September 19th and it is ten days at $25 a day, and the next one is October 11th and it is ten days at $25 a day, October 17th, ten days at $25 a day, October 31st, nine days at $25 a day. They docked you for the holidays. And then the next, November 14th, 23 days at $25 a day, $575. No pay for holiday, November 24th. And then on January 6th, 14 days, $350. Now, on January 31st, 17 days at $25, amounting to $425 altogether for 17 days.

Is that your recollection of what you were getting?

A. I told you that I was receiving checks from the Treasury of the United States and the only thing that appeared on the checks was my name and the date the check was issued. There was no indication of the period of time that was covered, and my best recollection of the thing, and my idea of the thing was the compensation amounted to about $120 a week, and I think if you take all the weeks there and all the money and divide it, you will come pretty close to it. As I say, I haven't done it.

Q. When you were working on a ship, were you paid for the time [7088] that you were not on a trip? A. I don't get it.

Q. Let's say the ship came in and laid up——

A. Take a trip off, you mean?

Q. Yes. A. Oh, no, oh, no.

Q. Were you paid for the time between trips?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. If you stay on the ship, yes, sir.

Q. If you did not remain on the ship——

A. I don't quite understand your question.

Q. Here is what I am getting at: Suppose the Madison came in to San Francisco and stayed here about a week before it sailed again: would you be paid for that week?

A. Oh, yes. You mean before it sailed on a deep sea voyage?

Q. I don't know whether it was deep or shallow.

A. The procedure is this: The ship comes in and the voyage terminates.

Q. What is that?

A. Each trip on the ship, every member of the crew signs what they call articles, signs an agreement for that trip, and when the ship sails, a few days before the ship sails, these articles are signed, and when the ship returns to port, the articles terminate, and they usually—and then new articles are signed. Well, if you are going to make another trip, you have to sign the new articles and that takes place during the time the ship [7089] is in port. For example, on the Madison it is my recollection the articles were over about two days after it got into port, and if you wanted to make the next trip, you would sign new articles, oh, two days before sailing. So usually you stayed on the payroll until the articles terminated. Do I make myself clear?

Q. Do you know under what title you are presently employed by the Immigration Department?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)
What is the name of the job that you have?

A. No, sir, I do not. I do not know that I have a title.

Q. Has there been anything on the checks or vouchers to indicate it? A. Not that I recall.

Q. Has there any withholding tax been retained from the checks you have received?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is withholding tax——

A. There is no record on the check. I presume there is not because I have received no record of it.

Q. Calling your attention to another matter that you discussed the other day, when you said you were in Washington talking to Mr. Donohue, you were asked, "I take it you are being paid some reasonable compensation for all your time, is that right?"

> "A. That is right.
> "Q. And have been during that period, I suppose, is that [7090] right?
> "A. I believe the situation regarding that is this: when I left the President Madison in May, I believe it was, I took a trip off, a leave of absence to join the ship. My intention at that time was to rejoin the ship when she returned, which would have been about July. I think it was July. Anyway, it would be about eight weeks afterwards."

Now:

"And during the time I was in Washington

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

I discussed the situation about going back to the ship with Mr. Donohue, told him I would have to get back to the Coast pretty quick because I would have to let my union know in a few days whether I was going back to the ship or not, and I intended to go back.

"He said, 'Well, at that time he didn't think it was——' that I should go back. In addition to that, the WFTU had passed a resolution which in effect put a boycott on me for holding my job; I think the effect of the resolution was that all members affiliated with the WFTU should boycott any ship on which anybody appeared as a witness in this particular case for the Government.

"Q. Taking one thing with another, what was the compensation you agreed upon?

"A. The compensation was to be the same approximately as I was receiving on the President Madison." [7091]

Do you remember that some little period elapsed and you found out that the WFTU resolution had not been passed until some time between the 15th and 18th of July? You remember that, don't you?

A. Yes, I remember that.

Q. You remember you had the talk with Mr. Kaiser in Mr. Donohue's presence and he phoned to somebody named Matt and found out it was at that particular time, and then when you were questioned about that, having told us about that, you explained all about this matter of who phoned, and as Mr. Donohue suggested, whether the telephone was held in the right hand or left hand—a little diversionary matter—and I said, "So you did not discuss with Mr. Donohue the matter of the WFTU resolution preventing you from working, did you?"

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

> And you said, "Not in Washington during the visit I did not. I had discussed the matter with Mr. Donohue and it was my impression I had discussed it at that time."

When did you discuss it with him?

A. I discussed it with Mr. Donohue after he got out here to the Pacific Coast, I believe. I recall discussing it with him.

Q. And then you went on:

> "But obviously I couldn't have done it because the resolution was not passed until later."

So at that the time you testified here the language I read before, it was then your impression that you had discussed with [7092] Mr. Donohue when you were in Washington in July, is that right?

A. That was my impression at the time.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I say that was my impression at the time, but I was somewhat puzzled by it, and that is why I checked up and talked to Mr. Kaiser about it.

Q. The thing is when you were on the witness stand here and gave the testimony about the WFTU it was your impression then that you had discussed that with Mr. Donohue in Washington when you were there in July and fixed the compensation?

A. There was no compensation fixed in Mr. Donohue's office. I testified to that.

Q. It was your impression that you had discussed it with Mr. Donohue?

A. I gave my best recollection of my discussion with Mr. Donohue on that point, and as I stated previously, Mr. Hallinan, as far as the WFTU resolution, I was—after I testified as to that, there was some doubt in my mind about it, and that is the reason I checked up.

Q. Here is what I am trying to get at. I grant you were mistaken on the thing. You just testified a moment ago that when you first testified on the trial concerning that WFTU resolution, in the language that I read about your discussion with Mr. Donohue in Washington, and going back to the ship, and also the WFTU had passed a resolution, when you were on the stand here a [7093] few days days ago, it was your impression that you had discussed the matter with Mr. Donohue in Washington, wasn't it?

A. That was my impression, which I later on found to be a wrong impression or a false recollection.

Q. Well, when you were on the witness stand, it was your impression that you had discussed that with Mr. Donohue at that time, wasn't it?

A. I think the testimony speaks for itself.

Q. Will you please be explicit on it? I want a definite answer.

A. No, I connected the two. I think the first testimony I gave shows that I was not sure whether I discussed it with Mr. Donohue or not. I think if you read my first testimony you will see that the statement about the WFTU is in there, but it does not necessarily say that I discussed it with Mr. Donohue. I am not clear on the point, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. We are off the beam. Here is what I am trying to get——

A. I remember discussing the WFTU resolution with Mr. Donohue. I have discussed it. And at the time I first testified on that point, it was in my mind that I had discussed it with him when I visited him in Washington.

Q. In July of 1949?

A. But there was a doubt about it. I resolved that doubt by seeking additional information from Mr. Kaiser.

Q. I am not quarreling with that, but when you were testifying on the stand about it, you then had the erroneous impression that [7094] you had discussed it with Mr. Donohue in Washington in July, 1949, isn't that right?

A. Well, to a certain degree, yes. I was puzzled about it.

Q. Will you listen to this: On page 6908 on that same subject, after Mr. Kaiser had phoned and found out this date was too late for that, and after

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

I had questioned you about that difficulty, you said this:

> "When I testified to that, it appeared—'in addition to that the WFTU resolution.' When I testified to that it appeared then it was part of the conversation with Mr. Donohue.
> "Q. That is what I say.
> "A. Which I didn't intend when I testified to put in that context. It might appear that I had discussed with Mr. Donohue when it actually had not been passed. That is what I was trying to check up on."

Do you remember that?

A. That is right.

Q. So when you told us this that I just read, you were trying to give us the idea that it had not been in your mind that you had discussed the WFTU resolution with Mr. Donohue, is that right?

A. No, I wasn't because if it hadn't been in my mind, I would not have asked Mr. Kaiser about it. I would not have tried to get my uncertainty on that point straightened out.

Q. Now, you further stated this, as we went along trying to get [7095] out of this Gordian knot. You said this:

> "The Witness: As a matter of fact, Mr. Hallinan, my recollection is that my conversation with the Government started after the WFTU resolution was adopted.

"Mr. Hallinan: The convention of the WFTU took place in Marseilles, France, from the 15th to the 18th of July, 1949. You found that out since, didn't you?

"A. No, sir, I did not.

"Q. And the resolutions were not printed and sent out here for at least a month after.

"A. However, there was an item in the newspapers, I believe, right around the time of the convention because I remember reading it. I remember some of the fellows down at the union asking me about it."

Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. So that your compensation, then, was not fixed until after you found out about the WFTU resolution, isn't that right?

A. I don't know what precise time my compensation was fixed because it wasn't fixed by me.

Q. Then I asked you about what paper you saw that item in; my impression is right about the time or shortly after it was passed.

"Q. What paper did you see it in?

"A. I believe it was the Call-Bulletin."

And then you said you were not definitely positive but it was your recollection that it was.

"Q. Well, was it one of the four San Francisco newspapers?

"A. One of the four San Francisco newspapers.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

> "Q. Either the Examiner, Chronicle, News or Call-Bulletin? A. That is right."

And then I asked you:

> "Can you tell us now when it was?
> "A. My recollection was it was right around the time it was passed. I would say some time around the middle of July."

Now, a little search on that subject—(To Mr. Donohue): I suppose you do not need to see these; you undoubtedly have checked this already.

Q. The first mention of these resolutions appeared on July 27, 1949. Do you remember that?

A. My recollection was around the middle of July.

Mr. Donohue: May I say, if Your Honor please, we have already introduced with the consent of Mr. Hallinan the ILWU announcement of this resolution, which was dated July 26.

Mr. Hallinan: Will you show him that? He didn't see that. He saw it in one of the four San Francisco papers. I have all four of them (handing newspaper to witness).

Now, will you show him this one also? [7097]

(Handing another newspaper to witness.)

Q. Now, do you remember that the first time that you saw anything in the paper about that was not prior to July 27th, 1949?

A. Well, if your statement is correct that that is the first time that appeared in the press, apparently that was the first time I knew about it. It is my impression I knew about it earlier. I don't know how.

Q. But you read it in the paper?

A. I said I read it in the newspaper.

Q. And this paper that you just read now, or these papers, purport to be the first announcement of it, isn't that right?

A. I do not know about that.

Q. "Bridges case retaliation hinted. Bridges foes face blacklist for aiding U. S."

Those are the two headings on the paper. Did you have any discussion with Mr. Kaiser as to when the first appearance of the news of that resolution was contained in the local papers?

A. I did not.

Q. Nothing was said about that at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. You testified here the other day that you saw something about it in the papers, and you say that no information has come to you that Kaiser or anyone else made any research to find out when it first appeared? A. None whatever. [7098]

Q. Did you? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you call up any of the papers or go down and examine the files?

A. I made no effort to try to remember that date, because it was my recollection, and still is, it was right around the time of the convention. I didn't think I needed——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You figured it was better to leave sleeping dogs lie?

A. I didn't figure there were any sleeping dogs involved in the thing.

Q. Do you now remember that some time prior to July 18th, 1949, your compensation was fixed at $25 a day?

A. No, as I told you, my discussion on that matter—my best recollection of it, it was with Mr. Barber when I returned from Washington after seeing Mr. Donohue, and it went along the lines that I would soon have to notify the unions and go back and find a ship, much the same as to Mr. Donohue.

Mr. Hallinan: I might furnish this information to Mr. Donohue and his colleagues, if they want to check on these things: the two newspapers I have here, and they may have them and read them over, are the San Francisco Chronicle for July 23rd, 1949, page 8, column 6 and 7, and the San Francisco Call-Bulletin for July 27th, 1949, page 5, column 2.

Q. Did you know a paper called The Pilot?

A. Interview Pilot? [7099]

Q. Yes. A. I have seen it, yes.

Q. What is the Interview Pilot?

A. My understanding is it is the official publication of the National Maritime Union.

Q. Is that the union of which Curran is the head? A. He is the president, yes.

Q. And of which Tommy Ray is a member?

A. An official.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. An official? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you get that paper?

A. At this time?

Q. Yes. A. No.

Q. Have you read any since this trial started or since this investigation started?

A. I don't recall having read any copies of it since I was——

Q. You know Tommy Ray was subpoenaed as a witness before the grand jury out here, don't you?

A. I knew that fact, yes.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. Yes, I knew that.

Q. Did you talk to him when he was out here?

A. No, sir, I didn't see him. [7100]

Q. Do you know that he published in the NMU as part of an article his experience out here:

"I do not know that Harry Bridges——"

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor please, that is wholly improper. Mr. Hallinan ought to know it.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, no, it goes to the discussion he had with Mr. Ray as to whether Mr. Bridges was a Communist.

Mr. Donohue: He can call Mr. Ray.

The Court: He said he had no discussion here in San Francisco.

Q. Is that correct?

A. That is what I said.

The Court: I will sustain the objection.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Did you know that yesterday in the New York Times Mr. Ray in effect called you a liar?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: Of course Mr. Hallinan is irresponsible and irrepressible, but I object to the question and I ask that it be stricken from the record.

The Court: Yes, it is stricken from the record.

Mr. Hallinan: I want to get what his reply to that was. I am not interested so much in what Ray said.

The Court: The question is stricken from the record.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Did you know that Mr. Ray published yesterday in the New York Times a denial of your evidence here?

Mr. Donohue: Just a minute. I again say to Your Honor that [7101] Mr. Hallinan is, as too often is his custom, now going to do indirectly what Your Honor has just said he could not do directly. I ask that the question be stricken.

The Court: The objection is sustained. The question is stricken.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): During the time that you were here in San Francisco, did you have considerable dealings and affiliations with members of the Communist Party?

A. What period are you referring to, Mr. Hallinan?

Q. Well, while you were a member of the Communist Party in San Francisco, as you have heretofore testified.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. The two periods, one from—let's see, 1935 to 1937, and the other is from 1941——

Q. Take the early part, when you were out here around 1935, '6 and so forth. You were out here then, weren't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have dealings with members of the Communist Party out here then?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you get to know many of them?

A. Oh, I would say quite a number, yes.

Q. Was John Schomaker a member of the Communist Party then?

A. It is my recollection that he was.

Q. Henry Schrimpf?

A. I am not certain about that. [7102]

Q. Lawrence Ross?

A. Yes, Lawrence Ross was at one time during that period, as I recall, editor of the Western Worker. [7102-A]

Q. Ernest Harris?

A. I don't recall about Ernest Harris.

Q. Well, did you know him?

A. I think I did casually.

Q. How about his wife, Irene Harris?

A. I never met that lady at all that I recall.

Q. Were either of them members of the Communist Party?

A. I don't know, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Did you ever meet them at meetings of Communists? A. I don't recall that.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, it was a good try.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. After you had your conversation with the Attorney General, Mr. Clark, and with Mr. Carey and received the information that you did from Mr. Murray as to whether or not you should testify against Mr. Bridges, you still weren't satisfied as to the extent, if any, that the Communist Party might or might not be detrimental or a menace to the country?

A. No, I wouldn't—I don't—I don't understand your question. I mean, what——

Q. Well, let us put it this way: At page 6600 you were asked:

> "Q. So you went first, then, to Tommy Ray to find out what would be his attitude toward you testifying against Harry Bridges, is that right?
> "A. Well, more than that; the whole matter of his attitude and Joe's"—that isn't Joe Stalin, is it? That is [7103] Joe Curran. "——the whole matter of his attitude and Joe's."

What Joe is that?

A. That, I believe, would be Joe Curran.

Q. Joe Curran?

A. Yes, sir, that is my recollection.

> Q. "——the whole matter of his attitude and Joe's, toward the degree of Communist infiltration, how effective it was, whether in their judgment it would be in fact a detrimental—a menace to the country in case of hostilities, and this whole situation was discussed with them."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Do you remembar that?

A. Yes, I recall that, sir.

Q. So when you went to see Mr. Joe Curran and Tommy Ray you wanted to inquire of them their attitude toward the degree of Communist infiltration and how effective it was, isn't that right?

A. I wanted—yes, I wanted to get information; I wanted to find out what their thinking, what their information was on a number of subjects.

Q. And you also wanted to find out whether in their judgment—that is, in the judgment of Tommy Ray and Joe Curran—it would be in fact detrimental and a menace to the country in case of hostilities; you wanted to ask them that, didn't you? A. That's right. [7104]

Q. That was after you had talked to the Attorney General, after you talked to Carey and after you received the message from Phil Murray?

A. That's right.

Q. And the whole situation was discussed with them.

> "Q. But then you also discussed with them what their attitude would be toward you taking the stand and testifying against Harry Bridges, is that right? A. That's right."

That was your testimony, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And at the discussion with Ray and Curran, in which you say they gave their blessing to the enterprise, nothing was said——

A. That was your language, Mr. Hallinan, not mine, that "blessing" part of it.

Q. I asked you if he gave his blessing to the enterprise, and you said yes.

A. You asked me a large number of questions at that point, and I made——

Q. Well, at that time——

A. I indicated general approval, is the way I would phrase it.

Q. Would you say enthusiastic approval?

A. I said "general approval," Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Very great and enthusiastic approval?

A. Certainly not. [7105]

Q. Well, did Curran offer to lend you his baseball bat brigade to go out and knock them bums?

A. No. As a matter of fact, Mr. Curran was in the process of helping Mr. Bridges at that time, at the request of Murray, in connection with some negotiations that were taking place here in the '48 strike. Mr. Bridges had apparently got himself into a pretty bad box, and went back to see Mr. Murray and said, "Phil, I am in trouble. I need some help. Will you help out?" Phil Murray did help him, and also called on Mr. Curran and he also helped out in the situation.

Q. That was at the time of the 1948 strike?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Bridges had got himself in some trouble?

A. Apparently he got several thousand people out here on strike and there appeared to be no way of settling the strike, so he appealed to Phil Murray for aid.

Q. What kind of aid?

A. To help him settle the strike.

Q. Financial or physical or moral?

A. No, to negotiate a settlement, because the employers had said, as I understand it, they wouldn't deal with Bridges, they considered the strike a strike against the Marshall Plan and the strike was Communist-inspired and they would not negotiate with Mr. Bridges. That is my recollection of it. And he had to go back and get Mr. Murray's intercession in his behalf. And [7106] I do know that Mr. Murray interceded, and I do know that Mr. Murray sent two representatives of the national CIO out here, and that they did work with the ILWU in securing the settlement of the strike. It is my understanding that the national CIO underwrote or guaranteed the performance of the agreement. Now, that is my recollection. So Mr. Curran's attitude at that time was not one of hatred toward Mr. Bridges or one of an enthusiastic "get the guy" or anything like that.

Q. Now, in other words, as I get it, in the 1948 strike the employers dragged out the red herring, is that right? A. Yes, I believe they did.

Q. And they said, "This strike is also Communist-inspired," is that right?

A. That is, I believe, the general position they took.

Q. They said, "This doesn't relate to hours and wages; it is an attempt to wreck the Marshall Plan;" is that right?

A. I believe that is one of the contentions.

Q. Did they say, "Mr. Bridges is a Communist and a Red"? A. I don't recall.

Q. So then Mr. Bridges went back and got Mr. Phil Murray, who certainly couldn't be called a Communist and a Red, and Mr. Bridges stepped out of the negotiations and said, "All right, if you are going to pretend that, negotiate with Murray"; is that what happened?

A. I know that Mr. Bridges asked Mr. Murray for his help and [7107] he received it.

Q. And do you know this: that every time that they have dragged out the red herring on one of these strikes that Mr. Bridges has been in, Mr. Bridges has offered to resign from his position in the union if it would help settle the strike?

A. I hadn't heard that.

Q. Have you ever heard of him doing that?

A. I don't recall ever hearing that.

Q. Have you ever seen advertisements that Mr. Bridges and the ILWU put in the papers in which Mr. Bridges offered to resign from the ILWU if it would help settle the strike? A. No.

Q. If they were accusing it of being Communist-dominated? A. I have not.

Q. Now, you testified also that you knew of Carey's enmity against Bridges, is that right?

A. Yes, I have known of that for quite some time.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. And you testified that while Mr. Murray and Mr. Bridges seemed to be friendly on the surface, you knew of the battling that went on behind closed doors, is that right? A. That's right.

Q. And you knew that both Tommy Ray and Mr. Joe Curran were enemies of Mr. Bridges, isn't that right?

A. Well, I wouldn't classify either one of them as enemies. There was dislike and there was disagreement. [7108]

Q. You said you thought Mr. Curran's feelings merely consisted of dislike and enmity, didn't amount to actual hatred, is that right?

A. That is generally right, yes.

Q. Now, you went out of the Communist Party, you testified, in April of 1947?

A. I don't believe I testified in April. I believe my testimony was along that line there—it is my recollection it was the early part of '47, probably about April.

Q. Spring? A. I am not sure.

Q. We don't want to be too definite. Then in November you got out of the CIO?

A. That's right.

Q. When you got out of the CIO Mr. Bridges made a laudatory talk about you at the CIO convention, isn't that right? A. That is right.

Q. And a collection was taken up at Mr. Bridges' instance, from which you received about $250, is that right?

A. I don't think it was a collection. My recollection of the matter, although I had nothing to do with it—the information that I recall receiving at that time was that the ILWU delegates at the convention voted to authorize a contribution from the union. I may be wrong on that point; I don't know, because I wasn't at the meeting that this thing took place. [7109]

Q. But you testified, at any rate, that Mr. Bridges had always been friendly to you?

A. That's right.

Q. Treated you decently and kindly, is that right? A. That's right.

Q. Tried to help you when you needed it?

A. Yes. I mean, there was——

Q. Had never done anything to harm you or offend you or insult you or injure you, is that right?

A. We had had quite a few disagreements, but usually disagreements over matters of trade union policy and approach, and so forth and so on.

Q. Nothing personal?

A. Not so much so, I don't think.

Q. You also testified that in February or March, 1948, you were first contacted by agents of the Immigration Department, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And then Mr. Barber and some unknown man, some man you don't know, came down to see you, is that right?

A. Yes, I related those contacts as best I recalled them, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. You said that first your wife spoke to you and you didn't know the name of the agent, and she told you that Mr. So-and-so called from the Immigration Service. Would that be Mr. [7110] Kaiser?

A. No, I am certain it wouldn't be Mr. Kaiser.

Q. Anyhow, these people came down to see you starting in February or March, 1948, and why didn't you tell Mr. Bridges then that they were investigating him?

A. Well, at that particular time I wasn't sure, and the matter never occurred to me.

Q. Well, all right. Mr. Barber and ~~the~~ unknown man who came down to see you told you that they were conducting an investigation on Harry Bridges, isn't that right?

A. Yes, they told me that.

Q. You didn't tell Mr. Bridges that, did you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You weren't under any oath imposed by a grand jury to conceal what you knew, were you?

Mr. Donohue: I object to that. Neither was he under any duty to inform Mr. Bridges.

Mr. Hallinan: No.

The Court: You may answer.

The Witness: I beg your pardon?

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): I say, you weren't under any oath from any grand jury at that time, were you?

A. Well, the circumstances connected with my leaving of the Communist Party left some strained relations, and I wasn't in contact with anybody in the CIO that I recall except those that came to see me for a period when I left in 1947 until I [7111] went East in '48.

The Court: Are you finished?

The Witness: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: Might we have a recess?

The Court: We will take the morning recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [7111-A]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, as I say, you got out of the CIO in November, 1947, with the eulogistic statement of Mr. Bridges having been made and the amount of money voted to you and your first contact with these agents was in February or March, 1948. Are you quite sure, Mr. Rathborne, that it was not you that sent word to the Immigration Department that you were available?

A. I am very certain of that.

Q. I beg pardon?

A. I am very certain that I did not.

Q. Had you any information from any other person that an investigation was pending at that time against Mr. Bridges?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Had you talked to Schomaker?

A. No, I had not seen Schomaker for years and years and years.

~~Q. You had not seen him for years and years?~~

A. No, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. You did not talk to anybody who told you that the Immigration Department was in the market for informers against Bridges?

A. I have no knowledge of the whole matter until the—the first time I really knew that the Government was interested in the issue at all was when this gentleman came down aboard the ship.

Q. I want to show you a few documents here (handing documents to the witness). A. Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I have those? [7112]

Q. Those are samples of literally hundreds of telegrams and letters passed between you and Mr. Bridges relating to ordinary trade union matters, is that right?

A. Oh, there were quite a few communications of that kind.

Q. I have a box of them.

A. Probably two boxes.

Q. Relating to ordinary trade union matters. Do you concede that that is true, that in the years that you were a member of the CIO and of the ARTA, that there passed between you and Mr. Bridges hundreds of letters and telegrams relating to ordinary trade union matters?

A. Certainly that is true.

Q. And I also have the minutes kept by you of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific showing the extensive and numerous discussions between the members as to what action should be taken on particular controversies, strikes, and so forth; was that the general practice? A. Oh, yes.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. It won't be necessary to bring all those in for you to concede that the actions of the members of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific were essentially democratic, is that right?

A. No, I will concede that, that the setup was esesntially a democratic setup.

Q. And that all matters, every matter, even of minor importance, was discussed between the members before any action was taken [7113] upon it?

A. On many occasions there were even trivial matters discussed.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. On many occasions there were even trivial matters discussed.

Q. I ran across things like a challenge of the sailors to the longshoremen for a football game. Matters like that were even discussed, and settlements of strikes and whether a strike should be considered and men advised to go back to work, and things of that kind, is that right?

A. Full and complete discussion of the issues before the Council and the Maritime Federation.

Q. And your relations with Mr. Bridges during all that time as expressed in letters and telegrams have been friendly and warm, isn't that right?

A. There were minor disagreements but generally they were friendly relations.

Mr. Hallinan: Without taking the bother of offering this in evidence, I ran across a letter dated August 21st, 1937, "CIO, Maritime Committee, 10 Bridge Street, New York City.

"Chairman John Brophy, Director, CIO; secretary, Mervyn Rathborne, president American Radio Telegraphists Association; Harry Bridges, president, Pacific Coast District, ILA; Joseph Curran, Deck Division, National Maritime Union; Captain E. T. Pinchin, Master Mates & Pilots, New York; V. J. Malone, Pacific Coast Marine Fireman, Oilers, [7114] Watertenders & Wipers Association; John Green, president, Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilders.

"Mr. Harry Bridges, President, Pacific Coast District, ILA, Balboa Building, Room 509, 593 Market Street, San Francisco, California.

"Dear Sir and Brother:

"Final arrangements have been made for the National Unity Conference to be held in Chicago on August 30th. The conference will be held at the Capitol Building, State & Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois, beginning Monday morning, August 30th.

"Fraternally yours, Mervyn Rathborne."

Is that your letter?

A. I don't recall the exact letter, but it could well be and I certainly don't deny it.

Q. In addition to the rental by the United States Agriculture Department of your premises at Half Moon Bay, are there any other state, county or governmental agencies renting portions of that building from you?

A. Yes, the County Agricultural ~~Agents.~~

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. The County Agricultural Agent rents.

Q. How long have they been there?

A. They were there when I purchased the building.

Q. What do they pay? [7115]

A. I believe it is $30 a month.

Q. Any other? A. That is all.

Q. Do you have a lease with the United States Government? A. No, sir.

Q. Can you tell me what, if any, discussion you had with Mr. Donohue at the time you sent out the release to the newspapers on May 28th, 1949, stating, "The 1948 waterfront strike was 80 per cent political, 20 per cent wages, hours and working conditions and was directed primarily against the Marshall Plan." What conversation did you have with Mr. Donohue on that subject?

A. I don't recall any conversation on that point, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Was that point mentioned.

A. I don't believe it was.

Q. That was your own desire to put that in the paper, is that right?

A. Well, it was information I had at that time based on discussions I had with some of the people I talked to in the East that I mentioned.

Q. What people?

A. Specifically to Curran.

Q. Curran said that, is that right?

A. Well, here is what Joe told me. He said he had negotiations with the NMU on issues that were much the same as existed on the West Coast, and that the union, the NMU, had been able to [7116] negotiate a satisfactory agreement with the employers without resorting to a strike, and he also told me the Communist Party was called for a national maritime strike against the Marshall Plan at that time, and in his opinion the West Coast strike was in large part due to that agitation, and that the political factor was much greater in the strike than the economic factor, and he cited his experience with his own union to show how he had been able to satisfactorily negotiate and bring about a settlement with what he characterized as some pretty tough shipowners. That was the basis of that statement.

Q. But Mr. Curran's union does not accept his advice. He simply sends goons out who bat them with baseball bats, doesn't he?

A. I have no knowledge of that particular situation. I have read something in the newspapers——

Q. You don't believe the newspapers?

A. About some fights they have had back there.

Q. You got that information, then, from Joe Curran? A. That is right.

Q. In other words, Joe Curran told you this matter about this strike, the 1948 strike being 80 per cent political, 20 per cent wages and hours and was directed primarily against the Marshall Plan? He told you that?

A. He expressed that general idea.

Q. Was that your only basis for arriving at that conclusion? [7117]

A. Well, the other basis was that I was familiar with what the current line of the CP was at that particular time, the Communist Party, and it certainly coincided.

Q. On page 6843 you were asked this:

> "Q. At the time when you were back in Washington and had your conversation with Mr. Clark, the maritime strike was on; that is correct, isn't it?
> "A. That is my recollection, yes, sir.
> "Q. Was that a legitimate strike?
> "A. I certainly believed it was."

Do you remember that statement?

A. Yes, and I think that statement is consistent with what I said, because when a group of guys was out on strike and included among the issues are improvement of their conditions and preservation of their union, regardless of how the strike might be originally instigated or organized, it is a legitimate strike and should be supported. That is my [7118] feeling.

Q. It was your opinion, now, when you were talking with Mr. Clark that the maritime strike was a legitimate strike, isn't that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. That's right.

Q. And it wasn't your opinion that it was 80 per cent political at that time, was it?

A. My opinion at that time had not crystallized on it, and the information I got from Mr. Curran helped crystallize the opinion that I had.

Q. What was Curran's occupation before he became boss of that union?

A. Curran was a seaman.

Q. And able bodied seaman?

A. Yes, sir. I believe he sailed as a boatswain for a while.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I believe he sailed as a boatswain for a while on intercoastal ships.

Q. With relation to that maritime strike, you say it was your belief that was a legitimate strike at the time you had this conversation with Mr. Clark—this is before you saw Curran—on page 6583:

> "Q. In the course of the discussion with Mr. Clark the maritime strike on the Pacific Coast was mentioned, wasn't it?
> "A. Yes, I blieve I mentioned it along these lines, that [7119] certainly nothing should be done until—if you contemplate anything, nothing should be done until the present strike is over, because it might be interpreted as a move by the Government to harm the strike, or words to that effect."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

> "There was some discussion, as I recall it, that Mr. Clark said this investigation would lead toward proceedings being taken by the Government against Mr. Bridges, and I stated, as I stated here a minute ago, that if such proceedings are taken, it would certainly be wrong to take them at a time when the union was on strike, because it would be interpreted as a move against the union."

Now, I want you to listen to this to see if you find any distinction between it, between the advice you gave Mr. Clark and what the Government actually did while the Hawaiian strike was on and while the warehouse strike in San Francisco was on. I want to see if you shape out a distinction for us now, because I am sure there must be one.

> "Q. In what way? I don't understand that. How would it be interpreted as a move against the unions?"

That is, for the Government to proceed against Mr. Bridges at that time. Here is your answer:

> "Well, the union or possibly some of the leadership of the union would say, 'Well, here is the Government moving in trying to break our strike by taking our officers away when the [7120] strike is on.'"

Did you say that?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. (Reading)

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

"Q. Do you think that that action would be capable of that interpretation?

"A. I think it would be, because that is why I pointed it out."

Now, do you remember having given that testimony?

A. I certainly do.

Q. Well, now, do you see any distinction between the Government proceeding against Mr. Bridges in November, 1948, being interpreted as a move to break the strike by "taking our officers away when the strike is on"—do you see any difference between that situation and the situation that developed in May of 1949 when the Hawaiian and warehouse strikes were on and the Government came in and proceeded against Mr. Bridges and took the officers away while the strike was on?

A. Well, Mr. Hallinan, I pointed out, I believe, to the Attorney General that such a move in 1948 would be interpreted by the unions, and I believe that was borne out in 1949 under additional strike situations, it was interpreted by the union, by certain leaders of the union, in that manner. So I——

Q. You know why the union interprets it that way now, don't you?

A. I can understand their attitude on the matter. [7121]

Q. Their sincere belief that that is what it is, is that right?

A. Well, I don't characterize the belief of the union; I mean their interpretation is there. I think it speaks for itself.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. All right. You also testified on page 6853:

> "I concede that attacks on Communism and Red-baiting are used as smoke screens for a number of things. I wouldn't deny that.
> "Q. For destroying perfectly legitimate unions, aren't they? A. That could be, yes.
> "Q. They have been used to put militant trade labor men out of jobs, isn't that right?
>
> "A. I don't recall any specific instances, but I wouldn't deny it.
> "Q. They have been used to put militant individual union leaders in jail, haven't they?
> "A. It might have, during strikes, yes, sir."

That was you testimony, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. You also stated that those statements were true, in the release in the Copeland matter:

> "Once this evidence is adduced the shipowners will set up a howl about signing agreements with the union. Then, of course, if the Red hunt is engineered properly, there will be plenty of inspired propaganda calculated [7122] to support their position."

A. I never said that. I think you are reading from a document.

Q. Listen; you will get it.

"Then will follow a campaign in the press, over the radio and in Congress to clean out the > maritime unions. The shipowners will then have the moral justification for any acts of violence necessary to break the unions and beat down wages again."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

That was in that release.

> "Q. The statements in it were pretty true, weren't they?

> "A. At that time, yes. I think it was a good statement."

That was your testimony, wasn't it?

A. At that time I was doing my best to be a good, active trade unionist and I was also doing my best to be a good, active Communist.

Q. You could be a good, active trade unionist and feel that way even if you were anti-Communist, isn't that right?

A. That, I think, is a matter of opinion. I think —well, I consider, for example, Philip Murray a good, active trade unionist and an effective leader of a union of several hundred thousand men.

Q. When it was to his interest he took the same position on Red-baiting as a union-smashing device, didn't he? A. Yes.

Q. Now he has changed his position and he now wants to use it as [7123] a tool to get Bridges and some other people who won't take orders from him, is that right?

A. My understanding of Philip Murray's present attitude is that he is first and foremost interested in the welfare of this country and the American trade union movement, and now the Communist Party line has changed and he considers it inimical to the American trade labor movement in this country and he is against the Communists. That is my understanding. That is his reasons as told to me by him.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Now, when you were questioned about this release that you said you had given to the San Francisco papers and phoned a copy ~~of~~ to Wilson down in Los Angeles——

A. Your Honor, in order to get this matter cleared up, may I suggest that Mr. Hallinan show me or indicate the release or the statement he is talking about, because there were a number of statements at that time. I am not sure as to the exact statement he is talking about.

Q. Let's read it to you:

> "Q. When you were tossing out press releases after your statements to the grand jury, and on May 29, 1949, you gave this little statement, didn't you:
> " 'The 1948 waterfront strike was 80 per cent political, 20 per cent wages, hours and working conditions. It was directed primarily to the Marshall Plan.'
> "Did you state that? [7124]
> "A. I don't know whether I stated those exact words.
> "Q. Do you want to refresh your recollection? A. I expressed some sentiment——
> "Q. I beg your pardon?
>
> "A. I expressed a sentiment along those lines. I don't know whether those were my exact words at the time. I say I expressed a sentiment along those general lines. I don't know whether those are my exact words at the time.

"Q. In other words, the sentiment that you expressed and publicized was this strike which you have testified about this morning, if your recollection serves you correctly, was a legitimate strike for wages and better conditions, and at that time you spread out to the general public that it was 80 per cent political, 20 per cent wages, hours and working conditions, and was directed primarily against the Marshall Plan, didn't you?

"A. (By you) That was my opinion at that time.

"Q. Is it now your opinion?

"A. To a certain degree, yes.

"Q. Where were you when you issued that press release?

"A. I believe I gave it to somebody on the telephone from my room in Half Moon Bay. That is my recollection.".

Now, do you remember that that was the statement?

A. Yes, I believe I remember later on that I stated that I thought I had given it to Eric Nelson or Eric Nielson of the Chronicle.

Q. Right following that I asked you:

"Q. Didn't you phone down to Mr. Wilson and read it off to him in Los Angeles from Mr. Donohue's office? A. Not that statement.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

"Q. You read off a statement from Mr. Donohue's office to Mr. Wilson over the telephone, didn't you?

"A. That is right; I did.

"Q. You phoned down at our expense—taxpayers generally—and told Mr. Wilson of this press release that you wanted him to run in the papers in Los Angeles, isn't that right?

"A. I gave him a copy of the statement I had issued here in San Francisco."

That was your testimony, wasn't it?

A. That is right, yes.

Q. You stated here that you read that statement off from Mr. Donohue's office; remember that?

A. Well, now, again, Mr. Hallinan, I don't know what statement you are talking about. Will you produce the statements you are talking about so I can identify them, because you were talking about two or three statements, and there you are asking about a statement. I don't know whether it is statement A or statement B or statement Z or whether as a matter of fact some of them exist at all.

Q. Then you said, when I asked you about the taxpayers paying [7126] the bill, you said you phoned from Mr. Donohue's room; you said, "I called from Mr. Donohue's hotel room and I believe Mr. Donohue paid the bill." Remember that?

A. I am not in a position to give any further answer until you clarify my mind, until you produce the statement you are talking about.

Q. You also told me you knew where the statement was and could get it and bring it in. Where is it? A. I don't have it.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Ask your counsel for it. They have that statement. What did you do with the statement after you finished phoning down to Los Angeles?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, did you give it to Mr. Donohue?

A. I would like to see the statement.

The Court: What did you have in mind, Mr. Rathborne, the chronology of the events incident to the issuance of the statement?

The Witness: Your Honor, Mr. Hallinan is questioning me as to my recollection about three different statements and he is referring to each one as "the statement," and I am not in a position to differentiate as between the statements, and so I may testify that I did a certain thing with one statemen, and it might be——

The Court: Then you ask him to specify the time and the [7127] place and the date of the statement as it is reflected in the transcript; is that what you wish?

The Witness: Yes, but the trouble is that it started when he first questioned me on it.

The Court: It started in May?

A. The problem, I think, now arose when Mr. Hallinan first questioned me on it in that he apparently was referring to two or three different statements and at the time I thought he was referring to one statement, and I am still confused on the issue. If the statements were here, I would be very happy to tell everything I knew about them.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Do you remember after that that you said that you would bring in the statement; that you knew about the statement and you would bring it in?

Mr. Donohue: I don't remember that. I remember him saying that he gave all the statements to the press.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): What did you do with the statement you read off in Donohue's room to Wilson? That is the one you were phoning long distance to Los Angeles. When you got through with the telephone conversation did you give it to Mr. Donohue? A. No, I don't think I did.

Q. Where did you put it?

A. I think I stuck it in my pocket.

Q. Where is it? [7128]

A. I haven't the faintest idea.

Q. You asked me to produce that statement—that statement you had in your pocket.

A. You could secure a copy of it, I am sure, by getting the file of the Call Bulletin.

Q. You secure them. You have the original. Why should I bother running errands when you have the original? Why should I go down to the Call Bulletin? Besides, I am not interested in what the Call Bulletin has. You have the one you phoned to George Wilson; you didn't give it to the Call Bulletin? A. I certainly did.

Q. It was the same statement, wasn't it?

A. I gave a number of statements to the Call Bulletin. I phoned one statement to Mr. Wilson.

Q. Where is that statement?

A. I don't know. I know where you can find it.

Q. Do you know where you can find it?

A. No, sir, I don't. I can probably dig up the files of the Call Bulletin or one of the other papers and find it.

Q. Now, you told us here about one of the reasons that you knew or believed that the strike on the West Coast was Communist-inspired was a conversation that you had had with Mr. Schneidermann; remember that?

A. I believe I said that—no, I don't remember testifying that way. My recollection is that I testified that I heard Mr. [7129] Schneidermann make a report regarding what the line of the Communist Party was.

Q. (Reading.)

> "Q. (Page 6954): You didn't bother to find that out before you released a smear on the unions, as you did when you gave them that write-up on May 29, 1949, is that right?"

—whether that was true or not; that was the lead-up to it.

> "A. (By you): The basis of my information regarding that was the fact that I had been present at a meeting where Mr. Schneidermann made a report in which he said that 'The job we have to do now is to prevent the clear crystallization of a foreign policy of this country that will be hostile to the Soviet Union, and we have to produce all kinds of activity > to prevent the crystallization of that policy, both in this country, France, China and a number of other places'."

Do you remember that?

A. I remember testifying that way.

Q. When did Mr. Schneidermann made that report?

A. My recollection is that he made that report sometime in 1946.

Q. Sometime in 1946?

A. The early part of it.

Q. Whom did he make that to? To you personally? [7130]

A. My recollection is that he made that report so-called God's Committee when he returned from the East from attending some what they call plenum, I believe.

Q. Let me ask you this: Wasn't that doctrine and that principle widely enunciated publicly by a great number of people who weren't Communists or connected with the Communist Party at all?

A. What doctrine?

Q. The doctrine that nobody wanted the crystallizing of a foreign policy in this country hostile to the Soviet Union?

A. Well, I think it was.

Q. Do you want a policy in this country hostile to the Soviet Union? A. No, sir, but——

Q. Do you think that it is only the unions who don't want to involve ourselves in a war with the Soviet Union?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Mr. Hallinan, if you are going to question me about the report of Mr. Schneidermann, there was quite a bit more to it.

Q. That is what you said on that subject?

A. That is right.

Q. This is what you gave us. Is it your impression now that the mark of a Communist or one of the marks of a Communist is that he doesn't want this country to get into a war with the Soviet Union?

A. Certainly not. I don't think anybody wants to get this [7131] country into war with the Soviet Union.

Q. Is it your impression that a person is a Communist if he doesn't want this country to get into war with the Soviet Union?

A. No, not necessarily.

Q. Let me ask you this: Is this a necessary sign of a person being a Communist if he comes out publicly and says that people who are short of food and other primary necessities of life and believe that these can be obtained by the overthrow of any government or economic system which doesn't make them available; that today people who have so long borne poverty with resignation as something inevitable have come to believe that if they can take their countries into their own hands and establish a new order they can abolish hunger and poverty? This revolt against hunger and poverty is fundamental because of the upsurge in humanity.

Do you think that is necessarily a Communist principle? A. Not necessarily, no, sir.

Q. That came out of the paper in a statement by Lord Boyd Orr of the United Nations, an English nobleman. You don't think that is necessarily Communistic? A. No, sir.

Q. I suppose you think it is Communistic, though, if a person wanted the United States Government to recognize the new Communist regime in China? [7132]

A. No. I would be in favor of that.

Q. You would be in favor of that?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you do anything or make any protest when you read on Saturday that war planes that we have given the Nationalist government of China had bombed Canton and killed 700 people?

A. I didn't read about it.

Q. Did you know that the day before, on Friday, they bombed Shanghai and killed 100 people?

A. I don't recall reading that, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Well, I don't think that you would have to worry anyhow, because they are using the new discriminatory bombs that only kill Communists and their kids, you understand. You don't think those things are necessarily Communistic?

A. I testified on that point. [7133]

Q. And even now when you are anti-Communist and think that Communists are a menace to this country, you say the United States should recognize the Communist Government in China, do you?

A. I think from the practical point of view that would be the best policy for us to adopt, yes, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. It would start trade up again, wouldn't it?

A. It would certainly help our foreign trade.

Q. It would revive the San Francisco waterfront, is that right?

A. It certainly should help.

Q. You are unable to tell us now why you were in Mr. Donohue's room at the time you sent out this release, is that right?

A. My recollection is I went up there to see him, and while I was there I called up Harry Wilson on the telephone.

Q. I asked you the other day if you had talked to any other witnesses or prospective witnesses with regard to testifying in this case, and I also asked you if you had furnished the name of any prospective witnesses to any of the government agents. Now, did you tip off the prosecution to a lady named Louisa Morena Bemis?

A. What was that name again?

Q. You knew Louisa Morena, didn't you?

A. Oh, Louisa Morena?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, I knew Louisa Morena. She served on the executive [7134] committee of the CIO.

Q. Mrs. Bemis?

A. I guess that is her name.

Q. She was a member of the Communist Party?

A. It is my recollection she was, yes, sir.

Q. You know the agent went down to see her and her husband and told her they had gotten that information from you, don't you?

A. No, sir, I do not know that.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did you give any agent that information?

A. About what? About her being a Communist?

Q. Yes.

A. I believe I was asked about it, yes.

Q. Who asked you?

A. I think Mr. Barber asked me.

Q. How long ago? A. Several months.

Q. Did he name her or did you name her?

A. I believe he did.

Q. He named her first?

A. I believe he asked me if I knew her.

Q. And you gave him some information concerning her, is that right?

A. I said I believe I knew her or had known her.

Q. Did you tell him that she could furnish some information against Harry Bridges? [7135]

A. No, I don't believe I did.

Q. You did, didn't you?

A. No, sir, I don't recall saying that.

Q. In what connection did you mention Mrs. Bemis?

A. He asked me if I knew her and I said yes, I had known her. She served on the executive board of the CIO.

Q. Did Mr. Barber tell you that they had interviewed Mrs. Bemis and had told her that if she did not furnish information against Mr. Bridges that they would get her deported? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know that she is up for deportation right now, that they issued a warrant—do you find this amusing—that they have issued a warrant already and are trying to deport that woman because she would not come in and testify against Harry Bridges? Do you know that?

A. No, I know she has—during the time I knew her she was under some sort of investigation or some proceedings or something with respect to her citizenship. I don't know. That is the extent of my knowledge regarding that lady's contact with the Immigration Service.

Q. She had a little more guts that some of these other poor fellows who could be twisted in coming in here and saying things, is that right?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question.

The Court: Objection sustained. [7136]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Did you sic them onto Frank Slaby?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question, if the Court please.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Did you give them information regarding Frank Slaby?

A. Not particularly.

Q. Well, generally?

A. Well, Frank Slaby's name was discussed with me, yes, sir.

Q. And you furnished them information concerning him, didn't you?

A. I told them that he had been on the state CIO executive board.

Q. You sent these Immigration inspectors to interview him and to try to get him to say something against Harry Bridges, didn't you?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. How about Roberta Lovell? Did you give them information about her?

A. Roberta who?

Q. Lovell. You know her. You talked to her yourself and tried to induce her to be a witness against Harry Bridges, didn't you?

A. That is an absolutely false statement, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. Do you know whom I mean?

A. I believe you are talking about Roberta Jones? [7137]

Q. Her name was Lovell. Now she is married to a man named Jones. Did you have an interview with her? A. I talked with her, certainly.

Q. On the subject of testifying against Harry Bridges?

A. No, it was not on the subject. As a matter of fact——

Q. Was that subject mentioned at all?

A. Do you want me to relate?

Q. No, I asked you was that subject mentioned at all?

A. My testifying against Bridges was mentioned.

Q. In the conversation with Mrs. Lovell?

A. That is right.

Q. Or Mrs. Jones. It was you who suggested to Mr. Barber that Mr. Wilson could be got to testify, wasn't it? A. No, sir, it was not.

Q. You had a discussion with Mr. Barber about Mr. Wilson before Mr. Barber interviewed Mr. Wilson, isn't that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. I don't know when Mr. Barber interviewed Mr. Wilson.

Q. Who do you know interviewed him?

A. I don't know—I don't know for sure who talked to him. As I stated previously, I saw Mr. Wilson when he was up here.

Q. What is your information?

A. What do you mean, what is my information?

Q. As to who interviewed him.

A. I believe it was Mr. Barber but I don't know. I mean——

Q. Did Mr. Barber discuss with you whether Mr. Wilson knew [7138] anything or whether he was in a position where he would be forced to testify?

A. He certainly didn't discuss with me anything about Mr. Wilson being forced to testify.

Q. Have you ever met Frank Hennessy, the United States Attorney here?

A. I may have. I believe at the Democratic Party meetings around here years ago I have met him.

Q. I mean since this case started.

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Have you ever been given any reason why the Immigration Department should have procured a private lawyer to come here and prosecute Harry Bridges instead of using the regularly appointed United States attorney? A. No, I have not.

Q. What is that? A. No, I have not.

Mr. Hallinan: Might we take the recess?

The Court: We will take the noon recess, ladies and gentlemen, and resume at 2:00 o'clock this afternoon. The same admonition to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [7139]

Tuesday, March 7, 1950—2:00 P.M.

The Clerk: The United States of America vs. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The witness on the stand is

MERVYN RATHBORNE

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Is the last money you got the amount you received on the 31st of January or the 9th of January, whatever it was?

A. No, I think there has been one more payment since then.

Q. Here is one voucher dated January 31, 1950, for $425. Have you received some more than that?

A. No, that is the last one, my recollection is.

Q. This is March 6 or 7. You have received nothing in the meantime?

A. No; there has been one since that, Mr. Hallinan, is my recollection, one during February.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. My recollection is that there has been one check received during February.

~~Q. How much?~~

A. I think it was 425; that is my recollection.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. $425 in February?

A. Either late February or early March; I am not certain. [7140]

Mr. Hallinan: Could we have that voucher?

Mr. Donohue: It may be that the copy has not been returned from Washington. As I understand it, the original is signed; that and a copy are sent to Washington, where the check is prepared; the check is then forwarded to the witness, and the duplicate is returned. Apparently it has not been received.

Mr. Hallinan: How much was it?

Mr. Donohue: I have no idea.

Mr. Hallinan: Will you ask Mr. Barber?

Mr. Donohue: I will have him check it.

Mr. Hallinan: Can't he tell us right now?

Mr. Barber: I don't know offhand.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): You received it either in February or March? A. That is right.

Q. March—this is the 6th or 7th of March.

A. The 7th, I believe, isn't it?

Q. Did you receive it within the last week?

A. I would say probably the last ten days—within the last ten days.

Q. Say sometime in February?

A. Well, I say either toward the end of February or perhaps the first day or two of March.

Q. And that for $425?

A. That is my recollection, yes, sir. [7141]

Q. Now you attended the 1947 convention of the CIO at Santa Cruz, didn't you? A. I did.

Q. At that time you made a statement when

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Bridges made a talk about you and he presented you with a check of $250? You made a little talk of acknowledgment, didn't you?

A. I did, yes, sir.

Q. And it was Mr. Bridges who handed you the check, wasn't it? A. That's right.

Q. And you said in this talk that "The CIO can be successful in extending democracy and defeating reaction which confronts us today"; do you remember that? A. Yes, I——

Q. What did you mean by "reaction which confronts us today"?

A. Well, I meant the forces that fight and oppose what I consider to be the progressive and American program of CIO.

Q. You didn't consider Communism to be a reactionary force, did you?

A. Well, at that time I considered it to a certain degree reactionary?

Q. Reactionary?

A. To a certain degree, yes.

Q. That isn't what you were talking about when you were urging the CIO to defeat the "reaction which is confronting us today"?

A. Not necessarily, no. [7142]

Q. Do you remember Mike Quill making a talk at the convention? A. Yes, I do.

Q. You were present when he made that talk, weren't you?

A. My recollection is that I was present during a portion of it. I don't recall whether I was there during the entire time.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: Will you ask him to read the two excerpts, the ones marked on opposite pages with brackets.

A. It is rather difficult for me to read up here and read into a microphone. Did you want me to read it out loud or read them to myself?

Q. No, no, just read them to yourself.

A. Oh, I see. I beg your pardon. I misunderstood you.

Q. Now, did you agree with Mr. Quill at that time in his statement that "One other point that troubles me is Red-baiting. It is a disease"—pardon me. Mr. Quill isn't a Communist, is he?

A. I don't know that he is.

Q. Oh, he is very hostile to Communism, isn't he?

A. As a matter of fact, I think—I don't know that he is or that he isn't at this particular time.

Mr. Hallinan: (Reading)

> "One other point that troubles me is Red-baiting. It is a disease we have in the East. You have it here, too. A great cross-section of Americans have been aroused by Red-baiting. We find it among our own CIO workers. [7143] We should be be patient with them and educate them. When employers use Red-baiting we should lash back at them with all the strength at our command. Within our own union ranks, we should be patient with honest workers and show them that Red-baiting is more than often the divisive tactic of employers to split our ranks and keep us in chains. With honest workers, be patient. And with honest leaders, be patient. When you meet a pie-card bum who represents nobody, fight back and root him out and boot him out, because he has no place in the labor movement. If you do this and stand up to be counted, and if you give the honest leadership in your organization real support, and if you make your financial reports regularly and give your leadership both on the industrial and political fields the support they need, then we can look to the future with confidence.

"This Red-baiting, Jew-baiting, labor-baiting and Negro-baiting is not the thing that will unite America. The thing that will unite America is what you are working for here—hours, wages, working conditions. The people will not fail you. And before very many elections roll over, we will go back to the New Deal, to the bona fide Wagner Act, to proper wages, hours and proper Social Security. We will go back to the American Party of Roosevelt and Henry Wallace. If we do all that, we will defeat the Taft-Hartley Act, the Tafts and the Hartleys, and all the people they stand for."

Did you hear Mr. Quill give that statement?

A. I don't recall whether I did or wherther I didn't.

Q. Do you agree with its sentiment?

A. Not every word of it, no, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did you hear him in the same speech say this—the other thing you read:

> "On the Marshall Plan, we who come from New York will support the policy laid down by the Boston convention. Sure; we want to feed the starving people of Europe. Sure, we are against the third World War. Sure, we want to give surplus to starving people all over the world. Sure, we want to give them machinery and equipment to build a democracy in their own countries, and a world of peace. But we are suspicious when we see some of the gentlemen who are shouting loudest for the Taft-Hartley Bill and the Marshall Plan. We are suspicious when Herbert Hoover comes all the way from California to the White House, and then goes to Europe just like in the old days, and then comes back and says we must reindustrialize the Ruhr. We remember what happened the last time when Herbert Hoover told the American people that the Ruhr should be built up. We want to give food, but we want it to be given through the United Nations, and we don't want supplies given Europe to [7145] be used for aggression purposes."

Do you agree with that statement?

A. I do not agree with every single sentiment expressed by Mr. Quill in that or any other speech, Mr. Hallinan. [7145-A]

The Court: Show that to the witness.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, I have no objection to the witness seeing the document, but I again call the Court's attention to the fact that Mr. Hallinan is trying to introduce the testimony of a witness who is not here, by a purported statement of that witness, one, in the newspaper, and another, by some telephone call from some unknown person in New York City.

Mr. Hallinan: We will get to that in a moment. Your Honor will remember that when Mr. Bridges was being cross-examined by Mr. Donohue, a great many statements were read out to Mr. Bridges that he was asked whether he had read, and so forth. For instance, one is this:

> "May I read you another statement by the President of the United States: 'This Communist threat of force——
> "Mr. Hallinan: Just a minute, if the Court please. He is doing exactly what he was told not to do.
> "Mr. Donohue: Mr. Bridges has seen this, if your Honor please.
> "Mr. Hallinan: That does not mean he is entitled to read it out, the editorial of the paper, the message of the President or whatever it may be.
> "The Court: I asked specifically on that question. I understand you are reading a direct quote.
> "Mr. Donohue: A quote of the President of the United States [7146] on the subject of Communism.

"The Court: Mr. Bridges, may I ask you, have you read the quoted article?

"A. I read through the whole article there pretty rapidly and briefly. My answer, incidentally, which I just gave, was intended to cover the whole article.

"Mr. Donohue: May I read a quotation, if your Honor please? I have a right to ask this witness——

"Mr. Hallinan: He can ask him but not put in the words of another person.

"Mr. Donohue: I am going to ask him if he agrees with the statement of the President of the United States.

"Mr. Hallinan: How do we know what he has stated on the subject? We have to have the whole message, not special excerpts taken out. As a matter of fact, counsel has been the one who has been sustaining Communism and Communists here all throughout the case.

"The Court: Mr. Bridges said he read the direct quote. You can ask him about it."

And thereupon Mr. Donohue went ahead and asked a great many questions on it.

Mr. Donohue: The distinction Mr. Hallinan fails to make, if your Honor please, although I am sure it is apparent to the Court, number one, Mr. Bridges is a defendant. This witness is only a witness. Number two, Mr. Bridges has denied he was a member of [7147] the Communist Party, in consequence of which we had a full right to examine into his philosophy and his belief, including the question of whether or not he agreed with a statement on foreign policy affecting the Soviet Union made by the President of the United States, which is not pertinent comparative matter to the instant matter here.

The Court: I will meet the situation when it arises. I have no knowledge on it now.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I see those again?

Q. Now, you have read these quotations, haven't you?

A. I have read the paper, parts of it.

Q. Have you discussed with Mr. Barber or Mr. Kaiser any statement made by Mr. Ray regarding the testimony before the grand jury or the testimony you have given here?

A. No, I have not.

Q. Even after I asked you the questions on it this morning you said nothing to either of those people about it? A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did you talk to Mr. Donohue about it?

A. I did not.

Q. Did you make any effort to find out if Mr. Ray had said the things I told you he was quoted in the paper as saying? A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. You did not ask that? A. No. [7148]

Q. Did either of them tell you he had or had not said those things?

A. Oh, no, I beg your pardon. Going down the elevator at lunch time I asked Mr. Donohue, I said, "Did you read any statement or did you hear about any statement?"

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

And he said, "Apparently an item appeared in the New York Times," or something like that.

Q. In which Mr. Ray said you had lied on the witness stand? A. He didn't say that.

Q. What did he say?

A. He said apparently a statement appeared in the New York Times in which Ray said you had not discussed with him testimony in the Bridges case.

Q. That you had not discussed? A. Yes.

Q. But you have testified under oath that you had discussed it with him?

A. No, I did not. I did not say I discussed the testimony. I said I had discussed the issues, the background and the reasons, and I sought his advice.

Q. Did you discuss with him your appearance on the witness stand in the Bridges case or appearing as a witness?

A. On that point I told you, Mr. Hallinan, and I will repeat, that I related to him the substance of my conversations in Washington and sought his opinion on the matter. [7149]

Q. You discussed with him your appearance against Mr. Bridges, didn't you?

A. That is right, but I didn't discuss with him any possible testimony.

Q. Did Mr. Donohue tell you what Mr. Ray said——

Mr. Donohue: I object to it, if your Honor please, because there is no evidence upon which any of us can conclude that Mr. Ray said anything that is written on that piece of paper Mr. Hallinan has.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, I will have to sustain the objection. That might be rebuttal or surrebuttal, as you please to call it, but certainly the newspaper account of what Mr. Ray allegedly said——

Mr. Hallinan: Now I am asking what Mr. Donohue told him, not what Mr. Ray said. I am only refreshing his recollection from this article.

The Witness: I have related the substance of my conversation with Mr. Donohue on that point. That is all that happened.

Q. Didn't Mr. Donohue state to you that what Mr. Ray said was that you had not at any time or anywhere consulted Mr. Ray or discussed with him his attitude as to your appearance as a government witness against Harry Bridges?

A. No, he did not.

Q. He did not tell you?

A. No, sir. [7150]

Q. Did you have a discussion with Mr. Donohue or anyone else as to whether Mr. Ray had not stated before the grand jury——

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please, to Mr. Hallinan referring to any purported or alleged newspaper account of what Mr. Ray may have said was his testimony before the grand jury.

Mr. Hallinan: This is a direct quote now Mr. Donohue was permitted to read off to Mr. Bridges in his cross-examination.

~~The Court: That was an entirely different situa~~tion, as I see it. I can't anticipate what you have in mind here, but I think that, in the light of the examination of Mr. Bridges, both direct and cross-examination, and the attempt on the part of the prosecution to elicit from him information concerning his philosophy with respect to the Communist Party and the general tenor of the same, that we were confronted then with a situation altogether different from that which confronts the Court at the present time. I will therefore have to sustain the objection.

Mr. Hallinan: Let me ask you this: When you had the conversation with Mr. Donohue concerning Mr. Ray, did you state that Mr. Ray was lying?

A. I related the substance of my conversation with Mr. Donohue. To answer your question, I would just be repeating it.

Q. Let me ask you this: When you had the conversation with the two young ladies down at Half Moon Bay, Miss Murray and Mrs. [7151] Texeira, the girls who had been friends of yours, whom you had gone out with, dined with——

A. They both had been employees also.

Q. They had been friends of yours. You told us that before you came out of the Dominick's Cafe you had this discussion with Mrs. Texeira touching your testimony and your reasons for testifying, and so forth. A. Touching my reasons.

Q. Up to that time no statement had been made by you disclosing your reasons or disclosing what your testimony was going to be, is that correct?

A. No, that is not correct.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. When she went out of the cafe——

A. I don't understand your question.

Q. Withdraw it. When she went out of the cafe, she was already feeling apparently rather badly toward you, is that right? Unfriendly?

A. Yes. I mean, we were on opposite sides of the issue. It was very clear to me, and she so stated.

Q. You testified already that at the time you left Jean Murray's house some weeks before that she was unfriendly to you at the time you left?

A. That is right, she was angry.

Q. When you came out you say you got into the automobile? A. That is right. [7152]

Q. Are you sure you did that?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Did you see any other automobile in the neighborhood?

A. There were several cars parked along the main street there, yes, sir.

Q. You got into the automobile and you say you sat where?

A. My recollection is—I am sure I was sitting on the side next to the curb, myself.

Q. What?

A. I was sitting on the side next to the curb. The car was parked headed north and I was sitting on the east side of the car.

Q. Who was behind the wheel?

A. My recollection is Mrs. Texeira was behind the wheel and Miss Murray was in the middle.

(Testimony of Merwyn Rathborne.)

Q. When you came up to the car now, where was Miss Murray seated?

A. She was seated in the car.

Q. In what car?

A. Well, in the front seat.

Q. Was she driving the car apparently? Was she seated in the driver's seat?

A. I don't recall whether she was seated in the driver's seat—my recollection is when I got in, I got in from the curb side and she had to move over. That would have placed her on the [7153] side, that is, next to the driver, but I am not certain of that.

Q. How about Mrs. Texeira? How did Mrs. Texeira get in? Did she get in on the opposite side or the same side you got in?

A. It is my belief she got in from the driver's side, the side that was away from the street, that is, away from the curb, on the west side, I will put it.

Q. You sat there for how long?

A. Quite a number of minutes. It is hard——

Q. How many minutes?

A. I think the total time elapsed from the time I left my house until the time I returned was between 45 minutes and an hour. That is my best estimate.

Q. How long did you sit in the automobile?

A. That would have made it probably, oh, 20 or 30 minutes probably.

Q. Twenty to 30 minutes in the automobile?

A. Yes, sir.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. Did Miss Murray speak to you when you came up to the automobile?

A. When I got in she did.

Q. Had you had anything to drink before you left Dominick's and went out to the car?

A. Mrs. Texeira and I had two—I forget what it was—they were hot drinks. [7154]

Q. What were they?

A. I think it was hot toddies. That is my recollection.

Q. Had you had anything to drink that day before you met Mrs. Texeira?

A. I am certain that I did not.

Q. What is that?

A. I am certain that I did not.

Q. You sat in the car then and you had this conversation with her? A. Yes, sir, we did.

Q. When you went back up to your house did you tell your wife immediately what the conversation was with these two girls?

A. As I related, she was just about ready for dinner when the telephone call rang, when the telephone call came in, and when I returned we had dinner, and she asked—during dinner she said, "What happened?" I said, "Wait until the kids go to bed and I will tell you." Our two youngsters were eating, that is, and so as soon as the youngsters were in bed I told her about it.

Q. You told her? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You told her you had never had any relations with the two girls, did you?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please. It makes no difference what he told her.

Mr. Hallinan: I think it does. It is his narrative of the [7155] events that transpired.

The Court: I sustained the objection heretofore to the question addressed to the witness.

Mr. Hallinan: That was not the question addressed to him. The question was had he. Now I ask him what he stated.

The Court: As to what he stated to his wife.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: Immediately after this conversation.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: I will allow it.

The Witness: Will you repeat the question?

(Question read.)

A. Yes, I did.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Why didn't you tell the two girls, "Come on up to the house and tell my wife of it"?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please. The question is argumentative.

Mr. Hallinan: It goes to his state of mind.

The Court: Overruled.

The Witness: I probably should have done it. I got so angry, so mad when they pulled this thing on me, my impulse, which I followed, was to say, "All right, if that is the way you want to do it"——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): How long after you got in the automobile was this subject broached to you? [7156] A. Just before I left.

Q. Well, now, here you had argued the matter with Mrs. Texeira in Dominick's already, is that right?

A. No, the conversation in Dominick's was along the lines, she asked me, "What are your reasons, why are you taking this position? What are you doing this for?" I gave her quite a number of reasons, an explanation, if you will, and when it was practically all over, she said, "I don't accept your explanation," or words to that effect. "You haven't convinced me along that line. My sentiments are on the side of the defense in this case."

Q. The only reason you can think of why you did not invite these girls to come up and speak to your wife was that you got so mad and so upset, that was your attitude and you walked away?

A. That was my impulse and that is what I did, yes. [7157]

Q. Then you went squealy on them to Mr. Donohue the next day?

A. I told Mr. Donohue the next day.

Q. I have a few questions here concerning your credibility, so if you will listen to these very closely and let us see if you have an explanation of them. You will remember that you were questioned—this was on page 6772—as to your calling at Miss Murray's apartment on Geary Street around the time that you were subpoenaed before the grand jury, or, rather, that you testified before the grand jury. Do you remember you discussed that in your cross-examination?

A. I said it was approximately that time, my recollection was either before or after.

Q. Do you remember I asked you this:

> "Q. Did you have any discussion with her then about this case? A. No, sir.
> "Q. Did you have any conversation with her about your appearance before the grand jury or that you intended to appear before the grand jury? A. No, sir; I did not."

Do you remember giving that testimony?

A. I believe I do, yes, sir.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. Yes, I remember. [7158]

Q. And then I said to you:

> "Q. Do you know anything about dictographing? A. Dictographing?
>
> "Q. Yes. A. No, sir.
> "Q. You have never set up one?
> "A. No.
> "Q. Have you ever been distographed yourself?"
> You said, "I don't know. You mean—I have seen a dictograph machine, if that is what you mean.
> "Q. Have you ever heard your own voice read off from one of them? A. No, sir."

That was your testimony, wasn't it?

A. If that is what the record shows, that is right.

Q. That was your testimony, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not just what the record shows. Then you were asked some more questions about this conversation with Miss Murray and you said, "I might have discussed the national CIO with her and its attitude toward Mr. Bridges." Do you remember that? A. That's right.

Q. (Reading):

> "Q. Well, did you tell Miss Murray in any sort of words that you didn't know whether or not Harry Bridges ever had [7159] joined the Communist Party?
> "A. I don't recollect any such conversation, no, sir.
> "Q. You don't recollect whether you said it or not?
> "A. That's right. I remember discussing Mr. Bridges to some extent there, and when I talked to her, but I don't recollect any such statement."

Do you remember that?

A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. All right. And now, here is what you said:

> "What I discussed with her very largely, Mr. Hallinan, she wanted to know my reasons for either going or testifying or going to testify. And we discussed that. That was the main burden of the discussion."

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Do you remember that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading):

"Q. Well, what was said?

"A. I told her my reasons.

"Q. What did you tell her?

"A. I told her that I thought that the Communist Party was harmful to American labor. That has been my—I finally reached that conviction."

Do you remember that? A. Yes.

Q. All right. So then after you had had this dictograph stratagem pulled on you, you [7160] then said:

"She wanted to know my reasons for either going or testifying or going to testify."

That is right, isn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. But you didn't say that. First you denied it, didn't you? A. No, I didn't deny it.

Q. All right.

A. I think you will see, if you will read the first answers carefully, you will see that the two were not exclusive.

Q. Then you testified on page 6782:

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

"A. Yes, I had an argument with her to the extent that she was trying to prevail upon me not to embark upon this course of action or not to follow it, and that I said I was going to do it. And we argued about that for some time.

"Q. Did you have any conversation with her She explained the reasons why she thought I shouldn't.

Q. What reasons did she give you? What did she say?

A. Well, as I have related here, my best recollection is that she thought it was the wrong thing, she said she thought it would be harmful to the labor movement and that it was not the right thing to do.

Q. What did she say, how it would affect yourself, according to her judgment?

A. I don't—she said that I would lose a lot of friends. I remember that statement

Q. Was she speaking to you in a kindly way, a friendly way, [7161] trying to persuade you out of the course you were embarking on?

A. To a certain extent, yes. She was, I would say, angry."

Do you remember that testimony?

A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. All right. Now, here are the two statements that I want to see how you reconcile them. In between them came this question I asked you about the dictograph machine.

> "Q. Did you have any discussions with her about this case? A. No, sir.
> "Q. Did you have any conversation with her about your appearance before the grand jury or that you intended to appear before the grand jury? A. No, sir, I did not."

Now, the next one after the dictograph:

> "No, what I discussed with her very largely, Mr. Hallinan, she wanted to know my reasons for either going or testifying or going to testify. And we discussed that. That was the main burden of the discussion."

Do you remember that?

A. Uh-huh (affirmative).

Q. Now, Mr. Rathborne, as a matter of fact, you never have been a member of the Communist Party, have you?

A. I testified and I was a member of the Communist Party from 1935 until early in 1947. [7162]

Q. When did you testify to that?

A. I believe on direct examination.

Q. You mean in this court? A. Yes.

Q. You testified to it under oath, as you understand it?

A. Well, I was under oath at the time, and I will state that now.

Q. In other words, being sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, you testify that for a certain period of time you had been a member of the Communist Party, is that right?

A. That's right. I repeat that testimony now.

Q. Back in 1940, and subsequently in 1941, being put under oath and sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, first before the Un-American Activities Committee of Congress, and next before the Tenney Committee of the State Legislature, being asked that question, you denied that you had ever been a mmber of the Communist Party; isn't that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And the two answers embraced the same period, isn't that right?

A. Well, yes; I mean the same period is included.

Q. You were under oath on both occasions?

A. That's right.

Q. Do you know of any way—can you tell me any way by which [7163] one can determine which time you were telling the truth?

Mr. Donohue: I object to that question, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: It goes to his state of mind.

The Court: He was asked similar questions heretofore. I will allow it. I think he answered the question heretofore.

A. As far as my appearance in this proceeding, I can only say what I said before: It is up to the Court and the jury based on the evidence that I give and the evidence that other witnesses give, to determine the value or the weight and the truthfulness of my testimony.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): We are not concerned with that.

A. And I will state, if you want me to, that I am doing the utmost to adhere strictly to the truth in this testimony I am giving now.

Q. You said that down at Washington, didn't you, and you said that before the Tenney Committee. What I want to know is this——

A. Apparently in that there is an irrecon—a contadiction which you cannot reconcile.

Q. In other words, what I want to know is, Can you suggest any clue by which a person—I am not talking about the case, but you yourself—by which a person can tell whether you were lying in your appearance here or whether you were lying before the Un-American Activities Committee?

A. I have testified and admitted that I did not give proper, [7164] right, correct testimony before those two committees.

Q. Well, now, is there any way that we could know that, say tomorrow or next week, you won't testify that you gave false testimony here and that your testimony before the Un-American Activities Committee was true?

A. I don't know how that question can be answered, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. What I would like to do is find some sort of reconciliation to solve everybody's difficulty, the jurors, lawyers, court, everybody—that is all. You know of no clue that will identify the situation, is that right?

A. I want to thank you for being so solicitous of the difficulty——

Q. I am not concerned about you. I am concerned about whether the jury can solve it, whether you are a liar now or whether you were a liar then. Let me ask you this: You say, you testified here that the Communist Party instructs its members to lie on occasion in court, is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. Under oath? A. That is right.

Q. Points out to them that they are entitled to lie when they are sworn to tell the truth in a court; that is correct, is it? A. That is right.

Q. And is there a limitation upon what they are supposed to lie about, or are they entitled to lie about anything so long as [7165] their interest or judgment seems to dictate that course?

A. No, I don't think that is ever the situation at all, Mr. Hallinan. My understanding of it—I can get into a very long, involved answer on this one. I am trying to be short and brief—my understanding of the situation is that that procedure is considered proper in order to protect and defend the Party, to keep without—not make known the members who are not supposed to be known, and generally in the interests of the Party and its program. That is my understanding of the reasons for such—

Q. All right. Then under that procedure or philosophy, a Communist—let us take a person who is

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

admittedly a member of the Communist Party, he is, under that philosophy, instructed or entitled to take the stand and testify that even though he is a member of the Communist Party, he will testify that he is not a member of the Communist Party, correct, just like you did in the Congressional——

A. Yes.

Q. Sure.

A. I thought you said someone who was openly a member.

Q. Let us say a person who was secretly a member of the Communist Party, or even openly—let us say a person who is a member of the Communist Party, he is permitted to take the witness stand and testify under oath that he is not a member of the Communist Party, is that right?

A. Well, that has happened, yes, and that is—— [7166]

Q. Under this rule that you told us about, this instruction, this philosophy?

A. Under the philosophy, as I stated previously, the courts and other judicial, legislative and administrative agencies of the Government are considered to be the tools of the exploiting class.

Q. How about the courts?

A. The courts included, to keep the working people under subjection and suppression.

Q. We got that already. Here is what I wanted to know. A. I am——

The Court: Permit him to continue.

A. Under that procedure and under that philosophy, if you want quotations on it I can give you——

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Mr. Hallinan: Just like your own recollection.

A. ——the books you can find it in, that it is perfectly proper from the ideological point of view and policy point of view, to utilize all democratic means and misuse them to the end furthering the interests of the Communist Party.

Q. It is my understanding of what you have already said, in other words, a person who is a member of the Communist Party is entitled to lie under oath in order to achieve the purposes of the Communist Party, isn't that right?

A. That is generally right.

Q. Let us get back to the original situation. Therefore, a [7167] person who is a Communist under such direction or education can deny under oath that he is a member of the Communist Party, can't he? A. He can, yes.

Q. He can deny that another member is a member of the Communist Party?

A. That is right.

Q. Even though that person might be a member of the Communist Party? A. That is right.

Q. He can also say that another person who is not a member of the Communist Party is a member of the Communist Party, can't he?

A. Well, I don't know of any particular incident, but following the line of reasoning, I would say that would be logical.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. All right. He could also state falsely that he had left the Communist Party, couldn't he?

A. I suppose he could.

Q. In other words, being still in the Communist Party, he could pretend that he had left the Communist Party, couldn't he?

A. I presume he could. I don't know of any instance of that kind.

Q. And having left the Communist Party, he could pretend that he was still in the Communist Party, couldn't he?

A. I guess any one of those combinations of circumstances would [7168] be covered by the general——

Q. And he could, if there were a meeting of certain persons, he could falsely state that it was not a Communist meeting, couldn't he?

A. I believe that is right, yes, sir.

Q. And he could falsely state it was a Communist meeting couldn't he?

A. I believe he could——

Q. And there wouldn't be—withdraw that. Is there any way that another Communist could know whether that particular Communist was telling the truth or not?

A. Not unless he had discussed it with him in advance and advised him of the testimony that he was going to give.

Q. In other words, just seeing the person sitting on the witness tand, it would be impossible to tell whether he was telling the truth on those matters or not, isn't that correct?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Under those circumstances, that would be correct.

Q. So that it would be quite impossible to tell, then, from the statements under oath of a Communist himself, a man who was a member of the Communist Party, first, whether or not he was at the time he testified on the witness stand actually a Communist; that is correct, isn't it?

A. In certain instances, under certain conditions, where there is a matter affecting the Communist Party, its interest or its membership and the testimony might adversely affect it, that [7169] would be true then.

Q. And it would be impossible to tell whether he had lied about the Communist Party from just seeing him on the witness stand, is that right?

A. Well, following that reasoning, certainly.

Q. And it would be impossible to tell that another person whom he identified as not being a Communist was in fact not a Communist, isn't that correct?

A. I believe we have been all through this just a minute ago.

Q. I am getting at it in a little different form.

A. The same questions you asked in connection with the other question, in my judgment, apply in this form that you are now presenting them.

Q. Then it would be also impossible to tell if the Communist on the witness stand said a person was a member of the Communist Party whether that statement was true or not, wouldn't it?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. If a man was up there for a reason and had been instructed and told and advised by the Party not to give certain testimony or to deny certain facts that were true, yes, that would be the situation.

Q. Then looking at him on the witness stand you couldn't tell whether he had been instructed or not, could you? A. No, you couldn't.

Q. In other words, there wouldn't be any difference in the manner in which he testified from just an ordinary witness [7170] committing perjury on the witness stand, is that right?

A. That is right. That has been brought out in a number of legal cases, I believe, particularly the Whittaker Chambers case, the same situation.

Q. So then it would be quite impossible, granting a person had been a member of the Communist Party, trained in the Communist Party philosophy, it would be quite impossible to determine on matters involving the Communist Party or Communists whether he was telling the truth on the witness stand or not, isn't that right?

A. If the man at the time he testified was a disciplined Communist, devoted to the Communist Party interests and cause, I would say that it would be very difficult to tell.

Q. Well, now, the way you would find out if he were devoted to the Communist Party or its cause or principles would be to ask him about that, wouldn't it? A. That is one way.

Q. You couldn't tell if he was telling the truth about the Communist Party or Communist principles?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Another way would be to adduce evidence from other people that might indicate that he was a devoted and loyal Communist or whether he wasn't.

Q. Then if you put other Communists on the stand to tell you that, you couldn't tell whether they were telling you the truth, could you? [7171]

A. That could well be true, yes, sir.

Q. So that coming down to it finally, it would be impossible for you to tell whether a Communist was telling the truth or not under all those circumstances?

A. Under the circumstances I have enumerated, that would be a fair assumption.

Q. All right. You go to this Communist school and you learn this philosophy and principles that you have just enunciated. That, I suppose, is taught to you, and it takes some little time to learn it, does it?

A. Yes. I mean the particular—yes, it does.

Q. In other words, the ordinary man has a repugnance against being a liar and a perjurer, so if you are going to educate it out of him you have to give him some hard work at it, don't you?

A. You have got to give him something to replace the things that he is normally taught to believe.

Q. You have got to root out those things and teach him it is perfectly all right to testify falsely under oath in a capitalist court because they are enemies of the common people, or something like that?

A. You have got to sell him on the ideology and convince him to a point where, like the person who is a member of a religion, he is willing to follow it even though it might cause him trouble or embarrassment, or something like that.

Q. And that is—— [7172]

A. You have got to indoctrinate him to a point where he is responsive and will follow almost blindly.

Q. Then you would have to get him outside afterwards and reindoctrinate him or get him right around to the point where he sees it is not right to testify falsely under oath in a capitalistic court because they are not the enemies of the working people, wouldn't you?

A. Well, I don't know what the process would be. I know that in my own case, I finally, reluctantly, came to the conclusion that the teaching of the Communist Party was false, its doctrines were wrong, and that I had made a very serious blunder over many years in embracing that philosophy, and I was naturally rather upset, because, after all, for years I had followed a certain course of action, followed a certain philosophy, a certain ideology, and when I finally came to the conclusion I was wrong, it was quite a blow.

Q. This very statement that you just made now may very well be a lie made out of whole cloth, isn't that right?

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

A. Well, it doesn't happen to be.

Q. It doesn't happen to be, but it could well be, couldn't it?

A. I don't know why. I don't see how you jump to that particular conclusion.

Q. Here is what I am trying to get. You were indoctrinated and educated into finally becoming a liar and a perjurer, isn't that right? [7173]

A. That is right. That is right.

Q. Now, what education did you undergo that took you out of being a liar and a perjurer and made you an honest man again?

A. Well, I went through a process of re-examination of all the things that I believed for and stood for and fought for and believed in, and, as I say, reluctantly and over a period of time, I came to the conclusion that I had been worshiping gods with clay feet, if you want to put it that way.

Q. Suppose that you substitute Barber for Hudson, well, you would be in the same predicament, wouldn't you?

A. I don't——

Q. If Mr. Hudson, for instance, or some other functionary of the Communist Party could make you get up on the witness stand and commit perjury, deliberate, practice perjury that you intended to do in advance, well, can you tell us any reason why, if Mr. Barber or Mr. Kaiser asked you to get up on the witness stand and commit a deliberate lie and perjury, you wouldn't do it just as quickly? A. Yes, I can. [7174]

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

The Court: Just a moment. He may explain that answer.

The Witness: The reason for it is neither Mr. Barber nor Mr. Kaiser, as I have observed them, are trying to inculcate me with any doctrine, any ideology or in any way encourage me to do anything but what is considered right and proper in the ordinary conduct of a citizen.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): What do you think the 25 bucks a day is for? A. That is——

Q. That is to buy your soul, isn't it?

A. That is not right.

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question.

Mr. Hallinan: Let me ask you this——

Mr. Donohue: You wait just a moment.

Mr. Hallinan: The answer has been given. The answer has been given.

Mr. Donohue: Will Your Honor make him sit down?

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Donohue: I wish to object to the record and I will sit down, Mr. Hallinan, when I conclude my objection to the Court.

Mr. Hallinan: Conclude it and sit down.

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Rathborne: Do you have any disagreement with this quotation: "When the leopard changes its spots or the Ethiopian his skin, then thou shalt do well to change thy ways, young man, who are accustomed to do evil"? [7175]

Mr. Donohue: I object to a question that even Mr. Hallinan does not understand.

(Testimony of Mervyn Rathborne.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Do you understand that? Mr. Donohue is a little thick-headed. Do you understand the question?

A. No. It sounds to me like you are quoting poetry.

Q. You wouldn't know much about it. It is from the Bible. And Mr. Donohue wouldn't either.

At this time, if the Court please, I move to strike out all the evidence in this case——

The Court: First, before we strike out evidence, I will strike out your last remark concerning Mr. Donohue and Mr. Rathborne. Starting from that point——

Mr. Hallinan: At this point I move to strike out all the testimony of the witnesses Schomaker, Schrimpf, Krolek, Hancock, Ross, Crouch, Johnson, Michener, Rathborne and Wilson upon the ground that those persons having been members of the Communist Party, and under the testimony adduced by the prosecution, because testimony adduced on cross-examination is testimony of the person producing the witness—those persons are actually unreliable, and it is impossible for this Court or this jury to tell whether they are telling the truth or whether they were falsifying on the witness stand, that none of those people create a conflict in the evidence. Here we have the testimony of this man, unequivocally, that every statement made by one of those people is open to suspicion, so that it is impossible, [7776] even for a person who is an expert, to tell whether they are telling the truth or falsifying; ergo, and for a greater reason, it is impossible for people who have not been left within the charmed circle to determine that fact. I therefore move that all the testimony be stricken from the record.

The Court: Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: It would seem unnecessary to argue the allegation, if Your Honor please. According to the judicial system of the United States, the question of determining credibility of the testimony of a witness is left to the jury. I think that is a complete answer to the motion of Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: That is true under certain circumstances, if the Court please, but when the evidence is uncontradicted, as in this case, that each of those witnesses is suspect from the start, that it is impossible even to a person who is familiar with it, who has been one of them, who has dealt with them, to tell whether they are telling the truth or not—how is it possible for the ordinary juror or the ordinary person who is not one of them to pass upon that determination? In other words, there is a reasonable doubt there as a matter of law.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, the motion to strike is denied.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, that is all with this witness.

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions of this witness, if Your Honor please. Shall we take the recess?

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess. Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, the same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions or circumstances or form an opinion until it is submitted to you.

(Recess.) [7177]

Mr. Donohue: Call Mr. Lewis Michener, please.

LEWIS HERBERT MICHENER, JR.

was recalled as a witness on behalf of the United States, and having been previously duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mr. Michener, upon the direction of the Court we have recalled you and I want to read to you a statement made by Mr. Hallinan on page 6266 of the record:

"Mr. Hallinan: ——

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, I object to that. That is not a proper way of examining the witness. He should ask him questions and get answers from him. He should not read off statements to him and then ask his reply to that. He should ask him the questions he intends to ask. He should not read to the witness a statement of anybody, counsel or otherwise.

Mr. Donohue: I want to call to Mr. Michener's attention, if Your Honor please, a statement made by Mr. Hallinan in which in substance he states that this witness answered by signing an application two questions falsely, and I want to ask him if in fact he did.

The Court: You may.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): According to Hallinan:

> "The Michener file states there are documents lacking from [7178] it and we object to the Michener file being produced in the form it is. We ask that this gentleman produce the entire file. For instance, the document which Mr. Wilson had to make out, which contains the information that he never was a member of an organization advocating the overthrow of the government by force and containing above it the statement that he had never been sentenced on any violation of any law except some traffic law or something like that, and that is missing from the Michener file. That is the exact thing we wanted to see in Michener's file. We know Michener answered those two questions falsely. We want that document produced here. It has not been produced."

I now ask you, Mr. Michener, to look at what has been marked as United States for identification No. 37, that document facing you as you receive it, and ask you to examine it and then I will ask you a question upon it.

(Document was handed to the witness and returned to counsel.)

Did you observe, Mr. Michener, that this document contained the question: "Do you advocate or have you ever advocated or are you now or have you ever been a member of any organization that advocates the overthrow of the government of the United States by force and violence?" Did you observe that that question is a part of this document? A. I did, sir.

Q. Did you notice that this document contains this question: [7179] "Have you ever been arrested or summoned into court as a defendant or indicted or convicted or fined or imprisoned or placed on probation or has any case against you been filed or have you ever been ordered to deposit collateral for alleged breach or violation of any law or police regulation or ordinance whatsoever?" Did you observe that that question was there?

A. I observed that that was on there. I couldn't repeat it verbatim, but I recall the essence of it being there.

Q. At any time, Mr. Michener, did you ever sign an application which contained those two questions?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Michener, further on page 6267 of the record, in response to a statement made by myself to this effect: "Just as I asked you, how did you know that Mr. Michener, as you just stated to the Court and jury, signed a Form 57 in which he denied that he had ever been arrested?"

Mr. Hallinan stated: "We have our means of knowing things. We hear things. Some of your babies have been babbling around as to the reason they have to come in and testify. Mr. Michener is one of them."

Have you made any statements, Mr. Michener, either before or since your appearance here as a witness with respect to the reasons why you did in fact testify? A. I have, sir.

Q. What statement have you made? [7180]

A. As a result of a lot of propaganda being put out against me down south, I had occasion also to put out a leaflet that was distributed to the employees of the Ford Long Beach plant.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Clerk, may I see what the witness has in his hand?

(A document was handed by the witness to Mr. Donohue.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): This is something you say you have caused to be distributed?

A. That is right.

Q. Where?

A. At the Ford Long Beach plant to the employees there.

Mr. MacInnis: Of course, this is a self-serving document, hardly responsive to the inference that has been raised, and we object to it. We ask the Court to look at it. As the man says, it is a leaflet that he prepared.

Mr. Donohue: I offer it in evidence, if Your Honor please, with respect to the suggestion made by Mr. Hallinan about babies have been babbling and that Mr. Michener is one of them. That is what he has babbled.

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

Mr. MacInnis: The leaflet, of course, is self-serving. It is incompetent to prove the issue even raised by the inference. It does not show whether any of his babies have been babbling at all. It shows, rather, that he tried to cover up by showing a statement such as the one now before you.

Mr. Donohue: In light of the fact that Mr. MacInnis has [7181] characterized it, which I have not heretofore done, as an attempt on the part of the witness to cover up, I renew my offer that it be put in evidence and read to the jury.

The Court: It may be received for that purpose or purposes.

(The document referred to was thereupon received in evidence and marked United States Exhibit No. 41.)

Mr. Donohue: Captioned "Liar, stool pigeon, perjurer.

"One. If the above names are to apply to people who exercise their rights as American citizens;

"Two. If the above names are to apply to people who believe in the American form of government and the American way of life;

"Three: If the above names are to apply to people who sincerely want to protect the future welfare of our American labor unions and our nation;

"Four. If the above names are to apply to people that denounce Communism or any other > ism that would destroy our American way of life;

> "Then I must be classed as such by those who opposed my understanding of true Americanism. These are the issues. It is up to you. It is important that you attend your next membership meeting Tuesday, February 14, at 7:30 p.m. at Sciotti Hall, 1005 East 6th Street, Long Beach, California. Signed, Lew Michener."

You may have the witness. [7182]

Cross-Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. Mr. Michener, do you know a man named Pat Patterson? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does he work with you?

A. He is the president of the local union of which I am a member.

Q. You talked to him before you testified in this case, didn't you? A. I did.

Q. You told him that you were being interrogated by various agents? A. I did not.

Q. You never told him you were being consulted?

A. I did tell him that I was going to be up here as a witness.

Q. Have you seen him since your appearance here as a witness? A. On several occasions.

Q. Talked to him? A. Almost daily.

Q. That is exactly the point that Mr. Hallinan made and that is exactly what we had in mind. Let me ask you this, Mr. Michener. How long have you been back in San Francisco on this trip?

A. I arrived here, sir, on Sunday, about noon on Sunday.

Q. You mean two days ago? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And before you came here on this occasion, have you talked to [7183] anybody connected with the Government?

A. You mean here locally or——

Q. Or in Los Angeles.

A. I talked to people representing the Government in Los Angeles, yes, sir.

Q. Who are they?

A. Oh, Mr. Hildring and a Mr. Nolan.

Q. Anybody else? A. No.

Q. Did those men tell you that your appearance here was requested? A. They did.

Q. Did they serve you with any subpoena?

A. They did not.

Q. You came up here voluntarily, did you?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Donohue: I object. He did not come here voluntarily. He came here under the order of Your Honor.

The Court: I made an order that he be here.

Mr. Donohue: Your Honor ordered the prosecution to bring him here.

The Court: I made an open order.

Mr. MacInnis: I heard Your Honor, but I suppose the order would have to be enforced by process. In any event, you were told that the Court had asked you to [7184] return and you did return, is that right? A. That is correct, sir.

Q. When you came back here Sunday, did you see any of the men connected with the Government, between that time and now?

A. I have, sir.

Q. Who are they?

A. Mr. Woolly met me at the airport. I rode into town with him on Sunday. I had occasion to see Mr. Kidder on Sunday. The fact of the matter is I stayed with Mr. Kidder since I have been here at his room.

Q. At his room. Where is that?

A. It is over at the Marines Memorial Center.

Q. Did you see anybody else besides Mr. Kidder and Mr. Woolly? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who else?

A. I have seen Mr. Boyd, Mr. Barber, Mr. Kaiser, Mr. Paisley, Mr. Donohue.

Q. And you told them generally what you would say upon your reappearance upon the witness stand, didn't you?

A. No, frankly there was an article in the Long Beach paper indicating that I was to be ordered back up here, so I asked Mr. Kaiser if it would be permissible for me to look over some of the testimony that I had given here before. I wanted to refresh my memory on that situation regarding a new hat for you, and so I checked over that, and so far as him telling me what to [7185] testify to on, sir, they did not.

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

Q. I suppose you brought with you this release that you issued after your testimony here?

A. I have brought several of those along plus also some of the other leaflets that were put out against me, too.

Q. Did you show this leaflet to those gentlemen before you took the stand? A. I did, sir.

Q. In other words, you showed it to Mr. Kidder, Mr. Kaiser——

A. I wouldn't say all the gentlemen saw the leaflet.

Q. You showed it, I suppose, to Mr. Donohue and Mr. Kaiser? A. I did, sir.

Q. When did you show it to Mr. Donohue, do you remember? A. I believe on Monday, sir.

Q. Let me ask you this then, Mr. Michener: What did Donohue mean when he said to you a moment ago, "May I see what the witness has in his hand?" and then when it was passed down to him, he put his glasses on and pretended to read this over for the first time. What did he mean by that?

A. I would suggest you ask Mr. Donohue that question.

Q. What kind of an act was that, may I ask you?

Mr. Donohue: Your Honor, I think Mr. MacInnis hasn't called me as a witness. If he wants to call me as a witness, I shall be happy to [7186] testify.

Mr. MacInnis: We are not playing a game of charades, Your Honor.

Mr. Donohue: Let us conduct ourselves like grownup lawyers.

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

Mr. MacInnis: The prosecutor asks, "May I see what the witness has in his hand?" and he puts on his glasses and studies this paper carefully, reads it over, and then he walks solemnly over and hands it to me as though he had never seen it before in his life.

Mr. Donohue: May I say that Mr. MacInnis' pantomime leaves me cold.

Mr. MacInnis: I have never seen you very warm, Mr. Donohue.

Q. How about these other leaflets which you brought with you, leaflets put out against you? Have you got those?

A. I haven't them on me. They are in my brief-case.

Q. You did not bring those into the courtroom?

A. No, sir.

Mr. MacInnis: May I have the exhibit involving the record of the witness Wilson? [7187]

Q. Can you think of any reason, Mr. Michener, why you would be offered a position with the Federal Government or appointed to one without being required to sign an application?

A. I am not quite clear, Mr. MacInnis, what you have in mind on that question. Can you explain it to me a little?

Q. Yes. A. If you would explain.

Q. Yes. Can you think of any reason why some exception should be made in your case and you should be given an appointment without the necessity of signing any document?

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

A. Well, I can, yes, sir, I can think of an exception.

Q. You can think of a reason why there was an exception made in your case? A. I can.

Q. What is that?

A. I first of all was appointed to this War Labor Board; I didn't care too much about serving on it in the first place. Then after I had been notified by—I believe it was Mr. Davis, who was the chairman of the Board in Washington, that international president R. J. Thomas had expressed the desire that I serve on this board, and then after I was on the board and had actually started sitting in on a few cases, I got those documents here to fill out and I noticed in there that there was that one situation that Mr. Donohue just read about "your past record," and I didn't want to be embarrassed by filling that out [7188] because I didn't want to bring that situation to light that happened to me when I was a young man that I testified to here in court about my past in Montana.

Q. You mean that you would have been embarrassed in filling out this application and upon that basis you didn't fill it out?

A. That is correct, sir.

Q. By the way, you were shown by the prosecutor this afternoon this document that purports to be a record of your service with the War Labor Board. Had you seen this before?

A. I believe I had, yes, sir. I remember that being typed up.

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

Q. Where had you seen it?

A. I believe I seen that one there over here at our old offices on Market Street where the War Labor Board had their offices.

Q. Now, so far as this particular document that I have in my hand is concerned, had you seen it before?

A. I would believe—I would say that I had, yes, sir; it seems to me that something similar to that I have seen, at least.

Q. Where?

A. At the War Labor Board office.

Q. When was that?

A. That was, oh, when I first started to serve there or shortly thereafter, but I completely evaded signing it.

Q. You would have been embarrassed to answer those questions, is that it? [7189]

A. That is correct.

Q. Well, now, you didn't tell his Honor or the jury when you were here before that you well remembered that particular document and had seen it in the War Labor Board office, did you?

A. I don't remember I had occasion to answer such a question, sir.

Q. You think you had no opportunity to give that answer; is that your explanation?

A. I wouldn't say I was denied any opportunity here on the witness stand, but the occasion never presented itself.

Q. Now, you remember very clearly, however, that you did see this document over in the War Labor Board? A. That is correct, sir.

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

Q. And this is the same document?

A. I would believe it to be the same document.

Q. Now, have you looked over the other papers that are annexed to this document?

A. I have, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen them?

A. I wouldn't—no, I just looked over the papers that were suggested there by Mr. Donohue. I never read the first part of those papers you have there in your hand.

Q. Had you seen any copy of this document between the time you left the witness stand a couple of months ago and today? A. No, sir. [7190]

Q. Did Mr. Donohue or any of these other men tell you that the Government does not purport to represent that this is a full record on your case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did he tell you that there is an affidavit of a man named Harris P. Shane, some person in authority in Washington attached to these papers, saying that the personnel files of the National War Labor Board are not and were not in his custody during the life of the agency and that he is not responsible and was not responsible for their maintenance; did he tell you that? A. No, sir.

Q. Did he tell you that this man, Mr. Shane, states that he had caused a search to be made for ~~your personnel record and that this file is all that~~ he can find? Did he tell you that? A. No, sir.

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

Q. Now, did he tell you that this document mentions a copy of an oath of office that you supposedly took but that that particular oath is missing from the file? Did he tell you that? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, you did sign an oath of office, didn't you? A. No, sir.

Q. You never did? Now, has that always been your position?

A. It was the first time I have ever had the occasion to be involved in that type of an affidavit and——

Q. Pardon me. Go ahead. [7191]

A. ——and that would naturally have been my position. I explained the reason why I did not sign that affidavit.

Q. You wouldn't have signed any oath if it were presented to you at the time? A. No, sir.

Q. You would have refused? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why would you have refused to sign the oath?

A. Because I wasn't particularly interested in serving on that panel anyway.

Q. Now, I would like, if you will, to have you look underneath the clips on the top of this application page and tell us, if you will, the name of the form. You may have to pull some of those staples loose, but go ahead, because we can restaple the papers afterwards.

A. Application for Federal Employment; is that what you have in mind?

Q. Yes. Does it have any form number on it?

A. I can't discover any. [7192]

Mr. MacInnis: May I see it? May we ask that the Clerk abstract that paper?

The Court: Whatever the number is?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes.

The Court: Do you stipulate to the number of the form?

Mr. Donohue: I assume it was Form 57. I will be glad to stipulate that it is whatever it appears to be. I think it is Form 57.

Mr. MacInnis: I would like to make sure. I think that is what it is, but I have a different purpose.

The Court: Will you determine that, Mr. Schaeffer, the form number, please?

The Clerk: Yes, sir.

Mr. MacInnis: If the Government would stipulate that it is a Form 57, we can save demolishing the document. I will accept that. Do you stipulate that that is so?

Mr. Donohue: I am reasonably sure it is.

Mr. Paisley: Let's look at it.

Mr. MacInnis: The Clerk says that is correct, it is Form 57. He has put his finger on the notation.

The Court: All right.

Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Having that in mind, Mr. Michener, this is the same form that you saw typed out in the office of the Regional War Labor ~~Board some years ago and which you observed,~~ isn't it?

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

A. Is that the one that refers to having any past arrests? [7193]

Q. Yes, it is.

A. It is the one that I particularly observed, yes, sir.

Q. That is the one that these gentlemen say is Form 57, according to the title; do you remember that?

A. I wouldn't remember the number offhand, no, sir.

Q. But you remembered the document, didn't you? A. I said yes, sir.

Q. With that in mind, let me ask you this: Let's see whether or not you had an opportunity to tell the Court and jury the truth about that fact when you were on the witness stand before. Referring to page 3860 of the transcript, questions by me to you:

> "Q. When did you last see the application that you made for the War Labor Board?
> "A. I will tell you. I have no recollection of making an application for the War Labor Board."

Do you remember giving that answer?

A. That is correct.

Mr. MacInnis: Then I said:

> "Well, now, Your Honor, I am going to ask that the Government counsel produce the original of whatever application this man signed, because it is under oath.

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

> "The Court: There is no indication that any such application has ever been signed."

Myself:

> "Well, Judge, we know that to be true, that he couldn't be on that board without signing it. I think Your Honor can [7194] take judicial notice of that fact. Would Your Honor request the Government to produce such a document if it exists, for I am sure it exists."

And I had another form in my hand at that time. Whereupon Mr. Paisley rose to his feet.

> "Mr. Paisley: Your Honor, all he has there is a Civil Service application blank. That is what he is parading to the witness."

And I said:

> "I am informed that this is the questionnaire that was submitted to persons wishing to qualify for that post, Your Honor."

And the Court said:

> "Qualify for a particular post on the War Labor Board?"

I said:

> "Yes.
>
> "The Court: This is a Civil Service form?
> "Mr. Paisley: Yes, sir, regular old form—what is it? Ought to know the number of it. Form 57. Everybody in the federal service has heard of that."

Then I said:

> "Well, I think, Your Honor, that it is entirely in order to request that you order the prosecution to bring in the original form signed by this man, if there is any form.
> "Mr. Paisley: Let me see this.
> "The Court: Did you sign any application when you were made or caused to be appointed by this board? [7195]
> "The Witness: No, Your Honor; to the best of my knowledge, I really didn't."

Now, when that conversation took place between the Court and the lawyers and you, you didn't tell anybody that that form was typed out, according to your present recollection, and that you had evaded signing it for the reasons that you have expressed here, did you?

A. No, I didn't tell the Court at that time the reason why I hadn't signed it. I told you, though, however, that I hadn't signed it.

Q. And when the judge asked you about the explanation you merely told him that to the best of your knowledge you didn't sign it; you didn't tell him that there was such a form and that you recalled it very distinctly, is that right?

A. I didn't—at this time I do not say that I recall that very distinctly.

Q. Were there any forms that you filled out for this position? A. No, sir.

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

Q None whatsover? That has always been your recollection?

A. That has always been my recollection.

Q. Then what did you mean when you said on page 3863 to the Court:

> "Now there were forms that I filled out."

What did you mean by that?

A. What was the general atmosphere around that question? I [7196] have filled out forms. I have filled out forms for my international union work and other forms, but for this one specific one, no, sir; and I didn't type that in there myself either.

Q. So that when you were asked by the Court the question and made the answer that there were forms that you filled out, you had in mind forms with your union or some other matter?

A. That is correct, sir.

Q. You are quite sure of that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will read you the testimony:

> "The Court: After your name was submitted or your nomination suggested, what procedure was adopted toward your serving and receiving the credentials?"

And you said:

> "I was notified by the president of my organization, R. J. Thomas, that I had been appointed and accepted to serve on the board. Now there were forms that I filled out.

Do you remember that?

A. I believe I do.

Q. Is that the truth?

A. That is the truth. [7197]

Q. And what were those forms?

A. Those were—one form was for a transportation card, as I recall, because we were furnished our transportation. I remember that form. I believe, to the best of my recollection, that is the only form that was really connected with myself and the War Labor Board, with one other exception. There was also a credential card issued by the War Labor Board, on which it said to identify the bearer his signature must be on it, and outside of that, sir, to the best of my recollection, that is the only forms that I was involved with in connection with that War Labor Board service.

Q. As you tell us today, of course, for the reasons that you have expressed, you did not take the oath?

A. I did not, sir.

Q. Then what did you mean on page 3863 when you made this answer to the Court:

> "The Court: Did you take an oath of any kind looking toward your service upon that board?"

And your answer:

> "It seems to me that there was a regular—an oath that I would serve to the best of my ability and not—and so forth and so on, and not"——

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

A. There might possibly still—could be that slip also, but to the best of my recollections, I don't recall it.

Q. Well, now, which is true, the fact that you did take some [7198] oath or the fact which you announced a few minutes ago that you did not take the oath because you evaded it?

A. Well, I would say right here and now that I didn't sign the oath.

Q. Let me ask you this: When you gave that answer in response to the Court's question, that wasn't the truth, is that it?

A. I wouldn't say it wasn't. I don't intend to misrepresent anything here.

Q. Let's see if I am misrepresenting anything.

> "The Court (to you): Did you take an oath of any kind looking toward your service upon that board?
> "The Witness: It seems to me that there was a regular—an oath that I would serve to the best of my ability and not—and so forth and so on."

That was your answer, wasn't it?

A. It was, sir.

Q. Now, you said a few minutes ago that when you were here before you weren't given any opportunity by the questions to tell the jury about this form that was filled out in the War Labor Board on the typewriter without your signing it, is that correct?

A. I did not indicate that I did not have the opportunity. The question was not really placed to me. I told you that I had not signed that affidavit then, and I repeat it again now that I didn't sign that application. [7199]

Q. Do you remember that when these questions were being put to you I had in my hand the civil service application blank, this so-called Form 57?

A. It seems to me that I do remember that, yes, sir.

Q. And do you remember the Court asking you this question, again page 3863:

> "The Court: Was it on a comparable form to that submitted, as referred to by Mr. Paisley as Form 57?"

And your answer:

> "I really—my honest opinion of it, your Honor, I don't believe it was."

Why didn't you tell the Court and the jury that you went over to the War Labor Board, according to what you tell us today, and had this Form 57 filled out on the typewriter because you wanted to evade giving certain answers?

A. I couldn't tell the Court that, sir; that wouldn't be the true set of circumstances. I never went over there and had them fill it out on a typewriter. That was not done at my request.

Q. Didn't I understand you to tell us a few minutes ago that you were over in the War Labor Board office and that form shown you today as an exhibit in this case was typed in your presence?

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

A. I didn't say typed in my presence, I don't believe.

Q. You said you saw it before? [7200]

A. I saw that typed?

Q. You saw it, didn't you?

A. That's right, sir.

Q. Then when the Court asked you, "Was it on a comparable form to that submitted, as referred to by Mr. Paisley as Form 57," and you answered, "I really—my honest opinion of it, your Honor, I don't believe it was," what were you trying to get the Court and jury to believe?

A. I was trying to get the Court and jury to believe exactly what I meant there. I hadn't had an opportunity to see that document there to refresh my memory. It was many years ago that this transpired, and I really coun't identify that form that you had in your hand at that time honestly here.

Q. Well, do you remember that then there was a discussion between the Court and the lawyers about whether a search should be made for your record? Do you remember that?

A. I remember that, yes, sir.

Q. You remember the Government counsel said that he did not know if there was any such document; do you remember that?

A. I don't know whether those are the exact words or not, sir.

Q. Do you remember——

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

A. I remember there was a discussion about it, however.

Q. You remember I asked for the document?

A. Yes.

Q. And you remember that the Court said this to me: [7201]

> "Well, of course, counsel, you base your request upon the suggestion that there is an original."

And I said:

> "Oh, I know that to be true.
>
> "Mr. Paisley: How does he know it, sir?
> "The Court: Any document that may be in existence or have a reality, under these circumstances, I will order produced. But I would not make an order with respect to a non-existent document."

Now, when the Court said that, why didn't you volunteer that there was such a document; that you had seen it over in the War Labor Board? You didn't do that, did you?

A. Apparently I did not. [7202]

Q. You did not see him, did you?

A. Apparently I did not.

Q. And then there was a further discussion. I will ask you if you remember this. On page 3865, after I had made another request that this document be produced, the Court said to the prosecution:

> "The Court: Mr. Donohue or Mr. Paisley, do you have knowledge whether these documents are now in existence here?
> "Mr. Donohue: I never heard of it, if your Honor please. In fact, I am wholly unfamiliar with what the War Labor Board is or was."

Do you remember that?

A. I remember words to that effect, yes, sir.

Q. When that was said why didn't you tell the Court that there was such a document, that you remembered it, that you had evaded signing it, that you had seen it in its typed form?

Mr. Paisley: I do not think that is a fair question, your Honor. The witness is not required to volunteer information. That was colloquy between the Court and counsel.

The Court: He may answer the question if it is clear to him?

Q. Do you understand that?

A. Yes, your Honor.

The Court: He may answer.

A. To the best of my knowledge, at that time I did not knew [7203] that the document was in effect. The War Labor Board had gone out of existence. I did not know where these records were at all, even if there was one at that time, so I couldn't volunteer and tell His Honor where them records were. I never had no copies of them.

Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Do you remember the record without seeing it, don't you?

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

A. When it is identified here now,—if it was on a blank piece of paper without that typing on there, I doubt whether I would have honestly been able to identify that for you today.

Q. You would not have remembered that either, is that right? A. That is correct, sir.

Q. Let me ask you one or two more questions about the credit that one can attach to your statements in this court. Do you remember the general examination of yourself by Mr. Paisley, the prosecutor who examined you?

A. It would be hard for me to retrace everything word by word.

Q. Do you remember this, that he asked you in your direct examination:

> "Have you ever had a Communist Party card?"

and your answer on page 3706 was: "I never possessed a card or a card was never issued to me." Do you ever remember making that statement?

A. I do.

Q. Was that the truth? [7204]

A. That was the truth.

Q. Do you remember when you were examined further upon this same subject, largely by myself, and the same question was put to you a day later, and I said, "Were you ever given a membership card?" and then you answered, "I was not personally given a membership card. My wife takes care of my card for me and my stamps."

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

A. That is correct, sir.

Q. That was true, too?

A. That is correct, sir.

Q. Both of those statements were correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember that we pursued that subject a little further? Do you remember that? We had some more discussion about that, about your wife holding your Communist Party card? Do you remember that?

A. I can't refresh my memory, as I indicated earlier to you, word by word what went on. If you have something there to make reference to——

Q. Yes. I asked you this question:

> "Was that true, right through until the time you left the Communist Party, from 1938 right through until 1944?"

And your answer:

> "I couldn't vouch for the last month or two months of 1944 because—but up until the last two months of 1944, until [7205] the time I married my second wife, that arrangement was in effect, yes, sir."

Do you remember that answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, of course you had not married your second wife? A. That is correct.

Q. Until you had been a member of the Communist Party, according to you, for some years.

(Testimony of Lewis Herbert Michener, Jr.)

A. That is correct.

Q. How many years?

A. There would have been a period there, '38, '39, '40—about four years, approximately.

Q. You knew that while you were married to that lady that she was holding your Communist Party card, don't you?

A. That is right.

Q. You were well aware of that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Being well aware of that, Mr. Michener, why did you give this answer: I asked you this question:

> "How soon after you signed this application card—referring to your original entry to the Communist Party—did you discover that in the possession of your wife was your membership card?
> "A. Oh, that was a matter of years.
> "Q. You did not discover it for [7206] years?
>
> "A. That is right."

Do you remember giving that testimony?

A. I do.

Q. Was that true also?

A. I think that might call for an explanation if you want one.

Q. You have given many explanations: I will come to the one that you then gave. We pursued that point for a few pages and I asked you if that answer was true about your discovery of the card in the possession of your second wife, your previous statement that no card was ever issued to you, and then you said that the Communist Party itself held your card for you.

A. That is correct, for the first period of years when I was not married to my second wife.

Q. In other words, Mr. Michener, if no one had asked you any questions upon the first statement that you made when you were examined by Mr. Paisley, and when you said, "No Communist card was ever issued to me," the Court and jury would have left with a false impression, isn't that true?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. It was only by questioning you four or five times that you finally made different varieties of answers to cover those years, isn't that right?

A. I wouldn't say there was a variety of answers. I think summarized they all add up to practically the same thing.

Q. You think they do? [7207]

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You think the last answer is the same as the first statement that you made: "No Communist Party card was ever issued to me"?

A. That is right. I never carried a Communist Party card. I so testified.

Q. Isn't it much like the other piece of testimony that you gave in the case? You told us that you came up to San Francisco some time in 1940 and that you went to ~~some meeting here and that~~ you stayed at the Shaw Hotel. Now, I asked you whether you stayed there alone or whether you stayed there with this man named Klein. Do you remember your reply?

A. I don't recall offhand.

Q. What is your memory now as to whether you stayed with him?

A. As I indicated in the first answer there, I thought I had registered there at the hotel and stayed there by myself, but later on it was developed that there was somebody else there and it could have been possible that it was Paul Klein. So many years had elapsed since that happened.

Q. Yes, like the War Labor Board. I asked you this question:

> "Did you stay there alone or with any other person?"

and you answered:

> "Stayed there alone."

Do you remember that?

A. That is right.

Q. And then a card was shown you a couple of days later, a [7208] hotel registration card, for a date in August showing you at the hotel in a room with some man whose name was not Klein, isn't that right? A. That is correct.

Q. Some other name, a fictitious name?

A. That is correct.

Q. Or the name of some other person, then for the first time you said, "Oh, that was Mr. Klein who was staying with me."

A. Didn't I say it could have been possible it was Mr. Klein? Not too definite about it.

Q. You are about as definite on that as you have been on these other matters, including the War Labor Board, is that true?

A. I think that is your opinion, sir.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

Mr. Donohue: At this time, if your Honor please, I offer the file of Mr. Michener as provided for us by the Acting Secretary of Labor in evidence.

Mr. MacInnis: With the understanding that it is an incomplete record—it states upon its face that it is incomplete.

The Court: The record may be admitted and received in evidence and appropriately marked in the light of the attendant testimony. Whatever marking is on the file, of course, remains on the file.

Mr. Donohue: May the witness be excused, if your Honor please? [7209]

The Court: Yes.

(U. S. Exhibit No. 37 was thereupon received in evidence.)

Mr. Donohue: May I say to your Honor that in the morning we may call one additional witness. If we do, he will be a short witness. We may determine before that time to call no additional witnesses, but I shall notify your Honor at the opening session in the morning.

The Court: At 10:00 o'clock.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: Then we will prepare to proceed with our surrebuttal.

The Court: All right.

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will adjourn court until tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions or to form or express an opinion until the matter is finally submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Wednesday, March 8, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [7210]

Wednesday, March 8, 1950—10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: The United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The witness recalled by the prosecution is Mr. George H. Wilson, heretofore sworn.

The Court: You may proceed.

GEORGE H. WILSON

recalled for the Government in rebuttal; previously sworn.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Wilson, it has been testified here that when you heretofore appeared as a witness you did so under a threat by the United States that were you not to testify you would yourself be subjected to a prosecution. Is that true or false?

(Testimony of George H. Wilson.)

A. Well, it is not true. I had committed no offense that I was aware of, and there was no threat of prosecution.

Q. It has been testified here, Mr. Wilson, that you were told by one of your two employers that were you not to testify you would lose your position. Is that true or false?

A. That is false.

Q. When you testified here before, Mr. Wilson, was your testimony truthful?

A. It was. [7211]

Mr. Hallinan: I object to that as calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness and ask the answer be stricken out.

Mr. Donohue: I ask the question on the basis, if your Honor please, that it has been testified to by the defendants that the testimony Mr. Wilson gave was not true.

The Court: The objection is overruled. Mr. Wilson, you may answer.

Mr. Donohue: You may have the witness.

Mr. Hallinan: No questions.

Mr. Donohue: Thank you, Mr. Wilson.

The Government rests, if your Honor please.

The Court: Mr. Wilson is excused.

(Government rests in rebuttal.)

Mr. MacInnis: Call Mrs. Teixeira.

MRS. BETTY TEIXEIRA

called for the defendants in surrebuttal; sworn.

The Clerk: Will you state your full name to the jury.

The Witness: Betty Teixeira.

The Clerk: Will you spell your last name.

The Witness: T-e-i-x-e-i-r-a.

Q. Who is Mr. San Jule?

A. He was a legislative director for the CIO.

Q. I see. Now, at the time you were introduced to Mr. Rathborne, was your husband a member of the State Legislature, or had he yet become a San Francisco supervisor?

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. He was a member of the San Francisco Board of Supervisors.

Q. And did you tell us the approximate year of that meeting?

A. I believe it was in April of 1942.

Q. Now after that event, and carrying your memory forward about a year, did you see Mr. Rathborne once, more than once, or not at all during that time?

A. The next time I saw him was in 1943, when I asked him for a job with the CIO.

Q. In other words, about a year had transpired between that first meeting?

A. (Nodding in the affirmative.)

Q. Were you and your husband members of any organization, social or otherwise, in San Francisco, that was formed during the war along with Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Yes, I was a member of an organization called the American [7216] Youth for Democracy, and my husband was a sponsor of the organization; and Mervyn Rathborne also was a sponsor.

Q. Where was that, or when was that organization formed, if you know? A. 1943.

Q. I see. And do you recall offhand any other persons in San Francisco public life who were sponsors of the organization?

A. I believe that Harold Boyd, the comptroller of——

Q. Harold Boyd, the comptroller of the City and County, was also a sponsor? A. Yes.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. Now, what were your activities in that organization in so far as they might have put you into contact with Mervyn Rathborne?

A. The organization was interested in youth problems and in youth in the trade union movement. I don't recall ever having any conversations with Mervyn Rathborne, however.

Mr. MacInnis: Can everyone hear this lady? I think if you will move the microphone in front of her?

(Microphone adjusted.)

Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Now, you say that in 1943 you went to see Mervyn Rathborne and asked him for a job? A. Yes, I did.

Q. And what was the circumstance of that meeting?

A. He told me that—I told him the kind of work that I had been doing in political campaigns, and he said that if anything like [7217] that came up, he would keep it, keep me in mind and he would discuss it with the other members of the CIO, and he would let me know.

Q. Well, what kind of political campaign work had you been doing that would qualify you for some sort of job?

A. Work—the most recent campaign work I had done was in the campaign of Dan Deasy for the State Assembly.

Q. That is Daniel Deasy, who was a member of the prosecuting staff in the United States Attorney's office here? A. That's right.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. And what was the year in which you had done that work?

A. It was election year. I don't know whether it was '42 or '43.

Q. Well, now, did Mr. Rathborne either obtain for you or recommend any job at that time?

A. Not at that time. Later.

Q. What did develop?

A. In March of the next year, the secretary called me and I went to his office and he asked me if I would like to work, do political work for the CIO and offered me a job that was to begin in about a month. And then a few days, he called me and said that there was another job that would come up immediately, working for Local 6.

Q. What is Local 6?

A. It is the warehouse union in the [7218] ILWU.

Q. Now, you say that was to be political work?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the nature of that work?

A. Attending meetings and helping in registration work, helping in the opening of some headquarters and getting people who were trade union people interested in political campaigns, getting volunteers from the trade union movement to work in the campaigns.

Q. Well, now, was that work in connection with the candidacy of any particular person?

~~A. Franck Havenner.~~

Q. The work that you did under the sponsorship

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

of Local 6 was for Franck Havenner, is that correct? A. That's right.

Q. Now, when that job terminated, as you say it was a short one, did you go to work for the CIO itself?

A. I worked for the State Council then.

Q. By "State Council," do you mean the State Council of the CIO? A. The CIO.

Q. And what was the nature of that work and what were your duties?

A. My duties were in connection with political campaigns then in San Mateo and Santa Clara Counties.

Q. And where was your office?

A. The State Council office I worked out of was in San Francisco, [7219] but I was assigned more or less to the field. I didn't come into the office very often.

Q. Well; now, was your work under the supervision of Mervyn Rathborne? A. Yes, it was.

Q. And during the continuance of that job, how often did you see Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Sometimes two or three times a week, sometimes only once a week.

Q. And the job continued from some time in the spring of that year 1943, until when?

A. Until November the 19th——

Q. Pardon me, 1944.

A. Until November of 1944.

Q. That was the general election?

A. That was.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. And the job then terminated, did it?

A. Yes, with the general election.

Q. And in 1945 did you undertake any employment?

A. Yes, I went to work in Sacramento for Arthur Samish.

Q. Arthur Samish?

A. (Nodding in the affirmative.)

Q. And what was the nature of the job you had for him?

A. It was called a legislative observer or watcher. I went to committee meetings, took notes and made written reports to him. [7220]

Q. And that job, I suppose, lasted during the continuance of the legislative session in 1945?

A. Yes, it did.

Q. Which would be over what period of months?

A. From March until the end of June.

Q. Well, now, in those months from March until the end of June of 1945, were you thrown into contact again with the same person, Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Yes, he was the CIO legislative representative in Sacramento; he was there about half of the session.

Q. And under what circumstances did you see Mr. Rathborne during those months?

A. In committee meetings or in the Assembly gallery. Sometimes we had coffee after a committee meeting.

Q. What would be the general purpose of your meeting with Mr. Rathborne? Would they be social or would they be business at that time?

A. Just discussing what had transpired during the day in the committee meeting, or the Assembly meeting.

Q. Now, in that particular year, 1945, did your social connections with Mr. Rathborne extend beyond having an occasional cup of coffee? That is, did you ever have dinner with him or anything like that? A. No, not that I recall.

Q. I see. And then in June of 1945 your employment with the [7221] legislature stopped?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, for the balance of that year, 1945, did you undertake any kind of work?

A. No, I didn't work any more in 1945.

Q. Now, as I understand it, you were ultimately divorced from Mr. Green? A. Yes.

Q. And when did your separation from Mr. Green take place?

A. I got my interlocutory decree of divorce in February of 1946.

Q. I see. Well, were you separated from Mr. Green in the spring of 1945 when you were working in Sacramento?

A. Yes, we had the understanding then that we were going to be divorced.

Q. I see. And did you in fact obtain a divorce, as you say, in February of 1946?

~~A. That's right.~~

Q. Now, what did you do for the balance of the year 1946, so far as your own occupation was concerned? A. I went to Los Angeles.

Q. To live with whom? A. My mother.

Q. Now, you stayed in Los Angeles from around February of 1946 until what other date? [7222]

A. Until I returned to Sacramento the following year.

Q. And that would be, I suppose, in the early spring of '47? A. That's right.

Q. Well, now, between February of 1946 and the end of that year, while you were living with your mother in Los Angeles, did you see or hear from Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Yes, I did. He called me once or twice in Los Angeles when he was on State Council business in Los Angeles.

Q. Now, when you say he called you, do you mean on the telephone or personally?

A. Once I spoke to him on the telephone, as I remember, and the other time he called about dinner.

Q. He took you to dinner some time in the year 1946? A. Yes.

Q. In Los Angeles? A. In Los Angeles.

Q. Now, previous to that period of time, had you become acquainted with a young lady named Jean Murray?

A. Yes, I met her in Sacramento in 1944.

Q. And had you and she become friends?

A. Yes, we had.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. Now, to your knowledge was Jean Murray also an acquaintance of Mervyn Rathborne?

A. She knew him in the course of her work.

Q. I mean, that was known to you, was it? [7223]

A. Yes.

Q. Now, on the occasion when Mervyn Rathborne took you to dinner in Los Angeles in 1946, was there any conversation had between you concerning Jean Murray?

A. Yes, he was very interested in knowing about her. He asked me her address, he said he had been attempting to locate her, and he couldn't find out where she lived. He was also interested in knowing if she was still living with her husband.

Q. In other words, he asked you questions about Jean Murray? A. He did.

Q. Now, did you give him any particular answer to those questions? Did you tell him how he could find her or words to that effect?

A. Yes, I did. [7224]

Q. Now, did you see Mr. Rathborne otherwise during the year 1946?

A. I don't recall having seen him.

Q. Now, in 1947 you say you went back to work in Sacramento? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Was that for the same employer, Mr. Samish?

A. Yes, it was. When you asked me if I had worked during 1945 up until the time I went to Los Angeles, I did work again in Sacramento in January, 1946.

Q. For whom was that work?

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. The same employer.

Q. For Mr. Samish? A. Yes.

Q. Was there some special session of the Legislature? A. Special session, six weeks.

Q. What was the nature of your work in the State Legislature? A. For Mr. Samish?

Q. Yes.

A. I was, as I said before, a watcher or a legislative observer. I attended committee meetings, took notes and typed reports.

Q. In other words, you made reports of on-the-scene activity to your employer?

A. Yes; usually my work was in the afternoon, and then at night committee meetings started at eight o'clock and ran quite late. I typed my work up at night and put in a report the [7225] next day.

Q. While in Sacramento in the spring of 1947 at that legislative session did you again come into contact with Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Yes, I saw him quite frequently during that session. He was again CIO legislative representative.

Q. Would you say that your contacts with Mervyn Rathborne were more frequent in 1947 than they had been before?

A. Much more frequent.

Q. How often did you see him?

A. Sometimes at least—usually daily if he was in town.

Q. Up to that time, that is, prior to 1947, I suppose your relations with Mr. Rathborne had been cordial, had they? A. Yes.

Q. Before that time had you been actually friendly toward each other?

A. I would say so.

Q. And did that friendship continue during 1947? A. Yes.

Q. What would be the general circumstances and the nature of any meetings that you had with Mervyn Rathborne in Sacramento in the spring of 1947?

A. We often attended the same committee meetings, and sometimes he didn't attend meetings and he frequently took me to dinner, which was the only free hour I had, to find out what had gone on when he wasn't there. [7226]

Q. In other words, you would bring him up to date on his own work due to his absence?

A. Sometimes.

Q. Now, you say that dinner was the only free hour that you had. Were you working nights?

A. I worked almost every night. The only nights I didn't work would be when a committee failed to meet.

Q. Now, about how many times during the spring of 1947 did you have conversations with Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Many times. I couldn't estimate the number.

Q. By "many" do you mean a large number?

A. Yes.

Q. You mean fifty, a hundred——

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. Well, not a hundred; closer to fifty.

Q. You say closer to fifty. How many occasions would those conversations have taken place at dinner? A. Oh, a dozen or so.

Q. About a dozen times. And the other conversations would take place where?

A. In committee meeting or the Assembly gallery.

Q. And you would see him almost every day during that period of time?

A. If he was attending the session, yes.

Q. And you were of course a divorced woman during that period of your life? [7227]

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Before that time had you known that Mervyn Rathborne was married? A. Yes, I did.

Q. And had you met his wife? A. I had.

Q. And you had been to his home, in fact?

A. I had dinner there once, I remember.

Q. What was the circumstance of going to Mr. Rathborne's home and about when did it take place?

A. That was in 1944 when I was making a report of the progress of my work.

Q. Now, with all of those factors in mind, how would you characterize your general regard for Mr. Rathborne, or what was your relationship with him, could you tell us that?

A. Well, he is rather hard to characterize. At times he was a very likeable person, was interesting to talk to; but then there would be other things about him that everyone knew. He drank very heavily and gambled. You might say he was two people. He was frequently seen in the company of women in Sacramento.

Q. Well, what I mean by the question is this: You knew this man was married and you knew that he was seen in the company of many women, but you say you did have dinner with him. What would be the general reason for that conduct?

A. We discussed the business of the Legislature at that time. [7228]

Q. Well, now, did you have any conversation with Mervyn Rathborne in which he told you generally about his personal troubles?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. For example,——

A. He seemed to be a very worried person at that time.

Q. Now, for example, did you ever have any conversation with him in the late spring of 1947 concerning Jean Murray?

A. Yes, sir, he did. He told me once that he was contemplating a divorce and that he was thinking of asking Jean Murray to marry him.

Q. Did he tell you whether he had followed that through by activity or statement?

A. He later said that he had and that she had more or less scoffed at him, and he was quite hurt about it.

Q. And that conversation or that revelation was made to you about when?

A. In the late spring of '47.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. Now, in 1947 in the spring was Jean Murray also engaged in any kind of work at Sacramento?

A. No; she visited me for about ten days in Sacramento.

Q. Did you and Jean Murray and Rathborne ever have dinner together, that is, the three of you?

A. Yes, we did.

Q. About how many times did that situation take place? [7229]

A. Two or three times.

Q. And what was the reason for it? Did he actually ask the two of you to go with him?

A. As a matter of fact, he would ask one of us, and we would both show up.

Q. What was the reason for that?

A. More or less of a joke.

Q. By 1947 would you say that you knew Mervyn Rathborne well? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with him concerning whether or not he was a member of the Communist Party?

A. He told me that he had been a member of the Communist Party, but that he was in trouble with the Communist Party, having arguments, and that he thought he would get out of it; that he thought the Communist Party was losing its influence and that he was about to be expelled, and he thought he would just get out first.

Q. When did he first tell you that?

A. The first time he told me that was in the late spring of '47.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. That was the period of time in which you saw him most? A. That's right.

Q. That is, as compared to any other period in your life? A. Yes. [7230]

Q. During that same period of time did Mr. Rathborne ever have any conversations with you in which the subject of the conversation was Harry Bridges?

A. Yes, he did. He told me that the Communist Party had been attempting to get him to resign as secretary-treasurer of the State Council CIO and that the Communist Party circulated a rumor that there was a rift between him and Harry Bridges, and that Harry Bridges had denied this and had said that it wasn't true and had supported Mervyn Rathborne.

Q. Well, did he tell you that Bridges had taken any position against the Communist Party?

A. He said that he had said that the Communist Party—had attacked the Communist Party for doing this.

Q. What did he tell you Bridges had said about the Communist Party for that activity?

A. That the sources were unreliable.

Q. Did Rathborne show you any public releases?

A. He showed me a typewritten copy of a press release that Harry Bridges made denying the report that there was a split between him and Rathborne.

Q. And did the statement make any characterization of the persons spreading the rumor?

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. That the sources were unreliable.

Q. Yes. Now, did Rathborne around that period of time have any conversation with you concerning his leaving the Communist [7231] Party or concerning the fact that the Communist Party was putting him out, whichever it was?

A. Yes, he did. He said he considered the influence of the Communist Party waning and that he decided that he was going to get out of it.

Q. When had he told you that in point of time, as best you can remember?

A. In the spring of '47.

Q. By the way, you made a statement a few moments ago about some knowledge of the personal habits of Mr. Rathborne. Did Mr. Rathborne ever tell you anything concerning an incident in which he had given a CIO Council check to pay a poker debt?

A. Yes, he did; he got in considerable trouble about that. He said he had his checkbooks mixed up, and he had written a check on the State Council to pay a poker debt.

Q. That is what he told you at the time in explanation of it?

A. Yes. I think he said they later got it straightened around on the books.

Q. Now, tell me this: When did your employment of 1947 with the State Legislature end?

A. In June of 1947.

Q. Now, did you undertake any job or employment for the balance of that year?

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. Yes, I worked for the telephone company.

Q. Where was that? [7232]

A. In Redwood City and Palo Alto.

Q. And did you live down the Peninsula at that time? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Now, for the balance of that year, the autumn and early winter of 1947, did you see any more of Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Several times. I became active in the local county CIO Council in San Mateo County, and Mervyn Rathborne was a delegate to that organization from the radio—from the American Communiations Association.

Q. About how often did you see him in that period of time?

A. He didn't attend the meetings regularly. I would say two or three times.

Q. Well, now, toward the end of the year 1947 did you have any conversation with Mr. Mervyn Rathborne about his leaving the CIO?

A. I knew he was resigning as State secretary-treasurer.

Q. Well, did he tell you anything about leaving, and did he mention anything in respect to the activity of Harry Bridges at the time he left the CIO?

A. He always spoke very well of Harry Bridges. I don't recall any specific instance.

Q. Well, did he tell you—and just give us your memory of what he said to you—did he tell you about anything that Bridges had done or said concerning him at the time he left the CIO? [7233]

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. At the time after the State Council—after he resigned from this job with the State Council, Harry Bridges got up a fund, I think of $250.

Q. To give to Rathborne? A. Yes.

Q. Did Rathborne tell you that?

Yes, he did.

Q. Now, in 1948 what was your general occupation?

A. I worked for the telephone company for a while. I worked for one month in Sacramento again, and then I did telephone work after that.

Q. Was your work in Sacramento with the same employer? A. Yes, it was.

Q. Was there some other special session of the Legislature?

A. What they call a budget session.

Q. And you covered that for Mr. Samish?

A. Yes.

Q. I suppose you didn't see Rathborne at that time?

A. No, he was no longer in the CIO.

Q. Was he at Sacramento at all in that period?

A. No.

Q. Now, early in 1948 did you have any conversation with Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Yes. One occasion I saw him in Redwood City, and he was very worried over his financial problems. He wasn't employed at [7234] all, and he was attempting to ship again, and he told me that he was having some trouble, he might lose his home, because he had had it remodeled and the bank wouldn't cover the loan on it and he had a short-term note on it and he didn't know how he was going to get the money to meet that note. He said that he had an opportunity to buy some land in Half Moon Bay that would later become very valuable. I think he said he was getting it at a tax sale, but he didn't know how he was going to get the money to buy it. In fact, he told me if I had a couple of hundred dollars, that it would turn out later to be very valuable land.

Q. Did you see Mervyn Rathborne again in the year 1948 at all?

A. In October—in February he attended a San Mateo County CIO Council meeting, and that was the meeting at which I was elected secretary-treasurer of the San Mateo County CIO Council. After that meeting he told me that he had been offered a job by the national CIO as administrator in the event that the national CIO took over the State Council and put in an administrator.

Q. In other words,——

A. He said that he had refused that, however.

Q. That was after he had left his job here in San Francisco? A. That is right.

Q. Toward the end of 1948 after the re-election of President Truman, did you have any meetings with Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Just immediately prior to the election I saw him at a [7235] Democratic luncheon, I think it was the Sunday before the election, and he looked a little better then. I asked him if he had gotten his financial troubles settled all right, and he said he had; that he had gotten the loan on his house taken care of, and that he had won a great deal of money at poker while at sea.

Q. Did he say how much he had won?

A. He said a thousand dollars he had won in cash.

Q. Now, in the meantime had you remarried?

A. Yes, I had. [7236]

Q. When did you marry your present husband?

A. In September of 1948.

Q. September, 1948?

A. (Nodding in the affirmative.)

Q. Now, was your husband with you at this meeting in late 1948 when you encountered——

A. Yes, he was at the same Democratic breakfast.

Q. And he was with you when you encountered Rathborne? A. Yes, he was.

Q. Now, after that occasion in late 1948, when next did you see Mervyn Rathborne?

A. I assume in Redwood City; I believe it was in January of 1949.

Q. And what was the general circumstance of that meeting and what conversation, if any, did you have?

A. That was the first time I ever heard him talk against the waterfront unions. He talked against the waterfront strike. He didn't say anything against Bridges, though, even at that time.

Q. I see. Now, at any time in your relationship with Rathborne up to the month of December of 1949, had you ever heard him utter a word against Harry Bridges? A. I never had.

Q. Had he ever said to you, on any of these many conversations, that he considered Harry Bridges a member of the Communist Party?

A. He never did. [7237]

Q. Did you see Mervyn Rathborne at all after this meeting on the street in 1949, January, in Redwood City until last December?

A. I may have seen him twice in January or February, but not after that, until I visited him in Half Moon Bay.

Q. Now, what kind of meetings were those, just chance encounters? A. That's right.

Q. On the street?

A. Yes, I believe he said that in the course of his real estate business he went to the title company in Redwood City.

Q. And were your meetings with him in Redwood City at that time? A. Yes.

Q. Well, now, coming up to these later matters, let me ask you this: Have you ever met Harry Bridges? A. Yes.

Q. When did you meet him?

A. At the same time I met Mervyn Rathborne.

Q. Back in 1942? A. '42.

Q. And had you seen Mr. Bridges from time to time over the years?

A. During the time that I worked for the CIO, I saw him at meetings that I attended.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. And did you have a friendly regard toward Mr. Bridges? A. Yes, we did.

Q. Did you visit Mr. Bridges or make known to him anything [7238] concerning Mervyn Rathborne in the fall of 1949?

A. Yes, I did, when I read in the paper that Mr. Rathborne had become a witness against Bridges; I was quite shocked because he had never in any way indicated anything of the nature that I was reading in the newspapers, and so in November of 1949, last year, I went to Mr. Bridges and told him that I knew of Mr. Rathborne's financial difficulties, and I thought that it was more than coincidental that he had his financial difficulties cleared up about the time that he became a government witness. And I said that if any of this information that I knew could be of value to him at his trial, I would be more than happy to offer it.

Q. Well, now, did you have any conversation with Mr. Bridges at that time concerning Rathborne's contact with the national CIO?

A. Would you repeat that, please?

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Bridges at that time concerning Rathborne's contact with the national CIO?

A. In November?

Q. Yes. A. No.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Bridges at that time concerning any knowledge that you had gotten from Jean Murray?

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. Yes, Jean Murray had told me of Mr. Rathborne's visit to her in, I believe it was, May of that year or about the time that Rathborne was becoming a witness before the grand jury, and she [7239] told me——

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor pleases, to the hearsay testimony. Let Miss Murray speak for herself.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Yes, that is perfectly correct. You can't tell us what another person said to you except Mr. Rathborne, who has been a witness in the case already.

Well, now, whatever it was that Jean Murray had said to you, without repeating her words, you conveyed that to Mr. Bridges?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, after that meeting with Mr. Bridges, did you later see Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Yes, I did. I visited him in Half Moon Bay.

Q. Did you visit him by yourself or did any person accompany you on the journey to Half Moon Bay? A. Jean Murray accompanied me.

Q. Now, did you have any arrangement or understanding with Mr. Bridges that you make that visit, or how did it come about?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. Well, what were the circumstances under which you and Miss Murray drove down to Half Moon Bay?

A. I had been doing some Christmas shopping

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)
in San Francisco and I had determined that I would go talk to Mr. Rathborne. I didn't suppose that he would make any admissions, but I [7240] thought that by talking to him, I might learn something of his reasons for doing this. And this was a good day to do it, so I asked Jean if she would go with me, and she did.

Q. Did you drive down there together?

A. Yes, we did.

Q. And when you arrived at Half Moon Bay, did you put yourself in touch with Mr. Rathborne?

A. I phoned him.

Q. When you telephoned him, to what person did you first talk?

A. His wife answered the phone.

Q. Did you identify yourself to her?

A. I did.

Q. In other words, you made no secret about who you were? A. That's right.

Q. And then his wife put him on the phone, did she? A. That's right.

Q. What did you say to him and what did he say to you?

A. I told him that I was in Half Moon Bay and that I would like to talk to him. And he said that he could see me, and asked me to meet him at a restaurant which was about a block from there.

Q. And did he come? A. Yes, he did.

Q. What was the name of the restaurant?

A. Dominick's.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. Now, did you meet him inside the restaurant or outside it? [7241]

A. Waited in the doorway.

Q. And were you alone or was Miss Murray with you?

A. Miss Murray waited in the car.

Q. In other words, you were alone in the doorway of the restaurant? A. That's right.

Q. Did you and Rathborne enter that restaurant together? A. Yes, we did.

Q. Now, did you sit at a table or in a booth or what?

A. Well, there was sort of a counter or bar up front, and we sat there.

Q. And did you have some refreshments?

A. We had a hot toddy.

Q. You say, "We had a hot toddy." Did you have more than one?

A. I believe we had two.

Q. And did he have two or more than two himself? A. Two or three.

Q. And how many did you have?

A. I think I had one and left the second.

Q. And how long did you stay there?

A. Twenty minutes.

Q. And did you have a conversation with him?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What was that conversation now, as best you remember it? [7242]

A. I told him that I had been reading in the newspapers of what he was doing and that I was at a loss to understand it, in view of his conversations with me on the subject; that I had thought it over and had thought that I would help the defense in any way that I could and——

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. In other words, you made no secret of the fact to Rathborne? A. None whatsoever.

Q. ——that you were wishing to help out Mr. Bridges?

A. And he said, "Well, if that is the way you feel about it, why, go ahead." And I said, however, before I did that, I thought that there must be some pressure exerted upon him, and I just wondered why he did it. I said I didn't always believe what I read in the paper, and that I just wanted to know if it was true, what was said in the paper. And the things he had been saying——

Q. What did he say?

A. I asked him why it was that he did this, and he repeated, I will say, almost word for word the statement I had read in the paper.

Q. Well, did you call to his attention the fact that he never said any comparable thing to you when you had known him and that in fact he had said contrary things?

A. Yes, I did. I asked him how it was that he could say this now when he had never said it before, and how he, when Bridges had supported him so often against the Communist Party [7243] within the CIO, how he could say this. He said it wasn't a personal thing against Bridges, but it was something that he had to do.

Q. Well, now, did you have any conversation with Rathborne then about the issue or the position of the national CIO?

A. Yes, I asked him when it was that he made this decision to testify against Bridges, and he said, well, he said he had talked to Immigration officials who boarded a ship that he was on, but that he hadn't made the decision then, that he had been thinking about it, but that he went, after he finished shipping, he went east and he talked to national officials of the CIO and that it was as a result of this conversation with them that he had made this decision.

Q. Well, now, was there anything else that was said that occurs to your mind, or was that the substance of the conversation?

A. No, I was quite shocked at that statement on his part, that the national CIO had had anything to do with his doing this, and I didn't say much more. It was raining and I told him that it was cold outside and that Jean Murray was waiting in the car and that I had better go. And so we both went outside and went to the car. And he said he wondered if she would speak to him, in view of the fact that they had had quite a serious argument. And I said he could come out and see. And as I said, it was raining, so when we got to the car, we both got in.

Q. And was there a conversation then among the three of you?

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. Yes, I believe Jean said to me, "Well, what kind of story [7244] did he tell you?" And I repeated in a few words the nature of our conversation, and then——

Q. Did he make any corrections or utter any protest to your summary of what had been said?

A. The only one I can remember was that, when I asked him if they were using any pressure on him because of the fact that he had been involved in an armed robbery, and he said it was not an armed robbery.

Q. That was the only correction?

A. That was the only correction I can remember.

Q. Now, up to that time while you were alone with Mr. Rathborne in the restaurant, had you made any threat directed against him?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. Had you made any accusation against him to the effect that you were going to make any false story about him? A. None whatsoever.

Q. Now, when you came out into the automobile and Jean Murray was present, did you then make any threat against Mr. Rathborne?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. Did you tell him that you would take any false position if he went ahead and testified in the case? A. Not at all.

Q. Well, did Jean Murray herself have any con~~versation with Rathborne after you had recounted~~ your summary of what he had said to you? [7245]

A. Very briefly, as I remember it, on more than a few sentences, she said that she really didn't have anything to say to him, that we had better go.

Q. And under what circumstances did he leave your presence?

A. After she said that, he just got out of the car and left.

Q. Well, now, did she, did you, or did either of you by implication or by open words, tell Rathborne that you would go to his wife and offer her some story that you and Jean had both been involved sexually with Rathborne?

A. Not at all.

Q. Did that ever take place? A. No.

Q. Well, did you then drive back to San Francisco? A. We did.

Q. What was the next that you heard concerning the result of your interview with Mr. Rathborne?

A. Well, I thought that this information that he had given me about the national CIO would be of interest to Mr. Bridges, and so I telephoned him at his home, and I told him that I had been to see Mr. Rathborne and I thought I had something he would be interested in hearing, and he said he was very much so, but he said that he was baby-sitting that night and he couldn't see us unless we could come.

Q. He was taking a job as a baby-sitter or he was at home?

A. No, he was at home looking after his two children. [7246]

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. Yes?

A. And I said, well, we had a car and that we could come to his place, so we did. We went to his home.

Q. And did you tell him what you have told the court and jury now? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Now, after that what was the next you heard concerning this incident?

A. When the United States Marshal arrested me.

Q. And you were arrested then upon the statement of Mervyn Rathborne, made to the grand jury? A. That's right.

Mr. Donohue: Objected to, if your Honor please.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): And as I understand it, you were kept all night in the county jail?

A. I was.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

Mr. Donohue: Shall we take the recess at this time?

The Court: We will take the morning recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [7247]

Q. You were admitted to bail the next morning?

A. That's right, but I understand that bail was ready the evening before.

Q. And with whom did you first discuss the matter after your release from custody?

A. I discussed it with Mr. Frank Hendricks.

Q. When did you first discuss it with Mr. MacInnis? A. That afternoon in his office.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. It was on a Thursday; I believe it was the 15th of December.

A. Sometime in the latter part of November; I don't recall the [7250] exact date.

Q. Within two or three weeks?

A. In the latter part of November.

Q. Now, what time did you leave your home on the 15th of December to come to San Francisco?

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. I also had in mind visiting Mr. Rathborne.

Q. Was it necessary in order that you visit Mr. Rathborne that you come first to San Francisco from where you live?

A. I wanted Jean to go with me. I—it wasn't necessary, no.

Q. Then when you left your home on that morning you had in your mind the purpose that before that day was over you were going to talk to Mr. Rathborne, and you wanted the young lady you call Jean to be with you; correct?

A. If she wanted to go; I wasn't at all sure that she would want to talk to him.

Q. When did you first make up your own mind that you wanted to go? Was it that morning? [7251]

A. No. I had been thinking about it all during the time that this case was on. I thought——

Q. Had you been thinking—I am sorry.

A. I though that he was lying, and I just wanted to talk to him.

Q. Had you been thinking about it since you talked to Mr. Bridges in the last week of November?

A. And before that, too.

Q. Before that. And when did you make up your mind that you were going to do it?

A. A few days prior to the time that I did.

Q. When did you first let Miss Murray know that you would like her to accompany you to Half Moon Bay?

A. In the morning when I asked her if she would.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. Was that on your arival in San Francisco.

A. When I went to her apartment.

Q. What is your best recollection of the time you went to Miss Murray's apartment?

A. Sometime after lunch.

Q. And what time was it when you left San Francisco to go to Half Moon Bay?

A. I don't remember exactly. It was in the afternoon. We got down there about dinnertime.

Q. What do you mean by "dinnertime"? What is your best recollection of the time you got [7252] there?

A. Oh, around five o'clock.

Q. It was dark, wasn't it?

A. It was a dark day. It was raining.

Q. A rainy, dark, cold night, wasn't it?

Q. Yes, it was.

Q. And when you finished your mission at Half Moon Bay you returned to San Francisco, didn't you? A. Yes, I did.

Q. And you called Mr. Bridges?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And you went to Mr. Bridges' house and you talked with Mr. Bridges, didn't you?

A. I did.

Q. What did you do then?

A. I went to Miss Murray's apartment and spent the night there. It was quite late then. We had dinner before we went to Mr. Bridges' house.

Q. Now, you had talked to Mr. Rathborne prior to the date in December when you went to the place where he lives? When was the last time prior to that that you talked to him?

A. My best recollection is that it was in the latter part of 1948 or early '49.

Q. And you had talked to Miss Murray, and Miss Murray had stated to you the result of a conversation between her and Mr. Rathborne?

A. I believe it was sometime in June that she told me that Mr. [7253] Rathborne had visited her.

Q. June of 1949? A. '9?

Q. When did you first learn that Mr. Rathborne was to be a witness for the United States?

A. When I read it in the papers.

Q. And I think I heard you say that you read a statement made by Mr. Rathborne in the paper?

A. Yes, he made a statement about that time.

Mr. Donohue: Would you ask the witness to look at this to see if that is the statement which she had reference to.

Mr. MacInnis: Let us see it first, please.

Mr. Donohue: You have got me into the bad habit of forgetting courtesy. I'm sorry.

Mr. Hallinan: If you would learn our good habits instead of our bad habits, you would go back east improved instead of getting worse.

(The paper was handed to counsel.)

Mr. MacInnis: This is hardly a newspaper statement, your Honor. This is a self-serving statement, probably the one that Mr. Donohue prepared for Mr. Rathborne at the time, but I don't know how this piece of paper would be able to refresh this lady's memory on what she read in the newspapers.

Mr. Donohue: I wish I had had the moral fibre and the intelligence to have prepared this for Mr. Rathborne, but not [7254] having——

Mr. Hallinan: Who did have the moral fibre?

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Rathborne, Mr. Hallinan.

If your Honor please, I respectfully say to your Honor that this writing, which purports to be a statement by Mervyn Rathborne, I am entitled to ask the witness to read to herself for the purpose of determining whether or not this is the statement by Mr. Rathborne which she read in the newspaper. If she says it is, then I think I am entitled to ask her some questions about it. If she doesn't think it is, then I shall forget it.

Mr. MacInnis: I think we ought to have the newspaper if there is a statement that she read at the time.

The Court: The witness may read it.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Rathborne asked you to produce it. You didn't seem anxious to do it.

Mr. MacInnis: Not having the control over Rathborne that you have, we were hardly able to produce his writings. I see now that he is gone you produce what you claim to be his writing for the first time, but you were rather reluctant when he was here. There is no identification of that statement except by the special prosecutor making a statement, your Honor.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

The Court: The witness might glance at it. If it refreshes her recollection, all very well.

Mr. MacInnis: Very well. [7255]

(The paper was handed to the witness.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Is that the statement that you read in the newspaper?

A. The statement I recall reading in the newspaper was considerably shorter than this. I believe I read it in the Sacramento paper.

Mr. Donohue: May I have the paper back?

Q. What is your present recollection of the statement made by Mr. Rathborne which you did read in the Sacramento paper?

A. It is very hard to remember a newspaper story more than a year ago.

Q. What was the substance of it?

A. To the effect that he was testifying that—a story that he was testifying in the case brought by the government against Mr. Bridges for perjury, and named the other two co-defendants; that—I think the newspaper article went into some of the background of Mr. Rathborne, his position, and it—I think it said that he had been a co-worker or an associate of Bridges, and that he was now testifying in the case. I don't recall any quotes from Mr. Rathborne. [7256]

Q. Now, you had read an account in the newspaper that Mr. Rathborne was going to testify for the United States?

A. I had read the account that he was testifying before the grand jury.

Q. And you had been told by Miss Murray about an extensive conversation had in her apartment between herself and Mr. Rathborne?

A. Mr. Rathborne, yes.

Q. What was, in the light of that fact, your reason for going to talk to Mr. Rathborne.

A. My reason didn't have anything to do with her conversation.

Q. Well, just what was your reason on this rainy, cold December night for going down to Half Moon Bay and talking to Mr. Rathborne?

A. I thought that he was lying in this case.

Q. You thought he was lying? A. I did.

Q. It is a fact, is it not, Mrs. Teixeira, that you are not now and have never been a member of the Communist Party?

A. I am not a member of the Communist Party and I have never been.

Q. And you have never been a member of the Communist Party? A. No.

Q. Then would you know—you did know that Mr. Rathborne had been a member of the Communist Party?

A. He told me that he had been. [7257]

Q. Did you know then that Miss Murray had been a member of the Communist Party?

A. She told me that she had been.

Q. Then how would you know whether or not Mr. Rathborne was telling the truth when he said that Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party?

A. Because he had previously indicated to me that Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. And at the time he so indicated to you, you know that he was a member of the Communist Party, don't you?

A. At that time he told me he was leaving the Communist Party.

Q. And do you think as a non-member of the Communist Party that you can set up your judgment as to its membership as against one who was a member of the Communist Party?

A. Mr. Rathborne obviously is lying at one of these times; he had previously told me otherwise.

Q. You say you believe that Mr. Rathborne has lied on either one of these occasions. On which one of these occasions?

A. I believe he is lying now. I believe he has been paid off.

Q. You believe he has been paid off?

A. I do.

Q. On what basis do you draw that conclusion?

A. Because he was in great financial difficulties at the time that he left the State Council. He had no job and no visible means of support, and when he talked to me, he was very worried. [7258] He was actually worried that he was going to lose his home.

Q. And you know now that he is not in financial straits? A. He told me later——

Q. When?

A. In 1948, just prior to the election in '48, at a Democratic breakfast, that he had had his financial problems settled.

Q. And you concluded from that, did you, that he had been paid off to testify in this proceedings?

A. When I read that he was going to be a witness against Bridges and when I read statements that were contrary to what he had said before, and I read the things that he had told me about his financial problems that appeared to be much more than a coincidence that he got them all taken care of.

Q. And you concluded, therefore, that he is lying now, because he was paid to commit perjury, correct? A. That is my opinion.

Q. What was your interest in this case, Mrs. Teixeira?

A. I have always had a great admiration for Harry Bridges as a trade union leader, and I believe he is unjustly accused.

Q. And you, on your own responsibility, sought to talk to a witness that you knew was subpoenaed to testify for the United States?

A. A witness that I believe was lying.

Q. And what did you expect to gain by talking to Mr. Rathborne?

A. I thought by talking to him that he might in some way indicate [7259] this.

Q. Indicate what?

A. In the nature of his lies.

Q. And what was your purpose then, assuming that he did?

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. I thought that if he told me anything that would be of use to Mr. Bridges, I was going to tell Mr. Bridges.

Q. Now, do you recall stating just a little while ago on your direct examination, when you were asked by Mr. MacInnis as to why you went down to Half Moon Bay, that you stated that, "I might learn something about his reasons."? A. Yes.

Q. Were you interested in Mr. Rathborne's reasons for testifying or were you interested in what he had to say?

A. I was interested in both.

Q. In both. And you thought it was your personal business to find out what Mr. Rathborne had testified to before a United States grand jury?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you have in mind in any way that you might persuade Mr. Rathborne that he would not testify? A. It would be pretty difficult.

Q. I didn't ask you that, young lady; I asked you if you had in your mind at the time you went down there that to any degree you might be persuasive in influencing Mr. Rathborne not to testify?

A. I believe I stated to him that I wished he would not lie in [7260] this matter.

Q. I ask you again, did you have in your mind when you went down to talk to Mr. Rathborne any idea that you might to any degree influence or persuade Mr. Rathborne not to testify?

A. I didn't hope to persuade him. I thought perhaps he might say something that would be of value to this case.

Q. In other words, you thought you might get some information you could give to Mr. Bridges?

A. That's correct.

Q. Had you made any arrangement to be paid for any information which you might procure or obtain for him? A. Not at all.

Q. Now, when you got into this automobile, I understood you to say a few minutes ago that Miss Murray said she had nothing to say, "Let's go," after you reported what had happened, is that correct?

A. I believe that was the last thing she said, that she had nothing to speak to him about.

Q. What else had she to say?

A. I think she said something to the effect that he should be ashamed of himself for testifying in this matter or lying in this matter.

Q. Do you remember talking to two agents of the FBI in the office of the United States Marshal in this court on the 29th of December 1949? [7261]

A. Yes, I do.

Q. At about 10:00 o'clock? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Do you remember stating to these two men, "I did not ask any questions; Jean Murray asked them."?

A. I don't remember stating that. I think you are referring to the time that we were sitting in the car, and they asked me if I asked Mervyn Rathborne any questions in the car, and I said, "No, I didn't."

Q. And did you not then say, "I did not ask any questions; Jean Murray asked them."?

A. I don't recall that language.

Q. Well, did she ask any questions?

A. I don't recall any questions she asked at this time. She may have asked him how he felt about doing this thing.

Q. Well, did she ask you any questions?

A. When we got in the car, she said to me, "Well, what did he tell you?"

Q. Didn't she ask you whether or not your mission inside had been successful?

A. Not at all.

Q. She didn't? Now, isn't it a fact that you also told these two agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation——

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me just a moment. If we are to have statements by the special prosecutor from a paper which he has [7262] before him, I would like to ask him to identify these two persons whom he says are FBI agents.

Mr. Donohue: If she had any difficulty in determining that she had been so questioned, I would have been glad to do so, but she said she recalls the incident.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, the time and the place and the persons present.

Mr. Donohue: I gave them.

Mr. MacInnis: We want the time, the place and the persons present.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor directs and wants me to give her the names of the persons, when she says she can remember it, I will be glad to do so.

The Court: When the witness identifies the time, the place and the persons present and the circumstances, I see no occasion.

Mr. MacInnis: We request that your Honor direct the prosecution to give us the names of these two FBI agents, and we request that your Honor ask the FBI agents to come in here and give testimony, and not to give it through the lips of Mr. Donohue.

Mr. Donohue: Well, you have been giving testimony through the lips of witnesses so long, Mr. MacInnis, you ought not to complain.

The Court: Mr. Donohue, will you supply counsel, as well as the witness, with the names or the identity or identities of [7263] the agents involved.

Mr. Donohue: I shall be glad to, your Honor. Special Agent Willard M. Ruch, and John A. Kelleher; in the presence of Deputy United States Marshal Lawrence M. McEnerny and in the United States Marshal's office in this building, on the 29th of December, 1949, about—no, I am sorry, at 10:00 a.m. on December 30th.

Mr. MacInnis: Now we ask that the witness be shown the paper, so that she may see all the things——

Mr. Donohue: Oh, I am sure you would like her to see that.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, I rather suspect that you are reading a fragment of the report and not allowing this lady the benefit of seeing all of it. I don't think you should do that.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Mr. Donohue: You have a right, in the examination of your own conscience, so to suspect; but I most respectfully say to your Honor at this stage——

The Court: Proceed.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you recall stating at that time to the two men, Mrs. Murray,——

A. My name is Teixeira.

Q. I am sorry. Mrs. Teixeira, "I wanted to ask him why he was going to testify against Bridges and to tell him that I thought he was contemptible and a stool pigeon."?

A. I think I did state that I told Mr. Rathborne that what he was doing was contemptible. I don't say that that was my [7264] intention. I don't recall that exact language.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Rathborne that he was a stool pigeon?

A. I told him that what he was doing was contemptible, that it was lying. I may have used the word "stool pigeon."

Q. When you talked to Mr. Rathborne?

A. Correct.

Q. Now, when you made this statement to the two agents whom I have just identified, did you state to them, "I wanted to ask him why he was going to testify against Bridges and to tell him that I thought he was contemptible and a stool pigeon"?

A. I don't know that that was the exact language that I used.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. Do you recall at that time being asked this question, "Why did you go to see Rathborne?", to which you made——

A. They asked me that question.

Q. Did you make this reply: "Only to tell him that he was contemptible and to ask him why he was doing this"?

A. I don't recall that statement.

Q. Didn't you know from what you had read in the press and from what Miss Murray had told you, why Mr. Rathborne was doing what he was doing?

A. I read why he— No, I didn't know why. I thought he was being paid off.

Q. Had you read any explanation in the paper as to what Mr. Rathborne had said was his reason or reasons for testifying?

A. I had read in the paper that he said something to the [7265] effect that it was to combat Communist influence within the CIO.

Q. Now, if you knew that was the stated reason, by Mr. Rathborne, as to why he testified, why did you take it upon yourself to determine whether or not there was any other reason?

A. He had never in any of his conversations with me connected Bridges with Communist influence within the CIO.

Q. Would you expect a member of the Communist Party to tell you, a non-member of the party, anything about members of the Communist Party and their activities?

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. He didn't tell me anything about members of the Communist Party and their activities.

Q. I said, would you expect that he would, to a non-member of the Communist Party?

A. I didn't expect anything.

Q. Then why did you go down to talk with him?

A. In the hope he would say something that would help Harry Bridges in this case.

Q. There is no doubt in your mind, is there, Mrs. Teixeira, that when you went down to see Mr. Rathborne on this Thursday evening, that you knew Mr. Rathborne was a witness who was to testify for the United States, is there?

A. I read in the paper that he was going to be a witness.

Q. And you knew at the time you went to see him that the United States expected to call him as a witness, did you not?

A. I had read that in the paper. [7266]

Q. Mrs. Teixeira, while you were at Los Angeles City College, were you a member of the American Student Union? A. Yes, I was.

Q. And you were quite active in its operation, were you not? A. Yes, I was active. [7266-A]

Q. Did you know that the American Student Union was cited as a subversive and un-American organization by the Attorney General of the United States—I am sorry—by the special committee of the United States House Committee on April 23, 1948?

Mr. MacInnis: Well, now, in the first place, we object to that question because it is patently ridiculous. He might well ask her if she knows some person and then ask her if that person is not subversive. That is not a proper reason for cross-examination to ask a person if she doesn't know that some committee that she has never heard of has made a certain finding.

Mr. Donohue: She can say so if she doesn't know.

Mr. MacInnis: When did you say this finding was made?

Mr. Donohue: April 23, 1948.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, now, she was in college years before that. How could she know when she was in college that on April 23, 1948, some committee of yours was going to make a finding?

Mr. Donohue: Not mine; the Committee of the House of Representatives. And perhaps she had earlier information than they did, as a member.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, now, your Honor, he has asker her now, he has now revealed the purpose of the question. She was in college in 1938, and he says to her this: "You were a member of the Student Union, weren't you?" Now he says, "Did you [7267] know when you were a member of the Student Union that the Student Union was cited as an un-American group by a committee of Congress baffles me: Did she know that ten years later something else would happen.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Mr. Donohue: I will withdraw that question and ask another one, if your Honor pleases.

Mr. MacInnis: Ask a better one.

Mr. Donohue: Maybe you will like this one:

Q. Mrs. Teixeira, is it a fact that in June of 1939 you were student body president of the Los Angeles City College and headed a delegation from that school to the American Youth Congress held in New York City from July 1 to July 3, 1939?

A. I did not——

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. I don't know what the American Youth Congress is,——

Mr. Donohue: She does.

Mr. MacInnis: ——but I would suspect that it is obviously immaterial what she did in that respect. I don't see that it impeaches anything that she could say on this witness stand.

The Court: Overruled.

A. I did not head a delegation; I was part of the delegation.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Part of the delegation. Now, that was in 1939, wasn't it?

A. Yes, it was. [7268]

Q. Did you know that the American Youth Congress was cited by the Attorney General as being within the purview of executive order No. 9835 as being a subversive organization?

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. 983 what?

Mr. Donohue: 9835.

Mr. MacInnis: 9835?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, sir.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Mr. MacInnis: 9835. And when was that order made?

Mr. Donohue: It was made on repeated occasions, and it is amended and re-amended from time to time.

Mr. MacInnis: Made in the late 1940s?

Mr. Donohue: And new organizations are added to it, Mr. MacInnis.

Mr. MacInnis: I suggest now that the time has come for the Court to admonish the special prosecutor that he may not by leaving out dates attempt to trick this lady into saying that in 1939 she knew that some years later by an executive order whose number he gives here, some subversive stamp was placed upon it. Now, I suggest that that is beyond the realm of human experience. It is palpably unfair.

The Court: When was this promulgation made, or when was the order made?

Mr. Donohue: The order is made, if your Honor pleases, on the 1st day of July every year. I don't know the late date of it. [7269]

The Court: With respect to this particular——

Mr. Donohue: I will have to find that, your Honor. I don't know.

The Court: Presently I will sustain the objection.

Mr. Donohue: Very well, your Honor.

Q. Do you read the People's World?

A. I believe I read it for one year.

Q. What year was that?

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. I think it was in 1943 or '44.

Q. Then in 1943, on the 20th of October, did you read in the People's World on page 3, column 2——

Mr. MacInnis: Now, pardon me just a moment. These new rules of evidence that are invented specially by the special prosecutor for the special case are a little beyond me—attempting to get by indirection into evidence some hearsay document that he doesn't even have here. He doesn't even have the People's World. He apparently has a typewritten paper. And this lady, because she saw the People's World, I suppose, now can be held responsible for all of its contents and that would be a fine rule of evidence! [7270]

Mr. Donohue: It just so happens, if your Honor please, that she said she read it during the year 1943. If she can't remember reading this, she can say so.

Mr. MacInnis: Bring the People's World here. Counsel cannot state in advance some statement in a newspaper——

Mr. Donohue: I think you can get it easier than I can.

Mr. MacInnis: I think that the People's World is on sale in the public stands, and there is no reason that I could get it any easier than this man, who has the full file of everything that the People's World has ever said, probably, in its entire existence. If he has something that is pertinent, I suggest the rule that your Honor adopted, which I believe to be the correct rule, be followed: that he bring the paper, show it to the person and ask the person if that refreshes her memory, but not to read first something whose authenticity we have no way of knowing and also to commit in advance the vice which would attach to that method. I think it is kind of silly and ridiculous that the special prosecutor should be allowed to advocate the line of inquiry that he takes.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, this young lady testified that during the year 1943 she read the People's World. I think I have a right to ask her whether or not she recalls reading an article in that publication.

Mr. MacInnis: And if she read the Cosmopolitan, she might be confronted with the [7271] Cosmopolitan?

Mr. Donohue: If it said something about her, she could. I am going to question her about a reference made to her.

The Court: I suggest that you bring the paper.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor will recess, we will get the copy of the People's World.

The Court: At noontime?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: We will take the recess——

Mr. MacInnis: Can't we go on without that?

Mr. Donohue: It is five minutes to twelve. It is quite important.

The Court: We will take the noon adjournment, ladies and gentlemen, and resume at two o'clock. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions or form an opinion until the matter is submitted to you.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:00 p.m. this date.)

Wednesday, March 8, 1950—2:00 P.M.

MRS. BETTY TEIXEIRA

resumed.

Cross-Examination

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Mrs. Teixeira, when was it that you attended the Los Angeles City College? A. Between 1937 and 1940.

Q. When did you leave City College?

A. I left in June of 1940.

Q. Well, had you been a student during the first six months of June, 1940?

Mr. MacInnis: How long has it been that June has six months? I think that the confusion that characterizes most of the special prosecutor's questions has now become marked. He asks the lady, "Were you at that college within the first six months of June, 1940?" That is rather difficult, Judge. Maybe you can figure it out, but I can't.

Mr. Donohue: I do appreciate that help. May I reframe the question?

The Court: I will sustain the objection. The objection is sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Did you at any time during the calendar year 1940 and prior to June of that year attend the City College [7273] of Los Angeles?

A. Yes, it is my recollection that that is the date I was a student.

Mr. Donohue: I ask the clerk, if your Honor please, to hand the witness the People's World of February ~~12, 1940~~, and invite her attention to the marked article.

(The paper was exhibited to counsel and handed to the witness.)

Mr. MacInnis: I thought it was some other year that this lady said that she had read the People's World in. If you want it to be 1940——

Mr. Donohue: No, she said she read it in 1943.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes. Now you show her 1940.

Mr. Donohue: I asked her to read an article about herself in 1940 to see if it refreshes her recollection about the City College of Los Angeles.

May I have the paper?

Mr. MacInnis: The Court might look at the paper to see if it bears on any testimony given in this case.

(The document was handed to the Court.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Does this article refresh your recollection as to whether or not you were a student at the Los Angeles City College in the period beginning with the 1st of January, 1940, and extending up to the 1st of June, 1940?

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. I think she has already said she [7274] was, so there would be no necessity to refresh her memory as to that fact.

Mr. Donohue: It might change her mind.

The Court: It has been admitted, Mr. Donohue. Is there any question about the time or the period she was there?

Mr. Donohue: No, she has testified that she attended up to June, 1940.

Q. Having read this article in the People's World I ask her now if this article refreshes her recollection as to whether she in fact did attend the Los Angeles City College any time between the 1st of January, 1940, and the 1st of June, 1940.

A. My recollection, Mr. Donohue, is that I graduated from Los Angeles City College in February, 1940, and that then, instead of going to UCLA in the middle of the term, I chose to do six months' so-called postgraduate work at the Los Angeles City College.

Q. Well, isn't it a fact, Mrs. Teixeira, that you were refused readmission to the Los Angeles City College?

A. For the period of three or four days, and then I was readmitted.

Mr. MacInnis: Would that be a matter of impeachment? Suppose she were kept after school in high school. Suppose the special prosecutor would bring out that maybe she talked in class when she was in grammar school. I can't see the relevancy of the matter contained in this last question. It certainly is [7275] an attempt to cast a reflection upon this lady which is not only undeserved but which has no relationship to the case.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, if your Honor please?

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: I was readmitted.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): What was the reason that you were refused readmission?

Mr. MacInnis: What would it matter——

A. I wasn't refused readmission. I was readmitted.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you deny the truth of the article that you have just read in the People's World?

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me just a minute.

A. I say——

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. That is scarcely the way to prove any fact in the case, to show this lady an article, and the article being inadmissible, to ask her if she denies the truth of it. In the first place, the contents of the article have nothing to do with the case.

Mr. Donohue: She had an opportunity if she saw this article to refute it.

Mr. MacInnis: I have read a lot of things about you in the papers, too, Mr. Donohue.

Mr. Donohue: Did you insert them?

Mr. MacInnis: There were many things I wish I could have inserted, but not having the control that you have of some of the [7276] press, I have been unable to do that. But in this instance, your Honor, this lady is not bound by the writings in the People's World, the Examiner, the Chronicle, or any public paper.

Mr. Donohue: I will pass the matter, if your Honor pleases.

Q. Mrs. Teixeira,—(pronouncing "Texeira")

Mr. MacInnis: "Tisheira."

Mr. Donohue: "Tisheira."

Mr. MacInnis: T-e-i-x-e-i-r-a.

Mr. Donohue: I can't pronounce it quite as easily as you do. I will do my best.

Mr. MacInnis: You mean her name is subversive, it is kind of hard for you to catch on to it, like some of these other things, like the first six months of June? [7277]

Q. Mrs. Teixeira, were you a member of the initiating committee of the organization known as the American Youth for Democracy?

A. I was a member of the committee that arranged the founding convention, so to speak, of the San Francisco chapter.

Q. And as a member of that committee, which founded the San Francisco chapter, when, by the way, was that, do you recall?

A. I believe it was in 1943.

Q. Did you know at that time that the American Youth for Democracy was founded in New York by the 314 delegates to the Young Communists League, a day or two following the dissolution of the Young Communist League?

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me, Your Honor, that is now stating as a fact something that is not in evidence. Whether it may be true or not, I can not say. We have no knowledge. We object to the question as being improper.

Mr. Donohue: I am asking her, if your Honor pleases, if she knows, as a member of the founding committee of the San Francisco chapter, as to the origin of this organization in New York.

The Court: The objection is overruled.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Did you know that?

A. My understanding was that this organization was formed from many organizations and that one of the organizations that recommended to its members that they go into this organization was the Young Communist League. [7278]

Q. Now, may I hand you and ask you to read——

Mr. Donohue: This is 1943, Mr. MacInnis.

Q. ——the copy of the People's World of Wednesday, October 20, 1943.

(Document examined by Mr. MacInnis, then handed to the witness by the Clerk.)

Mr. Donohue: Will you call the witness' attention to this copy.

Q. Does that refresh your recollection as to when you became a member of the founding committee of the American Youth for Democracy, San Francisco chapter?

A. I believe the San Francisco chapter was formed in November of that year.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Q. You noted that this newspaper was dated October the 20th, 1943?

A. That refers to a convention in New York. I didn't attend that convention and I have no direct knowledge of what went on there.

Q. Well, did you note under San Francisco dateline of October 19th the statement that an initiating committee consisting——

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. This is again an attempt to read hearsay documents into evidence. Now, he may ask this lady if the article refreshed her memory. That he has asked her. That does not allow the special prosecutor to read the article.

Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor pleases, I want to call the young lady's attention to the fact that in a newspaper dated [7279] October 20th, The People's World, under a San Francisco dateline——

Mr. MacInnis: Well, now, he is about to tell the Court the contents.

Mr. Donohue: ——of October the 19th a reference made to her as a member of the initiating committee of the American Youth for Democracy in San Francisco, in the light of the fact that she has just testified that to her best recollection the chapter was founded in November——

Mr. MacInnis: Well, now, I am kind of puzzled, Your Honor, as to the theory upon which this matter is now inserted. Is it to impeach this lady? Is it to show a prior inconsistent statement? Is it to bear upon the testimony she has already given? It seems to me that by none of the known rules of cross-examination could this matter intrude itself into the case. The counsel asks her when she thinks she joined this group. She says November. Now he brings a newspaper bearing her name, he says, in the month of October. Now, what would that prove? I can't see the admissibility of it, Your Honor.

Mr. Donohue: It would seem to prove she was mistaken in her recollection, Mr. MacInnis.

The Witness: I believe the organization might have been founded nationally earlier than the actual foundation in San Francisco.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Well, you wouldn't have been appointed a [7280] member of a committee on the 19th of October, would you?

A. I think the initiating committee or the founding committee did a couple of months' work before the organization was actually founded by a delegated convention.

Q. Well, didn't this article refresh your recollection to the fact that the organization we are talking about, the American Youth for Democracy, was founded in New York, just three days earlier than this newspaper account, the 17th of October?

A. That speaks of the national foundation, doesn't it?

Mr. MacInnis: You see, Your Honor, the vice of this line of reasoning lies in the fact that if the special prosecutor looked further, he would find one of the founding speeches was made by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Mr. Donohue: I don't see her name in this People's World.

Mr. MacInnis: And there would be no possible impeaching material contained in the suggestion that this lady was a member of the American Youth for Democracy. I just don't see that that is an impeaching organization, however subversive this gentleman may claim it is by the words of some special assistant to the Attorney General, or by any other mandate passed years later.

Mr. Donohue: Instead of Eleanor Roosevelt, I see a speech in here by Max Weiss, the president of the Young Communists League.

Mr. MacInnis: Who is he?

Mr. Donohue: President of the Young Communists League. [7281]

Mr. MacInnis: Max Weiss?

Mr. Donohue: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: Is he some witness you have in this case? Now I have never heard of Max Weiss, but I have heard of Eleanor Roosevelt, and I just don't see that Max Weiss is a name of any significance in this matter.

Mr. Hallinan: Maybe that was Mrs. Roosevelt's party name?

Mr. MacInnis: Is that it, Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: It loses its effect when you repeat it, Mr. MacInnis.

Mr. MacInnis: Oh, we work together on these things.

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

Mr. Donohue (To the Reporter): Could you tell me what the last question was?

(Record read.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): As a matter of fact, you became chairman of the American Youth for Democracy's arrangements committee for the San Francisco area, didn't you?

A. That's correct.

Q. How long did you continue active in the American Youth for Democracy?

A. About five or six months.

Q. And when did you withdraw from active participation in this organization?

A. When I went to work for the CIO, I devoted my entire time to that. [7282]

Q. And when was that?

A. That was in 1944 about March or April.

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions.

I want to say, in answer to Your Honor's inquiry of this morning, that the first executive order 9835 was signed by President Truman on March 21, 1947.

Mr. MacInnis: So you could hardly have expected this lady to have been conscious of that order back in 1939, is that a fair conclusion?

Mr. Donohue: No, it isn't, Mr. MacInnis, because sometimes it takes the Government of the United States a long time to find out the nature of an organization, and when it does find out the nature, it is put on the subversive organization list and the last revised list, if Your Honor pleases, was issued by the United States Attorney General on the first of May, 1949.

Mr. Hallinan: You want to put the Immigration Department on next.

Mr. MacInnis: These lists, as I understand it, are compiled by persons like yourself, for the convenience in attacking persons who belong to various organizations, isn't that the way these lists are fomented?

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions of this witness, if Your Honor pleases.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. Mrs. Teixeira, I have. You spoke a [7283] little while ago, this morning, about your arrest and your detention in the county jail overnight and the special prosecutor asked you about whether or not you had any conversation with FBI agents. You said that some of the statements which he read to you sounded familiar and others you didn't recall. What was your physical situation that morning of your arrest? Are you undergoing medical treatment for any ailment?

A. Yes, I am. I have sugar diabetes and I had not had my insulin or breakfast at the time that they questioned me.

Q. Why was it that you did not have breakfast?

A. Because at the time that the matron told me that I would have to hurry in order to get breakfast, because she had brought me to the room that the reporters were in when the other people were eating breakfast. She said, "You will have to eat breakfast now if you want to get some." I said, well, I had to take my insulin 15 or 20 minutes before I could eat breakfast. She said, "Well, you will have to take it afterwards." And I said, well, it would be better for me just to wait until I got out. It was my understanding I was to get out about 9:30. That is what the matron told me, that the bondsman would be there at 9:30.

Q. And about what time in the morning was it that you were confronted by these two men who were FBI agents?

A. Around 10:00 or 10:30.

Q. Did you tell them anything different than you have told the [7284] Court and jury here today?

A. Nothing different.

Q. Now, let me ask you this. The special prosecutor asked you about reading the People's World and you said that you had read it during 1943, is that correct? A. That's correct.

Q. You mean by that that you read that paper every day? A. Oh, no.

Q. Who subscribed to that paper and under what circumstances?

A. My recollection is that my husband, who was in political life, subscribed to the paper when two people visited him and said that they were in a circulation drive. And they asked him if he would take a subscription and he took subscriptions to almost anything that someone asked him to subscribe to.

Q. Did you subscribe to many other publications?

A. Many publications. And my recollection is that the subscription came to our house for about a year, and from time to time I read it.

Q. Well, now, what was the political affiliation of your husband, Mr. Green?

A. He was a Republican.

Q. And was he elected to the California Assembly as a Republican? A. He was.

Q. And while, I suppose, the election in San Francisco to the [7285] Board of Supervisors was a non-partisan affair? A. That's right.

Q. Did he remain a Republican or did he change his political views?

A. He remained a Republican.

Q. I see. And you say the People's World was taken by him as you have suggested?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, this organization that the special prosecutor tells us now has been determined is subversive by this long inquiry that he, as a representative of our Government, makes, was that organization ever presented to you in the light of a Communist Front club or affair?

A. I didn't consider it such.

Q. Well, were the members, members of the Communist Party?

(Testimony of Mrs. Betty Teixeira.)

A. It is my understanding that there were members who had been members of the Young Communists League.

Q. And about what percentage of the membership did those people comprise?

A. I think I read a report once stating that about 10 per cent of the members were former Young Communist League members.

Q. And as you say, the controller, Harold Boyd, of the City and County of San Francisco, was a sponsor of the organization here?

A. That's right. [7286]

Q. You and your husband, who was a supervisor, were sponsors also?

A. He was a sponsor; I was a member.

Q. Pardon me?

A. He was a sponsor; I was a member.

Q. I see. Your husband was a sponsor and you were a member? A. That's right.

Q. In what activities did you engage during those few months that you remained in the organization called American Youth for Democracy?

A. I attended the council meetings as they were called once or twice a month. Actually, it was volunteer work, so they didn't expect you to do too much.

Q. What was the nature of the organization? Did you do any plotting against the Government or anything like that?

A. The principal interest of the organization at that time during the six months that I was in it was in juvenile delinquency and in aiding in the war effort.

Q. Was there anything in the name American Youth for Democracy which would convey to you that the organization was Communist-inspired?

A. Not in the name, sir.

Q. Let me ask you this: How long has your family been in the United States?

A. My forefathers came to the United States in the first boat [7287] to Jamestown.

Q. Is your mother a member of the organization called the Daughters of the American Revolution?

A. Yes, she is.

Q. I suppose the word "revolution" would connote to the special prosecutor that it is a Red front. She is a member of that group, is she?

A. Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

Recross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Did you know that Earl Browder was born on a Kansas farm?

A. I had no such knowledge.

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions.

Mr. MacInnis: How about Abraham Lincoln?

Mr. Donohue: Born in Kentucky.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

Call Mrs. Murray, please.

JEAN MARIE MURRAY

called for the defendant in surrebuttal.

The Clerk: Do you swear that the testimony that you will give to this Court and jury will be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

The Witness: I swear that it will be the truth. I can't [7288] believe in a heaven or a hell, because I believe in justice on this earth.

The Clerk: Do you affirm that you will tell the truth to this Court and jury?

The Witness: I will.

The Clerk: Will you state your full name, please.

The Witness: My name is Jean Marie Murray.

Direct Examination

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. What is your address, Mrs. Murray?

A. 1228 Geary.

Q. Are you married or single?

A. I am married, but I am separated.

Q. How long have you been a resident of San Francisco?

A. Well, between now—I came to San Francisco in 1940, and some of that time I have lived with my mother in Oakland.

Q. And what was the place of your birth?

A. Lovelock, Nevada.

Q. Did you live there during your early years or did you move to some other State?

A. We moved—my parents have lived in several places in the United States, and I moved with them.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Well, where was your education undertaken?

A. The greatest portion of my education was in a convent in Montana.

Q. What was the name of that convent? [7289]

A. The Ursuline Academy.

Q. When did you finish your education at that convent?

A. Well, I went to high school in the convent, and then I went to the Catholic college there, a part of the convent, for two years.

Q. What year was the last year in which you attended school?

A. I attended two terms at the University of Montana.

Q. In what year?

A. This was in 1940—1934, the winter—it must have been 1935, the winter and spring term.

Q. Did you take up some occupation after that time?

A. Well, I was a secretary at that time, trained in the convent.

Q. Well, what kind of work did you do?

A. I did secretarial work.

Q. And you continued to do that kind of work for about how many years?

A. Well, I still am a secretary.

Q. And after you came to San Francisco can you tell us whether or not you met a man named Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Yes, I met Mr. Rathborne.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Where and under what circumstances and at what approximate time?

A. Well, I met him in the spring of 1944.

Q. Where? A. In Oakland. [7290]

Q. And under what circumstances?

A. Well, I was the secretary for the Alameda County CIO Council in Oakland, and when I came back—I was campaign secretary in the 1944 campaign—Roosevelt campaign, and the CIO Council in Alameda County was putting out a yearbook, and I was asked to speak to the businessmen in Alameda County and to ask those of them who wished to support the program to give a testimonial of their support to labor, and many of them did.

Q. And that was the approximate time at which you met Mervyn Rathborne, is that true?

A. Yes, he asked me at that time to come to work for the Labor Herald.

Q. Did you take that job?

A. No. I told him that the workers did not read the Labor Herald; I didn't want to work for him.

Q. Did you see Mr. Rathborne from time to time after that date?

A. Yes, I saw him quite a bit, not right in '44; probably '46 and '47 I knew him most.

Q. Now, what kind of work were you doing in 1946 and 1947?

A. Well, I was—during most of 1945—I believe the next time after Mr. Rathborne asked me to go to work for the Labor Herald, the next time I saw him was when I was part of the CIO delegation to the Legislature.

Q. And that was in what year?

A. Well, I am not—I think this is 1945. [7291]

Q. Well, carrying your memory back as best you can to 1945, did you become well acquainted with Rathborne that year, or did you become acquainted with him only slightly?

A. Well, he provided quite a few opportunities for me to become more well acquainted with him, but I didn't accept many of those invitations; I think only once or twice.

Q. How about the next year, 1946?

A. Well, then I knew him better and I would accept invitations to dinner with him.

Q. Now, how about 1947? Did you see him often during that period of time?

A. Excuse me. During 1946, too, he used to come to my house. I lived then on 17th Street in San Francisco.

Q. In San Francisco? A. Yes.

Q. How about the following year, 1947? About how many times did you see Rathborne during that year?

A. Well, quite a few times, but not—not as often as I had seen him in 1946 and '47.

Q. Now, had you been a member of the Communist Party at any time? A. Yes, I had.

Q. When did you join the Communist Party?

A. I joined in 1936.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. And did you remain a member of the Communist Party during [7292] the years following?

A. Until 1946.

Q. What happened then so far as your membership in the Communist Party is concerned?

A. I felt very strongly about the fact that the Communist Party in the United States had betrayed the political principles and philosophical principles to which it had pledged itself. It had ceased to practice what it believed; there had become a discrepancy between what it told the workers and what it was; it was no longer a principled party. I had recognized these things some time before I conducted the political fight which meant my being expelled, but I had tried for a long time to correct the party.

Q. So you were expelled from the Communist Party? A. Yes, I was, sir.

Q. When did that take place?

A. In the spring of 1946.

Q. And you have never thereafter attempted to return to the Communist Party; is that a fact?

A. That certainly is a fact. I don't wish to be a member of the Communist Party.

Q. Well, during these years in which you had become acquainted with Mervyn Rathborne did you come to know whether or not he was a member of the Communist Party?

A. Yes, I knew that for—well, I even knew it before I knew [7293] Mr. Rathborne intimately.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Well, did you know he was a member of the Communist Party from seeing him engaged in activities, or did you know it from hearing him tell you? Which?

A. Well, I knew it both ways, sir. I knew it because he told me. He knew I was a Communist, too, and we discussed many of the policies together.

Q. Had you attended any Communist Party meetings with Mervyn Rathborne, or at least meetings in which he was in attendance?

A. Yes, I had.

Q. Now, from all of these factors can you tell us what, in about the year 1947, was your regard for Mervyn Rathborne? What was your relationship to him?

A. Well, I was very puzzled about this man, because he professed to have a great regard for the working class, and he had quite a reputation for—as a working class person, and yet it seemed to me that he was, well, wanting to do different things than he would if he had been a principled working class leader. But it wasn't obvious—this contradiction in his personality wasn't too obvious at this point.

Q. I am speaking now not of his philosophical beliefs but as to any personal relationship which may have existed between you.

A. Well, this was the background for my interest in—in him. He was drinking very, very heavily at this time, which is a [7294] contradiction. A Marxist doesn't need to drink that heavily, and he was really drinking, he was gambling, he was doing many things that would give the working class a great reason to distrust him. He certainly did not command the respect of the businessmen with whom he had to represent the working class. I was worried about these things, concerned about them.

Another thing is that the manner in which he treated his wife was distasteful to me, the dishonor that he was bringing on her. Se was never—she very seldom accompanied him to meetings where she would have been welcome had he been a different person. He was seen with many different women, and it was—I know that, especially, well, two or three girls whom I had talked to in the labor movement were embarrassed to go out with him personally because he was mixed up with these other women. [7295]

Q. Well, what was then your reason for seeing him from time to time or frequently, as the case may be?

A. Well, political matters that came up—questions which came up that he was participating in, and, well, toward the last few years I tried very hard not to see this man alone, but to see him when someone else was present.

Q. Well, now, to digress for just a moment from the subject of Mervyn Rathborne, did you have any official job with the Communist Party in Alameda County at any time? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Will you tell us in the year 1941 what was your post at the Communist Party in Alameda County?

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

A. Well, I did not yet live in Alameda County, I believe, up until the end of 1941. And I was organizer for the largest branch of the Communist Party in Alameda County.

Q. In your work with the Communist Party in Alameda——

A. I was also—excuse me—county director for the People's World in Alameda County.

Q. In your work with the Communist Party in Alameda County, did you ever encounter a man named Paul Crouch? A. No, I didn't.

Q. Did you ever hear of such a man existing?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Now, during that period of time were you quite active in the Communist Party in Alameda County? [7296]

A. Well, as I say, I was an organizer of the largest branch there.

Q. Well, now, to return to the subject of Mr. Rathborne in this matter, did you ever have any conversations with Mervyn Rathborne in the year 1947 or before that time concerning Harry Bridges?

A. Well, yes, Mr. Bridges' name is discussed in connection with many issues in the labor movement, and Mr. Rathborne frequently raised his name in connection with some CIO problem and so on.

Q. And merely to call your attention to the dates, did you have such conversations with Rathborne after 1946 when you had been expelled from the Communist Party? A. Yes, I did.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. And did you have similar conversations before the spring of 1946 when you were still in the Communist Party? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Well, what was the general nature of the discussions between yourself and Mervyn Rathborne in respect of Harry Bridges?

A. Well, Mr. Rathborne and I were Communists, and there would be problems coming up of Communist policy which it would be necessary to present to the trade unionists, and these policies, Mr. Rathborne complained that on some of these policies, it would have been much easier to get them adopted if Mr. Bridges had been a Communist. And he would—I know of several occasions [7297] when he would ask people who weren't known as Communists to take a Communist position to Mr. Bridges and to ask him if he would endorse it. And I remember on one occasion, he asked me to do this.

Q. To do what?

A. To present a Communist position to Mr. Bridges.

Q. What do you mean by that, to present a Communist position to him?

A. Well, Mr. Bridges was not a member of the party, and the party policy that had been decided was, if it had to do with a legal trade union movement, it had to be presented to these various trade unionists. Sometimes it was a member of the trade union in the steelworkers or some other union.

Q. Well, now, in the conversations that you had with Rathborne concerning Harry Bridges, did he ever apply any political name to Harry Bridges? Did he say that he fell within any particular category, political category?

A. Well, Mr. Rathborne's characterization of Mr. Bridges was that Mr. Bridges was a political economist.

Q. Pardon me?

A. Mr. Rathborne said that Mr. Bridges was a political economist.

Q. A political economist? A. Yes.

Q. What did he say that was?

A. Well, that is understood to mean someone who understands how [7298] the economy of this society functions, and if that man then is a part of the labor movement, he will understand how to use that knowledge on behalf of the working class. He believes in the economy as it is, he does not believe in changing the economy. He believes in the system as it is now.

Q. Now, when did it first come to your attention that Mervyn Rathborne was going to appear as a witness against Harry Bridges?

A. Well, I was amazed to hear this rumor. A worker called me first, the first knowledge that I had, and I had gotten a letter from the East Coast that said that many rightwing officers in the CIO—that is, non-Communist officers in the CIO—were planning a big campaign to get Bridges out of the trade union movement here.

Q. Yes?

A. And then I think that rumor was also printed in the paper toward the end of May. I believe that is how the matter first came to our attention.

Q. When did you first encounter the name of Mervyn Rathborne in connection with this case or the case that was to be brought against Harry Bridges?

A. I believe it was in one of the evening papers toward the end of May, that I saw his name brought up, actually.

Q. Well, now, was there any time in the spring of last year, 1949, in which Mervyn Rathborne made some arrangement to call upon you or have lunch at your apartment or anything to that [7299] effect?

A. Yes, he came to lunch at my apartment about the middle of June.

Q. Of 1949? A. Yes.

Q. Well, now, before he came to your apartment on that occasion, had you already learned that he was to be a witness or that he had testified before the grand jury against Harry Bridges?

A. Well, when I read this in the paper, I knew that it must be some kind of a frameup. I didn't believe that Mr. Rathborne was truly going to do this, and I wanted to find out what it was, and if the Immigration officers had pressure on him; I wanted to help him understand that he didn't have to submit to that kind of pressure. And I called him and told him that I wanted to talk to him, and I would appreciate it if he would come to lunch.

Q. Now, did he come at that time?

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

A. He said he would come and then the next day he called me and told me that he couldn't come. And then it was—I know it was about half a month later that he called up and said, he asked me if that invitation to lunch was still available.

Q. Now, in that interim, had he already testified before the grand jury? A. Yes, he had.

Q. According to what you read in the newspapers? [7300]

A. Yes. I asked him, as a matter of fact, in that when he called up at that time. I asked him, "You have already testified, Mr. Rathborne. I don't think there is anything we have to discuss." He said, "Well, won't you see me?" And I said, "Yes, my curiosity is——," I admitted I would like to know why did he did this.

Q. Did he then come to visit you?

A He did.

Q. About what time of the day did he come to your apartment?

A. Well, was about 1:30 or 1:45 in the afternoon.

Q. And did you have lunch, prepared or anything like that?

A. No, I was in the process of preparing lunch.

Q. Well, did you have a discussion with Rathborne that afternoon relative to the Bridges case?

A. I did.

Q. Now, tell us as best you remember what you said to him and what he said to you.

A. Well, the conversation between us, at first, was very strained because I had a great contempt for this man for what had already appeared in the papers. And when he admitted to me that the press was not incorrect in quoting him, I went ahead and prepared lunch and he fixed some cocktails, and I had one and I think I had—I remember he made a double set of martinis, and then he made another double set of martinis, and I had one and then I think I had a second one. And it was just toward the end [7301] of lunch, and a most uncomfortable lunch it was, too, that I had waited. I wanted him to open this. To me there was no explanation of why he should do it, but I wanted him to raise this question.

Q. You mean the question of Bridges?

A. Yes. He knew that that was the situation. But he didn't discuss this. So finally after lunch was finished, I said, "Mervyn, how can you do such a thing? Don't you realize that none of the people in the working class will ever have anything to do with you again?" And I said, "They know that you are lying. Why do you cut yourself off from everybody who had any means to respect you before?" I believe he said, "Am I cutting myself off?" And I said, "You already have. How could you become a part of this frameup of the Government? Why did you do it? Were you bought off, Mervyn? I know you were in great financial trouble and that all at once you told Betty that you were no longer in financial trouble. How did this happen? You are no longer working for the CIO, you were shipping out. How could you settle all these problems about your property? Who bought you off, Mervyn?" He didn't seem to want to answer this question. I said, "Are you part of a frameup between the right wing of the CIO and Truman, who wants to get rid of Harry because he opposed him in the elections? How much money did this combination of forces give you? Or are you promised a big job? Maybe you will become an Immigration official. Maybe you [7302] will become an official in the right wing CIO." But he didn't want to admit that he was bought off. He said, "I am going to sail." And I said, "The workers already realize you will never sail again."

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Let me ask you this. Was there any conversation that afternoon about any trip made by Rathborne to the east to speak with officials of the CIO?

A. Well, he told me—I reminded him at that time that he had told me, I think it was some time in November of 1948, that he told me that he had shipped and that FBI officials and Immigration officials had sailed with him on this trip. I said, "I knew they were hounding you, but when did they get you?"

Q. Was there any conversation as to whether or not he knew that Harry Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party?

A. Oh, we had quite a really angry interchange over that, because I knew he was lying and he knew that I knew he was lying, and I accused him of this, and he said, "Well," he said, "Harry—it is not too difficult to prove." He said—I said, "Proof? You have no proof and you know that the proof is that Harry is not a Communist." He said, "Well, he went along with a lot of the Communist positions and the press had always taken the position that anything militant in the trade union movement was Communist." So that—and, "after all these years, 15 years they have been trying to get Bridges, this time they will do it." I said, "You know Harry is not a Communist. You know he [7303] never was a member of the Communist Party, Mr. Rathborne."

Q. Did he make a reply?

A. I said, "You said yourself that he was only a political economist." I reminded him of those many times that he had told me that he wished Harry Bridges were a Communist, that it would be much easier to resolve some of these problems had Harry been a Communist.

Q. Did he make any response?

A. He said, well, he felt he had to do it. I said, "What kind of pressure are you under?" He admitted that he had finally—when I raised the question of the big shots in the right wing of the CIO—that is what he called them. He saw the big shots in the CIO, went East. I asked him if they paid his way there. "Who paid your way? Did the Government pay your way?" I said, "This looks to the workers as though it is a combination of forces that have finally found it to their interests to finish the job they started 15 years ago."

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Let me ask you this. At the end of your conversation with Rathborne on that afternoon, had you prepared any gift of money for him?

A. I was upset when he had called me and told me, asked me if his invitation to lunch were still available, and I felt after he hung up on the phone that I should have told him that I didn't want to see him, or I shouldn't have let my curiosity run away with me. But as I went up to the store to get some other [7304] things for lunch, I went over to the drugstore and got some—I had about 21 dimes in my little change jar that I keep on my dressing table, so I just—I though of Judas' 30 pieces of silver. So I got another dime changed at the drugstore——

Q. Another dime changed?

A. I made another dollar change, excuse me. And got the ten dimes, and I had those ready for him. And at the time that—it was after lunch when—I think it was after I became so angry, that I knew these were lies, that I threw—I had these dimes on my coffee table and I just threw them down at him.

Q. Well, now, at that juncture in your interview with Rathborne, did any other person come as a visitor to your apartment?

A. Not until a little bit later.

Q. And who was that person?

A. It was my neighbor, Bud Sparks—he wasn't my neighbor then, he was my friend. And he was coming to dinner.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Did he knock on the door and obtain admittance? A. Yes, he did.

Q. And when he came into the room, was Rathborne still there? A. Yes, he was.

Q. And were the 30 dimes still on the table?

A. Yes.

Q. And what happened thereafter?

A. Well, Mr. Rathborne turned to—after the introductions were made, Mr. Rathborne turned to Mr. Sparks and said, "She is [7305] giving me hell."

Q. And then did he leave soon after?

A. And then I told him he deserved it. And then he prepared to leave. And as he was leaving, I said, "You are forgetting your pay-off, your thirty pieces of silver."

Q. And did he then leave? A. Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: May we take the recess?

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen. Same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [7306]

Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): While you were a member of the Communist Party did you ever use any name except your own?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you ever conceal the fact that you were a member? A. I did not.

Q. Did you announce freely to anybody who asked you what your political connection was?

A. I always did.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Now, bringing your memory forward several months beyond June of 1949 when Rathborne had been to your apartment, did you on some occasion in the late fall have a conversation with Betty Teixeira, the subject of which conversation was Harry Bridges? A. Yes, I did.

Q. What was that conversation and what were the circumstances under which it took place?

A. Well, Betty Teixeira has been a friend of mine, and of course after I had seen Mr. Rathborne and found out that he had taken part in this case by his testimony, I let her and any other of my friends know just exactly what I thought of him, and I told her that it was true that he had testified.

Q. Now, did she on some later occasion tell you that she had communicated to Harry Bridges the narrative that you had given her?

A. Yes, she did.

Q. And after that time did she ever ask you whether or not [7307] you would care to drive down with her to Half Moon Bay and visit Mervyn Rathborne?

A. Yes, she said she was thinking of going down to—to see him; that she would like to find out for herself why he did this. And I told her what he had given as his reason at the time that I saw him, and that I thought—well, I thought she had a right to find out for herself.

Q. Well, did you agree to go down with her?

A. Yes. One day she came in and—before Christmas, and we were doing some Christmas shopping, and she asked me how I would like to go down with her then.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Did you agree to go? A. Yes.

Q. And did you then drive down with her?

A. I did.

Q. And what, so far as you personally observed, took place after you got down to Half Moon Bay?

A. Well, she got out of the car and called Mr. Rathborne's home.

Q. Did you hear her in that telephone conversation? A. No, she told me that.

Q. She later reported to you what it was?

A. Yes, uh-huh (affirmative).

Q. And after that where did she go?

A. Well, after that she parked the car. She told me that he [7308] had asked her to meet him at a restaurant, and she parked the car and I stayed in the car and she went in and talked to him.

Q. About how long was she gone?

A. Well, not more than half an hour; it may have been less than that.

Q. Did you see Rathborne arrive before Rathborne and Mrs. Teixeira entered the restaurant?

A. No, I didn't see him arrive.

Q. Did you see him at all that afternoon?

A. Well, I wasn't expecting to see him, but I was in the car when—and I noticed Betty come up to the side, the driver's side of the car, and then she said, "Mervyn wants to talk to you."

Q. What did you say?

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

A. Well, I didn't think we had much to talk about, but he was opening the car door—the other car door on the right, toward the curb at that time.

Q. Did he get in the automobile or did he remain outside?

A. Well, he wasn't welcomed very cordially into the car, and he stood in the car door and with the door open, but it was raining, and so he finally said, "It is raining," and he got into the car.

Q. What conversation took place between the three of you at that time?

A. Well, I—I asked Betty to tell me what—what he had [7309] said.

Q. You mean what he had said to her in the restaurant?

A. Yes, what reasons she—you see, many issues that he had discussed with each of us in turn, he would give a different interpretation.

Q. Did she then give to you a narrative or an account of what he had said? A. Yes, she did.

Q. Did he make any correction or objection to her narrative as a true statement?

A. Well, when she said about an armed robbery that the Government had over him, she said—he said it wasn't armed.

Q. And other than that, did he contradict her story as to what she said their conversation had been? A. I don't remember any other——

Q. Was there any talk then about the national CIO among the three of you?

A. Yes, she had repeated the conversation inside.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

the restaurant, had concerned the reasons why he had done this, and she stated in this—at this time that he had one—he had gone back to see the national officers of the CIO and that these right-wing officers in the CIO had—the big—the national officials had convinced him that—that he would have nothing to fear in participating in this prosecution of Mr. Bridges.

Q. Now, I notice that you have twice used the phrase [7310] "right-wing CIO." Will you tell us what you mean by that or what you understod it to mean in its usage in the conversation?

A. Well, the workers have known for quite a few years now that the CIO was not any longer one united body; that it had more and more become divided into two parts, and the—the reactionaries in the labor movement are to be found in the right wing, and the rank and file, the persons whom we know to support the rank and file and democratic unions, are to be found in the left wing. Many of the men in the right wing are reactionaries out of not knowing any better, sort of—they are honest persons; but others are very selfish in their interests, wanting great power to—some of them even, I think want to become President.

Q. Well, now, after Mrs. Teixeira had narrated to you what Rathborne told her and after he made the correction that you have mentioned, was there any further conversation, particularly between yourself and Rathborne?

A. There was some conversation. I asked him

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

how he would have felt, or how he did feel at the time of the big maritime strikes at the stoolpigeons and liars who betrayed the labor movement at that time. And he said, "Well, there were stoolpigeons."

I said, "You mean to say that there are stoolpigeons; you might just as well get some of the rewards for being a liar." I said, "What will your wife think of this? How will she want to live the rest of her life with a man who betrayed [7311] everything that he pretended to believe in for so many years?"

Q. Did he make any reply?

A. No, he didn't.

Q. Did that terminate the conversation?

A. No. I said, "What will your son feel? What rewards can be so great that your son must have that to remember about you? What if every year on his birthday he had to know that his father became this kind of a person?" I said, "Isn't that a horrible birthday present for a father to give his son?"

Q. Did he make any reply to that?

A. No, I don't believe he did.

Q. Well, how did the conversation finally end?

A. Well, he said to me, "I suppose you are working with the defense, too?" he said.

I said, "Well, I believe in telling the truth, and I will make available the truth I know to try to clear up this injustice."

Q. Did he make any reply to that?

A. He was very angry. I think he said, "Do your damnedest," or—he was very angry at this.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Did he then leave or was there more conversation?

A. He said—I said, "I don't think we have anything more to talk about."

Q. What happened then? [7312]

A. And he left.

Q. Well, now, in your presence did Mrs. Teixeira make any threat whatsoever to make any false statement about Mervyn Rathborne.

A. No, she did not.

Q. Did you at that time make any threat to make any false statement about Mervyn Rathborne?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you make any threat to go to his wife and invent some relationship between Rathborne or yourself or Mrs. Teixeira?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Then you drove back to San Francisco, did you? A. Yes.

Q. And about a week later you were arrested?

A. I was arrested on the 29th of December.

Q. Taken to jail and then released on bail?

A. Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Miss Murray, how long did the conversation in the automobile last?

A. Well, not very long. I can't tell you the exact length of time, but it certainly wasn't—I don't believe it was any more than ten minutes.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Well, what did Mrs. Teixeira tell you Mr. Rathborne had said [7313] inside the restaurant?

A. Well, she said that she had asked him why he did this and why he was working with the Immigration officials against the labor movement, and he said he believed that it was the right thing for him to do. And she reported that she had tried to find out why he had been paid off, how he had gotten his financial difficulties straightened out, was it because he was afraid of the government officials, because she had heard that he had participated in an armed robbery, and he said it wasn't armed.

Q. What further did she say?

A. And that—she said, "Well, when did you—did you make this decision?"

And he said that he had gone east to talk to the national officers in the CIO.

Q. And that is everything that she told you that she said to Mr. Rathborne and he said back to her?

A. No, I think there were some other things; I don't——

Q. Just what else do you remember?

A. Pardon?

Q. Just what else do you remember?

A. I remember that she said she had asked him what he felt to have all of his old friends have such contempt for him and for the rest of his life he would have to be ashamed of his life and that he said, "Well it won't be long." [7314]

Q. Then what did you ask him?

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

A. Well, I waited until she finished saying the things that they had discussed in the restaurant, and then I just told the Court what I said when she finished.

Q. You talked to him about some stoolpigeons in prior waterfront activities, did you not?

A. I did.

Q. And you talked to him about his wife?

A. Well, I asked him how his wife would feel to be married to a man who——

Q. And you talked to him about his son?

A. Yes, I talked to him, I said, "How will your son feel to have to know that his father had betrayed everything that he had pretended for so many years to believe?"

Q. Did you know that Mrs. Teixeira testified earlier today that when she and Mr. Rathborne came back to the car you had little to say except to say to Mr. Rathborne that you had nothing to say to him and "Let's go"?

A. No. I don't know what Mrs. Teixeira said, but I know that we had very little to say after she finished repeating what they had discussed in the restaurant, and that, as a matter of fact, it was I who said that we had nothing more to discuss. [7315]

Q. Now, when did you first know that you were going down to Half Moon Bay?

A. I just knew it the afternoon of that day that we went down there.

Q. That was in December? A. Yes.

Q. And you had talked to Mr. Rathborne at your apartment in June, had you not?

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

A. In June.

Q. And you knew that this trial began in November, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. And you knew when you went down to talk to Mr. Rathborne that he was a witness for the United States in this trial, didn't you?

A. Well, I knew that he was being discussed in connection with this trial.

Q. You knew he had testified before the grand jury, didn't you?

A. The paper said he had.

Q. Well, you talked with him in June, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. And didn't you know at that time that he had appeared before the grand jury?

A. Yes, he said so.

Q. And at that time you had called him Judas Iscariot and paid him off or attempted to pay him off in thirty pieces of silver, [7316] hadn't you?

A. Yes, I had.

Q. And at that time he had given you his explanation as to why he was testifying for the United States, had he not? A. He had.

Q. Then why did you go down to Half Moon Bay?

A. My friend asked me to accompany her while she went to ask him why he had done this. So I went with her.

Q. And you felt it was necessary for you to go down there?

A. She asked me to go down there, sir.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Where did you go when you came back from Half Moon Bay?

A. We went to a restaurant to have dinner; first, she stopped and called Mr. Bridges.

Q. Yes, and after you had dinner in the restaurant, where did you go?

A. Well, Mr. Bridges was unable to—Betty had talked with him over the phone, you know.

Q. Yes.

A. And so he was unable to—he did want to hear. That was the first time Rathborne had admitted that he was part of the right wing CIO campaign and plot. And we wanted to tell Mr. Bridges.

Mr. Donohue (To the Reporter): Would you reread the question, Mr. Reporter, to the witness?

(Record read.)

A. Went to Mr. Bridges' house. [7317]

Q. And how long did you stay there?

A. Well, I think it was about, maybe, a half an hour or a little more. I can't estimate time very accurately, sir.

Q. When had you seen Mr. Bridges last before the night that you went to see him at his home?

A. Well, I believe I had seen him toward the end of November.

Q. Now, Mrs. Teixeira testified earlier today that she had seen Mr. Bridges toward the end of November. Did you see him together?

A. She saw Mr. Bridges first and then both of us saw him together.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Well, if she saw him first and then you both saw him later together, how long was the interim between?

A. I think I saw him the evening of the afternoon on which she had seen him. We both saw him together in the evening.

Q. In other words, she saw him in the afternoon and then that evening you both saw him at the same time or simultaneously?

A. Yes. You see, one of the things that they discussed when she saw him in the afternoon was the fact that Mr. Rathborne had been to my apartment in June, and she told him of my anger with Mr. Rathborne, and Mr. Bridges wanted to hear what else had taken place.

Q. Now, when you say you both went there to see him that evening, what time did you go to see him and where did you go to see him?

A. Well, to Mr. Bridges'?

Q. Yes. [7318]

A. Well, Mr. Bridges and Betty came to my house. Betty came first and then Mr. Bridges came after.

Q. You mean they didn't come together?

A. No, they didn't.

Q. Well, how long an interim between the time that Betty came and the time that Mr. Bridges came?

A. Well, Betty came back to my house after she had talked with Mr. Bridges, and she asked me if I would see him, if I would see Mr. Bridges.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Yes? A. And I said, "Yes," I would.

Q. Well, did Betty then remain at your house until Mr. Bridges came?

A. Yes, she did.

Q. Then when you said that you and Betty saw Mr. Bridges together, you mean he came to your house and there you two talked with him?

A. Yes.

Q. And to the best of your recollection, that was some time late in November?

A. Yes, to the best of my recollection.

Q. Are you certain that it was after the 4th of November when this trial began?

Mr. MacInnis: Well, inasmuch as this trial began on the 14th and not the 4th, I don't think that the special prosecutor [7319] should deceive this witness.

Mr. Donohue: I don't know what I would do without you, if you didn't call my attention to my inherent capability of making mistakes. I certainly do wish to thank you.

Mr. MacInnis: You certainly do make them.

Mr. Donohue: Thank you.

Mr. MacInnis: And I certainly will continue to call your attention to them.

Mr. Donohue: Thank you, I appreciate it.

Q. Pardon me, Miss Murray. The trial began on the 14th of November. Can you tell us whether you saw Mr. Bridges at your home after the 14th of November or before?

A. It was after the 14th of November.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. You had followed the trial in the press and you knew when it had begun, did you not, Miss Murray?

A. Well, I would have known the date it began had I been a prosecutor.

Q. You mean you wouldn't have made the same mistake I have made? A. Perhaps not.

Q. Before you went down with this other young lady to Half Moon Bay, you had told her what Mr. Rathborne had told you were his reasons for testifying for the United States, had you not?

A. Yes, I had.

Q. And she told you that she had read in the papers the reasons stated by Rathborne for testifying for the United States, had [7320] she not?

A. Well, I think it was assumed we both had read the papers.

Q. Yes. Then did she tell you what her reason was for going down to Half Moon Bay that night in December? A. Yes.

Q. What?

A. She wanted to find out why he had done this.

Q. Didn't she believe what you had told her?

A. Well, sir, you see, a liar seldom tells the same story to two people.

Q. And she wanted to go down to see if he would tell a different lie, is that it?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, had you discussed with Mr. Bridges the night in your apartment when he came there to meet you and this other young lady?

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

A. Had I discussed——

Q. With Mr. Bridges, the taking of this trip down to Half Moon Bay? A. No.

Q. But you did go to Mr. Bridges' house the same night, when you came back, to tell him about what had happened, didn't you? A. Yes.

Q. And when you were brought to this courthouse awaiting bail, you asked permission to call Mr. Bridges on the telephone, [7321] didn't you?

A. Well, you are misinterpreting something. You see, I didn't know what I was arrested for. I didn't know for three hours after I had been arrested why I was arrested.

Q. And did you want to call Mr. Bridges to find out why you were arrested?

A. Just one moment, sir. You forget the process that went on that day. I was picked up by the United States marshal at 12:00 o'clock and held in this building for about three hours without being told what the case was, what this case was. It wasn't until the press made inquiry, said, "What case is this?" that one of the United States marshals said this was the Bridges case. That was the first I knew that there was anything connected with my activities that would be of interest to this case.

Q. Is that why you called Mr. Bridges?

A. And when they said it was the Bridges case, I wanted to find out what this was; it is why I called.

Q. Now, on numerous occasions since you have taken the stand, you have referred to the "workers." Just whom do you consider the workers to be?

A. I consider the workers to be those many thousands of persons in factories and on farms and in ships who sell their labor power.

Q. What kind of labor power?

A. Their labor power, who sell their own labor power to the companies in order to live. They are not five per centers, sir. [7322]

Q. I wouldn't qualify in your category of workers, would I?

A. Well, you work very hard, I would say, for the monopolies.

Q. Would you say that was true of all professional men that they are not in the category of men whom you classify as "workers"?

A. No, sir, that is not true of all professional men. Happens to be true, I believe, now.

Q. You think it is true now of all professional workers? A. Well, of your profession.

Q. Of my profession?

A. It is against the working class.

Q. Now——

A. The particular role you are playing in your profession.

Q. I understand. Now, I understood you to say shortly ago when you were talking with Mr. Rathborne about his going to sea, you made this statement, "The workers already realize you will never sail again." What did you mean by that?

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

A. They realized that he no longer needed to sell his labor power in order to live; he had already sold his integrity for your price.

Q. And that is what you meant when you made that statement to Mr. Rathborne? A. Yes.

Q. Now, when was it you left this convent in Great Falls, if it was in Great Falls?

A. It was in Great Falls. [7323]

Q. When was it you left it?

A. In 1934.

Q. And what did you do after you left the convent?

A. I went to the University of Montana for a couple of quarters.

Q. And when did you leave there?

A. In 1935, I believe it was.

Q. Well, you said you joined the Communist Party in 1936, didn't you? A. I did.

Q. Was that also in Great Falls, Montana?

A. It was.

Q. And when did you come to Alameda County?

A. Toward the end of 1941.

Q. Well, when you say toward the end of 1941, what is your best judgment of when?

A. Well, let me see. I believe I moved to Alameda County in approximately June of 1941.

Q. What was your then employment?

A. Well, I was employed, when I first went there, I was a worker in a Westinghouse factory.

Q. Who was the county organizer for the Communist Party in Alameda County when you were there? A. Sir, I don't remember.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Did you ever meet a man named Steve Nelson? A. Yes, I did. [7324]

Q. When did you first meet him?

A. I met him in New York in the national office of the League, the American League Against War and Fascism, and he had just returned from Spain where he had been participating in the war against the Fascists.

Q. When was that?

A. The actual beginning of this second world war.

Q. When was that?

A. I believe that was in the spring of 1938.

Q. Did there come a time when you met Steve Nelson in California? A. There did.

Q. When? A. In 1941.

Q. Where did you meet him in California?

A. In San Francisco.

Q. What, if you know, was his position with the Communist Party at that time?

A. Well, he had just come here from the East Coast.

Q. And what part of 1941?

A. I believe it was about the middle of 1941.

Q. Don't you know as a matter of fact that he came out here to succeed Paul Crouch as county organizer for Alameda County of the Communist Party?

A. No, that was not—I did not know that.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Well, how long did you remain after June of '41 in Alameda [7325] County?

A. Until 1944.

Q. Now, in the period from June of '41 until whatever time in 1944 you left Alameda County; did Steve Nelson have or occupy any position in Alameda County with the Communist Party?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. What position did he occupy?

A. He was the county organizer.

Q. And when did he become the county organizer?

A. He was already county organizer when I came to Alameda County.

Q. Now, you testified that you have attended at least one Community Party meeting with Mr. Rathborne; is that true? A. Yes.

Q. Was it one or more than one?

A. Well, I would say more than one.

Q. Well, will you tell us where and where you attended the first Communist Party meeting with Mr. Rathborne and who, other than you and Mr. Rathborne, were present?

A. Well, I believe the first Communist Party meeting I attended with Mr. Rathborne was in Alameda County.

Q. When?

A. I believe it was about 1942.

Q. Whereabouts in Alameda County?

A. In a restaurant in Alameda County. [7326]

Q. Where was the restaurant?

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

A. It's called Valentine's Restaurant.

Q. Valentine's? A. Yes.

Q. And where is it located?

A. Well, sir, I don't remember the street address. It is toward the center of Oakland.

Q. Toward the center of Oakland?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is your best recollection of the time in 1942 when this meeting was held?

A. I believe it was about February or March, 1942. Of that I can't be sure.

Q. Do you recall whether the meeting was held in the daytime or in the nighttime?

A. It was held in the afternoon, just about at lunch time.

Q. Now, was this Communist Party meeting held in a public room in this restaurant or in what part of the restaurant was it held?

A. It was held in a booth.

Q. In a booth?

A. Over the—it was over lunch time. Just at lunch time.

Q. Was the booth open at some part or was it wholly enclosed? A. It was open.

Q. Open. How many persons attended this Communist Party meeting held in this open booth in Valentine's Restaurant? [7327]

A. Oh, I imagine there were about four.

Q. Now, who were the persons other than yourself and Mr. Rathborne?

A. I don't remember, sir.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Pardon? A. I don't remember.

Q. Well, can you tell us what the subject matter in discussion was?

A. I believe that the subject matter under discussion at that time involved the fact that many men were being drafted into the services.

Q. Well, that was pretty common knowledge that I think, in February and March of 1942, a lot of people were being drafted into the service. What was the Communist Party interested in, in the subject matter under discussion, if you can tell us?

A. The Communist Party interest in that subject matter under discussion was in the placement of women, the replacement of men by women in various posts.

Q. I didn't quite hear. The replacement of what?

A. The replacement of men by women in those posts.

Q. You mean in Communist Party posts?

A. Um-hm (affirmative).

Q. Now, at that time you belonged to a unit of the Communist Party in Alameda County, didn't you? A. I did. [7328]

Q. And Mr. Rathborne belonged to a Communist Party unit in San Francisco, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. To what unit did these other two persons belong whom you can not now recall as being present?

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

A. Well, I can't recall to what unit they belonged either, if I can't recall who they were.

Q. Can you tell us whether they were men or women?

A. I don't remember who was at that meeting, sir.

Q. Well, can you tell us who called this meeting, who arranged for it?

A. Mr. Rathborne himself arranged for it.

Q. Now, what information did you first have and how did you get it, that this meeting would be had at lunch time and in an open booth in Valentine's Restaurant some time between February and March of 1942?

A. Well, you see, I was his secretary in the Alameda County CIO Council and I believe that Mr. Rathborne called me himself and asked to talk with me about these things.

Q. Now, do you recall whether or not the other two persons whom you can not identify were persons whom he asked you to bring there or were they persons whom he brought?

A. I believe, as I recall it now, that they were persons whom he brought, because I did not know Mr. Rathborne personally at this time. I was told through the party office that I was to see him, that he was a Communist. I didn't even know at that time that he was responsible—until that time—for party work. [7329]

Q. Had you met him at all prior to this date in 1942 when you attended this meeting with him?

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

A. No, sir, and I didn't really—I was there. I believe this was the first meeting that we had on the servicemen's problem at that time.

Q. Then this was not only your first meeting with Mr. Rathborne personally, but it was the first meeting that you had with him which you have characterized as a Communist Party meeting; correct?

A. Well, as I recall now, that was the first time that I had any occasion to see Mr. Rathborne.

Q. Now, from your experience of ten years in the Communist Party, was it the practice of the Communist Party to hold Communist Party meetings in open booths in public restaurants?

A. Yes, sir, sometimes.

Q. Well, did you attend any other such Communist Party meetings held under like circumstances?

A. If there were a particular issue under discussion and it could only be arranged at such a time, we did discuss those things then.

Q. Now, in 1942 was the fact that you were a member of the Communist Party a matter of public knowledge?

A. It always was, sir. I have never lied about my being a member of the Communist Party.

Q. But in 1942 the fact that Mr. Rathborne was a member of [7330] the Communist Party was not public knowledge, was it?

A. No, I don't believe so.

Q. And yet you tell us that in a public restaurant with a known Communist, yourself, Mr. Rathborne attended a Communist Party meeting in an open booth in a public restaurant; is that correct? A. Yes, sir.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Mr. Donohue: I have a few more questions, if your Honor please. Perhaps we had better defer them until tomorrow morning.

The Court: We will take the adjournment, then, until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock. The same admonition to you, ladies and gentlemen, not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until Thursday, March 9, 1950, at 10:00 a.m.) [7331]

Thursday, March 9, 1950—10:00 o'Clock A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America vs. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial. The witness on the stand is Jean Marie Murray, heretofore sworn.

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, Your Honor?

Cross-Examination
(Resumed)

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Miss Murray, have you refreshed your recollection overnight as to the identity of the other two Communist Party members who attended the meeting in Valentine's Resaurant?

A. No, I have not, Mr. Donohue.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Q. Where and when was the next Communist Party meeting you attended with Mervyn Rathborne? A. I don't remember.

Q. You don't remember?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Do you recall that you did attend another Communist Party meeting with Mr. Rathborne?

A. I recall there were other meetings, but I don't remember when they were.

Q. Where were they?

A. Well, I have a recollection they were in the Bay Area, here or in Oakland, but I don't remember—I can't remember just exactly where they were. [7332]

Q. Remembering as you do, that you attended other Communist Party meetings with Mervyn Rathborne in the Bay Area, can you tell us the identity of any other person or persons who attended those other meetings?

A. No, I can't, Mr. Donohue.

Q. Yesterday, Miss Murray, referring to page 7290 of the record, you were asked this question:

> "Q. And after you came to San Francisco can you tell us whether or not you met a man named Mervyn Rathborne?
> "A. Yes, I met Mr. Rathborne.
> "Q. Where and under what circumstances and at what approximate time?
> "A. Well, I met him in the spring of 1944."

Referring now to page 7236 of the record, I asked you these questions and you made the following answers:

"Q. Now, you testified that you have attended at least one Communist Party meeting with Mr. Rathborne, is that true?

"A. Yes.

"Q. Was it one or more than one?

"A. Well, I would say more than one.

"Q. Well, will you tell us where and when"—the record says—"you attended the first Communist Party meeting with Mr. Rathborne and who, other than you and Mr. Rathborne, were present? [7333]

"A. Well, I believe the first Communist Party meeting that I attended with Mr. Rathborne was in Alameda County.

"Q. When?

"A. I believe it was in 1942."

A. 1942?

Q. Yes, and now reading from——

A. I believe that is a mistake.

Q. Just a moment, please.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. I think the witness might complete her answer. Did you say 1942?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, I said 1942. That is, I read the witness' answer saying 1942.

Mr. MacInnis: I don't remember her saying 1942.

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Well, you might look at page——

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

A. Sir, that is a mistake. If it is 1942, it is a mistake. I met, I am sure, Mr. Rathborne a little later than that at least. I am not quite sure when I first met this gentleman.

Q. You said yesterday on direct examination that you met him in 1944 and the record indicates on cross-examination you said you met him for the first time at a Communist Party meeting in Valentine's Restaurant, which you said took place in February or March, 1942. Now, in which year was it in fact that you met Mr. Rathborne?

A. Well, I would say that it was around 1944 when I first met Mr. Rathborne, but it may have been earlier. I met quite a few [7334] people when I came to Oakland, people whom I had not recognized before, and I met them all in a—oh, a period that covered two or three years, many hundreds of people during that time in that work.

Q. Do you recall that on yesterday on your direct examination, referring to page 7291 of the record, you were asked this question:

"And under what circumstances—" referring to the circumstances under which you first met Mr. Rathborne—and you made this answer:

> "Well, I was secretary for the Alameda County CIO Council in Oakland. When I came back I was campaign secretary in the 1944 campaign, Roosevelt campaign, and the CIO Council in Alameda County was putting out a year book and I was asked to speak to the business men in Alameda County and to ask those of them who wished to support the program to give a testimonial of their support to labor, and many of them did.

"Q. And was that the approximate time at which you met Mervyn Rathborne, is that true?

"A. Yes, he asked me at that time to come and work for the Labor Herald."

Does that refresh your recollection as to whether or not those were the circumstances in 1944 at which time you met Mr. Rathborne? [7335]

A. Well, sir, I wanted to give you the circumstances in which I first became personally concerned with Mr. Rathborne in working on the Labor Herald, and I tried to give you all the circumstances and I would say yes, I remember this as about that time. I can't be sure just when it did take place, but I would say it was some time then.

Q. Were you correct in your recollection yesterday that the first time that you personally met Mr. Rathborne is when, as you state here, in 1944 he asked you to work for the Labor Herald?

A. I would say it must have been some time around then, although I can't be sure just when.

Q. Do you recall that yesterday, referring to page 7330 of the record; and referring to Communist Party meeting in the open booth in Valentine's Restaurant at high noon in 1942, I asked you this question:

"Then this was not only your first meeting with Mr. Rathborne personally, but it was the first meeting you had had with him which you have characterized as a Communist Party meeting, correct?

"A. Well, as I recall now, that was the first time I had any occasion to see Mr. Rathborne."

A. In 1942? [7336]

Q. In 1942.

A. I have told you this morning, sir, that I believe that to be a mistake. I don't believe it was as early as that. I was trying, as I said, to give you the circumstances when I may first have seen this man; when I talked with him concerning the job on the Labor Herald, I am sure it must have been some time later, but I can't tell you just exactly when.

Q. If your recollection on yesterday was that you talked with Mr. Rathborne about the job on the Labor Herald at the time of the 1944 Roosevelt campaign, can you tell us now whether your talk with Mr. Rathborne about the job on the Labor Herald was before or after this Communist Party meeting in the booth in Valentine's Restaurant?

A. Well, sir, I can't remember those dates. Can you remember all of these dates eight years ago?

Q. No. I am not asking you to remember the dates. I am asking you to recall which of the two circumstances occurred first.

A. Well, there were many meetings—many, many meetings in Alameda County, preceded—of all kinds with all sorts of people preceded my coming to San Francisco, and I can't be sure when these meetings were or which came first or which one second. I kept no record of these things.

Q. Then are you able to tell us this morning whether or not this Communist Party meeting you have described as having taken place between yourself and Mr. Rathborne and two unidentified [5337] other members of the Communist Party at this public restaurant in Oakland occurred before or after Mr. Rathborne had asked you to work for the Labor Herald?

A. My impression, sir, is that it occurred before.

Q. Can you tell us how long before?

A. Well, it may have been 1942 or '43, but I am not sure; I can't give an exact date. It may have even been 1944.

Q. Can you tell us whether the first time you met Mr. Rathborne was at a Communist meeting or was it at a labor meeting of some kind?

A. Well, that I can't recall either, because Mr. Rathborne was both a labor—well, I hate to distinguish him with the title "leader" at this point, but he was in the labor movement, and he was also a Communist.

Q. You mean you find it reluctant this morning to refer to the fact that Mr. Rathborne had been designated by you at one time as a labor leader?

A. Yes. I was mistaken in thinking he was capable of maintaining leadership of the working class. He preferred to sell his integrity.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. He preferred apparently to sell his integrity.

Q. Now, since it is your present recollection this morning that the Communist Party meeting in Valentine's Restaurant in downtown Oakland occurred prior to the time that you met—— [7338]

A. You have a strange impression—excuse me, Mr. Donohue, but you have a strange impression of Communists. I think you have been reading a lot of cloak-and-dagger books, you know.

Q. Referring again to the time——

A. Just a moment.

Q. Surely.

A. You seem to think that all of the people who are members of the Communist Party are the type of people whom you have been able to buy, the ones who sold their integrity to you and your corrupt government.

Q. You mean my government?

A. Some of them. This is a government of the monopolies; it isn't a government of the working class.

Q. You mean the Government of the United States, which I am proud to represent?

A. The Government of the United States is a dictatorship of the monopolies; it doesn't represent the workers.

(Testimony of Jean Marie Murray.)

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions of this witness.

Mr. MacInnis: We have no questions.

The Witness: What?

Mr. MacInnis: We have no questions. Thank you.

Mr. Robertson.

J. R. ROBERTSON

recalled for the defendants in surrebuttal; previously sworn. [7339]

The Clerk: The witness on the stand is James R. Robertson, heretofore sworn.

Direct Examination.

By Mr. MacInnis:

Q. Now, Mr. Robertson, as we have discussed the matter, we wanted to go over some of the things said by the witness Rathborne. You remember that you were elevated by the witness Rathborne to a position on some committee called "God's Committee." Do you remember him testifying to that? A. Yes.

Q. Were you a member of any such committee?

A. No.

Q. Now, on the one occasion on which the witness Rathborne specified any date about any attendance at any so-called Communist meeting at which he placed you as one of those in attendance, we find the date to be specified as November of 1943, and referring for the special prosecutor's benefit to page 6421 and to 6420 as well, the witness Rathborne said that within two weeks after the 1943 convention of the CIO at Philadelphia, he attended a Communist Party meeting with you in San Francisco and that there was present also a man named William Schneidermann. Do you remember him giving that testimony?

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

A. Yes.

Q. And he said this:

> "The best way I can place the date, I would say within two weeks after the convention, national CIO convention, [7340] that was held in Philadelphia; it was a few days after the delegates returned from that convention, which I would say put it within two weeks after that convention."

Now, first of all, did you attend the convention in Philadelphia?

A. I attended the national CIO convention in Philadelphia in 1943, yes.

Q. And where were you living at that time?

A. I was stationed in Chicago at that time and living there.

Q. And what was your job in Chicago?

A. Directing the organizational work of the international.

Q. What was your home address in Chicago?

A. 2121 Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago.

Q. 2121 Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago. And when did you first start living at 2121 Milwaukee Avenue in Chicago?

A. I would say in the early part of 1943.

Q. The early part of 1943. And you lived there continuously except for business trips elsewhere, until what approximate date?

A. I believe the latter part of June, 1944. I lived there over a year.

Q. In other words, until June of 1944 you were living in Chicago? A. Yes.

Q. Did you return to San Francisco immediately after the CIO [7341] convention in Philadelphia? A. No.

Q. Did you attend any meeting in San Francisco in which there was discussed, according to Rathborne, some maneuver under which Mr. Thimmes became president of the California CIO replacing Mr. Connally?

A. No, not having been here, I couldn't have attended any meetings in San Francisco.

Q. You didn't attend any meeting as specified by the witness Rathborne? A. No.

Q. After you heard the witness Rathborne give that testimony, did you consult your personal records in order to see if there were any documents in your possession that would prove you were actually in Chicago at that time?

A. I most certainly did.

Mr. MacInnis: I am going to present some of those documents to you, and I am going to ask the special prosecutor to listen carefully, because at the end of this testimony we are going to ask that the witness Rathborne be similarly cited to the grand jury for a perjury indictment as to his testimony in this case.

Mr. Donohue: I move, if your Honor pleases, that that unnecessary, unjustifiable and personal comment of Mr. MacInnis be stricken from the record. [7342]

The Court: It is stricken from the record and the jury is admonished to disregard it.

Mr. Donohue: I should like to say also for the record that it is unnecessary for Mr. MacInnis to suggest that I listen carefully. I listen carefully to everything that occurs here.

Mr. MacInnis: Sometimes you don't. For instance, you told a witness yesterday that this trial started November 4. I don't think you pay attention——

Mr. Paisley: Let's get along with the case.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. Did you say something?

Mr. Paisley: Yes. Let's get along with the case.

Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Do you know when the CIO convention in Philadelphia was held?

A. The first week in November, I believe.

Q. You mean by that November 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5?

A. I would have to see the proceedings, but I would say it was around that date—those dates, rather.

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

Q. I will show you, if I may, the proceedings of that convention, and if you will look on the first page inside the cover you will see the dates.

A. Yes.

Q. I will ask you if that document refreshes your memory.

A. The 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th, those are the five days; Monday through Friday, that is. [7343]

Q. Did you travel from Chicago to Philadelphia for that convention? A. No, I did not.

Q. By what route did you reach Philadelphia?

A. From Fort Knox, Kentucky, I believe.

Q. When had you gone to Fort Knox, Kentucky, and for what purpose?

A. Well, the War Department, to further the war effort, had gathered together a large group of persons in the Midwest area, took them to Fort Knox to get them better acquainted with the functions of our armed services, and I was fortunate enough to be one of those civilians that was taken for this two-day conference in Fort Knox, and I left Chicago the latter part of October, I believe—I think it was the 27th—26th, 27th or 28th. I know we had a two-day conference there in the latter part of October, and I went from the conference to Philadelphia for the convention.

Q. In respect of that situation, as well as the other dates that will follow, I have certain records, some of which I believe are personal records of yours, and others officials records of the CIO. Are these records that you have gone over with me prior to coming here to court?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Mr. Robertson, would you please tell us what this first voucher is? [7344]

The prosecutor has a photostat of all of these documents for his inspection.

A. Yes. This is an expense voucher of mine, and this——

Q. That is part of the official record of the union? A. Yes.

Q. Can you refresh your memory from that document and tell us when you went to Fort Knox, and when and in what fashion you traveled from Kentucky to Philadelphia?

A. The dates on this expense voucher are October 27 through November 10, and it says Chicago to Fort Knox, Kentucky, and from Fort Knox to Philadelphia, and from Philadelphia to New York, from New York to Baltimore, and return to Chicago, and that is in a period from October 27 to November 10, including my trip to Fort Knox, attending the convention and taking care of whatever responsibilities I had in the East at that time, returning to Chicago, I believe, the 10th or the 11th of November.

Q. And that record brings you up to the 10th of November of 1943, is that true? A. Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: In all of these instances we will ask that the photostat be received instead of the original in evidence. These are official records kept in the ordinary and regular course of business.

Q. Having brought yourself up to the 10th day of November, 1943, I am going to hand you another document and ask you if from this [7345] document you can refresh your memory as to your activities between the 10th and the 12th of November of 1943. That is a letter dated November 12 of which you have a copy.

A. Yes, this is——

Q. What is the letter first?

A. It is a letter from myself to Secretary Goldblatt of the international.

Q. Written by you where?

A. Written by me in Chicago on November 12.

Q. And how can you identify the letter as having been written by you in Chicago?

A. It has my secretary's initial at the bottom of the first page, the usual mark.

Q. Is there any memorandum which was enclosed with that letter that recounts your activities?

A. Yes.

Q. Upon days previous to that?

A. Yes, there is a memo here outlining the matters I took up, organizational matters I took up with other unions, other national unions, during the course of the CIO convention at Philadelphia, and the subsequent trip to New York to work out the details.

Q. When were you in New York upon that errand?

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

A. It was between the 1st and the 10th of November. I can check the record and get the exact date, perhaps, but it was [7346] probably after the end of the CIO convention, which I believe was the 5th, and I took a run into New York to see representatives of the NMU. I would say it would be after the 5th. [7346-A]

Q. So far as your presence in Chicago was concerned after that trip that you made to New York, I am going to show you some other documents and ask you if they refresh your memory. I am handing the witness now some checks, of which the prosecutor also has copies, and, by the way, we offer for evidence the original letter of the witness to Mr. Goldblatt written from Chicago November 12, 1943, and we ask that a photostat be received in lieu of the original.

A. I have examined this material. They are canceled checks. Some of them are personal checks and one of them is payroll check.

Q. Calling your attention to November 11, 1943, can you tell us whether or not in Chicago you wrote any checks upon that day? A. Yes.

Q. What checks were those?

A. Here is one to the real estate firm paying my rent. Here is another to——

Q. May I stop you there a moment? What date does that check bear?

A. November 11, 1943.

Q. Is that an original canceled check?

A. Yes.

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

Q. Does it show upon the back of it that it was deposited? A. Yes, it does.

Q. Upon what bank was that check [7347] drawn?

A. The American National Bank and Trust Company of Chicago.

Q. I think that is the deposit mark. What is the bank upon the face of the check?

A. I am sorry. The Merchants & National. That is the bank I had my account with.

Q. Merchants National Bank of Chicago?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you write any check for any utilities upon that day, November 11, 1943? A. Yes.

Q. What check was that? What amount and to whom?

A. This is a check to the gas company for my gas bill dated November 11th, on the Merchants National.

Q. Was that deposited in Chicago?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. How about the paycheck of which you speak?

A. Here is a paycheck dated November 10th, 1943.

Q. That would be dated in San Francisco?

A. San Francisco, yes.

Q. Did you receive that in Chicago?

A. Yes.

Q. Does it show upon the back of it that it was actually deposited in Chicago? A. Yes.

Q. Where and when? [7348]

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

A. On November 13th, 1943.

Q. Do you have any other check showing the payment of an electric bill?

A. Yes, I have one dated November 11th to the Edison Company for $3.85 for my electric bill drawn on the Merchants National.

Q. Does the back of that check show it was deposited in Chicago? A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any other check in your hand?

A. November 16th. Let's see, I have my electric bill, my gas bill, my rent—yes, I have a couple of personal checks here marked "Cash," one on the 13th and one on the—it might be the 17th or the 11th. The stamp that cancels is——

Q. I see. Were you in Chicago on all of those dates? A. Yes, I was.

Q. To cover again somewhat the same period of time following the 11th, I will ask the Clerk if he will hand to you another letter dated November 13th.

The Court: Mr. MacInnis, interrupting you momentarily, the first letter may be marked—that is, the letter from this witness to Mr. Goldblatt in evidence as Defendant Robertson's exhibit next in order, and the checks may be marked appropriately as exhibit next in order.

Mr. MacInnis: It might be easier for the Clerk if we make them all one exhibit.

The Court: That is agreeable. [7349]

Mr. MacInnis: There will probably be 15 of these pieces of paper.

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

The Court: All right.

Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Would you hand the witness this letter dated November 13th from Chicago and signed by himself?

A. Yes; this is a letter from me in Chicago to Mr. Goldblatt, our secretary, raising some administrative problem with him, dated November 13th, and it has my secretary's initials at the bottom of the page.

Q. Was that letter written by you in Chicago?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were in Chicago upon that day?

A. Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: I will make the same request as to all of these documents at the end of the series of questions.

Q. Referring to the 15th, 16th and 17th of the same month, November, 1943, I am handing you now a group of checks and I will ask you if you can look at those checks and, first of all, tell us if you were still in Chicago on the 15th, 16th and 17th of November?

A. Yes, I was still there.

Q. What check do you have that you wrote on the 15th of November in Chicago?

A. I have a check here, canceled check, paying my phone bill drawn on the Merchants [7350] National.

Q. Was that check, according to the back of it, deposited in the regular course of business in Chicago? A. Yes.

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

Q. Do you have one for the 16th that you wrote?

A. Yes, I have one for cash here, for $13.80, drawn on the Merchants National.

Q. Can you see from the back of the check if it was cashed?

A. Yes, it has the usual clearance stamp on it.

Q. Do you have any document or check bearing the date November 17th? A. Yes.

Q. What is that?

A. I have two. I have one, my pay check, and one is an expense check that was returned to me.

Q. The pay check, of course, would have been dated in San Francisco the 17th?

A. November 17th.

Q. Can you look at the back and tell us when you deposited those checks or either of them, if they bear different dates of deposit?

A. There is a November 26th date here, 1943, stamped on this one, a November 26th date stamped on this one, on the back. There is some other writing I can't distinguish. The date is clear there. One date is the bank it was deposited in, and I imagine the other stamp is the clearing house and they are both [7351] of them on top of each other. There are two dates here. November 26 stands out very clear and the other one is November—I can't distinguish, I can't make it out.

Q. I will hand you the original of a Western Union wire bearing date of November 19th at 9:29 a.m. and I will ask you if you recognize that wire.

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

A. Yes, this is a wire from myself to Secretary Goldblatt.

Q. Sent by you from where?

A. From Chicago.

Q. On what date?

A. It is dated November 19th. That looks like the stamp where they received it. Up here is 19. It was sent the 19th of November.

Q. What was the subject of that wire?

A. I was suggesting specific dates as to when our international board meeting should be held in Chicago and asked for confirmation from the national office.

Q. Where were you when you sent that wire?

A. Chicago.

Q. I will show you copies of wires bearing dates of November 21st and November 22nd, 1943, and I will ask you if you were continuously in Chicago from the 19th through the 21st and 22nd?

A. Yes.

Q. What wire did you send on the 21st of November?

A. I sent a wire to the national office getting my—asking for [7352] my policy number for my car insurance.

Q. What was the reason for that?

A. I had had an accident.

Q. What wire did you send on the 22nd of November?

A. Another wire dealing with the policy number immediately. She hadn't wired me the number.

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

Q. Your insurance policy number?

A. Yes, the car insurance policy.

Q. Stating that your car was damaged?

A. Yes.

Q. Where were you upon November 21st and November 22nd? A. In Chicago.

Q. I will show you a copy of a letter purportedy signed by you bearing date of November 23rd, 1943. Can you tell us where you were on November 23rd?

A. Yes, I was in Chicago and I have before me a letter from myself to Under Secretary of War Mr. Patterson.

Q. What was the subject of that letter?

A. It was giving him my views of my trip to Fort Knox and making certain suggestions as to how we could follow through with civilians on our end of it after we got home, and trying to better mobilize the people we represented so far as the war effort is concerned. It is a letter along those lines to Under Secretary of War Mr. Patterson.

Q. Where were you when you wrote that [7353] letter?

A. Chicago.

Q. I will show you what appears to be a check from the ILWU at San Francisco issued November 24th, 1943, and apparently sent to you. I will ask you to look at it and tell us whether you deposited that letter in Chicago or not.

A. Yes, this is another payroll check.

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

Q. Where were you when you received that pay check?

A. Chicago, and it has the usual clearance stamp on it and deposit stamp. The date is December 3rd, I believe.

Q. I have also in my hand a copy of a letter signed by Secretary Goldblatt at San Francisco addressed to you on November 27th, 1943, and directed to you in Chicago. I will ask the Clerk if he will hand that to you, please. Do you know that to be a copy of a letter taken out of the official files of the ILWU? A. Yes.

Q. Kept in the ordinary course of business?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you receive that letter, that is, its original? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Where did you receive it?

A. Chicago, at our office there. It is from Secretary Goldblatt to myself dealing in detail with some administrative problems we have had.

Q. Now, so we won't be confined merely to approximate dates because, of course, any person might be entitled to make a [7354] mistake on a matter of days, this witness says it was within two weeks after the CIO convention. We have already covered the balance of the month. I will take you into the month of December. Let me ask you if you came to San Francisco in December of that year.

A. No, I did not.

Q. I will show you, if I may, the original of a letter bearing your signature, bearing date of December 1st, 1943, written from Chicago to Secretary Goldblatt.

A. Yes, this is a letter from myself to Secretary Goldblatt dated December 1st, written in Chicago.

Q. You were in Chicago when you wrote that letter?

A. Yes, taking up details of organizational matters.

Q. By the way, in all these periods of time were you outside the city of Chicago at all except on private business that you have mentioned?

A. No, not during this period that we are discussing, no.

Q. I will show you a letter signed by yourself and bearing date of December 2nd, 1943, and I ask you to tell us what that is.

A. This is a letter from myself dated December 2nd to John Stephens in Seattle, who was a member of our international executive board.

Q. Where were you when you wrote that letter?

A. Chicago.

Q. Where was the person to whom you addressed that letter? [7355] A. In Seattle, Washington.

Q. Are all of these letters shown you letters taken from the original files of the ILWU?

A. Yes.

Q. And sent in the ordinary course of business?

A. That is right.

Q. I will show you, if I may, a wire signed by you bearing date of December 7th, 1943.

A. This is a wire from myself dated December

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

7th to Secretary Goldblatt dealing with some details in preparation for our board meeting to be held in Chicago in February.

Q. Where were you when you sent that wire?

A. Chicago.

Q. I find here a date that I apparently skipped, November 26, 1943. I find here a letter, a copy of a letter addressed by you to Private Eugene Patten at Camp Williams, Utah. I will ask you to look at this copy and tell us if you have already examined it and determined that to be a copy of a letter written by you.

A. Yes, this is a letter from myself dated November 26 written in Chicago in my office to Gene Patten, who was in the service at that time. He was former international secretary of our organization.

Q. So that we can see what your plans were perspectively back in October as to your whereabouts in the following months, I [7356] will ask you to look at a letter bearing date of October 23rd, 1943, describing your plans to go to Fort Knox, and so forth.

A. Yes, this is a letter from myself dated October 23rd, 1943, addressed to President Bridges, written in Chicago, and to President Bridges in San Francisco.

Q. What is the subject of that letter?

A. I state that the War Department had called a conference in Fort Knox and set forth the dates and outlined my itinerary and where I will be after going to Fort Knox, going to Philadelphia, and they had a series of such conferences, and we were making arrangements for our representatives in various sections of the country to attend on a regional basis these conferences called by the War Department, dealing in detail with some of them.

Q. I will show you the copy of the Council meeting minutes held in Chicago on December 16, 1943, and ask you to look at this piece of paper.

A. Yes, this is the mimeographed copy of the usual Council meetings that are sent out to all the local affiliates. This is the official minutes of the Council meeting dated December 16th. I attended that Council meeting. In fact, I was a delegate to the Council and I attended that meeting.

Q. Is that a mimeographed copy of the minutes?

A. This is a regular, mimeographed copy of minutes sent out to all locals at that time.

Q. In other words, the so-called original would be made on a [7357] stencil?

A. That is right.

Q. And the mimeographed copies made from that? A. That is right.

Q. Do you find that you were present at that particular meeting? A. Yes.

Q. Where is the meeting?

A. The meeting was held at 205 West Wacker Drive in Chicago. I have some other checks here. I do not think they are photostatic copies, but I will show them to the prosecutor.

Mr. Donohue: I would just like to have one, if

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

I may; the check of November 12th made payable to the Commonwealth Edison.

Mr. MacInnis: I will get that for you.

The Court: Here it is, November 13th.

Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): While the special prosecutor is looking at that check, I will ask you these questions. I won't trouble the Clerk to take these checks up to you. On the respective dates which I will now mention, were paychecks or expense checks, as the case may be, issued in San Francisco by the ILWU and mailed to you at Chicago: December 1st, 1943; December 6th, 1943; December 15, 1943; December 17th, 1943; December 22nd, 1943; December 29th, 1943; January 4th, 1944; January 11th, 1944; January 18th, 1944; January 25th, 1944; February 1st, 1944; February 8th, 1944; February 16th, 1944; February 23rd, 1944. A. Yes. [7358]

Q. And if it is requested, I suppose we can bring in the records showing your residence in Chicago up to June of 1944? A. That is right.

Q. And you recall that the subject of this alleged Communist Party meeting where Rathborne said you were in attendance was the immediate subject of the replacement of Connally by Thimmes as California CIO president, a move that was engineered at the 1943 CIO convention in November?

A. That was his testimony, I believe.

Q. When did you first come back to San Francisco at all, whether it was for a one-day visit, a vacation, a conference or anything following the month of November, 1943?

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

A. In April of 1944 I spent several days, I think two or three weeks in San Francisco.

Q. In other words, beginning with the CIO convention of 1943, November 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th, when you were in Philadelphia, and prior to that time, you had not physically been in San Francisco until the month of April, 1944?

A. That is correct.

Q. And by April of 1944, the matter of Mr. Connally and Mr. Thimmes and the CIO presidency had become a matter of past history, is that true?

A. I think the testimony of this case indicates that.

Q. And you were not at any such meeting either at San Francisco or elsewhere with [7359] Rathborne? A. That is right.

Mr. MacInnis: Now, if the Court please, we offer as one exhibit and ask that the photostats be allowed to replace the originals, all of the documents to which reference has been made.

Mr. Donohue: We have no objection, your Honor.

The Court: They may be marked as one exhibit, Mr. Schaeffer.

(Checks and letters referred to were thereupon received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit G-4.)

Mr. MacInnis: If I have referred to one or two originals on which there are no photostatic copies, I will be glad to show them to the prosecution.

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

Mr. Hallinan has suggested to me it might be better to put in the originals so there won't be any doubt, and then later on possibly we can withdraw them. So we will put in all the originals I have referred to, and when the prosecutor finishes reading what he has in his hand, that could become part of the same exhibit.

The Court: And likewise a copy of the memorandum.

The Witness: Here is a document here (handing a document to the Clerk).

Mr. MacInnis: Here are two more.

The Court: What is the exhibit number, for the record, Mr. Schaeffer?

The Clerk: G-4, and I shall mark them G-4-A to Q, [7360] inclusive.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. Mr. Robertson, if you were in Fort Knox, Kentucky, or Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, or San Francisco, California, and your utility bill became due and you made out a check and mailed it to the Commonwealth Edison Company, will you look at that check and tell me if there is any way you can tell by that check whether you drew it or filled it out in New York, Baltimore or San Francisco and mailed it to the Edison Company, or whether you filled it out in Chicago and mailed it, or whether you filled it out and took it down there personally?

A. There is no way of distinguishing, Mr. Donohue.

(Testimony of J. R. Robertson.)

Q. Mr. Robertson, you heard Mr. Rathborne testify about this meeting, as you have stated. Did you hear him say that among the persons present at this meeting, presided over by Mr. Schneidermann, there was another person present named George Wilson?

A. I don't recall exactly the testimony, but if that is in the record, I have no argument against it.

Q. In the light of that fact, Mr. Robertson, was there any reason why you did not advise your counsel to ask Mr. Wilson about this meeting when he was on the stand yesterday?

A. I just wasn't there. It was no concern of mine.

Mr. Donohue: I have no further questions, if your Honor please. [7361]

Mr. MacInnis: That is all.

The Court: We will take the morning recess. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [7361-A]

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. Bridges, will you take the stand, please.

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES

called for the defendants in surrebuttal; previously sworn.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Preliminarily, your Honor, I have had a cardboard print or copy made of the information contained on the blackboard. It is amplified in a few places, but it contains only essentially what is on the board. As I want to refer to it later, I would like to offer it in evidence so the portion of the blackboard can be erased.

Mr. Donohue: I would object to it, if your Honor please. I see no basis upon which this may be offered as an exhibit. It may properly be argued.

Mr. Hallinan: Even blackboards, themselves, the writing on blackboards, is made an exhibit, or a copy of it. There is no reason why it should not be. There has been testimony by Mr. Bridges and by other witnesses which has reduced all these matters to a specific point. It is true we could use it instead of the blackboard, but I would like to have it in evidence.

Mr. Donohue: I have no objection to its use, if your Honor please, but I certainly object to its being offered in evidence.

Mr. Paisley: You can't understand me, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: I cannot. I have tried now for four months. [7362] You are right: I can't understand you.

Mr. Donohue: It is obviously——

The Court: I think it may be used in the course of argument and it may be used in the course of the trial. I cannot see that it would be admissible upon any theory. However, it may be used for the purpose of argument before the jury.

Mr. Hallinan: My chief reason is that it is more legible and easier to read.

The Court: You can have it right up here, placed right near the rostrum.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I have it marked for identification so we will be certain what the document is?

The Court: Yes, it may be so marked.

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit H-4 for identification.

(Diagram marked Defendants' Exhibit H-4 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, Mr. Bridges, you heard the testimony of the witness Rathborne concerning the discussions and conflicts, and so forth, that took place between the ILWU and/or yourself and/or Curran, Murray and Carey; you heard his testimony in that matter? A. I did.

Q. With relation to the difficulties with Curran—incidentally, Mr. Bridges, your union was involved in the strike in 1948, the maritime strike, is that right, in San Francisco?

A. That is right. [7363]

Q. And was the purpose of that strike 80 per cent political and 20 per cent wages, hours and working conditions?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. The strike solely over the issue of wages, hours and conditions, and the strike was forced on us. As a matter of fact, in this courtroom here a hearing was held in this courtroom, where the representatives of the Government came in to secure an injunction under the Taft-Hartley. The injunction was granted by this court. And during the course of the discussions and hearings on that injunction, the union offered to arbitrate all issues in dispute. The main issue was the question of the union hiring hall—not the union hiring hall but the jointly operated and administered hiring hall, that is, jointly operated by our organization and the Waterfront Employers Association. The employers Association held that the hiring hall provisions conflicted with Taft-Hartley—the Taft-Hartley Law. The union's position was to continue the provisions of the contract in effect until a determination had been made as to the legality of the contract provisions by the United States Supreme Court and all other matters be submitted to arbitration. That was prior to the time the strike took place. The offer was made here on the record in this court but was rejected by the Waterfront Employers. And eventually the strike did take place after the issuance of the 80-day injunction and after the 80-day injunction had expired, and we won the strike.

Q. How long did the strike last? [7364]

A. It started September 2, and as far as ILWU was concerned, we had reached an agreement—a tentative agreement, it is true, but an agreement that we officers knew that we could safely recommend to our membership and they would accept it. We reached an agreement around the first week of November.

Q. And then why did the strike continue?

A. We stayed on strike until the other unions had reached an agreement—the Marine Firemen's union, the Marine Cooks and Stewards, and the Marine Radio Operators—that is the Radio Operators' union.

Q. What was the situation with regard to the Radio Operators' union?

A. They—the officers of that union at that time were not on—they took the position that their union was not on strike. Their union was under attack from another union, a rival union that was raiding it, and the ship operators took the position that they would not bargain with the union because there had been a claim filed that the union did not represent the membership. The membership—the bulk of the membership had left the union and gone and joined another union, an AFL radio operators' union. So the Waterfront Employers—the ship operators took the position that until that matter was straightened out they would not deal with this union, or they were tied up in the courts. The officers of the union took the position that they couldn't afford to strike, and they took the position [7365] that the union was willing to return to work under the conditions that the union had left the job because the union was supporting the strike of the other unions. In other words, they were locked out by the action of the other unions. The rank and file of the union met and elected a delegation that came up to see me and asked if we would refuse to return to work until they had at least secured the improvement in conditions such as hours, wages and conditions that had been granted the other unions, that is, percentagewise. I promised them we would give them full support, and they went back to their union and reported that to the rank and file of the union, and the union repudiated the position of their officers and eventually went into negotiations and secured the best contract it ever had. And our union stayed on strike some three weeks after we had had a separate contract in order to secure a contract for the radio operators' union. That was the situation.

Q. Did that include raises in pay that Rathborne himself received?

A. As far as I know, it included various changes in the agreement that amounted to around $80 a month.

Q. Then what did the radio operators do with regard to you and your union? Did you have any further meeting with them after they had secured the relief they were asking? Did the delegation come up and address your union? [7366]

A. The president of the union—the president of that union at that time, and who is still president, came down before my union, my own local union of the longshoremen, and in front of the membership —there was a membership of 4000 present—three or four thousand—and he stood up there and he thanked the union publicly for that; he said, "If it wasn't for the ILWU and Bridges, we wouldn't have anything. We wouldn't even have a union."

Mr. Hallinan: Would you show those two documents to the witness?

Q. The documents that you have there, Mr. Bridges, you have seen before, have you?

A. Yes.

Q. They go back to the beginning of your controversy with Curran, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Will you tell the Court and jury what is the difficulty with Curran? What does it stem from? Withdraw that. Pardon me just a minute. I am a little ahead of myself.

Did the maritime strike in San Francisco in 1948 have anything to do, up or down, above or below, with the Marshall Plan?

A. Not at all; but when we were discussing the possibility of having to strike, that is, even having to strike to hold the conditions we had exclusive of any improvements—as a matter of fact, in the early part of 1948, if we had—if the union had have been able to work out an agreement with the [7367] ship operators to continue our contracts without any change whatsoever, the union was willing to accept such a thing. We were discussing the possibility of being forced to strike in November of '47, and we recognized then that one of the means used to attack the union would be to say that the strike is interfering with the Marshall Plan. And here in this courtroom when the Government officers applied for the injunction, the Department of Justice applied for the injunction against us and the men were forced to remain on the job for the 80 days at the same wages, hours and conditions, the reason put forth in order to secure the injunction from the Federal courts was that any strike at that time would interfere with the Marshall Plan. That is how it came into the picture. Of course, sitting in this court, both the representatives of the Government and the representatives of the Waterfront Employers both testified the same way and they used the same argument as Rathborne: that the strike was for political reasons, the strike was not for legitimate trade union reasons, the strike was to oppose the Marshall Plan.

Q. It sounded like 1934 over again, did it?

A. We won.

Q. Now, will you explain to us what was the beginning of the difficulty between you and Curran.

A. In 1946 our organization took the lead in trying to get all the maritime unions together to prevent an onslaught against [7368] the unions as a result of the letdown in the maritime industry following the war. We were trying to prevent, in other words, history repeating itself the way it did after the last war with respect to maritime organization. Many ships were built, many ships were operated, and now most of them were laid up and therefore there was wholesale unemployment. In times of unemployment and depression it is our experience that the employing groups think that is the best time to attack unions and maybe cut wages, and things like that. So we organized an organization in the beginning of '46 called the Committee for Maritime Unity, and we met here in San Francisco in May of 1946 and we agreed that in all the negotiations with shipowners on both the East and West coasts on behalf of longshoremen and seamen, we would negotiate as a group and none of us would settle without all of us settling; in other words, we would all get an agreement or none of us would get an agreement, and we figured to kind of pool our demands. At that time the ILWU, our union, we had a proposition that was almost satisfactory, I would say, from the shipping operators; in other words, we had our agreement, we were safe; we didn't have to fool around with any other union. But anyway, we made this proposal. We called a conference of all these unions here in San Francisco, and Curran representing his union agreed, and we worked out a program to strike on June 15, 1946, for a satisfactory contract for all the maritime unions —seamen, longshoremen, firemen, [7369] engineers, cooks and others. Curran went along with this proposition, and then he tried to sell out the union. He accepted the proposition offered by the East Coast shipowners for an increase of $12.50 a month, and without saying anything to us on the West Coast here, who had agreed to stand by in order for him to get an agreement—up to that time he hadn't been offered anything prospective—so he wouldn't get a thing—without even notifying us, he accepted a proposition of $12.50 a month and took it back and recommended that his men accept it, stay on the job, even if we got involved with a strike, and tried to leave us high and dry. I got on the phone, the telephone long distance, and I just told him what kind of a sell-out deal it was. And in addition to that, he went to work with some elements in the CIO, Carey and others, and they actually approached the Maritime—United States Maritime Commission and the Department of Labor, and on our behalf, on behalf of my own union, and without saying a word to myself or the officers and members in the union, and offered a fact-finding proposal. And the first I knew about it is I read it in the papers. So it was a complete sell-out deal all the way down the line Curran tried to put over in 1946 with certain elements in the CIO. I caught him, had it exposed before his own union group and before other groups, and since that time, although he just bided his time, that was the beginning of the breakup. That was one of those matters internal in union organization. [7370] It is a matter of official record. And of course all Curran can do is holler Communism. He was caught in a dirty sell-out deal, just an old score, that he was fighting Communists. Since that time things have gotten worse, so that in the 1948 strike and in the Hawaiian strike Curran ordered his men to sail the ships even though we were on strike, and his men sailed through the picket lines, and Curran flew crews out from New York to man ships on the Pacific Coast while we were from bad to worse, and Curran right now would do anything to wreck us.

Q. Did his union accept the $12.50 a month raise?

A. No, his membership rejected it. I urged his membership to reject it, and his membership went along with our proposal and told him to get back and stick to the agreement that he had made on behalf of the members. Eventually a settlement was reached that amounted to approximately $60 a month instead of the original $12.50.

Q. I have here a telegram that you identified dated May 27, 1946, to Curran on that general subject; is that right? A. That is right.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer it in evidence as the defendants' exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: No objection, your Honor.

The Court: It may be marked next exhibit in order for the defendants. [7371]

The Clerk: Defendants' I-4 in evidence.

> (Telegram, Bridges to Curran, 5/27/46, was marked Defendants' Exhibit I-4 in evidence.)

Mr. Hallinan: It reads:

> "Mr. Joseph Curran, Chairman Negotiating Committee, National Maritime Union, New York.

> "On Behalf of Entire ILWU and as Co Chairman of CMU I Most Urgently Advise That NMU Negotiating Committee Reconsider Their Tentative Acceptance of Shipowners' Of-Committee Can Easily Be Construed as Violation of Convention Program and Commitments Made to That Program by NMU and Other Unions."

Q. "NMU" means National Maritime Union?

A. National Maritime Union.

Q. That is Curran's union?

A. Curran is president.

Mr. Hallinan: (Reading):

"In Addition to Reaching Tentative Agreement This Time Having Disastrous Effect Upon United Front of Maritime Unions Against Shipowners and Upon Chances of Other Maritime Unions Receiving Better Offers From Shipowners I Believe There Is Good Chance of Forcing Better Offers From Shipowners Than That Which They Have Given NMU and Which Your Committee Has Tentatively Accepted. ILWU Is Standing by Its Convention Pledge. It Has Notified Its Membership [7372] That It Will Not Accept Any Offer From Shipowners Including Any Fact-finding Board's Recommendation Unless and Until All Maritime Unions Have Reached Satisfactory Agreements With Shipowners. We Have Not Accepted and Will Not Accept Fact-Finding Board's Decision. Our Locals Notified This Effect and Voted Support This Position. Government Agencies Notified Likewise. Our Position for Strategical and Unity Reasons Not Made Public. In

> "HARRY BRIDGES."

Q. And the second document which you identified is a letter from members of the crew of a ship in Texas, is that right?

A. That was later on. That was after everything was settled.

Q. Was there a strike held then? A. No.

Q. Settlement was effected?

A. We effected settlement by June—on June 14, 1946, and, as I say, the seamen, as a result of the unions sticking together, taking the position it would be an agreement for all or [7373] an agreement for none, did not only get the wage increases, but the work at sea was reduced from 48 to 44 hours in most cases and 40 hours in port, and for certain departments, such as the cooks' and stewards' department, at sea it was reduced from 63 hours a week to 48 hours a week. There was increases in overtime as well as increases in the basic wage.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer the other letter in evidence as the defendants' exhibit next in [7374] order.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: I object to this, if Your Honor please, because it seems to be addressed to the New York NMU committee in New York. It is not directed to Mr. Bridges and whoever signed it is unidentified.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, it is signed by a great number of people, apparently 25 or 30 people.

Q. How was this transmitted to you, Mr. Bridges?

A. I was a member of the committee.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. Although it is addressed to the committee, I was a member. We had a broad committee. That was why. That was merely an expression of the ship's crew which indicated how the membership felt about the settlement that was made. That is much later. That is around August or September.

The Court: Mark it for identification.

Mr. Hallinan: I don't care. It is not sufficiently important.

(The document was handed to counsel.)

Mr. Donohue: Is Mr. Bridges the author of this?

Mr. Hallinan: No, the purpose of this is to show that this controversy with Curran is not something that Mr. Bridges invents to explain Curran's hostility, and is just to show there is no recent fabrication but existed prior to any indictment in this case.

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Curran has not been a witness, if Your [7375] Honor please, and I am at a loss to know what Mr. Bridges' connection with this article in some sort of a clipsheet is.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: We believe this way, that under the rule of law that one who does something by another does it himself, that your Mr. Rathborne was just the facile, though that a poor weak and useless tool of Mr. Curran, Mr. Murray and Mr. Carey to accomplish a very small, mean and treacherous purpose, and that exposing that is an important matter; that Mr. Rathborne, according to his statement at the least went back and consulted those people as to the propriety of what he was about to do. However, an inference may well be drawn that their activity in it was much deeper than that, and that Mr. Rathborne was originally inspired to his position. So that is why Mr. Curran, Mr. Carey and Mr. Murray are involved. Moreover, Mr. Rathborne testified as to all these matters.

Mr. Donohue: I move to strike Mr. Hallinan's observation.

Mr. Hallinan: He asked what was the purpose of it, and then as soon as an explanation is given, he moves to strike it. Now, what do you want me to do? You ask me for something. If you want to be pleased with everything I say, go ahead and write out the answers and I will read them off. But if you want to ask me the purpose of a thing, then I will tell you.

Mr. Donohue: It is too much, Mr. Hallinan, for me to expect you to conform to the rule.

Mr. Hallinan: What rule have you in mind? Your knowledge [7376] of the rules of law, Mr. Donohue, is somewhat different from mine. I have interviewed a number of people whose judgment I respect and they say that your concept of the rules of law is bizarre to them also. Now, they may be wrong and I may be wrong, and they may practice that way in Washington or wherever you hail from, but I will say you say and do some startling things.

Mr. Donohue: I renew my motion, if Your Honor please, to strike Mr. Hallinan's observations, not with respect to myself personally, for I don't pay any attention to them.

The Court: The observations of Mr. Hallinan did represent an argument in effect. We are reaching the period of time, gentlemen, when the arguments will be engaged in by counsel and I again say we might save our energies until that date. I will allow Mr. Bridges to identify the document, whatever it may be, and state the background of it if there is a background.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): You observe the part that is marked with a clip, Mr. Bridges. What is that file that you have?

A. This is a file of the strike bulletins that were put out during the 1948 maritime strike here on the Pacific Coast.

Q. What is the date of that particular one you are looking at? A. November 20, 1948.

Q What does it state as regards the NMU action?

A. There is an item here in the bulletin stating that the NMU is urged not to man your ships—that means struck ships—and the [7377] joint action committee called it to the attention of the National Maritime Union president, the NMU officers and others, that the NMU has manned three ships sailing from Tacoma and that they are sending seamen to San Francisco to man ships. In other words, they are calling the attention of President Curran and other National Maritime Union officers that they were sailing ships from behind the picket lines.

Q. The witness Rathborne testified that in his discussion with Mr. Carey on the matters transmitted to him from Murray and in this discussion how much Ray and Curran, and independently of his own opinion, the controversy between Murray, Carey, Curran and yourself had something to do with Communism or Communist activities or sympathies, is that so?

A. No, not to my knowledge. An explanation of those things, of course, puts me in a pretty bad position, and as a matter of principle, I am opposed to discussing internal labor problems in a courtroom. We generally try to keep them within the family circle—not that there is anything necessarily secret about them, but because many enemies of labor take advantage of such matters and highlight them and use them against labor generally. I am in the difficult position that unless I discuss these matters it might make a difference in whether I go to jail or not.

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Bridges: Before Rathborne took the stand, and when you testified yourself and stated you disliked [7378] washing out the dirty linens of the CIO controversies in open court, had you the definite information that Rathborne gave that he had been authorized or O.K.'d by Murray and Carey to proceed against you to aid in some investigation or some injury to you?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have it definitely or did you only suspect it?

A. I had it definitely. That is, I had it from sources that I considered, after doing a little checking, plus my own knowledge of the situation. The information I had was sufficient for myself. As a matter of fact, before I went back to an executive board meeting of the national CIO in May of 1949, and before I left the city of San Francisco, I had a meeting in my office of ten or fifteen members of my own local union and I told them at that time that if I carried through our program at that particular meeting, I was going to be indicted, that if I stuck with the orders I received from my union, the ILWU, I was going to be indicted, and there were 15 or 20 people present who were members of my local here in San Francisco. So I knew all about it.

Q. Tell us quite frankly now, since Mr. Carey and Mr. Murray have taken the position of treacherously attempting to do you an injury, just what was the nature of the difficulty between yourself, Murray and Carey?

A. Well, it is largely a question of Carey. Carey is national secretary-treasurer of the CIO. He operates as a kind of hatchet [7379] man. Now, whether Mr. Murray knows of all his activities or not, I am not prepared to say. But Mr. Carey knows what he is doing. Now, for some period of time past, three or four years, I have been instructed by my union membership to ask the CIO to make a financial accounting of all the millions of dollars it collects currently. For example, the union I represent, we send a thousand dollars a week, approximately, back to national CIO, and over a period of years we have donated—not donated, but paid—we have no complaint about paying the money; we are affiliated to the national CIO, and our national organization, like other organizations, is duty-bound to pay a per capita tax. It is a tax upon our union, and we have no complaint about that. But in the last two or three years especially my union membership has demanded that I do what I can to secure a financial accounting of the millions of dollars that the CIO has taken in and to find out what it has done with the money. We have not made any accusations and we make no accusations now that the money has been stolen or anything like that. We do have some ideas that the money is not being used properly.

Q. In what way?

A. Well, it is our belief that some unions do not pay any per capita tax, and they are credited with paying a per capita tax, even though they don't pay a per capita tax. Many other things that take place dealing with salaries and expenses paid my membership complains about. It started back some time ago. For [7380] example, in 1945 here, af-though the matter became public later, my own membership in San Francisco raised some questions with me because one of the officers of the CIO came out here and was living in a penthouse down here for $1500 a month. The case developed later when the owner of the apartment house was sued for violating the OPA rent ceilings, and here we found the national president of the CIO, who was saying so much about the enforcement of the price ceilings on rent, living in a penthouse here for $1500 a month, when the rent, official rent that was supposed to be paid under the OPA rent ceiling, was around $300, I understand.

My membership came around and asked me about it and I said, "Look, now, fellows. I think it must be a mistake. I am pretty sure the CIO would not do things like that and I will do what I can to find out." I was not exactly trying to do a cover-up job but my membership asked the question.

Another question I raised that particularly goes to Carey is this: It is against the rules in our union, and our membership resented it—incidentally, the $1500 a month for the penthouse, the money to pay for those things comes from the membership of my union. Now, it is nothing wrong. In other words, you can argue whether a labor leader should pay $1500 a month rent for a penthouse or not. There is nothing wrong with it except there are a lot of members in my union who think it is wrong. They give me orders and they insist that I try to change [7381] some of those things.

There is another question. A lot of the officers of the CIO, especially Mr. Carey, in addition to following his job as secretary-treasurer of the CIO, holds many definite positions. He is also paid his salary from the CIO and expenses, and he gets as high as $50 a day for holding government jobs.

Q. What are they, do you know?

A. Oh, he is a labor ambassador at large for the United States and State Department selling the Marshall Plan and doing a lot of other things, running all over the world, he and others, Curran, too. Those people, when they are on jobs like that, they get from $25 a day on up, expenses paid, and things like that, and at the same time they draw their salary from the national CIO. We have a rule in our union where if we are on the union payroll and we get appointed to a government commission for any reason at all, you can't draw both salaries. You have got to give up one or the other. Henry Schmidt was on a board here all during the war. We knocked him off the union payroll and let the government pay him.

So I have raised these questions, on the instructions of my membership, dating back the last two or three years, demanding an accounting of funds and asking that some of these practices be put a stop to and it has not made me at all popular with the secretary-treasurer of the CIO, namely, Mr. Carey, believe me.

Now, I have been an officer of the CIO since 1937. I have [7382] still got to see the first time when I can see a CIO financial accounting. And that is a big, powerful organization. It collects a lot of money, and I have been acting under instructions of my union, and as a result of the fight we have put up, at the last executive board meeting of the CIO that I attended last year, it was announced that if I wanted to step up and look over the financial accounts, I could. So at least we are making progress.

But the background of that fight with Carey is because I have taken the lead asking for a financial statement. Then the other main item has been our convention has rebelled against the national CIO.

Q. Pardon me, Mr. Bridges. We will stay with the first matter.

A. That is the important matter.

Q. About the finances.

A. The question of the finances is the main matter, the important matter. That is where all the trouble starts.

Q. Is the sense of the evidence that you have given that Philip Murray was paying $1500 a month for the rental of a penthouse?

A. Personally, Philip Murray himself did not pay it. I don't know the facts.

Q. Who was occupying the penthouse?

A. Philip Murray was occupying the penthouse.

Q. Who owned the building?

A. Mr. Fritz. [7383]

Q. That is Eugene Fritz?

A. He was prosecuted for violating the rent ceilings.

Q. At that time one of the violations was that Murray was paying $1500 for a $300 a month penthouse, is that right? A. That is right.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. And the money, as I understand it, was not being paid by Murray personally, but being paid by the union?

A. I don't know. That is one of the reasons we wanted to see the financial statement. I don't know. And I told my membership for all I knew Phil Murray paid it out of his own pocket, and I don't believe even at this stage—I have had my battles and I still have my battles with Murray—I don't believe at this stage of the game that he knew if the rent was $1500 a month that he was participating in a conspiracy to violate rent ceilings. I don't even believe that right now, but I think Carey would in a minute.

Q. You have some records that you brought with you demonstrating or showing parts of this controversy and the financial report, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you take a look at this letter and see if you can identify it? Is that a copy of a letter that you wrote to Mr. Murray?

A. Yes, this letter is March 18th, 1948. This is when the thing was pretty far along. It brings in the question of [7384] political financial contributions, what I have been talking on so far, the regular, routine tax payments to CIO.

Q. Let me ask you this——

A. Later on the financial situation broadened out to where it included extra monies donated for support and in financing the political candidates, and that is what this letter refers to.

Q. Let me ask you this: Do you know whether or not any other delegate or delegates to the CIO conventions ever demanded such financial accounting? A. Oh, over a period of years, yes.

Q. Might I have the letter back, Mr. Clerk? Well, then, approaching this letter, what is the point about collections for political purposes and what is the dispute between your union, Murray and Carey relating to the political position that those gentlemen took?

A. Under the Taft-Hartley law all collections of money from union members for political purposes must be voluntarily; in other words, a union can not assess its members and tell them to contribute money for political campaigns, that is, federal elections, candidates for the Congress, Senate and things like that. After the Taft-Hartley law was passed, as I say, it required that the donations be voluntary. Then the CIO took the position for the first time (it was around 1947) that no political candidates, even for state offices, such as gubernatorial elections as well as federal office, could be supported, [7385] endorsed or financed in any way from the contributions from a union unless that political candidate received, first of all, the approval of the national CIO. So I, as well as other members of my union, other officers of the union, were put in this position: On the one hand, we wanted to urge and we did urge our members to voluntarily contribute towards a political fund in order to support candidates for political office on a state basis and on a national basis, but we could not sell our membership on the idea that they would have no control over the fund once they had contributed the funds, that the funds could only go to candidates, to support candidates that were named by the national CIO officers staying in Washington, D. C. Our membership took the position that the membership in California or Oregon or Washington or elsewhere, that if they voluntarily contributed money to a political campaign, they should have some say as to who is going to receive the money. Of course, that led to a further argument over this and it led to my membership refusing to contribute a nickel to any political candidate or campaign, unless they had some say as to where the money would go.

Then there was additional money items for organizing where the same thing took place. The membership refused. The officers in most ways, myself included, urged them not to make too much of a fuss and said, "Look, sooner than have a battle with the CIO, I would just as soon trust [7386] them."

My membership said, "If you take a position like that, we will fire you." My executive board wrote a letter to the executive board of the CIO and said, "If we catch Bridges going along with that program, we will fire him. We will have him recalled from office."

Q. This letter that you have identified is addressed to Mr. Philip Murray on that general subject; is that right? A. That is right.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer it as defendants' exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: No objection.

The Court: It may be marked.

(Letter to Mr. Murray was thereupon received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit J-4.)

Mr. Hallinan: On the heading of the International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, 604 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California, March 18, 1948. You were still using the old stationery, I take it, although you had moved at that time to 150 Golden Gate, is that right?

A. I am not sure if we had moved by that time. I think we had.

Q. "Mr. Philip Murray, President, Congress of Industrial Organizations, 718 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C.

"Dear Brother Murray:

"The Executive Board of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union has thoroughly discussed the [7387] position taken by the National CIO and the CIO-PAC"— that means Political Action Committee?

A. That is right.

Q. "—regarding political action by National CIO and the affiliated unions.

"As you know, our organization has always loyally supported and contributed to PAC. We believe the record will show that in many of the campaigns the ILWU contributed more than its share. Under present circumstances, however, we find that the CIO has taken a position which in effect would nullify the autonomous rights of both our International and local unions.

"The support to and real strength of PAC has sprung from its non-partisan position and the voluntary contributions from the CIO rank and file. The fact that the rank and file could always feel secure in its right to review the political field and make its own choice in both national and local elections has been the wellspring from which our political power was drawn, and the incentive to make substantial financial contributions.

"The present position of the National CIO, however, which is also being imposed upon local CIO Councils, in our opinion destroys the non-partisan policy of CIO, clashes directly with the autonomous rights of our local unions and therefore makes our rank and file [7388] extremely reluctant to make contributions unless they are assured in advance that their money will not be used against them. Consequently, the International Executive Board has instructed the officers to not collect or send any contributions for National PAC unless and until they are so instructed by the Executive Board.

"We sincerely urge the National CIO to return to its policy of non-partisanship in the political field. We further urge, in order to maintain the greatest degree of unity, that local councils be left free to work out a united program on local issues. As an International union we are prepared to participate fully in the program of PAC so long as we are given assurance that its program will not conflict with or destroy the autonomous rights or free political choosing of our union and its members. Our locals have already been urged to cooperate fully with the work of the local PAC's.

"Above all, we believe the policy being pushed by Mr. Brophy against local councils must be ended at once. In the same way that our organization condemned the action of Mr. John L. Lewis when he walked out of CIO because it did not go along with his political endorsements, so likewise do we believe that it is in contradiction of every sound principal of labor unity for you, Mr. Brophy, or anyone else to pressure local unions into foregoing their autonomous [7389] rights and violating the instructions of their membership by threatening suspension of councils or expulsion of affiliates.

"Fraternally yours, /s/ H. R. Bridges, President.

"Adopted by the Executive Board International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union Regular Session, March 18, 1948."

Now, you sent the original of this letter to Murray almost two years ago, is that right, Mr. Bridges?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. That is right. That was the Executive Board's answer. The board members themselves drew that letter up. I was ordered to sign it and send it off, and it was following two letters we had received from the National CIO, from Mr. John Brophy and one from Jack Crowell, that our membership could not endorse any political candidate or give them any finances without the approval of the National CIO.

Mr. Hallinan: I have some other documents here, mostly minutes of executive board meetings of the ILWU, and I suggest that I leave these with Mr. Donohue during the noon recess so he can check them. I am particularly interested in the ones that are marked with the papers, and then we can resume in the afternoon.

The Court: We will take the noon adjournment and resume at 2:00 o'clock. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [7390]

Thursday, March 9, 1950—2:00 P.M.

The Clerk: The United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial. The witness on the stand is Harry Renton Bridges, heretofore sworn.

HARRY RENTON BRIDGES

Direct Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. We have identified this document as Executive Board minutes prepared in August of 1948 of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, and calling your attention to that, Mr. Bridges, in the matter of the request to Murray for a financial report and the refusal to go along with merely accepting the dictates of the National Board on what persons, parties and policies should be adopted in elections, see if this is the letter which was sent by the Executive Board that you identified. This is dated March 18, 1948.

"Mr. Philip Murray, President,
Congress of Industrial Organizations,
718 Jackson Place,
Washington, D. C.

"Dear Brother Murray:

"A full report on the National CIO Executive Board meeting of last January 22 and 23 has been submitted to the undersigned National Executive Board of the International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union by President Harry Bridges, our National CIO Executive Board member.

"Included in Bridges' report was detailed accounting [7391] of the position taken by him at that meeting on the Marshall Plan, on a

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Third Party, and on the autonomy of national union affiliates of the CIO and local union affiliates to CIO state and local councils as regards such political matters.

"We fully and unanimously endorse the position taken by Bridges at the January CIO meeting and subsequently. As a matter of known and published fact, his position was in exact accordance with actions previously taken by ourselves. This Board last December voted to oppose the Marshall Plan as contrary to the interests and security of our union and the American people. We voted out belief that a third party is necessary to give political expression to labor and the people against the present outright reactionary Democratic-Republic coalition. We insist that our union as a national affiliate of the CIO is guaranteed autonomy and therefore the right to support and work for political candidates and issues of its own choosing, regardless of recommendations from top bodies. This goes for our local unions, too, including when they are voting in state and local councils of CIO.

"It seems to us that the CIO is principally an economic organization designed to protect its members, help them to obtain fair wages and conditions and job security, and look to their welfare. It has long been the policy of our union to make this the basis of our unity. We may [7392] disagree and often have disagreed politically and upon other matters, but we have never permitted these disagreements, no matter their seeming importance, to interfere with our ability to draw together and rally in our common fight against an enemy seeking to undermine our economic conditions. We think the CIO ought to have the same policy and we so recommend.

"In discussion of Bridges' report, we made it clear to him that if he had taken the position adopted by the majority of the National CIO Board, we would have held him a betrayer of his oath of office, and would have taken steps to bring about his recall as president of the union.

"We regard the policy of the National CIO to be impractical on its merits, and contrary to the actions of the last annual CIO convention held in Boston, Mass. We also consider the attempts to apply the policy within CIO to be thoroughly undemocratic and representing a complete departure from the democratic principles which we were assured were guaranteed when we joined the CIO.

"The locals of our unions are autonomous, both in relationship to our national union and to the CIO. Their delegates to state and local CIO councils are bound to follow and will follow the dictates of the memberships which elect them in all their actions in such state or local councils. Our national union and our local unions [7393] resent and will not stand for dictation or pressure from regional CIO or PAC directors, or from national directors such as John Brophy. Any efforts to place state or local councils in receivership because delegates from our local unions refuse to vote in such councils as instructed by these directors will be resisted to the bitter end.

"In addition to the foregoing, we feel it is our duty to note and call to your attention the discrimination against our union on standing committees of the CIO. We deeply resent the fact that no officer or other representative of our union is elected to serve on any standing committee of the National CIO.

"Fraternally yours,

"EXECUTIVE BOARD, INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION.

Q. Now, was it in pursuance of the policy enunciated in that letter that you wrote the letter which you did to Murray? A. Before that.

Q. This came before the letter?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. No, that was right. That was the letter signed by all the board members. And in addition, another letter was drawn up by the board, the one that you had here in the morning session, and I signed that. And that was pursuant to the orders of the board. I had no choice. I have no vote as to what I do. I am chairman of the board. I have no vote. I have a say. When the board acts, my job is, I go along, after I have had my say, or they fire me. Now, that is the way our union operates.

Q. There is a letter here also included in these minutes to the CIO Political Action Committee, 728 - 17th Street Northwest, Washington, D. C., January 30, 1948, signed by Jack Kroll, Director.

> "Dear Sir and Brother:
> "Enclosed are copies of the CIO Executive Board resolution adopted January 22, 1948, and the statement issued on the following day by the PAC Executive Board.
> "These documents clearly state the opposition and the reasons therefor of the CIO and the CIO-PAC to the injection of a third party into the political scene of 1948. All officers and delegates to PAC are obligated to observe the political policy of PAC. Although [7395] each person has the right to vote as he prefers, no officer or delegate to a PAC is to support, by public comment or otherwise, any candidate who is not endorsed by PAC.
> "The documents also clearly state the continuance of PAC's positive program on domes> tic affairs and for international peace, and reiterates the importance of the state and local elections and of the primaries. To attain this program, PAC will work with any organized group in the country, including the leagues, institutes and committees of the labor organizations, and other liberal groups and associations fighting for progressive goals. PAC hopes to coordinate all organizations who support the same candidates on local and state levels.

> "CIO-PAC believes a unified, aggressive campaign will achieve the most for world peace, security and progress of the people. It calls upon all members to renew their efforts with increased vigor." [7396]

Now, when the CIO-PAC selected a program or a candidate or a party to support, was that program or candidate or party selected by a vote of the members, or was it selected by the Executive Board of the CIO?

A. In this case it was selected by the National CIO-PAC Committee. In some cases it was selected by the Executive Board of the CIO, and in other cases by the National CIO. The difficulty I was in, and the other officers of the union, was this: That CIO told me as president of the organization I had to guarantee my membership would go along or I had to take steps to expel those groups of members that didn't go along. I was ordered by National CIO to deliver the vote in those areas my union was organized to this, that or the other political candidate who received the approval of the national CIO.

I said, "It is impossible and it cannot be done. I can't put over such a program to our union membership. If they can be persuaded to go along, that is one thing, but if you try to force them along those lines, you haven't got a chance."

That is what happened. So it finally got around to where I had to tell the national CIO, as a choice between taking orders from the national CIO in Washington and my own membership, and I stayed with my membership. They elected me, they paid me, and of course that caused trouble. [7397]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, here also is a statement of policy on the Marshall European Recovery Plan adopted by the executive board of the ILWU meeting in session March 17 and 18, 1948:

> "The ILWU stands squarely on the position that the tremendous quantity of food, clothing, machinery and other American products, produced in our country by all the modern methods of production, should be made available to feed, clothe and rebuild the hungry, devastated and war-battered nations of Europe.
> "We can think of no better use for the products of American labor than this. We know of no more deserving cause to be aided. We wholeheartedly believe that those nations that stood by us in World War II against Fascism are entitled to receive such aid and relief from the one remaining country in the world whose industries and national resources came through the war untouched.

"The ILWU does not take the position that aid to the needy countries of the world be furnished from the United States of America without any conditions at all attached. Certainly we, as a section of American labor that worked to help produce, distribute and transport American products, want to know that such aid will not be used in any way to build war machines that threaten the future peace of the world again—that such aid will not be used as a weapon to defeat the desires and the efforts of people in foreign [7398] matters to struggle forward to a better life in a world of peace.

"For the above reasons our union has taken a position against the Marshall Plan in the form that it has now taken—namely, the ERP.

"Upon analysis the ERP unquestionably provides that aid to the European nations will be conditioned on such stringent requirements that no nation can receive such aid and retain its sovereignty. We are firmly convinced that a plan such as the ERP can not and will not work. There are some things that people prize above food, clothing and even life itself and that is their right to make their own decisions in their own countries, in their own way, and for reasons that they think best themselves. We might not agree with their decisions or how they are made—with their forms of government or with the composition of such governments—yet we must recognize their sovereign rights.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"For centuries men have fought and died on battlefields and in struggles all over the world for the right of self-determination and home rule. It is this principle, or rather, the thwarting of this principle, that is inherent in the Marshall European Recovery Plan.

"As a trade union that has affiliated itself to many organizations in the past, the ILWU well recognizes that in the interests of common unity and struggle, there are times [7399] when unions and also nations must submerge or conceive some of their sovereignty, or as it is known in unions, autonomy. This we believe is quite as it should be in times of common struggle and by common agreement. The same principle should attach to the question of feeding hungry nations of the world today. The instrumentality is at hand. It can work. The majority of the world's nations wish to work and not be by-passed. That instrumentality is the United Nations. It is the last remaining hope of peace throughout the world. Here in our country we find leaders of our government and the major political parties joined together in desperate determination to force the will and desire of reactionary elements of our country upon the peoples and nations of all countries and governments throughout the world. We find our government and the political elements serving ultimatums on free nations—ultimatums that in effect say, 'Reorganize your country, hold your elections as we tell you, elect only those satisfactory to us, select only those friends we think are fit for you, and then you will be in a position to receive aid from America at the inflated prices determined by American profiteers.'

"We see a President of our country so desperate and determined to be reelected in November that he is willing to set the stage for a third world war so as to be able to [7400] use the crisis brought about under such a setting to ride into office on the votes of frightened and fearful American people.

"It is the firm belief of the ILWU that the people of America—particularly the organized labor movement—will be neither fooled nor frightened by such desperation and desperate moves. We are all well aware that our country does not face attack from any nation in the world. Practically all nations are in sore circumstances, badly damaged and devasted by the recent war. We are well aware of the fact that no critical emergency exists that requires universal military training or, as President Truman now calls for, the reestablishment of the draft.

"What we do know and understand is that these are moves of a desperate politician who has swung our government away from the principles and policies of Franklin D. Roosevelt and the New Deal, who has loaded his administration with the brass hats of the military and silver spoonfed representatives of our country's leading banks.

"We therefore again declare ourselves as being opposed to endorsement, support or passage of the Marshall European Recovery Plan in its present form, well knowing that it is a plan to fasten the will of big business of America onto weak, needy and defeneless nations as a price for food and clothing, medicine and machinery for such nations. We [7401] declare ourselves as knowing that the Marshall Plan leads directly to war and to the undermining and destruction of the United Nations which exists today as the greatest hope of the world's people to prevent war.

"We declare ourselves opposed to a plan such as the Marshall European Recovery Plan that will result in a boycott of those nations of the world that do not accept the stringent terms set forth in the plan because we know that such a boycott will result inevitably in widespread unemployment and depression in our country.

"And we finally reaffirm our determination to fight for full aid and relief to all the needy nations of the world, such aid to be administered through the United Nations and in such a way that nations can retain their self-respect, their sovereignty and live and work to prepare for peace instead [7402] of war."

Q. Mr. Bridges, I noticed the other day that the French longshoremen refused to load the ammuni-

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

tions sent by this country to France to be sent over to Indo-China. Did you observe that?

A. I have read about it.

Q. Did you observe that they were immediately called Communists for that reason?

A. Well, I have read it. No first-hand knowledge; I will say that.

Q. On this matter of the union arriving at this conclusion that help for the European nations should be done through the United Nations and not through business cartels and agreements with certain particularly selected nations, was that the resolution of your entire body of your union or was it only your own vote?

A. I have always said on the executive board, I haven't even a vote on our executive board. That is a resolution of our executive board, and it is formed on the basis of resolutions that had already been passed by our membership. In other words, it was not a situation where the executive board acted first and the membership later. The membership of our local unions had alrady acted on that matter and the executive board simply drew up that resolution that represented the opinion of the big majority of our membership and put it in the form of that resolution, which the board passed. Incidentally, that resolution that was adopted in March of 1948 does not differ fundamentally from the resolution adopted by the CIO in November, 1947. [7403]

Q. I read off to Rathborne the other day the resolution proposed by Quill, which was identical, at least in spirit, if not in exact language, to that. Do you remember that speech in 1947 before the CIO?

A. That is right, that was after the CIO convention in Boston. That resolution that we have adopted here at the board in March of 1948 fundamentally was the same as the resolution adopted at the CIO convention. It carried forward the same principle. The large difference was over the form. The resolution points out the Marshall Plan, in the shape it is now taking—that is, in March of 1948—is quite different from the plan we were sold in the first place.

Q. Will you tell us what the distinction was?

A. Secretary of State George Marshall, speaking at Harvard University in June, 1947, first negotiated the Marshall idea, which was to make food, machinery and other American products available to all the countries of the world, particularly those countries that had been hurt by the war, and in this way it would help rebuild those countries and also it would help to keep industry going here in the United States, and as I recall certain of his words at that time, he said, "We seek to do this job without criticizing or attacking any country or any government, its institutions and other things."

And then at the November convention of the CIO in Boston, Massachusetts—that is in 1947—Secretary of State George [7404] Marshall spoke at the convention and again outlined this general program. Then the so-called Marshall Plan went to Congress and it was in the Congress that all these various conditions were hung onto the plan, that when we looked it over, after that job being done, all we could see in the plan was unemployment for a large section of our membership. That is what has happened now. Part of our union is engaged in the shipping industry and the warehouse industry, particularly here in the West, and in our opinion—we certainly can be wrong—but from an economic viewpoint, we think it has brought unemployment in our industry.

Q. What were the fundamental differences? I mean, what were the additions to the Marshall Plan imposed by Congress that your union took exception to?

A. Originally the Marshall Plan, as was explained to us by Secretary Marshall himself at the Boston convention, said that the aid would be furnished countries, in some cases would be distributed as a gift, in some cases loans would be made, and would be given over to all countries without any conditions being imposed as to the form of government of those countries and the form of society.

Q. And what is the limitation?

A. The basic idea would be to feed people who were hungry, to build industries, and so forth, in all countries of the world, and it even included the countries such as Germany and Japan, and the vote in that convention was unanimous. I supported the resolution [7405] myself and our union supported it.

Q. I say what were the limitations imposed in

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)
Congress upon the distribution of the benefits of the ERP? A. Well——

Q. Did it consist essentially in that we should be allowed to select the type of government, the type of economy under which those countries should live?

A. No, not in so many words, but certain restrictions were laid that we thought at that time many of the countries of the world would be boycotted, and that is exactly what has happened. We might not like it, but there are a lot of countries in the world that maybe don't see things the way we see them in this country. That is what the resolution says. We don't agree with the way people in a lot of other countries do things, their form of society, their form of government. We take the position this is our form of government and we support this government, but it is another thing that we take the position another country should form its government on the way we wish. Our union doesn't like a kingdom, but we don't reserve the right, for example, of telling Great Britain to get rid of your king before you get aid. There are other countries that have a different form of government or different form of society. That resolution simply means that we have to let the people decide what kind of government or society that they want without us forcing or trying to tell them what to do, because we figure that will lead to a war. [7406] We just got through fighting one war for that reason. That was one thing.

Another thing I remember correctly because it dealt with us. In the form the plan was passed in

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Congress, it had no provisions of how the aid, the Marshall Plan aid, was being distributed and we had to get going, to secure certain administrative guarantees at least, that at least a certain amount or a certain percentage of the aid, at least 50 per cent, that is, machinery, food and other things, would be shipped in American flag ships, because as the plan was at that time, there was no provisions for anything like that. All the aid could be shipped in foreign bottoms. We didn't think that was a fair way to spend the money of the American taxpayer. There were certain other things I can't recall at the moment. But because we took that position and took those steps, we were accused of opposing the Marshall Plan in all its essentials, which was never so. We supported the general idea, we still do, but in some of the forms it is being utilized, in some of the ways that the aid is being applied, it hasn't at all been democratic.

Q. Has your union and yourself been strongly in favor of the United Nations?

A. At all times. [7407]

Q. And has there been objection or opposition to by-passing the United Nations?

A. Yes, we think that it is dangerous. We think—we recognize, at least—after all, we are only one union; we may pride ourselves and we do pride ourselves on being independent thinkers, but we are a long way from being infallible.

Q. Do you think that your way of thinking on any subject is to be dictated either by the heads of the CIO or by the persons who happen to be the heads of the United States Government?

A. No, we think that the persons who head the Government are the servants of the people, not the other way around. The way our membership——

Q. You reserve the right to be wrong, if necessary, is that correct?

A. That is what it boils down to; just that and nothing more.

Q. I notice in the International Warehousemen's eighth biennial convention on April 5, 6 and 9, 1949, this discussion in line with what you said today as part of your statement there—Let me ask you, were any representatives of the national CIO present at that convention—that is, the April, 1949, convention in San Francisco?

A. Yes, we had three representatives of the national CIO present at the convention for a special reason.

Q. And was there a demand at that convention that a request be made or that a demand be made upon the national CIO for a [7408] financial statement?

A. Resolutions were passed, yes, sir. The resolutions reflected the demands of our membership. They had become so many and came from so many different places that we were forced finally to take official action.

Q. Well, now, see if this refreshes your recollection as to your position on one point of that. You were talking and you spoke about the family circle:

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"Well, now you know what is burning us up. And the officers did not come along with this because they wanted to make trouble or have differences. We have had so many damn complaints (and you will get them on the deck here today from local unions and other people) that we just had to do something. We are doing it in this way, in the family circle. And we hope that the CIO representatives will get up and make their position clear. But, as I said before (and I will repeat it today and then I am finished) I know what the answer is going to be. You wait and see. It is as I told you.

"You want a CIO financial statement? We are going to be asked, 'Where do you stand on Russia?'

"To hell with Russia! We want a financial statement.

" 'Do you want to talk about some other matter of policy? You are first going to be called upon to condemn Joe Stalin." [7409]

"Well, if it becomes necessary to condemn Joe Stalin, we will do it in a hurry. But what the hell has that got to do with wanting minutes of CIO board meetings?"

Now, did you say that to the union convention there?

A. Yes.

Q. That is before any indictment was returned here at all, isn't that right?

A. That was a part of my speech at that convention.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. And then do you remember a speech by a delegate DeWarty in which he called attention to the fact that a delegate named Lawrence had gotten up and demanded a financial statement and that Philip Murray let off with a big blast at him?

A. DeWarty was referring to an incident that occurred at the 1948 CIO convention. A delegate from our union rose on the floor and asked for a financial accounting there, and President Murray said the reason that he was asking for a financial accounting was because I didn't attend meetings, and that statement was not exactly the truth.

Q. Now, taking a piece of the testimony of Rathborne, he said this with relation to the 1948 strike:

> "As a matter of fact, Mr. Curran was in the process of helping Mr. Bridges out at the request of Murray in connection with some negotiations that were taking place here in the '48 strike. Mr. Bridges had apparently got himself into a pretty bad box and went back to see Mr. Murray and [7410] said, 'Phil, I am in trouble, I need some help. Will you help me?' And Phil Murray did help and also called on Mr. Curran, and he also helped out."

Did anything like that occur? A. No.

Q. Did you go back to see Mr. Murray in the 1948 strike? A. I—no.

Q. What was the situation, Mr. Bridges?

A. I talked to Mr. Murray on the telephone and we asked his assistance and help in the way of financial support, and some financial support was rendered. In addition to that, however, the waterfront employers at that time, amongst other things, they said that they would not sit down with the union leadership; that included myself. As a matter of fact, their position was they would never again sit down with Bridges or any of the leadership, and they modified that position later where they agreed to come to the meeting provided there was some representative of the national CIO sitting in. So what really happened was that the employers against whom we were on strike raised the issue or the demand that national CIO representatives attend the negotiations, and I didn't object to that. But I did not go back East to see Mr. Murray. Curran had nothing to do with it. The only help we got from Curran, he tried to break our strike, he ordered his men to sail the ships. The only truth about that Rathborne statement was that I did seek [7411] a certain amount of help from Philip Murray, and that help was in the direction of some financial support of the strike. We got a certain amount of financial support; I think it amounted to around $22,000 in donations. That didn't come from the CIO; that came from the unions affiliated with the CIO.

Q. What is the procedure for collecting funds for the CIO? A. From it?

Q. What is the method? What is the procedure? No, for it.

A. Each union—each union is taxed. Each union at the present time is supposed to pay to the national CIO a monthly per capita tax of 10 cents per member per month, so that if our union, for example, has a membership of 50,000 we are required to pay a per capita tax of 5,000 a month, and so on down the line. That is the way CIO gets its main funds for its general account. In addition to that, it receives other funds in the form of voluntary contributions in one form or another.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Then about how many members are there in the CIO, or what is the total amount received, as nearly as you know?

A. I couldn't say that. I have got ideas, but I wouldn't want to tell you. I wouldn't want to try to say how many members are in CIO under oath and for publication.

Q. I notice also back in 1945 in this suggestion of Rathborne that he had some instructions, or there were some instructions from Schneidermann after the war to create trouble, to call out strikes and form all sorts of difficulties to prevent the [7412] crystallization of a policy of encirclement or hostility to the Soviet Union. I refer to the sixth biennial convention in 1945 of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union and ask you if you remember these two matters—and I will only read two short paragraphs:

> "We will continue in the interest of the war, in the interest of greater national unity and in the interest of our members and the people's peace to maintain our no-strike pledge, and we will condemn as saboteurs of the war effort and of the labor movement those elements that seek to breach this voluntary and solemn pledge of labor given to our country at a time of crisis.

"The ILWU is committed by actions of caucuses, local meetings and its International Executive Board to a policy of post-war industrial peace. We adopted this policy in the belief that a labor union cannot honestly look forward to a post-war era of jobs for all, while planning to call workers from jobs through strikes. We believe that future security and prosperity of our membership must be achieved through methods that fall outside the traditional scope of economic collective bargaining. No employer as such, no labor union as such, or even the two together, can guarantee that workers will have jobs in the post-war. Employers and unions together, in conjunction with government (which represents both) can, by cooperation and practical [7413] planning, supply economic security through 60 million jobs."

Did you approve that program?

A. That program was adopted by the convention. I think the vote was unanimous. I approved it.

Q. And finally, Mr. Bridges, with regard to the operation of the Marshall Plan of encirclement of Russia and all such matters as that as Mr. Rathborne enlarged upon, is it or is it not the American people that you have your primary interest in and the American country the country you have your primary regard for?

A. We have enough troubles in our own union taking care of our own membership without looking for troubles elsewhere, and that is what we primarily are concerned with. And I just can't help what Rathborne or other people say about us, but our organization is a good, patriotic organization. The members know where they stand, and they know what they think and what they are for, and they respect their government, their country and its institutions and they only believe that the fundamental institutions and the government belong to the people. And that is the way the membership feels, and even if I did feel any other way, which I do not, I would still be bound to follow the membership's wishes in that respect. And that is what they are. So there is no argument in our union over those matters. The main argument generally comes about outside of the unions and a lot of other people trying to decide which [7414] way our membership ought to feel without leaving it to the membership themselves as to how they ought to feel. There is nothing wrong with the membership of the union I represent in so far as its Americanism is concerned or its patriotism. It is second to none.

Q. As far as its program of 1948 with regard to the Marshall Plan, do you know whether it was alone in that or whether that same feeling was entertained by a great many people?

A. Quite a few people, and I think there was anyway—well, 18 or 20 Senators was opposed to it, and others. But we didn't decide on the basis of whether we were for it or against it by ourselves. We looked at the merits. We knew what we were talking about. We were familiar with what we were talking about. We are meeting it every day. Unemployment is growing, and seemingly we are up against a situation where more and more countries of the world are being boycotted, American goods can't go there, and as long as American goods do not move through our ports of our country, our people are not working. It is as simple as that. We are the fellows in the warehouses and on the docks. It is as simple as that.

Q. Can you state whether or not at the time the European relief program was being debated in Congress a great many congressmen took identically the viewpoint the ILWU took on the Marshall Plan?

A. The best I can recall, some did; I don't know how many it [7415] was, but quite a few did. I can't remember how many, but I remember some did.

Mr. Hallinan: I think that is all.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, you read some resolutions. May I ask ~~you to have~~ them marked for the purpose of the record—resolutions and letters that were embraced in your examination.

Mr. Hallinan: I put in evidence the minutes of the organization.

The Court: I had in mind the resolutions and letters you handed to Mr. Donohue for consideration during the noon recess.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, I read those all.

The Court: I think some mark of identification should be put on them.

Mr. Donohue: I would like to see the one on the Marshall Plan, if I may.

Mr. Hallinan: Let's see. I had those here.

The Court: You did read them while Mr. Bridges was on the stand. I wish you would have them marked in some way. We can attend to it after the examination——

Mr. Donohue: I would like to see the Marshall Plan resolution.

Mr. Hallinan: It is just a matter of finding it here. Here it is.

It is difficult to mark any particular one of them; suppose I offer the whole set of minutes? [7416]

Mr. Donohue: I have no objection, if your Honor please.

The Clerk: The minutes are marked Defendants' K-4 in evidence.

(Minutes of ILWU marked Defendants' Exhibit K-4 in evidence.)

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. There was one other matter that I overlooked, Mr. Donohue.

Mr. Donohue: Surely.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Mr. Bridges, Rathborne testified that he had testified before the LaFollette Committee inquiring into labor conditions on the

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Pacific Coast, and especially violations of free speech and attacks on union leaders; you remember that, and the program of publicity that was gotten out against you and other labor leaders?

A. Something like that.

Q. Did you testify also before that same committee?

A. The LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee?

Q. Yes.

A. I think—I don't think I testified. I made a brief appearance, but—I made a brief appearance, and Senator Thomas, who was presiding at that time, asked me to submit two sworn statements, which I did.

Q. You are familiar, however, with the findings of the LaFollette Committee, are you?

A. Oh, yes. [7417]

Q. Particularly with respect to the publicity campaign against you. I ask you if you remember that this is a portion of them?

Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please, to any action which may have been taken either by the LaFollette Committee or any other committee. It is not pertinent to the issues here.

Mr. Hallinan: Rathborne testified to it, your Honor. I want to show the findings of the LaFollette Committee on the campaign, the publicity campaign. It is something included in the United States Government reports, and it isn't any invention or any suggestion of Mr. Bridges; this is a finding of a United States Government senatorial committee directed particularly against that. We had a long discussion here, and we discussed with Rathborne the type of articles that were published in the papers and the fact that these matters were put in, inspired, paid for by the employers, referring to Mr. Bridges in invidious terms, and charges of Communism, and so forth. Rathborne said that the LaFollette Committee so found. I simply wanted to read exactly what the findings were in that regard. It is simply in amplification of what he testified to.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, it could only be a finding of fact relating to a matter which is not in controversy here and is not the subject matter of this case.

The Court: I sustained the objection heretofore, and [7418] consistent with the record, I sustain the objection now.

Mr. Hallinan: I don't think that the offer has been made before.

Mr. Donohue: There was an offer to read some part of the findings of the LaFollette Committee.

The Court: There was an offer made with respect to the findings, as I recall it, and I sustained the objection.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well.

That is all.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. After two years of operation of the Marshall Plan are you still opposed to it, Mr. Bridges?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. The way it is operating, you bet, for the reasons stated.

Q. What do you mean by that?

A. I know why I have those ideas, Mr. Donohue, probably not the same reasons you might have.

Q. As a matter of fact, Mr. Bridges, when you first heard the speech or read of it that General Marshall made at Harvard University in which he outlined the plan whereby we, this country, was to aid the devastated countries of Europe, you approved it, didn't you? [7419]

And isn't it a fact that being a mere skeleton of the plan which was ultimately passed by Congress, you thought at the time you approved it it would also include within its purview Russia and its satellite countries?

A. No, it was the CIO of this country that I followed, and its general idea. We approved it later on, ratified it later on at the November convention of the CIO, and later on we submitted the resolution passed by the CIO in December of 1947. We submitted that resolution to all the local unions of the international union and the officers recommended that all local unions concur in the resolution. And along with the resolution passed by the CIO, we submitted a mimeographed statement of Phil Murray's remarks analyzing just what the CIO program was in that respect, point out what it meant, and we urged that all our local unions adopt it. I can produce the resolution, plus the speech Phil Murray made, plus the documents showing that the officers concurred and urged approval by the membership, which the membership in most cases approved. And that was as late as December, 1947.

Q. Now, isn't it a further fact, Mr. Bridges, that your first opposition to the Marshall Plan came when Congress passed the Act and excluded from its purview Russia and its satellite countries?

A. No, no, that isn't the reason. If you recall, Mr. Donohue, the national CIO itself approved the Marshall Plan conditionally, [7420] providing that 11 amendments were made by Congress. And those 11 amendments went to quite a few things; I forget exactly what they were now, but there was 11 amendments the national CIO called upon to be incorporated in the plan, and so forth and so on. Eventually, what happened was this: The national CIO believed that sufficient administrative changes were made in the plan to warrant support of the plan even though those 11 amendments were not made by the Congress. We stuck with the original program and inasmuch as the 11 amendments were not made by the Congress, we did not believe the plan was in a democratic, constructive form. There is the whole thing; and the CIO saw it differently than we did, one of the reasons being that a deal was made between CIO and the national administration, including the Marshall Plan administration, where a lot of people in CIO got paid off with jobs under the plan, and right now they are roaming all over the world here and there, supposedly administrators of the plan. So that was one of the reasons why, in my opinion, from what I know of CIO, that they approved the plan, more for that reason than because of the basic, constructive features of the plan as it now operates. The opposition we have to the plan is what I have said here, and we just think things are getting worse as time goes on. [7421]

Q. Mr. Bridges, wasn't your opposition to contributing funds to the National PAC of the CIO predicated upon the ground that you wanted to use the funds for political purposes, raised by your union for the purpose of supporting candidates approved by the Communist Party?

A. No, at no time. Our position was this, Mr. Donohue, and the scuffle over the PAC fund started in 1946, where myself and other officers of the union—we were the only union in the National CIO that contributed 100 per cent, that is, we were the only union in the drive in 1944, the PAC drive in 1944 and 1946, that contributed $1.00 per head and more to the PAC fund. Now, here and there we found out that the National CIO was handing money out to candidates, political candidates in the field, that were running against candidates that had been endorsed by our local unions, and that the money that the membership had turned in at the request of people like myself and under the pledges given by people like myself, their officers, were being used to fight my own membership, why, they nearly lynched me. It wasn't a question of that at all. I can give you quite a few examples. One of the best examples I can give you is in the state of California, months and months and months ago, the National CIO pledged itself to support the candidacy of Helen Gahagan Douglas for Senator. Our union out here—at the same time the National CIO expects the membership of my union, that is, the largest union in the state of California, to [7422] send in contributions of at least a dollar a head to the National CIO. Then the National CIO, for example, wants to send money back to support the campaign of Helen Gahagan Douglas. Now, it is not a question of who the candidate happens to be. It is the right of the membership that will live here in California, registered here, vote here, to have a choice between Helen Gahagan Douglas and, say, Senator Downey. Now, the way our union works, our locals in California, they can make up their own minds. I predict, without knowing too much about it at the moment, here is the way I think it is going to work out in the senatorial campaign in the state of California:

Some of our locals will support Mrs. Douglas and some of our locals will support Senator Downey. I don't think any of them will support the Republican candidate. But the one thing they won't do, they won't send the money back to Washington and then have the money returned as a gift from President Philip Murray to Mrs. Douglas. So that the way it looks, Mr. Murray is giving Mrs. Douglas something. Our membership, they want to give the money to Mrs. Douglas itself if they feel that way. And they also resent where months ahead of time, in smoke-filled backrooms in Washington, by means of dirty politics, that their vote is pledged to a political candidate and then later on—they are not asked about it, they are told: "Now, you get out and work for that political candidate or you will be expelled from the CIO." [7423]

That is the situation, Mr. Donohue, and believe me, it goes less to the political hue or affiliation of the political candidate than it does to the demand of our membership that they want to be consulted and have a voice, a vote in the selection of political candidates if their vote and their money is going to be used to endorse and support those candidates. That is how simple it is. There is nothing more to it than that.

Q. Mr. Bridges, do you remember on your prior appearance on the stand, my asking you when you last saw Roy Hudson.

A. I remember your asking me. I forget what my answer was.

Q. Let me refresh your recollection. Reading from page 5574 of the record:

> "Q. A few minutes ago, Mr. Bridges, you said that the last time you saw Mr. Hudson was the incident you described in the front of your building a few months ago. Do you consider that just after the 1948 maritime strike as not being a few months ago?
> "A. December of 1948.
> "Q. Yes. A. About a year.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

"Q. About a year.

"A. Yes, could have been. When I say after the 1948 strike, I have in mind the last month in 1948 or early in 1949. That is what I have in mind.

"Q. Could it be that you have seen him since the trial [7424] started, began in November?

"A. No, that is, I haven't seen him. I have seen other people but not Hudson that I recall.

"Q. Well, if you had seen Mr. Hudson here in San Francisco as recently as a few months ago when this trial began, you would remember it, wouldn't you?

"A. I sure would, I sure would."

Do you recall that testimony?

A. That is right. That is still my recollection.

Q. What is your best recollection now when you last saw Roy Hudson in San Francisco?

A. Are you talking with reference—are you asking me with reference to when the trial started or at any time?

Q. At any time.

A. Oh, quite some time ago. Mr. Donohue. I kind of connect it up with Christmas, and I don't mean last Christmas. It seems to me——

Q. You stated——

A. Around, well, I haven't given it much thought, but I haven't seen Hudson for quite a while and my recollection is I saw him some time after the 1948 strike.

Q. Is your recollection now as it was some little ago that you last saw him in December, 1948, or January, 1949?

A. That is about it. I am placing it by the period since the 1948 strike. [7425]

Q. And is it your recollection that the last time you saw Roy Hudson was when you met him accidentally on the street in front of 150 Golden Gate Avenue?

A. That is right. I have got no recollection of seeing him elsewhere. You are talking about the last time I recall seeing him.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. My recollection is—and I don't think I am mistaken either—that is, I am not saying, "My recollection," just to try to dodge your question here—that is the last time I remember seeing him.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Bridges, what Mr. Hudson's present assignment is? A. No, no.

Q. Do you know that he is now the West Coast maritime coordinator for the Communist Party?

A. No. News to me. Why should I know?

Q. I am asking you if you do know.

A. I don't know, Mr. Donohue. I have no knowledge of him. No one has told me and I wouldn't know.

Q. Do you not know that Mr. Roy Hudson has been living in the city of San Francisco since just about the time the grand jury was considering your indictment? A. No. News to me.

Q. Do you not know, as a matter of fact, that Roy Hudson lives [7426] at 449 Page Street in San Francisco, California?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Absolutely news to me. That is the first I have heard of it. No way of knowing.

Q. Let me ask you, Mr. Bridges, if on the night of October 12th, 1949, Roy Hudson did not call upon you at your house?

A. If he did, I wasn't there.

Q. Did you see Roy Hudson at your house the night of October 12th, 1949? A. No.

Q. Pardon?

A. You are not asking me if Roy Hudson ever called—I am going back to the last time, you ask me the last time I saw Roy Hudson.

Q. I am asking you now if you saw him at your home on the night of October 12th, 1949.

A. The answer is no.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. The answer is no.

Q. You are sure of that?

A. I recall Hudson coming out to my house once.

Q. When?

A. Well, I don't know when, but it was a long time before October, 1949.

Q. You are sure he was not there on October 12th, 1949?

A. Well, yes, because—let me see—October, '49—— [7427]

Q. It was a holiday, October 12th.

A. What I am thinking of is this: I am thinking of how long I have been in my present house, because my recollection of Hudson calling on me is when I was living in another house.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. I mean your house at 1541 Shrader Street.

A. No, the answer is no. If he was out there, I wasn't there. I will check with my wife.

Q. Mr. Bridges, shortly ago you testified that Mr. Phil Murray had engaged a penthouse apartment in San Francisco at $1,500 a month and that the members of your union objected to it because they felt that Mr. Murray was spending money that they were paying the CIO in dues. Do you remember that?

A. I didn't testify to that. I didn't say that.

Q. What did you say?

A. I said there were complaints because Mr. Murray was living in the penthouse and I said—when I was asked about it—"I didn't know who engaged——" I didn't mean, I didn't say, "engaged," but I said, "I don't know who paid for it." Now, as a matter of fact, I have heard stories to the contrary. But it gets down to what I can tell my membership and be sure I am telling the truth and I can't be boxed in by some of them, where they work me out on a limb and I make a statement and I find I can't back it up. However, during 1945, during the United Nations, Phil Murray was living in a penthouse here in San Francisco and it caused some raising of eyebrows and [7428] some questions among my membership, and I did my best to explain it. And later on when the story came out that the penthouse was being rented in violation of the rent ceilings of the OPA, again I told my membership, "I am not going by what I read in the newspapers or anything like that.

Let's wait until we find out. I will ask Phil Murray. I will ask him myself and I will see that you get a full report. I don't believe it." That is the way the situation arose.

Q. When you asked him, what did he say?

A. I didn't ask him.

Q. Five years ago and you haven't asked him yet?

A. Well, not in so many words. The way the thing eventually developed, that and other things, we went out in the way of trying to get a financial report.

Q. Yes, we have heard about that, Mr. Bridges, but do you not know as a matter of fact there was a prosecution of the owner of that apartment for a violation of the OPA?

A. That's just it, that is how the matter became public, and that is what I had to step fast on, when my members came around and said, "So you are the fine character who was telling us to keep our shirts on and not get excited. Maybe there is some mistake, but you don't believe there is anything wrong about this." It was my membership who came around and said, "This is a fine how-do-you-do. Here is the president of the CIO who is making all the fuss about enforcement of the OPA rent ceilings [7429] and now we find he has been living in a place here in violation of the rent ceilings. How do you explain that?"

And again I said, "Wait a minute. Wait until we find the truth now before you go off half-cocked." That was my position.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Q. Did you ask Mr. Murray what the truth was then, Mr. Bridges, and report back to your union?

A. I don't think I asked Murray personally himself. I asked other people what the truth was.

Q. Mr. Bridges, don't you know that it was in the public record of the prosecution of Mr. Fritz, and widely publicized in the San Francisco press, that the arrangement for the rental of the penthouse, if that is what it was, was made by the Kaiser people here in California——

A. You mean paid for it?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. That is worse. That explanation is no good to me, Mr. Donohue. Now, listen. You are asking me to jump from the frying pan into the fire.

Q. Don't jump to a hasty conclusion.

Mr. Hallinan: Let him finish his answer, if you will.

Mr. Donohue: I will be glad to.

Mr. Hallinan: Let him hold it there for a while.

Mr. Donohue: You may go ahead and answer. I will come back.

The Witness: It won't take me a minute, Mr. Donohue. Here [7430] is the point: You are simply asking me to say, "Now, fellows, the penthouse wasn't paid for by the CIO; it was paid for by the employer." That is worse, because Mr. Murray himself attacked the vice president of the CIO for going to an employer and trying to borrow—just borrow $5,000. That was Mr. Reed Robinson, who was at that time the president of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, and Murray had him fired out of that job because he committed the crime, mind you, of trying to borrow from an employer. It is not done in union circles. If any of our membership find me taking any gift from an employer, that is the end of me and my job. So I can't go to my membership with an explanation like that, that the CIO didn't pay for it, the employer paid for it, because Henry Kaiser is a firm that has contracts with Mr. Murray's union and, believe me, I am not kidding you, Mr. Donohue, you do not know much about the inside workings of a trade union. It is just not done. If my membership catches me getting presents from the employer, they say, "Look, Bridges, you aren't getting those because those employers like the length of your nose or anything like that. What are you doing to get them?" That is the end of me and my job. That is no explanation to give my membership. That is worse.

Q. Mr. Bridges, you should have let me finish because I would have continued to say if you had read the records you would have learned that as a matter of courtesy to Phil Murray and the CIO, they being in Washington, the Kaiser Company made the arrangement, [7431] signed the contract for the apartment, paid for it by a Kaiser Company check, and as an exhibit in the prosecution, the check for the CIO in repayment was offered in evidence, so it was not paid by Mr. Kaiser, it was paid for by the CIO. Now, what is your explanation for that one?

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

A. Well, thanks for the information, Mr. Donohue. I didn't know. Here is all I have to say: I did my best when the membership came and raised these questions with me. I was a CIO director, remember. I held the job here at that time in addition to being president of the ILWU; I was a CIO director. When these people came around in all honesty and some indignation and raised these questions, the best I could do was to say, "Look, wait until we get the facts," and the best way I tried to handle it was, "Well, I will ask the CIO for a financial accounting." That is what I tried to do, and I got into trouble for doing it.

Q. Mr. Bridges, did it ever occur to you as CIO director when an attack was made on the integrity of the president of the CIO, that you might have called him on the telephone and asked him for an explanation and given it to your members?

A. Certainly not. I didn't do things that way. Without bothering Phil Murray, I defended him. That was my job, and I tried to do it without giving him the impression, because I didn't believe it maybe, or for any reason, there was anything crooked involved. My job was to defend the officers of the CIO and I always did it, and I did it to the point where I got into trouble [7432] with my own members. That is what happened.

Q. Mr. Bridges, may I ask you where you have learned the mastery of the art of character assassination by innuendo, by insinuation?

A. You forget, Mr. Donohue, I didn't even want to go into these matters until you put someone on the witness stand here to spin out a long line that the difficulties between me, myself and Phil Murray and Carey was on Communism. I am giving you the inside dope. The whole trouble was, the reason they got after me and the reason they are sitting down and playing ball with your group to get rid of me—they can't do it through my membership—was because I started to ask what happened to all the millions of dollars. Where are they going? I know the score. I am on the inside of the CIO and I am not going to talk about these matters except if someone gets up here and I am put on the spot. I either have to talk about it or give the jury here the impression there is something crooked, and I am a part of it, and the payoff is my skin. I am not trying to save myself at the expense of any trouble, but as long as these matters were gone into, I just brought some of them out. I am not assassinating anyone's character, but if you are asking me about the facts of the situation, look, Mr. Donohue, I have told you. It is as simple as that. When there are millions of dollars that change hands and those dollars come from the pockets of hard-working people, from hard-working people who are entitled to [7433] know what happened to them, I don't care who gets the money, but if it is good enough for the government of the United States, it is good enough for the CIO. The government of the United States makes an accounting.

to its members and its citizens. Why shouldn't the CIO?

Q. Mr. Bridges, you will have an opportunity to hear read what you have said about Mr. Murray and others long before Mr. Rathborne ever appeared as a witness.

I have no further questions.

Can we take the recess?

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen of the jury. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [7434]

Mr. Hallinan: We have nothing further, your Honor.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, I have an exemplified copy of a report from the probation office in Los Angeles with a letter of explanation from the Director of Adult Division of the Probation Office of the County of Los Angeles, which I would like to offer in evidence after Mr. Hallinan takes a look at it. (Handing document to Mr. Hallinan.)

Mr. Hallinan: We object to it as hearsay, and in addition to that, it isn't any record at all. There is a copy of a letter that is alleged to have been sent out, that is all.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor pleases, what I have——

Mr. Hallinan: Suppose that the Court take a look at it.

(Testimony of Harry Renton Bridges.)

Mr. Donohue: Yes. That isn't a copy of a letter, Mr. Hallinan.

The Court: May I see it.

(The documents were handed to the Court.)

The Court: Is this the document to which reference is made, dated October 17th and November 17th?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, sir.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, may I ask you if your objection goes to the authenticity? It appears to be exemplified.

Mr. Hallinan: It is only a letter, though; it isn't a record; it isn't a copy of any record.

The Court: No. You may have overlooked that. I haven't the letter as yet. That appears to be an exemplified copy of a [7435] document coming from the Probation Office.

Mr. Hallinan: All that this document does, the upper one is a statement of what the two lower ones are.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: The upper one of the lower ones is simply a letter; it isn't a copy of a court record of any kind; it is simply a letter addressed to a particular person. The lower one is simply the card. Anyhow, the persons who keep the record would have to come up here and testify on that. I certainly wouldn't put any validity on anything that is contained in there. These people come in here with an expunging of the record dated in September, 1949. Now, they come in with some other record prior to that time, and I don't trust it. Bring in the person who keeps those records and let's find out what happened.

The Court: These officers will be county officers at Los Angeles.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I have no direct authority to order them here. It seems to me that, in light of my brief analysis of the documents——

Mr. Donohue: Certainly the record is admissible, if your Honor please.

The Court (Continuing): ——the two documents, one appearing to be signed by a probation officer dated August 11, 1927, appears to be exemplified in proper form. [7436]

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor. I don't think there is any question about it. If Mr. Hallinan raises objection to that letter, I shan't force it, if your Honor please.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan offers objection to the extent that he feels that the probation officer should be here and subject himself or herself to cross-examination. Is that it, Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: Precisely. In other words, anybody can make a change in a record or add something to a letter or card and send it up here, and at the last moment it is presented to us. Even Rathborne wasn't questioned on it or anything about it. It is very suspicious, I think. Even the so-called covering letter has erasures in the date, the one that is marked 1927. Both things have obviously been erased and a new thing written in—a very mysterious way of trying to put evidence in.

The Court: I regard this document as having some importance.

Mr. Donohue: May I ask your Honor for permission to call the officer?

The Court: Yes, sir. It is an important document. I do think that Mr. Hallinan perhaps should have the right of cross-examination of any officer. This document appears to be exemplified. I think you should be accorded that right.

Mr. Hallinan: I would like a chance to examine the paper a little further.

The Court: You may. I will have a subpoena issued under [7437] the direction of this court directed to the marshal for service upon Mr. Brayton, Adult Probation Officer in Los Angeles, directing him to be here tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock.

Mr. Hallinan: May we have the order made also that all records touching this matter be brought up at the time?

Mr. Donohue: No objection.

Mr. Hallinan: All matters——

The Court: I think we have quite a few of them here.

Mr. Hallinan: He may have some more that we have not been favored with.

The Court: Any and all documents, Mr. Schaeffer, under the order of this court, are to be produced bearing upon pertaining or otherwise relating to the matter of Mervyn Rathborne, probation officer in connection with the matters addressed to the Court.

And may I ask the marshal's office to telephone to this gentleman and advise him of the issuance of the subpoena; that transportation be arranged; that he be here tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock. Let that be done forthwith.

Mr. Hallinan: Of course, if your Honor please, this would only relate, at any rate, to a record, apparently on the face of it, on a card of what is alleged to be a probation officer, and it wouldn't be a court record anyhow. This doesn't purport to be an order of the court.

The Court: The document to which the exemplification is [7438] attached is the document I would regard as having some evidentiary value.

Mr. Hallinan: But that is only a copy of a letter, as I say.

The Court: That appears to be.

Are there any other matters?

Mr. Donohue: I have no other matter, if your Honor please.

The Court: There was one other item concerned with the marshal's office and that is the production of certain records.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, yes, the payments made to Rathborne. What about those?

Mr. Donohue: I know the marshal was in the hall a little while ago.

The Court: Call Mr. Roseen. Will you ask Mr.

Roseen to bring in such records as he may have available for Mr. Hallinan's scrutiny and perusal. Are there any other records that you request, Mr. Hallinan, in connection with this?

Mr. Hallinan: I don't remember any right now. [7439]

The Court: Were the basic documents supporting the statements supplied to you?

Mr. Hallinan: I don't know. We were handed a sheaf of carbon copies of what purported to be vouchers for the statements that were made. I glanced at them briefly and handed them back. I don't know whether they are the only ones.

The Court: Mr. Donohue, may I ask that you make a statement for the record so that hereafter no question may be raised concerning the production of any and all documents pursuant to the order of this Court.

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, pursuant to your Honor's instruction, I handed Mr. Hallinan a group of eleven carbon copies of documents which are captioned "Public Voucher for Purchases and Services," stating to your Honor at the time that the original of these vouchers is sent to the Department of Justice in Washington for the purpose of preparation of checks drawn on the Treasurer of the United States for payment; that when the check is received by the person who executes this voucher and is deposited in a bank, it is returned to the Treasurer and ultimately goes to the general accounting office for audit. I do not have the originals, because they are in Washington, where they were sent for the purpose of preparing the checks. I do not have the checks. Mr. Hallinan looked at these. He asked some questions of Mr. Rathborne about them, and he tossed them on my desk. He didn't offer them in [7440] evidence. They are here. If he wants to do so, I have no objection.

The Court: Have them marked for identification.

Mr. Hallinan: They only start in July and they end in January. I doubt very much if the first payment made to Rathborne was in July.

Mr. Donohue: I know Mr. Hallinan was very much upset that they didn't show otherwise.

Mr. Hallinan: No, I wasn't either surprised or upset. It was just about the way I figured it would be; no set record is brought in, but just some loose records. Ten or twelve could have been retained, and I imagine some were. I don't know, but it seems to me very dubious that the first payment that Rathborne got from the Government was in July.

The Court: Pardon me, Mr. Donohue. Who is the legal custodian of these records?

Mr. Donohue: Mr. Barber, District Director of Immigration, if your Honor please.

The Court: You received them from him?

Mr. Donohue: I received them from him.

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. Barber was available and is available. Why doesn't he bring in the whole record showing everything that was done in the matter?

The Court: You may mark them for identification.

The Clerk: The vouchers are marked Government's Exhibit [7441] No. 42 for identification.

(Vouchers relating to Rathborne were marked Government's Exhibit 42 for identification.)

The Court: Is Mr. Roseen here? Mr. Donohue, would you get those from Mr. Roseen, please?

Mr. Donohue: May I hand these to your Honor?

The Court: You might hand them to Mr. Hallinan.

(The douments were handed to Mr. Hallinan.)

The Court: Other than these matters that are of immediate concern, are there any other items of evidence that counsel desire to present to the Court and jury?

Mr. Donohue: No, your Honor.

The Court: The defense?

(No response.)

I think, Mr. Hallinan, we might take the afternoon recess and give you a chance to look them over.

Mr. Hallinan: Well, they seem to be fairly clear. One of them shows that Rathborne in May, 1949, received for services as an expert witness in the case of the United States, the following dates, May 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 1949, a total of 12 days at $37.50 a day, $450; for expenses actually and necessarily incurred as per following statement: 9½ days per diem at $6, $55.50.

"Half Moon Bay, California, to San Francisco, California, and return, 30 miles round trip. 11 round trips at 30 miles each, [7442] 330 miles at 5 cents per mile, $16.50." A total of $522 for 12 days.

"Explanation: Witness left home by privately owned automobile each morning at 8:00 a.m., arriving home at 7:00 p.m. each night. May 14, 1949, witness remained over night in San Francisco, California at request of Government officers."

Then there is the statement of Rathborne that he was subpoenaed to appear before a special session of the grand jury on May 11, and in pursuance to said subpoena he did appear and testify; represents he has intimate, detailed and expert knowledge of the principles, policies, program, activities, teachings and philosophy of the Communist Party; says that he will appear and give expert testimony concerning the principles, policies, program, activities, teachings and philosophy of the Communist Party, "provided that I am compensated at the rate of $37.50 for each day or fraction thereof that I am absent from my home in order to so appear and testify as an expert witness concerning the matters above set forth; and provided further that in addition I shall receive travel expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence at $6 under the standardized Government travel regulations." So that the gentleman received $522 at the rate then of $37.50 plus $6, or $43.50 a day. [7443]

Then the next little item of it being May 31st is in May "for services as expert witness in the case of United States," case No. whatever it is.

confidential. "May 24, 25, 26, 28, 31, five days at $37.50 a day, $187.50."

"For expense actually and necessarily incurred as follows: At San Francisco"—each day—3¾ days per diem at $6.00, $22.50.

"Half Moon Bay, California, to San Francisco, California, and return, 30 miles round trip. Five round trips. 150 miles at 5 cents per mile, $7.50, total $217.50."

Then "Certificate of Attendance." This certificate is signed by Mr. John P. Boyd—not present—certifying that Mr. Rathborne appeared before the grand jury in connection with confidential investigation file number, and so forth, on May 24, 25, 26, 28 and 31; the best of his knowledge received from government officials in various parts of the United States, the witness left Half Moon Bay, California, at 8:00 a.m. on each day, and to the best of his knowledge and based upon information obtained from the witness or from government offices, that the witness left San Francisco at 5:00 p.m. on each of those days and arrived at Half Moon Bay, California at 7:00 p.m.

Then Mr. Rathborne again makes a certificate that he has been subpoenaed before a special session of the grand jury in San Francisco May 11th, and in pursuance of said subpoena he did appear and testify: "that I do hereby represent that I [7444] have intimate, detailed and expert knowledge of the principles, policies, program, activities, teachings and philosophy of the Communist Party; that I will appear and give expert testimony concerning the principles, policies, program, activities, teachings and philosophy of the Communist Party, provided that I am compensated at the rate of $37.50 for each day or fraction thereof that I am absent from my home in order to so appear and testify as an expert witness concerning the matters above set forth, and provided further that in addition, I shall receive travel expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence at $6.00 under the standardized government travel regulations."

So he got $217.50 for that little jaunt.

Then the last one is for services as an expert witness for June 1, 2, 6, 7 and 8, 1949, six days at the same rate of $37.50 a day; $27.00 per diem, $9.00 mileage, a total of $261.00 for six days.

A certificate of Mr. Mervyn Rathborne that he was subpoenaed to appear, and in pursuance he appeared and testified and represents that he has intimate, detailed and expert knowledge of the principles, policies, et cetera, et cetera, and he will so testify "provided that I am compensated at the rate of $37.50 per day, and that in addition, I get $6.00 a day subsistenance and mileage."

And then a certificate by Mr. John P. Boyd, special assistant to the Attorney General, in which he certifies that Mervyn [7445] Rathborne did so appear, and to the best of his knowledge—Mr. Boyd's knowledge—based upon information received from government officers in various parts of the United States, he certifies that Mr. Rathborne left Half Moon Bay at 8:00 at each of those days, and to the best of his, Mr. Boyd's knowledge and information, obtained from government officers who escorted the witness to the place of his departure, that the witness left San Francisco, California, at 5:00 p.m. on each of those days, and according to information obtained from the carrier is due to arrive at Half Moon Bay at 7:00 p.m. on each of those days; and it includes the dates on which the witness actually appeared before the grand jury and/or dates that the witness was absent from his home; and on that occasion, then, the witness received $261. So there is $478 plus $522, which is approximately a thousand dollars, which I take it almost corresponds with the amount that Mr. Rathborne won from the sailors in his crap game.

We offer that in evidence, if Your Honor please, as the defendants' exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: No objection, Your Honor.

The Court: They may be marked.

(Document was thereupon received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit L-4.)

Mr. Hallinan: Mr. MacInnis reminds me that is precisely, exactly $1000—coincidences that baffle one.

The Court: Any other matters?

Mr. Donohue: None that I know of, if Your Honor please. [7446]

The Court: We will await the appearance of the witness from Los Angeles in the morning.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor directed him to be here tomorrow, is that right?

The Court: I hope that he will be here tomorrow. I don't want the proceedings of the Court delayed.

Mr. Hallinan: I beg your pardon?

The Court: I prefer that he be here tomorrow morning.

Mr. Hallinan: I dare say that even if the testimony were all concluded, would there be argument or would there be some discussion of the instructions?

The Court: I thought we might discuss them this afternoon, and also the question of the length of argument.

I will indicate to counsel on both sides the instructions I intend to give. We may do that tomorrow morning early, or late this afternoon, if you prefer.

Mr. Hallinan: Either one.

Mr. Donohue: It might be better, in the event the witness is somewhat delayed in coming here, we may dispose of it while we are waiting. I think the Marshal will probably be able to tell us what arrangements can be made so we will know what time he will be here.

The Court: He can reach him by telephone.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor. I persume the Marshal will do that. [7447]

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen, we will take the afternoon adjournment until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions or circumstances.

> (Thereupon the jury was excused, and the following proceedings were had in their absence:)

The Court: First, with respect to the argument, gentlemen, if I might have the views of the defense and the prosecution as to the length of time they anticipate they may require.

Mr. Hallinan: If the Court please, the thing that I would say on behalf of Mr. Bridges is that, in view of the fact that the matter has been on trial for four months running into the fifth month, with the great number of witnesses, it would be impossible to argue the case in less than, let us say, three days. I would expect to be through within that time, or maybe within a little before it. However, I have always found that when there is a limitation placed upon it, it creates a certain psychological block that makes one uncomfortable. I would prefer, and I would suggest to the Court, that no limitation be imposed, but that is about the time I would require on the argument.

The Court: Three days?

Mr. Hallinan: About that, yes. I would hope, as I say, to finish it within that time, or maybe even a little less, but there are a great many witnessses and a great many different parts [7448] of the record that have to be called to the jury's attention. I would say about that time.

The Court: Mr. MacInnis?

Mr. MacInnis: Well, on behalf of the defendants Robertson and Schmidt, I think that a day to a day and a half would suffice, and I too would try to conclude more speedily. I doubt if any of us would want unduly to vex the jury by speaking too long, but I think that a limitation might not be of benefit to any of the counsel in the case. I think that I may well be able to conclude such things as are necessary by the conclusion of one day, or it might be a day and a half; I don't think any longer.

The Court: Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: It is my judgment, if your Honor please, that since argument of counsel, while helpful to the jury, is not evidence upon which the jury may act, that there should be a limitation placed upon the amount of time which may be allowed. I am satisfied that the United States can present its views to the jury in opening and closing in a time not to exceed a day and a half.

Mr. Hallinan: May I suggest this, your Honor. Originally, at the inception of this case, there was discussion relating to the opening statement of counsel, and your Honor made this statement: [7449]

This is on page 556 of the record:

> "I am not going to foreclose government counsel or defense counsel from the widest argument at the close of this case. I am not going to foreclose them on time. I never have. I assure you, Mr. Hallinan, that I will give you ample time, as well as your colleague, Mr. MacInnis, to argue the matter from its fullest picture."

Now, Mr. MacInnis and I both took that as a promise from the Court that the time would not be limited and, accordingly, we conducted the examination in such way as to retain certain matters for argument, the reading of certain documents and so forth that have been introduced in evidence, instead of having them read by the witnesses, and then preparing—because I have prepared argument on them and have put it in such fashion as to assume that no limitation would be imposed.

Now, as Mr. MacInnis suggests, none of us have any desire to bore the Court or jury; we want to get the case through; but the discomfort of having a time limit imposed, watching the time, being fearful that interruptions and so forth are taking time away from us that, while it may not be necessary, very often one deems it necessary to expatiate upon, I suggest to the Court that the original suggestion of the Court is a fair one; that we should not be limited.

The Court: Perhaps the suggestion of counsel, in the light of time consumed in this case and all and singular the problems [7450] involved, I think that my first suggestion probably is a good one. That was made at the very threshold of the trial.

Mr. Hallinan: The very threshold.

The Court: And I don't think anything has changed my views since that time. However, there is the element of repetitious matter. Counsel for the government and counsel for the defense are experienced. You are not going, I assume, to burden the Court with repetitious argument; but if by chance, gentlemen, we reach a point where I feel that we are overlapping or that there may be repetitious matter going in, out of the presence of the jury at some recess I will make such suggestion to you as may be called for.

Mr. Hallinan: I think you will find there won't be any such necessity because personally I have tried to bring my argument in as cogent and as narrow a compass as possible, and I don't think there will be any overlapping. Mr. MacInnis has one element of it and I have chosen other elements, and, as I say, relying upon what Your Honor suggested, we fixed the argument in accordance with the statement that you made, and we will certainly try to finish it within the time. I have given a larger time element that I assume will be actually required. Mr. MacInnis, I suppose, as well. We will try to keep it below those figures, but for Your Honor's guidance, three days, we can be expected at least to be finished within that time.

The Court: Tomorrow, then, gentlemen, is Friday. It is [7451] the close of the week. I assume that we will have this additional testimony and further other items of importance or more or less import, and it then might be advisable to have the matter stand over until the following Monday.

Mr. Hallinan: I would think so.

The Court: For the purpose of having each side consult the record.

Mr. Hallinan: I would think so.

The Court: And to review the record in such form as they desire, and that will aid and help in the presentation.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, I think so.

The Court: With that in mind, then, we will adjourn. I think we can discuss the instructions tomorrow rather than this afternoon. It is late.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: We will adjourn until 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning.

In the meantime, may I ask the representative of the marshal's office to take every available means to have that witness present tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock.

The DeputyMarshal: Yes, Your Honor.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Friday, March 10, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [7452]

Friday, March 10, 1950, 10:00 o'clock A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

Mr. Donohue: Will you call Mr. Arthur W. Brayton.

The Clerk: Call Mr. Arthur W. Brayton.

ARTHUR W. BRAYTON

called on behalf of the United States in rebuttal; sworn.

The Clerk: Will you state your full name?

A. Arthur W. Brayton.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Donohue:

Q. What is your business or occupation, Mr. Brayton?

A. I am a probation officer, County of Los Angeles.

Q. I beg pardon?

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

A. County of Los Angeles.

Q. And how long have you been so employed?

A. Since 1927.

Mr. Donohue: I will ask the Clerk to mark as United States for identification next in order, this document.

The Clerk: The document is marked U. S. Exhibit 43 for identification.

(Documents from Probation Officer of Los Angeles County, State of California, were thereupon marked United States Exhibit [7453] No. 43 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Would you look at the document, please?

(Document handed to witness by the Clerk.)

Mr. Donohue: Might I have the document back again, please?

(Document returned to counsel by the Clerk.)

Q. (By Mr. Donohue): And you identify this document, Mr. Brayton, as being what?

A. Which one do you refer to?

Q. The one you just had in your hand, sir.

A. Well, first, the top one is an affidavit. The second one is a copy of one of the records in the probation department, the two photostatic copies are.

Q. And you are able to identify this as a photostat of the record kept in the probation office in Los Angeles, California?

A. That's correct. I have the originals.

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

Mr. Donohue: Offer it in evidence, if your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: We would first like to have a voir dire examination on it. Are you through with the witness?

Mr. Donohue: Only on this one point. I have one other question to ask him.

Q. I hand you what I shall ask the Clerk to mark as U. S. for identification next in order.

> (Thereupon letter of transmittal referred to was marked United States Exhibit No. 44 for identification.)
> (U. S. No. 44 handed to witness by the [7454] Clerk.)

The Court: That is the letter of transmittal?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor.

Q. Can you tell us what that document is, Mr. Brayton?

A. Well, it is a letter written to Mr. Donohue by myself concerning the papers that I just saw.

Q. And was that letter written after an examination by you of the files in your office?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Donohue: I offer the letter in evidence, if Your Honor please.

Mr. Hallinan: The same request, if we may have a voir dire examination?

The Court: I will reserve ruling pending examination by Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Donohue: You may examine the witness.

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Hallinan:

Q. Mr. Brayton, might we see the originals of the documents that you have?

A. Yes, sir (producing documents).

Q. That is all the documents on this matter?

A. Yes, sir. This is the Superior Court file and this is the file of the Probation Department (documents handed to Mr. Hallinan by the Clerk).

Mr. Hallinan: I wonder if we might have 15 minutes to examine them, Your Honor? There is quite a file here and if [7455] the jury would want to take a few minutes' recess, or the Court, it might save wasting their time.

The Court: I have no objection.

Mr. Donohue: I have no objection.

Mr. Hallinan: It is quite a voluminous file.

The Court: All right, ladies and gentlemen, we will take a brief recess in the interval while the file is being examined.

The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case.

(Recess.) [7455-A]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, Mr. Brayton, will you please tell us briefly what is the particular procedure in getting a matter dismissed and the record expunged after a period of probation has expired in your office?

A. Why, we write a report about the case, put the case on the calendar and write a report stating that the defendant has made good and requesting the court to dismiss the case.

Q. What do your rules or your procedures call for to precede that motion by you?

A. That his conduct has been satisfactory during the probation period.

Q. And what proof do you require for that?

A. We supervise the man, keep track of his activities.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. We supervise the man and keep track of his activities.

Q. Who puts through this expunging of the record in this case? Did you handle that?

A. I did.

Q. Who was the first person who spoke to you about it? A. I believe it was Mr. Kidder.

Q. Mr. Kidder? A. That is right.

Q. And when?

A. August or September of last year.

Q. Do you remember what the [7456] conversation was?

A. Yes; I think I do, anyway. He came to me and told me who he was and showed me his credentials and asked if he could see the Rathborne file, and I told him he could, and I went and got the file and he looked it over and asked if the case had been dismissed, and I said according to our records it had, and I believe he told me that the Superior Court records did not reflect that the case had been dismissed, and he told me that Rathborne was going to be used in a trial and that he would like to have the case dismissed. And I said, "It should have been done a long time ago. I will see that it is done." And I put it on the calendar and had it dismissed.

Q. Was there anything further done at all except what you have just stated? Any further interviews with Mr. Kidder or anybody else connected with the Immigration Department or with the Government?

A. Not at that time, no.

Q. Was there at any time, from that time until the case was dismissed? A. I don't believe so.

Q. Were you furnished any statement, letter or affidavit or anything of that kind? A. No.

Q. Anything signed by Mr. Rathborne?

A. Not a thing. [7457]

Q. You are sure of that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I notice there is nothing of that kind in your records. There is nothing that was omitted or not brought up here? A. No.

Q. This record contains everything that you have pertaining to the matter, is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. You are certain that you did not receive any letter or affidavit of any kind signed by Mr, Rathborne? A. Not to my recollection, no.

Q. And if there were one, I take it it would be in this record, is that right?

A. That is correct, yes.

Q. When you talked to Mr. Kidder, how long after you spoke to Kidder did you put the matter on the calendar?

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

A. Oh, a matter of a week or ten days, I imagine.

Q. Where is the copy of the letter or the petition that was made to the court?

A. It is in that file.

Q. That is that form?

A. That is the one I signed myself, yes.

Q. There is a document here, and I notice that the copy is not signed. It seems to be initialed. What is that "A.M.Z."

A. "J.M.Z."? [7458]

Q. No, "A," it starts, with, "Deputy Probation Officer."

Have we the original? All that has been introduced in evidence here is an order made on September 12, 1949, expunging the record, but we are not provided with any copy of the other document.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, when you speak of "other document," do you have in mind the more recent document?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes. I will show him this document and ask him if that is the one he has reference to.

A. That is the copy of the original that is contained in the Superior Court files.

Q. Oh, I see. A. This is just our file copy.

Q. In other words, the Superior Court file which I have here and the other one, and the Superior Court file is a public record, is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. But your documents are not?

A. That is right.

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

Q. And the initials that are referred to there are your own initials, Arthur W. Brayton?

A. That is right.

Q. That document, I notice, is dated also September 12, 1949, is that right?

A. That is right. [7459]

Q. So that the matter was not set on the calendar for hearing or anything of that kind, but you simply took the order in with this statement of yours, the report, and had the court sign the order expunging it, is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. In other words, it was not set on the calendar for any hearing or anything of that kind?

A. Well, we set it on the calendar. The court may not hear it on that date we set it, but we set it on the calendar.

Q. I notice that this document, a Superior Court record now; probation officer's report, "Recommend termination pursuant to Section 1203 P. C. and dismissal pursuant to Section 1203(4) P. C." and it is dated 9/12/49. A. That is right.

Q. That is September 12, 1949?

A. That is correct.

Q. And then on the same day the court makes its order that the period of probation be terminated and dates it 9/12/49? A. That is right.

Q. I notice here also that there is a file mark. "Filed September 12, 1949," and that is X'd out. Why is that?

A. I haven't the slightest idea why that is X'd out. That was done by the court clerk apparently

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

Q. Prior to appearing before the court you had talked to nobody but Kidder? [7460]

A. That is correct.

Q. Did he furnish you with any information as to Rathborne's activity or what he had done, or anything of that kind? A. No.

Q. And you received no further communication or statement or letter or affidavit of any kind, is that correct?

A. That is right, so far as I know.

Q. You simply went and looked at your record. Are these the records that you looked at to make up your mind in that matter?

A. Yes, sir, they are.

Q. Now, that card on top obviously was not sent out, is that right?

A. It probably was sent out and returned.

Q. You mean not received by the person to whom it was sent? A. That is right.

Q. I noticed originally——

A. Because we don't make these in duplicate.

Q. Do you have any records there of Mervyn Rathborne ever calling at your office to inquire about the status of his probation?

A. No, we don't have a record of him calling after—I will get my glasses on—July of 1947.

Q. After July of 1947? A. 1927. [7461]

Q. You have no record of him calling after July, 1927? A. Yes.

Q. That is 1925, isn't it?

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

A. Well, he reported to our office during the following years. He was convicted in 1925, but he reported to our office regularly, either by mail or in person.

Q. Now, I notice the last letter there is dated April, 1927. Do you notice that?

A. Well, there is one letter here dated July 11, 1927.

Mr. Hallinan: Could I have those two files back? (Returned by the Clerk.)

Q. And that is the last record you have, July, 1927? A. Yes.

Q. And he was convicted in January of 1925, is that right?

A. I would have to refer to the records to tell you.

Q. Now, would you look at those letters, or that letter, and then I want you to see the one that I am now handing you. A. Yes?

Mr. Hallinan: Could I have the second one back?

(Documents returned by Clerk.)

Q. Now, this is a letter dated March 1st, 1950, receieved March 2nd, by your stamp, apparently:

> "Mr. Brayton, Probation Department, Los Angeles County," et cetera.
> "Dear Sir: [7462]
> "Confirming telephone conversation of even date with Mr. Kidder of this office concerning the record of the probation department relating to Mervyn Rathborne, your number 7656, it will be appreciated if you will address a letter to Mr. F. Joseph Donohue, special assistant to the Attorney General, in charge of the United States Attorney's office, Room 434, Postoffice Building, Seventh and Mission Streets, San Francisco, California, setting forth your opinion that on or about August 11, 1927, action was taken by the probation department before Judge Frank Lamberson in Department 22, Superior Court, to expunge the record of the conviction of Mervyn Rathborne, under Section 123.4 of the California Penal Code, and that after a diligent search, no record can be located of any judicial action denoting the actual expungement at that time.

"Very truly yours, Bruce G. Barber, District Director."

Do you recall that letter?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hallinan: We offer it as Defendants' exhibit next in order.

Mr. Donohue: No objection, Your Honor.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now will you look——

The Court: One moment, please. It may be marked in evidence, Mr. Schaeffer, as exhibit next in order number——?

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit M-4 in [7463] evidence.

(Thereupon letter dated March 1, 1950, Barber to Brayton, quoted above, was received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit M-4.)

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, will you look at the letter you are now looking at, and there seems to be an erasure on a couple of the dates there, giving the dates upon which the record appears to have been dismissed, is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. And what—do you know what the erasures cover?

A. Yes, my secretary put the wrong date in, and I had her correct it.

Q. What date did she put in?

A. 1927; that is what she has here.

Q. And what in before that? What did she erase?

A. I think she erased '47, as I recall it. The date was incorrect and I had her change it.

Q. I see. Well, now, you think she first put in that it was expunged in 1947 and then changed it to 1927, is that right? A. Yes, I instructed her.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. She changed it at my instructions.

Q. Well, did you dictate the letter to her or did she compile it out of the records?

A. I dictated the letter to her. When it came back to me it was incorrect and I had her correct it. [7464]

Q. How did you happen to dictate 1947 to her?

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

A. I don't believe I did.

Q. You told her 1927? A. I think so.

Q. But she changed it to 19—she had it 1947 when the letter was presented to you for your signature? A. That's right.

Q. All right. Now, look at that a little more closely. Hold it up to the light and you will see that it is only the last figure that has been written out.

A. I believe it would be my judgment that the last two figures have been changed.

Q. The last two figures? A. Um-hm; yes.

Q. It was changed from '47 to——

A. That is my recollection. In any event, the date was incorrect as it came back to me for signature and I had her put in the correct date.

Q. Now, when you looked at that record you saw that Rathborne's probation period was three years, is that right? A. That's correct.

Q. It was established for three years. So it couldn't be dismissed before 1928, isn't that right?

A. No, sir. The law provides that you can dismiss it prior to the expiration of the probation period if he has made good. [7465]

Q. When you got out—did you take out these cards while Kidder was in your office? Did you examine them in his presence? A. I did.

Q. And you notice on the card there is typed out "8/13/27, case dismissed. C.L.M." Who is C.L.M.? Who is C.L.M.?

A. Oh, he was then the director of the Adult Department, Carl L. May.

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

Q. Where is he now?

A. He has been dead some six or eight years.

Q. Was it customary for Mr. May, when he would do a thing like—when he made a notation like that, to simply have the initials typed in?

A. Well, I imagine that was done by a clerk. I don't think Mr. May would do that.

Q. Who is Mr. Vinacke?

A. He was in the probation office; he was the deputy probation officer there that originally investigated Mr. Rathborne's case.

Q. Where is he now?

A. Well, I think he resides in the vicinity of Long Beach somewhere, I don't know.

Q. Is he still with the Probation Department?

A. No, he has been retired for some seven or eight years.

Q. Well, on this card evidencing Rathborne's probation record, it gives his name, address and then a number of matters in pencil, right down the line, and states what the terms of [7466] probation must be, and then that he is allowed to go to sea on the U.S.S. Gidisee, and then typed in near the bottom are the words "8/17/27, case dismissed," and typed in the initials "C.L.M." Now that is the only place in the card that any initials are typed in. Do you know why that is?

A. No, I don't. I think it was done by a clerk, as I said before.

Q. I beg your pardon?

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

A. I believe it was done by a clerk.

Q. Well, do you know any reason why the initials of the head of the probation department should be typed in by a clerk on a notation on the card?

A. No, I don't know why that was done. That was done years——

Q. You have only been there since '27, have you?

A. That's right.

Q. What part of '27? A. September.

Q. September, 1927. So you weren't there at the time this was done?

A. I can't recall the exact date when this transpired.

Q. Now, you say that the rules permit the termination of probation at a period prior to the term set by the court, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And under what circumstances? [7467]

A. Where the defendant has made a satisfactory adjustment and it is in the interests of justice. I believe that is the way the code reads.

Q. And then what is done? Isn't an appearance made before the court? A. That's correct.

Q. Is an order—Is a petition prepared, as was done here in 1949?

A. Back in 1927, I doubt very seriously that a petition was prepared. I think that was done orally.

Q. Was there a motion in court made?

A. Probably.

Q. Was there a notation made in the clerk's book? A. There was not.

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

Q. I say, under ordinary circumstances?

A. There should have been, yes.

Q. In other words, if there had been an order dismissing this case it should appear in the clerk's books, isn't that right? A. It should.

Q. And you say it was dismissed by a judge named Lamberson, is that right?

A. That's correct.

Q. Where is he now?

A. Well, the records show that he was an out of county judge sitting in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County for one [7468] week.

Q. Is he dead? A. I don't know.

Q. What county did he come from?

A. I couldn't tell you that, either.

Q. Did you look at the records of his department? A. Yes.

Q. Did you look at the records on the date of the 13th of August, 1927? A. I did.

Q. Were there any other probation matters dismissed on that day? A. No.

Q. Is it the customary practice, ordinarily, to put a number of matters on at the same time?

A. Yes.

Q. How many, usually?

A. Well, at that——

Q. Well, let's take it at this time, because you weren't there. How many do you ordinarily put on?

A. Oh, if there are a number of cases expiring we might put on six or eight or ten in one day.

Q. I notice in this record that we have the 21st

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

of September, 1949, that it says in each of the following cases it is ordered that probation be terminated. Do you know how many cases probation was terminated on on that day, the 12th of September, 1949? [7469]

A. No, I didn't check the record for that.

Q. Did you attend to the matter yourself?

A. I wrote the report. I did not appear in court.

Q. Where is the report, just the document that shows here?

A. In the Superior Court file, yes.

Q. Just that form that was filled in?

A. That's right.

Q. And did you call to the attention of the Court anything concerning which you have testified to here about that the matter should have been dismissed before? A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you know that Mr. Rathborne had been voting right along, ran for public office?

A. No, I didn't know anything of Mr. Rathborne's movements at all.

Q. Had Mr. Barber or Mr. Kidder informed you that Mr. Rathborne had testified falsely under oath on two occasions, one in 1940 and one in 1941?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question.

A. No.

Mr. Hallinan: It goes to whether he would have taken these steps, Your Honor. The reasonableness of the story that the witness is telling.

Mr. Donohue: I object, if Your Honor pleases that the witness has testified that if Mr. Rathborne was entitled to an [7470] expungement of the record, he was entitled to it on that date in August of 1927 when the case was marked "Dismissed" for the reason as stated by the witness, that his conduct as a probationer entitled him to that.

Mr. Hallinan: We don't believe it was dismissed then. There is no order dismissing it. Anyone can type in a thing on a card. We don't believe that it was.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Mr. Donohue: There are many things you don't believe in that many do.

Mr. Hallinan: I have lost a lot of faith in this court, I will tell you that; a lot of people and institutions I thought people could rely on I have abandoned faith in.

The Court: The objection is sustained, Mr. Hallinan.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, why was Mervyn Rathborne's name, since there was a special case here, a special set of proceedings and a special desire on the part of these gentlemen that his name be expunged—why was it shoved in with other people whose names were being submitted to have their cases dismissed on the 12th of September, 1949? Was that to prevent inquiry by the Court?

A. No, just done in the regular course of business. Master calendar department 41 handles a great many cases, and they handle pretty nearly all our dismissals.

Q. Now, in a letter here signed by Rathborne dated January 26, [7471] 1925, on a printed form it says, "Your probation will expire on the 26th day of January, 1928, unless otherwise ordered by the Court." Remember that? A. Yes.

Q. And, "Then at the expiration of your probationary period, if you have complied with the above instructions, the probation officer will have your plea of guilty eliminated from the record." And then signed "Carl L. May," and then "I have read and fully understand the above instruction, Mervyn Rathborne."

You noted that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you find nothing in this record at all to indicate whether or not Rathborne had complied with the terms of his probation in January, 1928, or back in September, 1927, do you? A. Oh, yes.

Q. What do you find?

A. That record card there shows that he reported regularly and complied with the conditions of probation.

Q. This record card? A. That's correct.

Mr. Hallinan: (To the Clerk): Will you show it to him?

(Document handed to the witness by the Clerk.) [7472]

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Now, what does it say on that card that indicates that he complied with his probation?

A. It does not say in words, but it says in marks that I understand——

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

Q. What does it say in marks that you understand?

A. It sets forth here that he has notified the probation officer of his change of addresses, where he works, submitted report cards monthly, never missed a month of reporting.

Q. Up to when? A. Up to July of 1947.

Q. 1949? A. 1937—or 1927.

Q. It shows he reported—there are marks on the card that show he reported up to July, 1927?

A. That is correct.

Q. And those are just checks opposite the dates?

A. That is correct.

Q. There is nothing to show that he reported after July, 1927, and up to January, 1928, is there?

A. There is nothing.

Q. Who was the attorney who personally appeared in court on the motion for expunging the record? A. There wasn't any attorney.

Q. Nobody showed up for the probation office?

A. Yes, there was a probation officer in [7473] court.

Q. Did anybody show up from the immigration office? A. I don't believe so.

Q. Nobody representing Rathborne?

A. Not counsel.

Q. Was there anybody representing him other than counsel? A. The probation officer.

Q. That was yourself?

A. Well, one of my deputies.

Q. I notice in the typed copy of this letter that you wrote to Mr. Donohue on March 1 that it first read that "According to the record it appeared that on August 11, 1927, in Department 22 of the Superior Court, the Hon. Judge Lambertson dismissed the case," and then at the end of the letter it says, "The above action was taken because we felt that the defendant had sucessfully complied with the conditions of probation in all particulars, and further that this should have been done in 1927," and it has a "6" at the end. It originally read, "1926." The "6" at the end is all that has been changed. It has been changed in ink in your copy. Does that refresh your recollection that the girl did not originally put in "1927" but it was "1926"?

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

A. Probably——

Q. You didn't state in this letter to Mr. Donohue which he offered here in court that you were not in the probation office in 1927 at the time this was dismissed, did you? [7474]

A. No, I didn't state to Mr. Donohue.

Q. What were you doing in September 1927 or in August 1927?

A. I was in the sheriff's office, Los Angeles County.

Q. You had no connection with the probation department? A. No.

Q. When you started in the probation department, what office did you first take? What duties did you first take?

A. Deputy probation officer.

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

Q. Where? Were you in charge of any of these matters?

A. No, no, I was in the juvenile department.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I was in the juvenile department.

Q. How long did you stay in the juvenile department?

A. Oh, about nine months, I believe.

Q. And then where did you go?

A. The adult department.

Q. When did you first have any cognizance of this Rathborne matter?

A. When Mr. Kidder walked into my office.

Q. Is that the first time that you had ever heard of Rathborne? A. That is correct.

Q. The first time you had ever inquired about the matter at all? A. That is right.

Q. The first time you knew anything connected with it? [7475] A. That is right.

Q. You had nothing to go on except records?

A. The records of our office.

Q. You have not talked with anybody else who was connected with Rathborne or with his case?

A. A week or ten days ago I talked to some other immigration officers when these photostat copies were made.

Q. No, I mean who were familiar with his case in the probation office. A. No.

Q. You did not speak to anybody who knew Rathborne or knew anything except what was written on those cards, is that right?

(Testimony of Arthur W. Brayton.)

A. That is right. No one is in our office now——

Q. Now, you state this in the closing paragraph of your letter to Mr. Donohue:

> "The above action was taken because we felt that the defendant had successfully complied with the conditions of probation in all particulars, and further that this should have been done in 1927."

What was your basis for feeling that the defendant had successfully complied with the conditions of probation in all particulars?

A. The record, as shown in our records.

Q. The fact that he reported up to July 1927?

A. That is right, no violations of probation.

Q. Don't you think that the language in here would mislead a [7476] jury, that "We felt that the defendant had successfully complied with the conditions"? Why didn't you put in "Our records show that the defendant reported up to July 1927 and does not show any violations of probation," or something like that?

Mr. Donohue: I object to the question as argumentative.

Mr. Hallinan: It goes to his state of mind, his willingness to help the prosecution.

The Court: The observation on your part is not altogether pertinent at this time, Mr. Hallinan. I will overrule the objection, however.

The Witness: Would you read that question.

(Question read.)

A. Well, I don't think what I said would mislead a jury. I could have chosen your words, I guess, as well as mine.

Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): I notice in the Superior Court record there isn't any word—there isn't any word at all of any appearance in court or anything relating to any appearance in court or suggestion, motion or anything in the year 1927; that is right, isn't it? A. That is correct.

Q. No petition in the form that appears now in 1949, no minute order, no order signed by the court, no letter, no affidavit—nothing. That is correct, isn't it? A. That is correct.

Q. Now, the record of the Superior Court, as we say, is a [7477] public record, but your records are private records, aren't they?

A. That is right.

Mr. Hallinan: I think that is all.

The Court: The documents may be received in evidence.

Mr. Hallinan: We object to that, your Honor. In the first place, they are private records, they are not public records, and hence are not admissible under the rule relating to public records, and this gentleman is not familiar with the document as of the time it bears the notation. He did not come to the probation office at all until September, 1927, and then he was nine months with the juvenile court. This notation appears to have been made a month previous to his appearance even in the probation office. After nine months he goes to the adult department, but has no cognizance, knowledge or experience with Rathborne's case at all, and I submit that those records are not properly admissible.

The Court: The objection is overruled. They may be appropriately marked in evidence, and the letter read to the jury.

I desire to thank you very much for coming to this court at my instance, Mr. Brayton.

(The documents referred to were marked U. S. Exhibits 43 and 44 in evidence.)

Mr. Donohue: May the two files be returned to the probation [7478] officer? We shall ask permission from the Court to photostat the letter taken from the files.

Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. Would you mind, Mr. Brayton, another question?

Q. On this matter of the Superior Court record, you say that when Kidder came down to see you, you examined this record, is that right?

A. The probation department record.

Q. You examined the probation record, and in the petition, the probation officer's report recommending termination, et cetera, that was finally signed, you filled in as the expiration date of probation, the one that you presented to the Superior Court to get the order made, that the expiration date was 1/25/28. That would be January 25, 1928. That is three years after the order admitting the defendant to probation, isn't that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. Although at the time you say that you showed Kidder a card, it showed that the probation expired and the case had been dismissed on the 13th of August, 1927? A. That is correct.

Mr. Hallinan: All right.

The Court: Do you have any further questions?

Mr. Donohue: No, I have no further questions, if your Honor please.

The Court: The witness is excused. [7479]

Mr. Donohue: May I ask permission from the Court to photostat the letter taken from this file and introduced by Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: I want to put in also, if the Court please, a photostatic copy of the probation officer's report recommending termination, which was identified, the original of which was identified, in the file of the Superior Court, showing the date that I just asked him. The expiration date of probation as presented to the Superior Court on the 12th of September 1949 was January 25, 1928. That is a copy of the record that he identified.

The Court: May I see it? It may be marked in evidence.

(Copy of probation officer's report was marked Defendants' Exhibit N-4 in evidence.)

The Court: Have you marked the letter in evidence as well as the other documents?

The Clerk: The letter is marked Defendants' Exhibit N-4.

The Court: That completes the record, then, with respect to Mr. Brayton?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Are there any other items of evidence?

Mr. Donohue: If your Honor please, I am informed that the Government's Exhibit No. 11, which is the photostated, unsigned form 57 of the witness Michener, is marked only for identification. I at this time offer it in evidence. Also with [7480] respect to Government's No. 24, heretofore marked for identification, which is a photostat of the Selective Service record of J. R. Robertson, I move its admission in evidence. Finally, Government's No. 39 for identification, which is the airline schedule for June 1936, I also offer that in evidence.

Mr. Hallinan: The only one we have any objection to is the airline schedule, because we still make the point it is not the best evidence; that the exact time of arrival and departure of every plane in New York and San Francisco has to be sent to the various departments of the United States and they should know precisely and exactly at what time every plane took off from San Francisco and landed in New York, and what time every plane took off from New York and landed in San Francisco at that time. We object to that as not the best evidence.

The Court: The witness was examined with respect to the schedule.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I will allow it.

(U. S. Exhibit No. 11, Form 57 re Michener; U. S. Exhibit No. 24, Selective Service record of Robertson; and U. S. Exhibit No. 39, airline schedule, previously marked for identification, were received in evidence.)

The Court: They may be marked in evidence severally and individually.

Mr. Donohue: I have one further request of your Honor, and that is there are some exhibits which are now in evidence [7481] which we would like permission to photostat and substitute the photostatic copies of the originals.

The Court: Now or at the conclusion of the case?

Mr. Donohue: I would like to do it over the week-end, if it is possible, if your Honor please, and substitute the photostats on Monday.

Mr. Hallinan: We wanted to do that, but after the case had been concluded.

The Court: Whatever would be convienient for counsel.

Mr. Hallinan: I think they ought to remain as they are now until after the argument.

Mr. Donohue: No objection.

The Court: I think that would be the practical thing. Are there any other items, matters of evidence, to take up with the Court at this time? Either on the part of the prosecution or the defense?

Mr. Donohue: We know of none, your Honor.

The Court: The matter stands submitted?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: Mr. MacInnis?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen, we have reached the conclusion of the reception and taking of evidence in this case. There are matters to discuss with counsel concerning proposed [7482] instructions, procedural matters, and the like, which ordinarily are discussed in the absence of the jury. Next week in the main will be devoted to argument by the prosecution, by counsel representing the respective defendants. At the conclusion of the arguments the Court instructs you as to the law. I need not again admonish you, particularly in these closing stages of the case and as the event of your deliberations draws closer, that you should refrain from any intrusion on your thinking to the extent that you keep a clear, fair mind, to the end that you may appraise the facts in the light of the arguments, pro and con, and in the light of the instructions as given you by the Court. I say that to you particularly at this time, because it is important. I ask you again not to read newspaper accounts of the trial, not to listen to radio accounts of the trial. I need say no more at this time.

I have a criminal case this afternoon on hearing that has been nearing completion on a motion, and I think that after I complete my discussion with counsel this morning we will adjourn this case until Monday at ten o'clock, and accordingly, I again instruct you not to discuss the case with any person or persons and not to permit any person to converse with you on any subject connected therewith, and not to form or express an opinion until the matter is finally submitted to you. Next Monday morning at ten o'clock. We will take a ten-minute recess.

(Thereupon the jury was excused, and a brief recess was taken.) [7483]

The Court: First, I notice the reporter has prepared a letter addressed to counsel with respect to certain corrections which have been suggested, and these suggestions are incorporated or annexed to his letter of transmittal of March 10, and were made by the Court or suggested during the course of the trial as I read the several transcripts. I should like the corrections to be incorporated in the official records of this court, as the transcript may reflect. It may well that counsel for the Government as well as the defense have suggestions to make as to the corrections. If so, I respectfully suggest to them that they be incorporated or noted prior to the argument, if they be very material, to the end that there be no interruptions during the course of the argument as to transcript matters.

Mr. Hallinan: I noticed one or two of the matters you suggested, we had noted already.

The Court: And Mr. Donohue, if you have any?

Mr. Donohue: I know of none, but if we do have them, we will do them before that time, if Your Honor pleases.

The Court: All right. Now, on the matter of the instructions, under Rule 30, it is provided:

> "At the close of the evidence or at such earlier time during the trial as the court reasonably directs, any party may file written requests that the court instruct the jury on the law as set forth in the requests. At the same > time copies of such requests shall be furnished to adverse parties. [7484] The court shall inform counsel of its proposed action upon the requests prior to their arguments to the jury; but the court shall instruct the jury after the arguments are completed."

For the purpose of the rule, I now will announce to counsel representing the Government as well as the respective defendants that the instructions that I intend to give, as proposed by them. Mindful, of course, that the Court will instruct generally as to the law with respect to matters that the Court may feel require instructions. Some of the instructions submitted by counsel for the Government as well as by the defendants cover a field that ordinarily would be embraced in instructions given by this Court, and to that extent I have indicated that they are covered by the Court and covered elsewhere.

In addition, instructions submitted by the Government, as well as by the defense, do not, in the opinion of the Court, represent applicable principles of law or principles that may be applicable to the fact in the case at bar, and for that reason I have refused to so instruct. However, as to the proposed instructions on behalf of the defendant that I intend to give, I shall read them in sequence.

Instruction No. 4, defense, No. 5—without repeating "No."—8, 9, 10, 12, 14, 24, 28, 31, 34, 35, 41, 42, 49, I shall give—however, deleting at line 10 of the proposed instruction, after the name

"Harry Bridges," deleting down to and [7485] including the words "not guilty." The balance of the instruction I shall give as indicated, No. 94 as modified. Then No. 55, 57, 60, 65, 68, 69, 70, 75, 77.

Now as to the supplemental requested instructions proposed or presented to the Court more recently, within the last several days, and numbered 66-A, I shall give that. 66-B is repetitious. It repeats the subject matter.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. Did you say you were going to give 66-A?

The Court: 66-A, yes, Mr. MacInnis. 66-A. Going to 66-A, I will give that instruction. 66-B is repetitious and therefore refused for that reason; covered by A, 66-A. 66-C I shall give. And 66-D. 66-E is repetitious again; for that reason refused. And 74-A is covered by the Court's instructions as to presumption of innocence and the like adequately and, I believe, fully; and will be covered fully in that. The other instructions proposed by the defense have been refused, either upon the ground that they state principles not applicable or that they represent matters the subject matter of which would be covered fully by the Court in the general instructions.

Government's instructions by number——

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me.

The Court: Yes?

Mr. MacInnis: Your Honor, the Government has proposed two sets of instructions, each numbered beginning with 1. So we [7486] would have no way of knowing which ones the court refers to.

The Court: Well, I might indicate, then, as we proceed, the subject matter of the instruction.

Mr. MacInnis: Well,——

The Court: Now, instruction No. 1 has to do with reasonable doubt.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, that is the first submitted.

The Court: Yes. Instruction No. 1 has to do with reasonable doubt. I cover that fully in my general instructions; however, I shall give it in the form as proposed by the Government. It is a form instruction.

No. 2 is as to intent; that, I say again, will be covered by the Court, but I shall give it in the form suggested by the Government.

Instruction No. 3, province of Court and jury, credibility—that will be covered by the Court. I will give it in substance, in effect as proposed. Instruction No. 4 as to conspiracy,—Am I going too rapidly?

Mr. Donohue: No, Your Honor.

The Court: Instruction No. 4 as to conspiracy, I shall give that in the form as submitted. No. 5, on the subject of conspiracy, the Court will give. And the next is 8, instruction No. 8. I intend to give that. No. 10 on credibility, much of that will be covered by the Court. However, I see no objection to giving it. Instruction No. 11 with respect to materiality, [7487] I intend to give. No. 12, likewise.

Do you follow these now? Do you follow me all right, gentlemen?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

The Court: No. 13, as to motive, I intend to give. 14, in general, the Court will discuss these matters, and if not in the form submitted by the Government, in substantially the same form—perhaps paraphrased. No. 15, with respect to a delineation of the issue, and the matter of suggestions as to what may not be material or what may be regarded as immaterial, the Court will give substantially its general instructions. No. 16 on membership in the Communist Party, the Court will give.

The balance of the instructions presented by the Government I refuse for the reason that they represent either inapplicable principles or matters the subject of which would be covered by the Court under ordinary circumstances.

Mr. Hallinan: Now, Your Honor, I understand we are obligated by the rule to make any objection at this time that we may have to the Court's orders, is that correct? [7488]

The Court: No. I want to read, Mr. Hallinan, continuing:

> "The Court shall inform counsel of his proposed action upon request and the Court shall instruct after the arguments are completed."

The purpose of my announcing to you now is to the extent that you may be guided accordingly in your arguments. Then hereafter it is your duty as follows:

> "No party may assign as error any portion of the charge or omission therefrom unless he > objects thereto before the jury retires to consider its verdict, stating distinctly the matter to which he objects and the ground of his objection. Opportunity shall be given to make the objection out of the hearing of the jury."

My practice has been, and I think the current practice in these courts of recent date is that after the arguments are over and after the instructions are concluded, then to have the jury retire. Then counsel point out the subject matter of the objection for the record to preserve the matter.

Mr. Hallinan: I also understand, your Honor, it is not necessary for us to submit instructions touching discussions of fact, common, ordinary instructions of fact; that the Court does not instruct on fact is that correct? I mean, except as is embraced in the instructions as you have already indicated.

The Court: The Court may discuss the facts generally in these courts, permitting the jury to resolve the matters, and [7489] without intrusion on the part of the Court with respect to factual matters, to the end that the Court may discuss matters of fact as narrowing the issues, and so forth. To that extent it is peculiarly and particularly within the province of the Court to do that. I just can't follow you. What have you in mind?

Mr. Hallinan: I mean, your Honor does not comment on the effect or force of facts or the weight of evidence, or anything of that kind, or what impression a fact makes upon you. In other words, what we know from the English procedure of instructing on facts or commenting on facts, to that extent.

The Court: Ordinarily not.

Mr. Hallinan: That is what I understand.

The Court: Ordinarily not.

Mr. Hallinan: And I had not expected it would be, but that is why we did not submit any instructions on such matters. I understand that is the procedure of the court.

The Court: If the Court does instruct on factual matters or does delineate how the Court may feel about a particular matter or matters, it is incumbent upon the Court to instruct the jury that in the final analysis the matter of credibility on factual matter rests in their determination. The rule is distinct in these courts, as you apprehend from the State courts, for in the Federal system a Federal judge may comment on the evidence. [7490]

Mr. Hallinan: But then when the judge does that, then it is ordinarily the procedure to furnish instructions to the jury as to what is their obligation with regard to such comments, and as we assumed there wouldn't be any comment in that way, we did not propose any such instructions.

The Court: If the Court does make any comment in that regard, the Court will give the admonition to the jury in consonance and consistent with the Supreme Court decisions.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes, I understand.

The Court: Are there any other matters for the Government?

Mr. Donohue: No, your Honor.

The Court: I think, then, we might well take advantage of the afternoon, so far as counsel is concerned, in reviewing whatever matters they have at hand for the arguments. I have already indicated my view on the arguments.

We will adjourn until Monday at ten o'clock, at which time the Government will open its argument. Thereafter I take it Mr. MacInnis or Mr. Hallinan will present their argument. The order in which they desire to present it is a matter within their own discretion. I do not assume to indicate to them how they intend to proceed. And thereafter the Government will close. We will adjourn until Monday at ten o'clock.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until Monday, March 13, 1950, at 10:00 a.m., for argument.) [7491]

Monday, March 13, 1950, 10:00 P.M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

Mr. MacInnis: May it please the Court, unfortunately we will have to ask for a little time in the case. Mr. Hallinan's father died this morning. It was a sudden death. I think he was notified at about seven o'clock. I think the funeral will be Wednesday morning. If it would not be too great an intrusion upon the time of the Court and jury, I am afraid we will have to ask that the case be recessed until Thursday morning.

The Court: The Court certainly would have no objection to that request, coming as it does, Mr. MacInnis, under these regrettable circumstances. I am satisfied the prosecution would have no objection.

Mr. Donohue: None whatsoever, your Honor.

The Court: Accordingly, you may advise Mr. Hallinan that the case will adjourn until Thursday. Is that correct?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Thursday at ten o'clock, under the circumstances.

There is also one other matter I am advised of by Mr. Mitchell this morning, and that is Mrs. Maria Vinton, alternate juror No. 4 is ill and under a doctor's care, according to Mr. Mitchell, who received a report from the doctor. She is not [7492] able to attend. I think it would be advisable to excuse the lady from further attendance by stipulation.

Mr. MacInnis: Whatever the Court suggests.

Mr. Donohue: No objection, your Honor.

The Court: All right. Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, and counsel, in the light of the representation made by Mr. MacInnis, Mr. Hallinan's colleague and associate, advising of the death of Mr. Hallinan's father, this court will stand regularly adjourned until Thursday next, the 16th of March, at ten o'clock. Is that understood by all? Next Thursday, March 16, at ten o'clock, and the record may further show that juror No. 4, that is, alternate juror No. 4, is excused by stipulation. The same admonition, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, of course, applies at this interval as it will during the balance of this case, not to discuss the matter under any circumstance or condition and not to form or express an opinion until the matter is submitted to you. We will then adjourn until next Thursday at ten o'clock.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until Thursday, March 16, 1950, at 10:00 a.m.) [7493]

Thursday, March 16, 1950, 10:00 A.M.

The Court: Is it stipulated, gentlemen, that the jurors are present together with the alternates save and except alternate juror No. 4, who was heretofore excused on account of illness?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes.

The Court: You may proceed with the opening argument of the Government.

OPENING ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Donohue: If it please your Honor, Ladies and Gentlemen of the Jury: After some four months the case of the United States against Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson has reached its concluding stage. All of the evidence has been heard. It remains only for counsel to argue their cause, for the Court to instruct the jury as to the law, and for you to return a verdict which shall speak the truth. It is my present responsibility to outline for you the evidence produced by the Government in support of the allegations contained in the indictment. Mr. MacInnis and Mr. Hallinan will follow with their respective statements on behalf of the several defendants. I shall then close for the Government, and I might in passing observe that the reason for the Government's being given the [7494] right to open and close the final argument is found in the fact that the Government of the United States is required to prove the allegations of the indictment against these defendants beyond a reasonable doubt.

Before outlining the Government's evidence, however, I want to set the record straight as to my own participation in these proceedings, since that fact seemed to give counsel for these defendants some concern, as reflected in their repeated reference to me as "Mr. Special Prosecutor." In San Francisco, as in many other places, the office of the United States Attorney is understaffed and overworked. It has long been the practice of the Department of Justice, in recognition of this fact, where specific cases are likely to require long periods for trial, to assign from the Department of Justice special counsel to conduct such causes, as recently instanced here in San Francisco in the assignment of Mr. Tom DeWolfe from the Department of Justice to prosecute the case of the United States v. Tokyo Rose. In making such assignments the Attorney General of the United States may appoint from the regularly appointed staff of the Department of Justice or he may appoint as his special assistant for that purpose some lawyer from private practice, which latter alternative to my personal knowledge has been followed in innumerable instances during my 25 years of experience in the practice of the law in Washington, D. C. I did not ask for this assignment. I do not know why the then [7495] Attorney General, the Hon. Tom Clark, asked me to take it. I only know that I did accept it in the full knowledge that in the light of the experience of others who had tried cases in which membership in the Communist Party became a pertinent matter of evidence I might well expect to be baited, pilloried, belittled, criticized, condemned, and abused by counsel for the defendants. I do not regret my decision. And, parenthetically, I might add that the worldwide reputation of San Francisco and its people for friendliness and hospitality has not suffered in the least by reason of the treatment accorded to me and my associates by counsel for these defendants.

As a matter of fact, and not unlike me, they too are special counsel for the defendants for reasons quite similar to the reasons for my own appointment. The record and the testimony here will show that from the very inception of the case the law firm of Gladstein, Resner, Andersen & Sawyer and its associate Mr. Norman Leonard were counsel for these defendants and have remained such in at least an advisory capacity. The record will further show that that firm, and in particular its senior member, Mr. Richard Gladstein, has represented Mr. Bridges and his union for a great many years. [7496]

It is also a matter of record in this proceeding that the law firm of Gladstein, Resner, Andersen & Sawyer sought postponement of this trial until Mr. Gladstein had completed his then assignment as co-counsel for the eleven top Communist leaders then on trial before His Honor Mr. Justice Medina in New York.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. I assign the making of that remark as misconduct, wilful misconduct, calculated to prejudice the jury against the defendants in this case. There is not a word in the record before this Court that that was the reason for the employment of Mr. Hallinan and myself. It is not the truth, it is an untruth. If there is any record of any continuances in the case, that record and the reasons ascribed are not records had during this trial, and we assign the making of the statement as misconduct.

Mr. Donohue: Your Honor is familiar with the record. These matters were tried before Your Honor.

Mr. MacInnis: We ask that the jury be instructed to disregard the implication contained in the statement of the special prosecutor.

The Court: The objection is overruled, the assignment is denied.

Mr. Donohue: And yet, despite the fact that the New York trial was concluded timely for Mr. Gladstein's appearance here, the record shows, and for reasons best known to the defendants, that Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis filed an appearance for these [7497] defendants some two weeks before the opening of this trial.

Mr. MacInnis: We assign the making of that remark as misconduct, as a deliberate lie invented by the special prosecutor for a deliberate purpose.

and we ask that the jury be instructed to disregard the statement. It is untrue and it doesn't play any proper part in this argument.

The Court: The assignment is denied, the objection is overruled.

Mr. Donohue: I think we may well conclude that Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis are also special counsel for the defense. I think, too, that at the outset I should discuss the great length to which counsel for these defendants went to show that each witness called by the prosecution was carefully, thoroughly and repeatedly interviewed by Agents of the Government of the United States—and subsequently by me or by one of my associates.

You, who may be relatively new to the drama of the courtroom, may perhaps overlook the fact that it was my duty to the people of the United States, whom I represent, to know every detail of the evidence to which a witness would testify before I might call him as a witness; to aid me in this not inconsiderable task, I have had the loyal and capable services of a number of agents of the Bureau of Immigration. Their names are familiar to all of you, as they too have been called upon to share with me the bitter recriminations heaped upon us by the defendants and their counsel. I am proud of the services rendered by Messrs. [7498] Boyd, Barber, Kaiser, Kessler and a host of others. And my mind is eased to know that men such as they are constantly alert in the interest of the internal security of our country.

You may be sure that the witnesses who were called by the defendants were equally and as thoroughly investigated and interrogated by defense counsel and their agents.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. We assign the making of that remark as misconduct. There is no evidence in the case. When a witness is upon the stand, either counsel may cross-examine the witness upon his manner of production. No such questions revealed any such preparation on the part of the defense. We assign the making of the statement as misconduct, outside the record in the case.

The Court: The objection is overruled.

Mr. Donohue: I refer, if Mr. MacInnis would like an instance, to the more recent testimony of Miss Jean Murray, who testified that on the night before the appearance of the first of those young ladies as a witness, the first of the young ladies, Mrs. Teixeira, and her husband and Miss Murray, were in the office of Mr. MacInnins until half-past eleven the night before.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, then, the special prosecutor misinterprets the objection. That is not the objection. Of course I talked to every witness. The objection is that we didn't follow these people for a year, as the evidence shows that the agents [7499] of the prosecution did. That is the point that is not revealed by the record. There is not a syllable of evidence about procurement, cajoling, asking people to do things, paying them money, matters of that kind.

The Court: The objection is overruled, Mr. MacInnis.

Mr. Donohue: If I may go back to a point just prior to the more recent interruption; you may be sure that witnesses called by the defendants were equally investigated and interrogated by defense counsel and their agents, as was their duty to do so to their own clients.

And never forget that they were not without aid in this matter, for in addition to the services of Mr. Hallinan's investigator, Mr. Lipsit, the defense was aided by the considerable resources of the ILWU and by the nationwide officers of the Communist Party.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. We cite that remark as a deliberate lie and as prejudicial and wilful misconduct.

The Court: The objection is overruled.

Mr. MacInnis: Now, Judge, there must be some limit to what can be said. I realize that an attorney may by analogy and by argument speak, of course, of things outside the record in his argument, but he can not state to the jury as a fact, first of all, that which is not true; secondly, that which is not at all reflected in the record. There is no evidence about this adversion to the services of the nationwide group of the Communist [7500] Party. It is not true and there is no such evidence in the case.

The Court: Mr. MacInnis, I appreciate the reasons for your objection. At the same time, of course, you will have an opportunity to respond. I do recall, at least in my humble recollection, certain references to the transcript which may or may not be alluded to by counsel. Do you have the transcript there, counsel?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. MacInnis: I have in mind exactly the aid that was conceded in this case. We borrowed the issues of the Western Worker from the Communist Party. That is the sum total of anything that was received in this case from sources of that kind, and that is the only thing in the entire record. Now, if if that is to be the springboard for an accusation that the Communist Party of the United States has been aiding us why, anything can be said.

The Court: Counsel, may I ask you to reserve your argument, in the main, to——

Mr. MacInnis: In the main, yes.

The Court: ——an appropriate time?

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Donohue: I do not make this latter assertion with respect to the Communist Party solely on the statement of the [7501] defendant Bridges, that he sought aid from William Schneidermann, organizer of District 13 of the Communist Party, but from a more convincing bit of evidence. Let me call it to your attention, and I read from Volume 30, page 3421 of the record of this proceeding, the following:—— [7501-A]

This is a question by Mr. MacInnis of the witness Lawrence Ross:

> "When you joined the Communist Party in 1927, in New York didn't you state that your father worked in a clothing factory?

A. I don't recall that, no, sir.

Q. Do you recall whether he did or did not?

A. He didn't.

Q. Was your father a member of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union?

A. No, sir."

The witness Lawrence Ross, who had heretofore testified on his direct examination that he joined the Communist Party in California when he arrived here at some early stage in his life in the early 1930's, never testified that at any time he had joined the Communist Party in New York in 1927. Where did Mr. MacInnis get the information that Lawrence Ross filed an application for membership in the Communist Party in New York City in 1927 and that in filing that application for membership in the Communist Party in New York in 1927 he had said his father worked and was a member of the International Ladies Garment Workers Association or Union?

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. I object to that statement as a deliberate misstatement of the evidence. It is a statement out of context. If the special prosecutor reads a page farther [7502] he will find that the source of those questions was found in testimony by Lawrence Ross before a committee of our State Legislature, which was read to him, as well as articles in the Hearst papers at the time of his divorce. All of that is in the record, your Honor, not as counsel says.

The Court: The objection is overruled.

Mr. Donohue: And is it therefore not apparent that the defense, with the Communist Party at its elbow, was able to obtain more accurate information as to the activities of former members of its party than was even the Government of the United States through the witnesses it called to testify?

Before reviewing the evidence one more observation. Defense counsel has repeatedly referred to the witnesses called by the United States as "our," meaning mine, or the Government's, "pals." Not so. They were Bridges' pals, Bridges' associates. They were Bridges' friends. They were Bridges' brothers. They were Bridges' comrades in the Communist Party. I am sure that from the very outset you have realized that the only way whereby the Government could prove that these defendants were members of the Communist Party was by calling as witnesses persons who had been members of the Communist Party and who had known the defendants as such. If murder were committed in the San Quentin penitentiary, the killer was an inmate, and the murder was observed by four blackened felons and the Government sought to prove the murder by the testimony of the four felons [7503] who saw it, you can imagine the field day a man like Hallinan would have with those witnesses because of their felonious background. But we could hardly call on the pastors of four of the churches to testify as to a murder which was committed in the San Quentin penitentiary. And yet those convicted felons, being the eyewitnesses, the personal observers of the killing, would be competent, would be qualified, would be alone the witnesses whom the Government might call to establish the murder. We could not have established the guilt of these defendants by the testimony of persons who had never joined the Communist Party nor by those who still hold their membership therein, for we know now from the testimony in this proceeding, if we never knew it before, that these latter persons, present members of the Communist Party, would not testify, and were they to be called they would testify falsely.

Who was closer to Bridges in the hectic days of 1934 than the business agent of his union, John Schomaker? And who in those days was more likely to know if Bridges was a member of the Communist Party than the man who witnessed his signature to his application for membership and who later, as union section organizer on the waterfront for the Communist Party, gave his renewal books to Harry Bridges? John Schomaker. Bridges made John Schomaker his friend and his confidant. The Government only made him a witness. And who in the latter days of Bridges' experience as a member of the Communist Party would [7504] be better informed on that subject than his friend, intimate, comrade, his fellow member of the Communist Party, on the national Executive Committee of the CIO, his Communist Party tool as secretary-treasurer of the San Francisco CIO Council, and later as secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council? Mervyn Rathborne. And Bridges made and then broke Rathborne when he left the Communist Party, just as the Communist Party, as the record shows, made Lewis Michener to the point where he was Western States representative for a great automotive union, and watched his fall when he left the Communist Party until he is back working with his hands. The Government only made of Mervyn Rathborne a witness. Bridges gave Rathborne gifts in 1947, but now in 1950, after three Bridges-inspired attempts to prevent his testifying failed, and even before he actually appeared as a witness, the same Bridges sought to destroy him: burglar, drunkard, embezzler, siphoner of union funds, and by that God-denying, America-hating Jean Murray, who would make of Rathborne a faithless husband with other women, though carefully protecting and protesting her own stated honor, the witness whom Bridges so carefully coached, the witness to whose apartment Bridges went in the latter part of November, 1949, and the latter part of November, 1949, can mean only one thing to you and to me. It means big John Schomaker, sitting on the witness stand, striking blows against Harry Bridges from which he has never and will never recover. It was then that Harry [7505] Bridges went to this woman's apartment and had a conversation with her, and scarcely two weeks later, on a cold, rainy night she and her companion went down to the little community in which Mervyn Rathborne lives. Mervyn Rathborne told you what happened and so did they. But remember, they could not get back to San Francisco fast enough before they went out to Harry Bridges' house—again to report on their filthy mission.

Jean Murray—the gall of that woman to sit on the witness stand in a United States court and try to draw a parallel by her cheap story that she went to a drugstore to change a dollar to get enough dimes to pay Rathborne his thirty pieces of silver for betraying the master! Can you imagine the gall of that woman to commit the heresy of comparing Bridges to Christ? But don't be surprised. Mr. Hallinan called him in his opening statement, "our hero." God help America if Bridges is the standard of heroism in the country he would destroy! Now, let us not be mistaken about Jean Murray. Don't take my word for the fact that she is a godless woman. Let us read what she said. The clerk, to Jean Murray—the witness whom Mr. MacInnis carefully and repeatedly had to tell you about her convent school education, and two years later she was in the Communist Party, which would destroy God and the rest of it. What happened when she was called as a witness?

> "The Clerk: Do you swear that the testimony that you will give to this Court and jury will be the truth, the whole [7506] truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?
> "The Witness: I swear it will be the truth. I can't believe in Heaven or Hell because I believe in justice on this earth."

That is the woman to whose apartment Mr. Bridges went, and that is the woman who went to Mr. Bridges' home to discuss the results of her mission. Fortunately, it is neither for Mr. Hallinan nor for me, nor is it within the province of his Honor, to determine as between this woman, who denies God, this woman, who stated her hatred for her own country, this woman, who had the consummate nerve to compare Harry Bridges to the Master; it is for you to decide whether you will believe her and her compatriot or whether you will believe Mervyn Rathborne.

No better proof of the value of Rathborne's testimony, no greater tribute to the certainty of his knowledge of the membership of all three of these defendants in the Communist Party can be asked than the desperate attempts of the three Communists sitting behind him, Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson, either to prevent Rathborne from testifying or to destroy him as he did. What they can never understand is that the concern of the Attorney General of the United States over the danger inherent in Communist domination of key labor unions in the event of a shooting war is the concern of all of us and not, as Mr. Hallinan terms it —and I read from page 6788 of the record—, "or did you give her this general patriotic bunk [7507] that you have been talking about?" while his clients sit there and endorse his remarks by their complacence and their acquiescence.

In those critical days, both before and after the then Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Biddle, had ordered the deportation of Harry Bridges, who was closest to Bridges? The executive secretary of his defense committee, Bridges' choice, a respected member of the San Francisco press. So that there may be no doubt as to who this choice of Mr. Bridges was, let me read from what has been heretofore introduced in evidence as the special qualifications of this man when, after the Bridges Defense Committee had been abandoned sometime in the summer of 1945, he sought occupation with the United States Government:

> "Special qualifications: President, San Francisco CIO Council; member Public Welfare Commission by appointment of the Hon. Roger D. Lapham; Selective Service System of California; member of Appeal Board No. 8; San Francisco War Chest, member of the Board of Directors; San Francisco Community Chest, member of the Board of Directors; San Francisco War Council, member of the Board of Directors; San Francisco Chapter of the American Red Cross, member of the Board of Directors; Council for Civic Unity, member of the Board of Directors; San Francisco Bay Area Council, member of the Board of Directors San Francisco Planning and Housing Association, member of the Board of Directors. [7508]

For the answer to the question, "Exact title of your last position?," "Executive secretary, Harry Bridges Defense Committee, 604 Montgomery Street." "Duties and responsibilities?," "Sole responsibility for raising funds, directing nationwide educational and publicity activities, hiring attorneys for the legal defense of Harry R. Bridges, seeking citizenship."

George Wilson, from 1941 until 1945, that close to Harry Bridges. And as I called to your attention on the day when this document was introduced into evidence, recommended for appointment to the service of the United States by Franck Havenner, member of Congress, by Roger Lapham, mayor, by Frank Clarvoe, editor of the San Francisco News, by Harry Bridges and by William M. Malone, lawyer.

Twice Bridges sought to prevent him from testifying; once, by a personal visit to Los Angeles, which Mr. Bridges was careful to say,—and you need not accept it as true—that he went there for some other purpose with Mr. Resner, one of his former counsel, and just casually, while he was there, talked to George Wilson. And then some time during the Christmas recess he happened to be down in Los Angeles and he went, as he always did, at great length, to avoid a direct answer and told you about how he talked to George Wilson's wife and how he talked to his youngster. You know why Bridges went to Los Angeles. You know why he called George Wilson on the telephone. Because Bridges knew that no man, other than Bridges himself, knew as much about [7509] Bridges' activities in the Communist Party, as George Wilson. And you saw George Wilson when he testified on his first appearance. It wasn't pleasant, obviously, for George Wilson, who so short a time ago, was the close friend and confident of Harry Bridges, to come here, publicly, and under oath, to testify against Harry Bridges. It wasn't easy for George

Wilson—and all you had to do was to look at him to know it—who had been an honored and respected man in this community over a great many years, to publicly and under oath state that during the time he was serving his community in the various instances as cited, that he was a member of an organization which was seeking to destroy it, that he was a member of the Communist Party. You observed the consternation in the courtroom when Mr. Wilson testified.

And then we had some beautiful explanations.

Robertson:

> "George Wilson was lazy. I am so industrious in the labor movement, I can't forgive George Wilson for being lazy."

Schmidt:

> "Wilson looked like one of these dual personalities with which we are more recently familiar, which in one aspect of his personality was testifying for the United States, but in that other split in his mind, was saying, 'Fellows, I got to do it. You know they have got the pressure on me, and that is why I am here.' "

Bridges didn't know what to do. The best Bridges could say [7510] was:

> "George Wilson looked sick, and I took the responsibility for telling counsel, 'Don't cross-examine George Wilson.' I would much rather go to the penitentiary." Bunk!

Bridges hasn't any more human sympathy or emotion in his body, except for Harry Bridges, than a piece of stone.

Bridges, who has murdered and assassinated by inference and innuendo, every decent person whose name has been mentioned in this courtroom, including the man whom I have never had the pleasure of meeting, a distinguished member of the court of the State of California, Judge Sloss. And what did Mr. Bridges say about him? He was in some trouble; there was something wrong about him. There was something wrong about everybody who has the temerity (from his point of view), the courage (from mine), to testify against Harry Bridges.

Be that as it may, we gave them a second chance at George Wilson, and they wouldn't take it. Because George Wilson came back wide awake, alert, at ease, to refute the calumny as stated by Bridges, that he was a man testifying with a gun at his head for something that we had on him. And he came back to deny it, and he came back to state, contrary to what Bridges and Schmidt and Robertson had said, that every word he said was true. Now, why didn't they cross-examine George Wilson the second time? Oh, they may give us some fancy explanations, but you ladies and gentlemen come into the jurybox with all of your accumulated experience [7511] as men and women in this community, and you have the right to draw from the failure of counsel to cross-examine George Wilson any inference which you think reasonable and proper.

Let me suggest, too—were they afraid that every time they asked him a question, he would give more than just the information I sought from him? And did they seek to cut it off? And give this some consideration: Is Mr. Bridges more afraid of the Communist Party than he is of the results or the effect of your verdict? Was Mr. Bridges afraid to permit his counsel to say to George Wilson on cross-examination, "Rathborne has testified that he was a member of the San Francisco CIO Council and so were you. Rathborne has testified that he belonged to a Communist Party fraction of the San Francisco CIO Council, and so did you. Who were the other members?" No, Mr. Bridges doesn't dare to expose the name of any person as a member of the Communist Party. Think of that one; because every Communist who has been exposed in this courtroom, we exposed them.

Now, George Wilson was Bridges' comrade in the Communist Party; he was only our witness. And so were the others, Bridges' comrades. Bridges' friends. At least, until they left the Communist Party. Schrimpf, Krolek, Hancock, Johnson, Crouch, Ross, Michener—only our witnesses. And don't misunderstand. I am not repudiating these witnesses. Far from it. I am only calling your attention to the fact that they only became valuable to the Government of the United States because of their former [7512] comradeship with Bridges and his co-defendants. To these witnesses, to each and every one of them, is owed a debt of gratitude, as each appeared—with the one noted exception I have just called to your attention, George Wilson—and that witness became in turn a defendant, with loaded questions and unverified documents. They were subjected to sarcasm, ridicule and calumny. The purpose of so doing was not merely to destroy them and their testimony for this case, it was also very cleverly purposed to discourage any others who might be inclined to come forward and give testimony, not only in the Bridges case, but on any other like case in which the Government of the United States might have a lawful interest.

As former members of the Communist Party, they suffered from no illusions. Each of them knew from his knowledge of the Communist Party that they would be treated exactly as, in fact, they were. But they did testify. And while Mr. Hallinan will talk much about the compensation the government paid the witness Rathborne for his services since his appearance before the grand jury last May, he will remain deadly silent on the resignation of the witness Hancock, as he testified before you, before he left his job on the newspaper in Erie, Pennsylvania, to come here to testify. And Mr. Hallinan will remain even more silent as to what has happened to some of the other witneses since they testified here. Soon it will be for you to determine the credibility to be given to all the witnesses who have appeared before [7513] you—those called by the Government and those called by the defendants, including the defendants themselves. No one can question your judgment in that matter, for that is the function which belongs to you and only to you.

Might we take the recess, Your Honor.

The Court: We will take the morning recess, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, and I again admonish you, particularly during the argument, not to discuss the case under any circumstances or conditions, nor to form an opinion thereon.

(Recess.)

Mr. Donohue: May I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Donohue: At one point I had thought that I might laboriously pore through the tomes of testimony to recall to your mind perhaps more vividly the testimony upon which the Government asks for a verdict of Guilty as to each and all of these defendants. On second thought, however, I am sure that that would serve no useful purpose, and therefore without reference to the testimony I shall attempt briefly to review what we sought to prove and what in fact we did prove in support of the allegations of this indictment, and I caution you at the outset, as his Honor has on prior occasions and doubtless will again, that it is not my recollection of the testimony nor is it the recollection of counsel for the defendants; it is your recollection of the testimony which should determine, and I know will determine, the verdict which you will render.

Before reviewing what we have established I would like in a matter of a very few minutes to call your attention to the indictment, because his Honor subsequently at some length will instruct you as to what the issue is as framed by this indictment and, with equal care, as to what the issues are not. Unfortunately, since we began these proceedings we have traveled afar. We have viewed some alleged violent experiences in the city of New Orleans; we were taken to the peat bog marshes of New Jersey where some gangster victim was dug up and paraded for [7515] your inspection. We pulled some cadaver out of the Bay of San Francisco and paraded that for your inspection. We have tried the 1934 strike; we have tried the 1936 strike; we have tried the 1948 strike; we have tried the Hawaiian strike, and we have tried the more recent warehouse strike in the City of San Francisco. Let me, however, call your attention to the simple allegation contained in the indictment in order that we may again be refreshed in our recollection as to what the issue is so that you may see, in the event there be any doubt or misconception in the minds of any one of you, how simple your problem really is, despite the fact that we have been some four months in reaching this stage of the proceedings. For simplification let me first call your attention to the second count of the indictment, which charges an offense under the statute against the defendant Bridges alone and in this simple language:

> "On the 17th day of September, 1945, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, in the Superior Court of the State > of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Hon. Thomas M. Foley, Superior Judge, presiding, there came on for hearing a naturalization proceeding, No. 28152, in the records of said Superior Court on the petition of the defendant Harry Renton Bridges for naturalization under the Nationality Act of October 14, 1940;"

You have no problem with that allegation. The proof is [7516] complete. The record of the proceedings is before you and the defendants make no contention that that allegation is not true.

We proceed:

> "* * * that the defendant Harry Renton Bridges then and there was called and produced as a witness in said proceeding then on for hearing and took an oath before said Court that the said defendant would testify truly in said proceeding, and said Court then and there had competent authority to administer the said oath and did administer it."

There is no contention that that is not true. Let us proceed.

> "* * * that the defendant Harry Renton Bridges did then and there wilfully and knowingly make a false statement under oath in certain matters which were material to the issues of said proceeding then and there being heard, giving the following answers to questions asked, to wit:

> "'Do you now or have you ever belonged to the Communist Party in the United States?
> "A. 'I have not; I do not.'"

There is no question here but that the defendant Harry Bridges did at that hearing answer the question as stated, as indicated by the language of the indictment. The only question—the only question for you to determine in order to arrive at your verdict as to the defendant Harry Renton Bridges on the second count of the indictment is, on the 17th of September, 1945, [7517] when Harry Bridges under oath said he was not then nor had he ever been a member of the Communist Party, did he tell the truth? And if you find from the evidence which we have introduced for your consideration, and if you so find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that at any time prior to the 17th of September, 1945, that Harry Renton Bridges had in fact been a member of the Communist Party of the United States, your verdict should be Guilty.

The indictment further states that:

> "Said answers so stated and testified to by the defendant Harry Renton Bridges were and each of them was, as said defendant then and there knew, wilfully false and contrary to his said oath, and said defendant did not then and there believe said answers or any of them to be true, and the said answers were and each of them was then and there believed and known to him to be false."

That the defendants have denied, and the truth or falsity of that statement is the only issue before you to determine in reaching your conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of Harry Renton Bridges on the second count of the indictment. The indictment in the second count continues:

> "That in truth and in fact the said defendant at the time of so testifying belonged to and was a member of the Communist Party in the United States and had belong to and had been a member of said Communist Party in [7518] the United States from 1933 up to and including the said 17th day of September, 1945."

That, of course, the defendant denies. And in conclusion Count Two states:

> "That said statement and testimony of said defendant and said answers given by him as aforesaid were upon a material matter and were material in and to the issues of said proceeding."

And, as his Honor will tell you, that poses a question of law which the Court shall decide and is not for your consideration. So you have a very simple issue, when the issue is handed to you with respect to the defendant Bridges on the second count of the indictment: Had he at any time before the 17th day of September, 1945, been a member of the Communist Party? If he had, and the proof satisfies your minds beyond a reasonable doubt, it is your duty to convict him. If he has not, and the evidence has not established that fact to your satisfaction and beyond a reasonable doubt, it is equally your duty to acquit him. That is your problem and your simple problem on the second count.

Now, let's see what we have to argue about on the third count. The third count charges the defendants Schmidt and Robertson, and in that count the defendant Bridges is not named. Let's see what in the language of the statute the Government has alleged in support of the third count of the indictment [7519] against the defendants Schmidt and Robertson:

> "That said defendants on or about the 17th day of September, 1945, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, within said division and district, did wilfully and knowingly encourage, aid, advise and assist a person, to wit, Harry Renton Bridges, not then and there entitled thereto, to obtain, accept and receive a certificate of naturalization which was to be procured and was procured by fraud, as said defendants and each of them at all times hereinafter mentioned well knew, said fraud consisting of false and fraudulent statements and representations made in a naturalization proceeding before the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco, No. 28152 in the records of said Superior Court."

Now, did the defendants Schmidt and Robertson aid and assist the defendant Bridges in obtaining a certificate of naturalization? They said they did. Mr. Garner testified that it was necessary for the applicant, Mr. Bridges, to have the supporting testimony of two witnesses and that the two witnesses who gave that supporting testimony were the defendants Schmidt and Robertson. There can be no doubt on the first proposition that they did aid and assist Bridges in obtaining his naturalization. The questions of fact for you to decide are that the statements made by Mr. Bridges to which reference was made in the second [7520] count were false, and secondly that, the defendants Schmidt and Robertson knew them to be false at the time the statements were made, and if you so find, and find so beyond a reasonable doubt, your verdict as to the defendants Schmidt and Robertson on the third count must be that of Guilty. If you do not so find or if you find by a degree of evidence which is not that standard which his Honor will instruct you is the standard required for proof in a criminal proceeding, proof beyond a reasonable doubt, then it will be your duty to acquit and find not guilty the defendants Schmidt and Robertson on the third count of the indictment.

Now, a look at the first count. The first count charges an offense by all three defendants. It is what is generally known as a conspiracy count, and without referring to the words, let me say that in the first count of the indictment it is charged that "on or about the 23rd day of June, 1945, and continuing thereafter until on or about October 1, 1945, and for some time prior thereto, the exact time being to the grand jury unknown, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, within the said Division and District, did conspire with each other and with divers other persons to the grand jurors unknown to defraud the United States by impairing, obstructing and defeating the proper administration of its naturalization laws in the manner following, to wit: By having said Harry Renton Bridges fraudulently petition for and [7521] obtain naturalization in a naturalization proceeding in the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco by falsely and fraudulently stating and representing to the said court in the said proceeding, No. 28152 in the records of said Superior Court, that he, the said defendant Harry Renton Bridges, had never belonged to the Communist Party in the United States; that said statement and representations so agreed to be made, and made as aforesaid, as defendants and each of them at all times hereinafter mentioned well knew, were false and fraudulent in this, that said defendant Harry Renton Bridges had in truth and in fact belonged to and been a member of the Communist Party in the United States from the year 1933 up to and including the 17th day of September, 1945; that said statement and representations were material to the said naturalization proceedings."

Now, at a time subsequent, his Honor will carefully and completely instruct you as to the constituent elements of a conspiracy. Suffice it for me to say at this time that before you can find these defendants or any of them guilty on the first count of the indictment you must find, and find by that standard of proof, again repeated, beyond a reasonable doubt, that there was a concert of action by these three defendants, an understanding reached, which need not be in writing and may be raised by implication from their conduct itself, a concert of action, the purpose of which was to hamper and impede a [7522] governmental function, in this instance the operation of the naturalization law.

We are required in a conspiracy count in an indictment to allege that once this understanding has been arrived at by the persons who are parties to the conspiracy, that they did certain acts pursuant thereto, which indicate to you at once that a conspiracy is not merely a state of mind; it is a state of mind plus some action taken to carry that agreement into execution. [7522-A]

And so the Government alleged these following overt acts:

One, that on the 23rd day of June, 1945, the defendant Harry Renton Bridges filed at the office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, in the city of San Francisco, State of California, an application for a certificate of arrival and preliminary form for petition for naturalization. About that there can be no question. It is here in evidence. The fact that it was so filed and on that date.

Number two, on or about the 8th day of August, 1945, the said defendant Harry Renton Bridges appeared before Lloyd H. Garner, a naturalization examiner of the United States at San Francisco, State of California, in the office of the County Clerk in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and gave testimony in the matter of the application of said Harry Renton Bridges for naturalization. That is admitted. Mr. Garner said Mr. Bridges came there and gave testimony; Mr. Bridges said he went there and gave testimony on the 8th day of August, 1945. So there is no necessity for considering the proof on either the first or second overt acts alleged in the conspiracy count of the indictment.

Three, on or about the 8th day of August, 1945, said defendants Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, and each of them, at the office of the County Clerk in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, signed as witnesses a petition for naturalization in the case of the defendant Harry Renton [7523] Bridges. And that exhibit is here, too, as proof of the fact that that did in fact occur. The witness Bridges said it did, the witness Schmidt said it did. But the witness Robertson was confused, because he said he only recalls going to the courthouse once, on the 17th of September, and does not recall the incident on the 8th day of August. His failure to recall that might well be because of the testimony of Mr. Garner, that on that day Mr. Robertson said under oath, for answer to a question put to him by Mr. Garner, that he, Robertson, was not a member of the Communist Party. But the record is here with Mr. Robertson's signature, so I say there is no question of proof on the first, second and third overt acts alleged in the indictment.

And the fourth and last, that on or about the 17th day of September, 1945, said defendants Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, and each of them, appeared in the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and gave testimony in support of the petition of the defendant Harry Renton Bridges for naturalization. And the defendants concede that that took place. So with respect to the first count of the indictment, you have no problem with respect to the question of proof on the four alleged overt acts. The only problem you have, in the light of the more complete instructions which His Honor will give you later on the elements necessary for you to find to have existed and to have found them to have existed beyond a reasonable doubt, were in [7524] fact established by the Government. And so again I say to you that despite the fact that we have traveled far, we are now back where we started from, with the same simple issues that were called to your attention at the outset by Mr. McMillan, in which he stated, in substance, as I have stated, "These are the issues, and each of them the Government will meet by proof beyond a reasonable doubt."

Now, let's see the proof. The first witness on this important question, which is the first question that you must answer in your deliberation on any one of the three counts, is a matter of fact: Number one, was the defendant Harry Bridges at some time prior to the 17th of September, 1945, a member of the Communist Party? If so, then he falsely swore on the 17th of September, 1945, when he denied it. Number two, what opportunity did each of his co-defendants, Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Robertson, have to know whether Mr. Bridges on the 17th of September, 1945, swore falsely when he stated he was not nor had he ever been a member of the Communist Party? [7525]

Were their opportunities, those of Schmidt and Robertson, not increased by reason of the fact that each, by the evidence, has been established himself as a member of the Communist Party? And that as to the defendant Schmidt, who has stood in the shadows behind the sunlight that Mr. Bridges thinks shines forever on his head, constant and repeated evidence of Schmidt's presence with Bridges at these Communist Party meetings?

Do you think J. R. Robertson, the member of God's Committee, would be on Mr. Bridges' left hand if he, too, was not a member of the Communist Party and if both Mr. Robertson and Mr. Bridges didn't know it?

And so to meet that challenge, we called first the witness John Schomaker, the business agent of Bridges' union, a member of the strike committee, a member of the Communist Party from 1931 to 1940, a neighbor of Harry Bridges, lived next door some period of time, the unit organizer, then section organizer of the waterfront section of the Communist Party here in your city and ultimately a member of the District Committee, the top board of directors of the Communist Party, for the western states of the United States.

And as you consider the stated testimony of these witnesses, you should ask yourself one question: Was he in a position to know? The qualitative value of testimony depends more upon who said so than who said what. Do you think John Schomaker would know whether Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party? [7526]

Oh, Hallinan called him a hobo and a bum when he took an automobile trip as a young boy through the West, because he carried blankets in the car and had to sleep on the ground. And that big, powerful, fine, ex-member of the Marine Corps and the Seabees, sat there with a smile while Hallinan abused him. 'Stool pigeon, they call him.

What do you think is the reward for John Schomaker and his wife and family for his temerity to sit on the witness stand under oath and confess that for nine years he belonged to an organization, quitting it only when he found it was trying to destroy the country that he has served twice, and to subject himself to the abuse of Hallinan and Bridges?

And I mention them together with reference to an old statement so often repeated for me by Bob McMillan: That one goat prefers the company of another goat to a whole herd of sheep.

John Schomaker, the man who testified that he was present when Bridges signed his application for membership in the Communist Party; that he was present when Harry Bridges' Communist book was issued, and as union and sectional organizer on three succeeding years he picked up the old book and gave Bridges the new. John Schomaker, who testified in his own inimitable way, about the incident of the fire when Bridges said, "The old lady jumped out the window. Go up and get my book before them snooty reporters get up there." John Schomaker, the neighbor, the brother in the union, the friend and comrade of Harry [7527] Bridges who testified that on many instances he saw Harry Bridges pay dues to three named persons: But Mr. Bridges hasn't called any one of those three named persons to deny it.

John Schomaker, who told you that, as a member of the Communist Party, he had met Sam Darcy, the predecessor of William Schneidermann, an organizer for District 13 of the Communist Party, long before he ever came on the waterfront, and after he arrived on the waterfront, again in his inimitable style and language, "Go down and get him." "And we went down and got him," says Schomaker. You must believe him.

John Schomaker, the man who testified that he attended Communist Party meetings at Grants Pass in Oregon, at Herman Mann's house, at Communist Party headquarters, at 121 Haight Street with Bridges and Schmidt; at San Diego during the A. F. of L. convention in 1935 with Bridges and Schmidt; at Sokol Hall with Bridges and Schmidt newly appointed district organizer for District 13 and Lawrence Ross was the chairman to hear the of the Communist Party report on the most current international.

John Schomaker, the man who testified that he went down to the Santa Clara prune orchard when Mr. Bridges met his boss, Earl Browder, the then head of the Communist Party in the United States. John Schomaker, who testified as to the contacts made by himself with Bridges, with messages from Darcy.

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, if you believe the testimony of John Schomaker, as far as the second count of the [7528] indictment is concerned, you need go no further. If you believe the testimony of John Schomaker, then you have in your minds proof beyond a reasonable doubt that Bridges is guilty of the second count of the indictment, and you are well on your way to proof of the third count about Henry Schmidt.

The Court: Shall we take the noon recess?

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: We will take the noon adjournment and resume at 2:00 o'clock this afternoon. Ladies and gentlemen, the same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any condition or circumstances and not to form or express an opinion until the matter is submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [7529]

Afternoon Session—Thursday, March 16, 1950

Mr. Donohue: You may recall the second witness on the facts called by the prosecution was

Henry Schrimpf. Bearing in mind the suggestion of this morning that the qualitative value of the evidence offered by a witness must consist of a consideration of his opportunity to have known the truth whereof he spoke, Henry Schrimpf identified himself as a member of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. Oh, true, in his usual and skilled way Mr. Bridges and his cohorts called him a drunkard. He had been on the waterfront since early in the '30s. There is no effort here by the defendants to show that the work record of Henry Schrimpf would sustain their assassination of his character, and their attempt to becloud the issue here and to deny you the right to determine for yourself his credibility as a witness consisted of just the loaded question and the scurrilous, voluntary and unsupported statement of the defendants.

You had an opportunity to observe Henry Schrimpf—a physical giant; not the opportunity for much formal schooling, but native intelligence enough to know after scarcely more than a year in the Communist Party that it was a fraud and, to use his own expression, "What they did in the '34 strike or at any other time for the American labor movement put a mortgage on American labor that they will be forever repaying"—a pal of [7530] Bridges and a comrade of Bridges and a friend of Bridges until he left the Communist Party.

And Henry Schrimpf told you in his direct and simple way that he had been handed a card, an application card for membership in the Communist Party, by the defendant Schmidt, and that he had attended a meeting at Herman Mann's house, a Communist Party meeting, to discipline Norma Perry, and there at that Communist Party meeting were Mr. Bridges and Mr. Schmidt, corroborating John Schomaker. And he testified as to this meeting down at the prune orchard in Southern California, corroborating John Schomaker, and that there he met Earl Browder. And he testified to a third meeting at which Bridges was present on the Harding golf course during the 1934 strike.

Oh, it is apparent why they met at Grants Pass, Oregon, on a chicken farm, and why they met at a prune orchard and on the Harding golf course. That is the kind of an organization the Communist Party is. It cloaks its activities under cover of darkness or in the seclusion of shady places for shady characters.

And the third witness the United States called was that little old lady, Mrs. Irene Harris. Did she know Bridges? "Why, I knew Harry well. My husband and I used to visit at the home of his former wife." Her husband thirty years a member of Bridges' union.

And that little old lady told you in a characteristic [7531] manner which must have impressed itself on your minds, as it did on mine, of a meeting which she attended with her husband at the house of the man who Mr. Bridges said is "my intimate friend," John Shaw, at which meeting, as had been testified to before by John Schomaker, she said Mr. Bridges made a speech, and in that speech Bridges said that he was a member of the Communist Party and urged those present to join also. Why, that little old lady said, "I was flabbergasted to hear Harry Bridges, in the light of all I had heard about his being a member of the Communist Party and the efforts to conceal it, to think that at a public place like that Harry Bridges would say he was a member of the Communist Party and invite those of us who were present who were not to join."

Was she telling the truth? That you must decide. In so deciding, ask yourself the question: Why didn't Mr. Bridges call her husband, who was there with her, a thirty-year member of his union? And as you decide whether that little old lady came here under oath and told the truth, ask yourself: Why didn't Mr. Bridges call John Shaw, his intimate friend for many years? And in the answer to those questions you will find the answer to the question, Did that little old lady tell the truth?

Again I say to you, standing alone, forget all the rest of the testimony, drive it out of your minds, if you believe that that little old lady told you the truth when she said [7532] she was flabbergasted at Mr. Bridges' statement, at his boldness, that and that alone is sufficient evidence for you to find beyond a reasonable doubt the defendant Bridges guilty under the second count of this indictment.

And then we called the witness Stanley Hancock. You will recall him as the relatively young man who resigned his position with an Erie, Pennsylvania, newspaper before he came here for the first time and in this public courtroom to state under oath that he had been a member of the Communist Party from 1932 until 1941.

Would he have known whether or not Bridges was a member of the Communist Party? He wasn't just a member of some unit of the Communist Party on the California waterfront. Stanley Hancock was the organizer for Los Angeles County of the Communist Party, a person to reckon with in Communist circles; a man of some prestige among his comrades; a man who said that he was very active in both the Western Worker and its successor, the People's World, the voice of Communism in California.

He said, corroborating John Schomaker, that he had attended a top fraction of the Communist Party in a meeting participated in and attended by Bridges and Schmidt during the 1935 AFL convention in the City of San Diego.

And I say to you again, if you believe the testimony of John Schomaker, if you believe the testimony of Henry Schrimpf, if you believe the testimony of that little old lady, Mrs. Harris [7533] and if you believe the testimony of Stanley Hancock, you must find the defendant Bridges guilty on the second count of the indictment, and you are well along on your way to the proof of Schmidt's guilt on the third count of the indictment.

Then we called the witness Kermit Charles Krolek—a fine looking young man, who told you that he was now employed by one of the radio or television companies. He told you about his schooling, including technical training at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He told you he for a period from sometime in 1935 until sometime in 1937, while he was secretary of a local of the American Radio Telegraphists' Association, of which organization his brother-in-law Mervyn Rathborne ultimately became president, that he joined the Communist Party. [7534]

He was a friend of Mr. Bridges in that never-to-be forgotten narration, in a court of the United States, of Mr. Bridges' experience in a hotel in Portland; when he believed his wires were being tapped, he sent for Mr. Krolek. He is just a character today, according to Bridges, when he testifies against Mr. Bridges. And that gave Mr. Bridges the opportunity, which to me was sickening, to testify about how he played tag with agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, in a hotel in New York—when for weeks he was cutting up messages into small pieces and leading them on a wild goose chase. The only protection, the only salvation you and I have to protect this country of ours from the termites who would destroy it—and Mr. Bridges played tag with them and thought it was funny. And so does his crowd think it is funny. But he had no criticism for the OGPU or the NKVD, or the Russian police. Yet he would criticize the arm of the government upon which you and I lean so heavily for security.

Mr. Krolek testified that he had attended the Communist Party meetings, as he called them, "top fraction meetings," at which no one but a member of the Communist Party could or would be admitted; and at those meetings, one of which was presided over by Mr. Bridges as chairman, Mr. Bridges and Mr. Schmidt were present; and his testimony subsequently was corroborated by the witness Rathborne.

I say to you ladies and gentlemen again, with as much earnestness as I can command, if you believe the testimony of John [7535] Schomaker and Henry Schrimpf and Mrs. Irene Harris, Stanley Hancock and Charles Krolek, you have solved the question of the first count of the indictment, because Mr. Bridges is guilty beyond a moral certainty. Then you are well on the way of solving the second count of the indictment, as to the defendant Schmidt.

Then we called the witness Manning Johnson. Manning Johnson, who became a Communist Party organized in 1931 and continued in active leadership, essentially among his own people, until some time following the famous Nazi-Soviet pact of 1939. Manning Johnson said that the only time he ever met Harry Bridges was at a meeting of the newly elected Central Committee of the Communist Party in New York, some time in June 1936. I shall subsequently and shortly read from the record exactly what he said as to the time.

Adopting the standard I suggested before, would Manning Johnson know whether Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party? You saw Mr. Hallinan hand Mr. Manning Johnson a photostatic copy of a letter signed by Earl Browder, directed to a committee of the Congress of the United States and purporting to contain a list of all the members of the Central Committee of the Communist Party in 1936. You heard both the witness Johnson and the witness Crouch read from that letter the name "Manning Johnson." Well, one thing there can be no doubt of, and that is that Manning Johnson was a member of the hierarchy of [7536] the Communist Party, its Central Committee from 1936 until 1938; and he was in a position during that time to know that Harry Bridges was not only a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party in 1936, but from the testimony of Manning Johnson who was not reelected in 1938, the defendant Harry Bridges was reelected in 1938.

Then we called the witness Paul Crouch, a member of the Communist Party for 17 years, a man high in the state and national offices of the Communist Party, a member of the plenum or presidium committee, as he called it, in 1936. He testified that Bridges and Schneidermann were elected to the Central Committee from California in 1936; that he saw Bridges at a meeting of that committee after the election and that Bridges was reelected in 1938. As to the time, shortly and surely, I will recall it to your recollection by reading the record.

And then we called Lawrence Ross. Lawrence Ross testified that he came to California in early 1932, remained here until 1937. Lawrence Ross testified that during the period of time he was in California, he was a member of the Communist Party. Lawrence Ross testified that at some time during his period of years in California, he was the editor of the Western Worker, the Communist Party publication in the State of California. Would Mr.

Lawrence Ross know whether or not, up to the year 1937, when he was here as a member of the Communist Party and as the editor of its publication, whether or not Harry Bridges was a [7537] member of the Communist Party? Lawrence Ross testified that he attended a meeting of the top fraction of the waterfront Communists at the apartment of Norma Perry, at which Bridges was present. He testified to a meeting at Sokol Hall, the meeting already testified to by John Schomaker, at which Mr. Schneidermann made his report and at which meeting the witness Schomaker said Lawrence Ross presided. He said that Bridges was surely present at that meeting and that in his best judgment Schmidt, too, was present. The witness Ross further testified of an incident at 121 Haight Street, the Communist Party headquarters, of a meeting held there—a closed Communist Party meeting—at which the defendants Bridges and Schmidt were present. Lawrence Ross testified, finally that he was a delegate to the 1936 national convention of the Communist Party, held in New York, and that as a member of that delegation, he voted for Mr. Schneidermann and for Mr. Bridges, under the name of Rossi, for membership on the Central Committee of the Communist Party. He said that there were a number of delegations, or a number of delegates, from California to that convention, some of whom he named.

When you consider the question as to whether or not Mr. Bridges was ever elected a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, ask yourselves this question: Why didn't they bring some of the other delegates from California to the 1936 Communist Party convention in New York to deny the story of [7538] Lawrence Ross that, as a member of that delegation, he did vote for Schneidermann and he did vote for Bridges under the name of Rossi. And in considering that question, as to whether or not Bridges was a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party in 1936, let me not forget a debt I owe Mr. Hallinan, who asked of the witness Rathborne a question which I could not have asked, first, because the answer would have been hearsay; and secondly, because it would have been an improper question. But Mr. Hallinan was kind enough to ask him this question:

> "Mr. Rathborne, did you ever hear anyone say that Harry Bridges was a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party?", and the response was interesting:

> "Roy Hudson told me that several times."

I didn't expect to get the benefit of Roy Hudson's testimony; but there it is. And Roy Hudson isn't a name unknown to you; Roy Hudson at that time was only the national trade union director for the Communist Party. And who would know more whether the great West Coast labor leader was honored by membership on the Central Committee of the Communist Party, other than Roy Hudson, the national trade union director for the Communist Party?

And then we call the witness Lewis Michener, who testified that he joined the Communist Party late in 1938 and left it in 1944. And as I stated preliminarily, if you ever saw the magic [7539] formula work of how an unkonwn man, who worked with his hands, and who joins the Communist Party, rises like a meteor, as he did, and in an incredibly short period of time became the Western States director for the American Automobile Workers' union; and at the same time, see how fast he can fall, how soon after he left the Communist Party he was stripped of his offices and went back to working in the Ford plant, where we brought him from to testify, and with his hands——

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. I wish to make an objection to that statement, if the Court please. It is a deliberate misstatement of the evidence. The evidence upon Michener is this, that he lost his office in the union when he declared the North American strike during the war. That is when he lost his office, when President Roosevelt had to call out the troops to quell that strike. That is the evidence as to when Michener lost his office in the union and went back to work, as the special prosecutor says, with his hands. Michener didn't say a word about any relationship to the Communist Party about that undertaking.

The Court: What is the basis for that statement, Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: I beg your pardon?

The Court: What is the basis for that statement?

Mr. Donohue: The basis for that statement, if Your Honor pleases, is Mr. Michener's testimony as to what he was [7540] and what he did in the year 1938, when he joined the Communist Party, and what his occupation was shortly after 1944; and what it has continued to be since he left the Communist Party. And I most respectfully say to Your Honor that a jury is entitled from the evidence before it to draw such conclusions as are reasonable and proper from that evidence, and I most respectfully say to Your Honor that is a fair inference and a reasonable conclusion that Mr. Michener's fall from the heights in the labor movement to his present occupation bears a direct relationship to his presence in and his absence from membership in the Communist Party.

The Court: The objection will be overruled.

Mr. Donohue: It was he, Mr. Michener, who testified first as to a closed Communist meeting which he attended here in San Francisco in late 1940; at which time he said one of the important matters of discussion was a dispute which had arisen between Mr. Goldblatt and Mr. Bridges, and that Mr. Schneidermann, the district organizer for the Communist Party in this district, was present, together with Mr. Phil (sometimes called Slim Connally), Mr. Walter Lambert, Mr. Bridges, and that attendance at this meeting was restricted to persons who were members of the Communist Party, as he stated he was at that time. [7541]

Then Mr. Michener testified about a meeting concerning which you have heard a great deal,—a meeting held in the Bellview Stratford Hotel in Philadelphia in 1943 during the national CIO convention.

at which he said that he, Michener, Harry Bridges and others named were told by Roy Hudson, the Trade Union Director of the Communist Party, that a decision had been made which was for them to carry out resulting from the determination of the Communist Party that they were not going to press their then advantage in the national CIO to the point where decent members of the CIO would kick them out; that the Party order was that they play ball with the forces of the center and subjugate their own interests at the moment in order that they might bore from within and not have to attack from without, in consequence of which, and you heard the defendant Bridges, who speaks so often about the democracy of his union: "I made the decision that Slim Connally, recently elected president of the State CIO Council, more recently identified as the Los Angeles editor for the People's World, that he should step out and that a man Thimmes should take his place." And Mr. Michener told you that he and Mr. Bridges raised some objection but that Mr. Roy Hudson stated, "This is it; this comes from headquarters," and the order was carried out.

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, Mr. Bridges, powerful though he is in his union, is not as powerful as Communist Party discipline, and he doesn't turn his back with indifference, [7542] nor has he done so, to Communist Party orders.

And Mr. Michener has testified as to this meeting in Philadelphia at which Bridges, Hudson, Connally and others were present. And when you go to your jury room for the solemn responsibility which is yours, to arrive at a verdict which will speak the truth, ask yourselves this question: If Michener was not telling the truth, why didn't Bridges bring Phil Connally, the subject matter of this dispute, the former president of the California CIO Council—why didn't he bring him here to testify? Maybe you will find the answer in the identification with some reluctance by the defendant Bridges of Mr. Slim Connally or Phil Connally's name on the People's World as its Los Angeles editor.

And then we called the witness George Wilson, who testified that sometime in 1940 or '41 he joined the Communist Party, and that he continued until the spring of 1945, just about the time, its work having been done and well, that the Bridges Defense Committee was disbanded.

George Wilson, intimate of Bridges, comrade of Bridges, who testified that he had attended several Communist Party meetings in an apartment in North Beach in San Francisco in '44 or '45 at which Mr. J. R. Robertson was present, who also testified that Mr. J. R. Robertson—the defendant Robertson—was a member of the same Communist Party unit as was he.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. That is not the testimony. At [7543] page 4009 the witness Wilson said that it was his impression to that effect; he doesn't state it as a fact at all. And that is the only statement he made about the defendant Robertson.

Mr. Donohue: Well, we will have more to say about the defendant Robertson soon, if I may be permitted to continue, if your Honor pleases.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Donohue: And Mr. Wilson testified about the meeting held in the Governor Hotel in San Francisco concerning a dispute between Mervyn Rathborne, the then secretary-treasurer of the California CIO Council, and his immediate predecessor in that office, the present secretary-treasurer of Mr. Bridges' union, Mr. Louis Goldblatt. At that meeting Mr. Wilson identified the following persons present: Rathborne, Connally, Goldblatt, Bridges, Wilson and Schneidermann.

Some time subsequently, while Mr. Bridges was a witness on the stand, Mr. Bridges brought with him some records, the purpose of which, allegedly, was to show that there was a dispute between Mr. Goldblatt and Mr. Rathborne but that it had been settled, as all these disputes are settled, within the family of the union. And they sought to prove it by a memorandum written by Mervyn Rathborne. And I am sure you haven't forgotten it, because it recalls to our attention that there were three meetings within the brotherhood of the union at which no satisfactory solution was arrived at, and that Rathborne [7544] then said, only a few days before the Executive Committee of the California CIO Council met here in San Francisco, that "We will settle it by a meeting among the persons concerned at a later date." And it was settled at a latter date at a meeting among the persons concerned, and the most important person concerned was Mr. Schneidermann.

who was very much upset about the uncomradely conduct of Communists quibbling in public and making a public display of their inability to get along. And you know that the meeting which George Wilson testified about, and subsequently Rathborne testified about, was the Communist Party discipline meeting to solve the problem that these Communist Party laboring people couldn't solve themselves.

And finally we called the witness Rathborne. Perhaps even more than George Wilson, there isn't a living being who would know better whether Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party than Mervyn Rathborne. Mervyn Rathborne, who became, subsequent to his membership in the Communist Party, the international president of the American Radio Telegraphists' Association with offices in New York; the man who became, while he was a member of the Communist Party and after he had left New York and returned to California, the secretary-treasurer of the San Francisco CIO Council and later the secretary-treasurer of the State CIO Council; a man who, while he was a member of the Communist Party, was a member of the Executive Board of National CIO; a man who, while he was a member of the Communist Party, [7545] testified that he belonged to a top fraction of Communist Party members, all of whom were members of the national Executive Committee of the CIO, including Mr. Bridges, and who testified that while he was a member of the California State CIO Council he was a member of the top fraction of the Communist Party operating within the Califorina CIO and that Mr. Bridges was a member.

Again, following the suggestion made earlier, you might well ask yourselves the question: Why didn't Mr. Bridges have his counsel ask Mr. Rathborne, "If you were a member of the top fraction of the Communist Party made up of members of the Executive Committee of the CIO, tell us who they were"? and the same with respect to the California State CIO Council. [7546]

> "You say, Rathborne, that you are a member of the top fraction of the Communist Party operating within the California CIO and I, too, am a member of the fraction. Who are the others?"

Wouldn't you, if you were an innocent defendant, and the allegation was made against you?

> "Who are the others? Bring them here and let us hear what they have to say about whether you are a liar or whether I am a liar."

No, those questions were not asked, and I suggested the possible alternatives to you earlier. From 1935, when he got interested in the labor movement and became interested in the Communist Party as a member until his withdrawal from the Communist Party some time in 1946 or early 1947, as a member of a labor union and as a member of the Communist Party, Bridges and Rathborne were inseparable. When the second Bridges Defense campaign was launched in 1941, who was made the executive secretary? George Wilson. Who at the same time in the same year was made chairman of the California CIO committee for the Bridges Defense? Mervyn Rathborne. During the 1936 strike, who was chairman of the strike committee? Harry Bridges. Who was secretary of the strike committee? Mervyn Rathborne. Who went to Communist Party headquarters in New York with Mervyn Rathborne while Rathborne was in New York, not only as a prominent member of the Communist Party but as the international [7547] president of the union? None other than Harry Bridges. And who went to Roy Hudson's home on James Street with Mervyn Rathborne? None other than Harry Bridges. Oh, how careful Mr. Bridges stays away from the name of Roy Hudson. Could you believe him when after some careful consideration and sparring, he finally decided that the last time he saw Roy Hudson was an instance some 13 or 14 months ago when Bridges happened to walk out of his building at 150 Golden Gate Avenue, and who do you suppose he just happened to meet passing by on the sidewalk? The national trade union director of the Communist Party, Roy Hudson. Incredible! Mr. Bridges would like to dig a ditch as wide as the Pacific between himself and Roy Hudson and others concerning whom we will comment later, but with respect to the subjective tests I have invited you to employ, who would know better than Rathborne whether Bridges was a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. Rathborne testified that during the 1936 strike frequent meetings between Bridges and Walter Lambert, a functionary of the Communist Party here in San Francisco, were held up on North Point Street here in the city of San Francisco. Mr. Rathborne testified as to a meeting, a Communist Party meeting held at Long Beach, California in corroboration of the testimony of Charles Krolek, held, as you will recall, in San Pedro during the 1935 A. F. of L. convention.

Mr. Rathborne testified to another interesting bit of information as to his membership upon a committee called for the [7548] first time in this trial by Mr. Bridges, interestingly, God's Committee. Mr. Rathborne called it; that is what Mr. Bridges called it before the name was ever suggested to him. But, of course, he gave it a different interpretation. Mr. Bridges could not believe that he, Bridges, could not have been a member of a committee important enough to be called God's Committee, so he volunteered himself as a member. Mr. Rathborne said he never was a member, that God's Committee was a committee made up of top fraction party members of Northern California associated with the California State CIO, which met frequently with Mr. Schneidermann and that he and Mr. Schneidermann for security reasons later took and discussed the decisions with Harry Bridges. Who were the members of that committee? Mr. Bridges' counsel would not ask that question. But we asked Mr. Rathborne:

"Whom do you now recall as members of God's Committee?" His answer: "Schneidermann, George Wilson, J. R. Robertson, himself and a man named David Heide." Was J. R. Robertson a member of the Communist Party? When you come to a conclusion in answer to that qusetion, remember the testimony of George Wilson. My distinguished adversary may quibble by reading from the record as to what George Wilson said about J. R. Robertson's membership on the same unit of the Communist Party as he belong to it, but he did not equivocate about J. R. Robertson's being a Communist, and if there was any doubt, [7549] any lack of clarity in what Mr. Wilson may have said about J. R. Robertson, Mr. MacInnis had the opportunity to clarify that misunderstanding or misconception by a cross-examination of George Wilson. But they let him go like a hot potato. And you know why, and you have a right from their failure to cross-examine him, to draw conclusions and inferences which may reasonably be drawn from that failure.

The witness Rathborne further testified that between 1935 and 1937, the year when he went to New York, he had attended at least ten or twelve waterfront section meetings of the Communist Party. Asked to name those who attended these meetings, he stated, "Dave Saunders, John Schomaker, Harry Bridges, Henry Schmidt, Walter Lambert, Al Quittleman of the Sailors Union and perhaps a number of others."

Mr. Rathborne testified that during the 1936-1937 strike, at least up until the time he left San Francisco for New York, he had attended at least 30 meetings held at this apartment opposite the chocolate works on North Point Street at which Bridges himself, Walter Lambert and sometimes William Schneidermann were present, and that the subject matter of the discussion was the strike policy to be recommended to the joint strike committee of which Bridges was chairman and Rathborne was secretary. But I suppose the poor, befuddled members of that joint strike committee never suspected that its president or chairman and its secretary were getting their instructions from Lambert [7550] and Schneidermann as to how to conduct the strike. Reminiscent of the vigorous denials by the witness Bridges that Darcy ever had anything to do with the 1934 strike! But he did not say so much about Schneidermann's and Lambert's operation in the 1936-1937 strike because Mr. Bridges and his counsel were too busy trying to destroy Rathborne as a witness to ask him anything about his knowledge of Bridges' membership in the Communist Party or to ask him anything about Schneidermann's participation in the 1936 and 1937 strike.

You will recall with reference to the meeting testified to in Philadelphia in 1943 by the witness Michener concerning the removal of Phil Connally that Rathborne testified he got three telephone calls here in San Francisco from Philadelphia: one, Phil Connally, two, Roy Hudson; and three, Harry Bridges. He was informed of the meeting concerning which Michener testified and was told the decision, and he, too, resented it. Of course, it is easy for Mr. Bridges to say, because he hasn't any idea of trying to prove it, that Rathborne went off on a two weeks' drunk and some time subsequent thereto he discussed the subject matter with Rathborne.

That is not quite what Mr. Rathborne says, because Mr. Rathborne said that when the crowd came back from Philadelphia and some time subsequent thereto, there was a meeting, a Communist Party meeting at which George Wilson and the defendant Bridges and Schneidermann were present, in which, for the benefit of those who had not gotten their instructions [7551] in Philadelphia from Roy Hudson, Schneidermann carried the line and stated that the decision had been made at Communist Party headquarters in New York and that there wasn't any necessity or any use in beating their heads against a stone wall, that the party's position must be followed.

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. That is another deliberate misstatement of the evidence. What Rathborne said was that Mr. Robertson was present at that meeting. He did not say Harry Bridges was there.

Mr. Donohue: I appreciate that interruption. That is a fact.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, Mr. Robertson who was in Chicago at that time was at the meeting. I have the page and the line.

Mr. Donohue: I remember now. I am delighted to have the correction.

Mr. MacInnis: I am sure you are, stating that Bridges was at a meeting when you know full well that the witness said something else.

Mr. Donohue: My percentage of error is pretty low, Mr. MacInnis.

Mr. MacInnis: Pretty high.

Mr. Donohue: And I was very careful to tell the jury it is not my statement of the evidence because I can be mistaken.

The Court: This is an appropriate time for the recess.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: The same admonition, ladies and gentlemen, not to discuss the case under any circumstances.

(Recess.) [7552]

Mr. Donohue: I apologize to Mr. MacInnis for having left his client out of that Communist Party meeting. If I had given the matter a moment's thought, I would have known that it wouldn't have been necessary for Mr. Bridges to have been there. Mr. Bridges didn't have to attend a meeting in San Francisco after the 1943 CIO convention in Philadelphia had closed to get the instructions from the Communist Party on the removal of Phil Connally from Mr. Schneidermann, because Harry Bridges got it in Philadelphia from Roy Hudson at the meeting testified to by Lewis Michener.

Two more meetings in brief concerning which the witness Rathborne testified.

One was the meeting held in Pittsburgh at the first constitutional convention of the CIO in 1938 and held at a meeting in the William Penn Hotel. Rathborne, you will recall, testified that this meeting was a top fraction meeting of the national CIO top Communist Party fraction, Volume 59, page 6362. Mr. Rathborne said present at that meeting were Roy Hudson, Julius Emsbach, Harry Bridges, Louis Merrill, himself and others to a total of perhaps eight; that he was notified of the meeting by Roy Hudson, and that at that meeting Mr. Rathborne was dressed down for uncomradeshiplike conduct in that, without consultation with the Communist Party, he had had the termerity to make a motion on the floor of the national CIO convention which would have included political affiliation as being a [7553] subject matter over which the national CIO would exercise no jurisdiction.

And you will recall one further meeting held here in the Whitcomb Hotel during the 1939 national CIO convention at a time when Rathborne, as the international president of ARTA in New York, was a delegate to that convention. Rathborne testified that he attended this Communist meeting at the Whitcomb Hotel and that among those present were Schneidermann, Louis Merrill, Rathborne, Bridges, possibly Roy Hudson, he thinks Ben Gold, and he also believes Julius Emsbach; that the reason for this meeting arose out of the fact that at a meeting of the convention itself a day or two before, John L. Lewis made a statement that "no aspiring young Communist is going to get anyplace in CIO," and shortly afterward, quoting Rathborne, Lewis said: "There are going to be some changes in the CIO. The position of West Coast Director of CIO"—held at that time by Mr. Bridges—"is abolished. The present West Coast Director, Mr. Bridges, will be the California Director, and I will appoint directors for the rest of the area."

Rathborne said it was that statement by Lewis which led to the meeting subsequently of a top fraction of the Communist Party who were members of the national CIO Executive Committee. And Rathborne said that at this meeting in the Whitcomb Hotel the remarks of John L. Lewis were discussed and that Bridges thought that "we should cooperate with Lewis and at the same [7554] time build the Communist forces stronger down below in the unions so as to be stronger later on and prevent Lewis from red-baiting and taking any anti-Communist position in the future," and that Bridges' suggestion was adopted as the policy.

Now, with that, save for the recall of George Wilson for the purpose of denying the statements made with respect to him by these defendants and for the purpose of giving them just one more chance at cross-examination, the Government rested.

These, then, have been the witnesses, and these have been the facts upon which the Government has rested its case. And I say to you, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, with all the sincerity at my command, that the Government has sustained the burden of proof required of it by law and has, as Mr. McMillan told you it would in his opening statement, established the guilt of the defendants and each of them beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty.

It will shortly be the responsibility of Mr. McInnis and Mr. Hallinan to present to you their reasons for urging that the Government has failed to meet the burden of proof required, and to direct your attention and your consideration to the evidence offered by them in support of the general denial of guilt made by each of the defendants. I am sure that you will give to them the same measure of interest and attention for which I now express to you my own personal gratitude.

As you listen to their arguments, I trust that you will, [7555] even as you have in so patiently listening to mine; measure and test them, first, against the allegations contained in the indictment, and, second, against the opening statements made by each of counsel with respect to their several defendants.

One has promised you, even before the taking of testimony and at a time when the identity of most of the witnesses subsequently called by the Government was unknown to him, that he would prove that, the real conspiracy here was not that alleged in Count One of the indictment and participated in by these defendants, but a colossal conspiracy of some 125 people—Government agents, Cabinet officers, the President of the United States, shipowners, labor leaders, liars, perjurers, stoolpigeons, labor spies, provocateurs, quote "the swill of humanity," unquote, and all this mixed up with some irrational and unteiligible metaphor concerning tropical plants and growing fungi.

The other made what he called a solemn pact with you to prove the truth of the general denial of the defendants; to destroy the evidence of the witness John Schomaker; to establish an alibi for one of the defendants with respect to one item of the Government's proof, and to create a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of all the defendants by proof as to each of an established reputation for good character—all these promises requiring several days for statement.

Just briefly, let us take a look at the defense. Has it [7556] occurred to you, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, that over a period of some weeks the defendants called 38 witnesses? Of the 38 witnesses called, there were only two, save the defendants themselves, who could testify as to whether Harry Bridges, Henry Schmidt or J. R. Robertson was a member of the Communist Party, because there were only two of the 38 witnesses called by the defense, save the defendants themselves, who testified that they had ever been a member of the Communist Party.

Now, don't let these defendants fool you. The question for you to decide is not whether Mr. Bridges is or is not the greatest labor leader the world has ever known. The question is not whether Mr. Bridges enjoys an excellent reputation for truth, honesty and integrity. The question is, and the defense must be to that question: Was Bridges a member of the Communist Party? And of the 38 people he brings here, two were members of the Communist Party.

And, as I said to you with respect to the testimony of the Government, don't take the testimony of a witness merely as a fact without determining in your own mind the capability of that witness to know whether that fact was true.

Who testified that Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party? Bruce B. Jones. [7557]

Let me refer to page 4199 of the record, question by Mr. Donohue:

> "Q. Mr. Jones, am I to believe that you said shortly ago that you left the Communist Party because your back hurt and you had stomach trouble?
> "A. And the other transaction involved there, Mr. Donohue, was along in 1941 I was trying to get in the navy, and when I couldn't make that, I shipped out. That is correct, yes.
> "Q. Then you didn't leave the Communist Party because you had any disagreement with the principles of the Communist Party, did you?
> "A. I didn't leave the Communist Party because I had a difference of opinion with the Communist Party.
> "Q. And you haven't any different opinion of the Communist Party today, have you?
> "A. You are getting into another subject now, Mr. Donohue. I don't know whether my opinions of the Communist Party today or not concern this case, whether it has got anything to do with it, but I know my political opinions as a free-born American citizen is my own damn business and I am not sure you have got any business to ask me what my political opinions are today."

How could we forget Bruce B. Jones, the witness who began with an apology by his counsel for—the mild term—his eccentricities, and who wound up like this: [7558]

Question, page 4254:

"Q. Didn't John Schomaker then turn to each of the three of you, Melin, the man we have called Lambert——

"A. I don't call him that. That is what he calls himself.

"Q. ——and yourself—— A. Yes.

"Q. ——and ask each one of you in turn, did you know the answer to that one, and didn't each one of you say, 'Yes,' including you?

"A. No, that wasn't said, no, no.

"Q. And isn't it a fact that John Schomaker then turned to you and said, 'You signed him up'?

"A. You are a liar for saying Schomaker said that.

"Q. I didn't ask you that.

"A. It isn't a fact.

"Q. I asked you if he made that statement.

"A. It isn't a fact. At no time at these previous meetings I went down with Schomaker did Schomaker tell me in the presence of these other people anything about signing Bridges up, and it struck me very sharply when it came out in the newspapers that he said that.

"Q. And isn't it a further fact that you said, 'The s.o.b. was hard to get dues out of.'?

"A. You are a liar for saying that here, > and I never said that. You are a liar, Donohue, and Schomaker is, too. [7559]

> "Mr. Donohue: That is all. No further questions.
> "The Witness: You got that, Donohue? You are a liar and Schomaker is, too, and anybody is that ever said I signed Bridges up."

You remember that Mr. Jones at that time was being asked whether or not in John Schomaker's house where Jones had gone with two others to find out what Schomaker had said about Harry Bridges, that brought on that response. Was I a liar for asking him the question, and was John Schomaker a liar? Bruce Jones says so. But where are the two men who went down with him? Where are the two pals and comrades of Bridges who went down there to John Schomaker's house with Bruce B. Jones, and if John Schomaker is a liar, then why weren't they brought to say so? And that, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, is the number one of the two witnesses who testified that Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party. And that, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, is the testimony, and he is the witness called by Mr. MacInnis pursuant to the solemn pact he made with you to destroy the testimony of John Schomaker.

But they called another, yes, they called another. I said they called two witnesses out of 38, save the defendants, to testify to you as members of the Communist Party or, as stated, former members of the Communist Party, that Bridges was not a Communist. You haven't forgotten this witness either. The lady known as Jean Murray, page 7339 of the record, Miss Murray [7560] speaking, and speaking to me:

> "A. You seem to think that all of the people who are members of the Communist Party are the type of people whom you have been able to buy, the ones who sold their integrity to you and your corrupt government.
> "Q. You mean my government?
> "A. Some of them. This is a government of the monopolies; it isn't a government of the working class.
> "Q. You mean the government of the United States, which I am proud to represent?
> "A. The government of the United States is a dictatorship of the monopolies; it doesn't represent the workers."

And there you have it. That, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, is the sum total of the evidence, after weeks and weeks of testimony, totalling 38 in number. That is the sum total of the evidence upon which these defendants will ask you for a verdict of not guilty because they are the only two persons who have stated membership in the Communist Party which would give them the opportunity to know whether Bridges was a member of the Communist Party.

So when they talk about Bruce Jones and Jean Murray, the two witnesses who so testified, just remember the instances called to your attention.

And of course before they talk about their defense, in a practice which is perhaps as old as criminal procedure, one which has been adopted with many refinements by [7561] the Communist Party, their first defense will be a renewal of the attack over the last four months on every witness who has had the temerity to testify against Harry Bridges and against myself and my associates and the government of the United States. And when they have exhausted themselves with everything invective of which they are capable, and when they have stressed the importance of the evidence to destroy John Schomaker and to prove the general denial of guilt by the defendant Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson, they will then reach up their sleeve and pull out what they call their trump card, the "ace in the hole." We have heard about it, because it was precisely timed to stay in the frontal part of your brain during the Christmas holiday. The sudden dramatics of Mr. Hallinan, demanding the arrest and indictment for perjury of Paul Crouch, Manning Johnson, and later he added Lawrence Ross. And in a very ineffective and sham imitation of the same proceedings, his associate, Mr. MacInnis, sought the same thing when Mr. Rathborne testified that Robertson was at this meeting in San Francisco to discuss with Schneidermann the Communist Party line that Bridges got in Philadelphia from Roy Hudson—an alibi that Mr. Robertson would try to fool you into believing, as established by the fact that he wrote a check on a certain date in a month, which means he had to be in Chicago.

Woudn't I be testing the patience of Job if, when I returned to Washington, I used all my canceled checks ~~for~~ paying my utility bills which I have accumulated while [7562] I am here, to prove an alibi that I was in Washington and not in the city of San Francisco? Oh, they will talk about that alibi. Mr. Hallinan interminably gave us a chalk-talk, and now he has this beautifully prepared exhibit here, which he will parade in front of you and talk about for several days.

Let's meet the issue now. Number one, I read you the indictment this morning, with as much care as I could. There isn't a single allegation in the indictment that says that Harry Bridges was in New York City on Saturday night, the 27th of June, 1936. These defendants and their counsel would like to fool you. They would like to put you in such a state of confusion that some time subsequently, when the clouds have been removed and you find yourselves awake, you would say to yourselves, "What a fool I was to have been so deceived." Mr. Hallinan, in his long talk—and it will probably take days to explain this magnificent (physically speaking) piece of work, the purpose of which is to show that Harry wasn't in New York on the night of Saturday the 27th of June, 1936; therefore he could not have been a member of the Communist Party. Well, let's see who said he was in New York on Saturday night the 27th of June, 1936. Far and wide and up and down the land Hallinan and his crowd have talked about the perjury on this matter of Paul Crouch and Manning Johnson? Why? Well, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, what else have they got to talk about? Here for weeks, by witnesses who had to know, by witnesses like [7563] John Schomaker, who for days was subjected to the skill and the cunning of a clever trial lawyer, who at last turned away bleeding from both eyes, beaten by John Schomaker—of course they would like to have you forget John Schomaker. And they don't want to hear any more about the little old lady, Mrs. Harris. And they wish Henry Schrimpf and Charlie Krolek and Hancock had never been born. And Bridges must regret, as he sits here now, and will regret to the last day he lives that he ever met Mervyn Rathborne or George Wilson. Of course they would like you to forget the proof beyond a peradventure of doubt, proof as adequate and complete as is possible in human existence. And there is only one way they can do it, and that is by talking about Mr. Bridges' alibi on the 27th of June, 1936. And remember again, there isn't a scintilla, there isn't a single word of evidence—I am sorry—there isn't a single word by way of allegation in the indictment, that charges Harry Bridges to have been in New York on the night of the 27th of June, 1936, nor which says that Harry Bridges was ever a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party. [7564]

It came before you as a matter of proof, and before I finish I hope to sustain that proof. But by way of analogy the hue and cry raised by these defendants and their counsel for the obvious purpose of obscuring the truth is as much as to say that a witness who saw a brutal shooting testified that the gun was held in the left hand of the man who did the shooting when the fact was it was held in his right.

I said before, and I say again, on the testimony of John Schomaker alone, on the testimony of Irene Harris alone, on the testimony of Henry Schrimpf alone, on the testimony of Michener alone, on the testimony of Hancock alone, on the testimony of Krolek, Wilson and Rathborne alone, the defendant Bridges is guilty.

Now, let us turn to the record, and I read now from Volume 23, page 2679. The witness was Paul Crouch, examiner Mr. Hallinan.

> "Q. Well, you can't tell us, though, whether it was morning, afternoon or evening?
> "A. I am quite certain it was not in the morning, but whether it was afternoon or evening I cannot recall.
> "Q. Then of course you don't remember what time it commenced or what time it ended?
> "A. I don't remember the number of hours.
> "Q. Now, was the Central Committee, its personnel, the fact of its election, discussed at all at the Madison Square [7565] Garden meeting?
> "A. The composition was not discussed, and I do not recall any reference to the Central Committee.
> "Q. You are sure, however, that the names of the persons were not given?

"A. Definitely sure.

"Q. Now, when did the Central Committee meet to elect the Politburo?

"A. I cannot specifically recall whether the meeting was held the night—Saturday night or Sunday morning, but my best belief and my best recollection is that it was held Saturday night.

"Q. Are you sure that it was held before the final ending of the convention itself?

"A. No.

"Q. I suppose that it wouldn't be reasonable that the committee members would stay in New York for any very long period of time after the convention ended, is that right?

"A. To the best of my recollection, it was held prior to the Madison Square Garden meeting, to the best of my belief and recollection.

"Q. So then it would have to be either Saturday night or Sunday morning?

"A. To the best of my recollection, although I stayed in New York, the best I can recall, for a couple of days after [7566] the 28th for the purpose of a series of conferences on various fields of Party work, and I cannot be too specific, but my best recollection is it was held prior to it. I might—it is humanly possible that I might be mistaken, because I remained in New York for at least two days after June 28.

"Q. When you say 'at least two days,' now, could it have been eight or ten days?

"A. No, it couldn't have been over two or three days.

"Q. Do you know whether or not you had meetings with the Central Committee within that two or three days? A. Oh, yes.

"Q. How many?

"A. One, only one of the full Central Committee.

"Q. And that was after the convention had been closed?

"A. That was after the final nominating session; that is after all the closed meetings of the convention had closed. I do not mean necessarily—not necessarily after the Madison Square Garden meeting."

That latter meeting, you will recall the evidence shows to have taken place on Sunday.

"Q. I am talking about the Madison Square Garden meeting as the ending of the convention. Let us say that Madison Square Garden ended the convention.

"A. The meeting of the Central Committee would then have [7567] been prior to the ending of the convention, from that technical application, from that technical point of view.

"Q. Are you sure whether it was prior to the ending of the convention?

"A. I am not positive. I have already answered that question.

"Q. You stayed in New York a couple of days, and during that couple of days you had at least one meeting with the Central Committee?

"A. I said during those two days I had a series of conferences, various party meetings, trade union work in various other fields, and I stated while I was in New York, not necessarily the two days after—in fact, to my best belief and recollection, it was prior to the Madison Square Garden that we elected the new Politburo. I am almost—I am nearly certain. There is a human element. It could have been later, but my best belief and best recollection is that it was after the—of course, it was after the election started, which I believe we elected the new Central Committee, and prior to the Madison Square meeting.

"Q. Then it would have to be on Sunday morning? A. Saturday night or——

"Q. Saturday night or Sunday morning?

"A. To my best belief and recollection.

"Q. After the Madison Square Garden, did you have any meeting [7568] with the Central Committee, after the Madison Square meeting?

"A. Not unless there is the element of possibility that I could—that I might have been mistaken. I might have been mistaken—I don't think I was—on the date when we elected the Politburo, but aside from the date on which we elected the Politburo, I didn't have any meeting with the full Central Committee while I was in New York. I had one meeting—I attended one meeting of the full Central Committee after the convention was called to order, before I returned to North Carolina.

"Q. You say that you saw Mr. Bridges during the course of the convention as well as at this meeting that you testified to?

"A. I said my best recollection was that I saw him briefly.

"Q. When?

"A. My best recollection is that I saw him during the rather early stages of the convention in the anteroom or at the back of the hall, and my best recollection is of hearing Stachel, or one of the other top leaders of the party in making a remark that he had to go away for some kind of trade union work in which he was engaged and would miss most of the convention.

"Q. And that was in the early part of the convention?

"A. To the best of my recollection.

"Q. Could you remember how soon after the convention started? [7569] A. No.

"Q. It started on Wednesday. Was it on Wednesday?

"A. It could have been. I don't recall specifically, and I stated that my impression, my best recollection on this question, I remember remarks about his being called away by members, leading members of the party, and at no time did he speak on the floor of the convention, but my best recollection is I saw him very briefly either in the ante-room or at the very back of the hall briefly.

"Q. Did you know Mr. Stachel and these other people whose names you mentioned?

"A. Very well indeed.

"Q. Was their conversation addressed to you about Mr. Bridges being called away?

"A. Partly to me and partly to other party leaders with whom I was in company.

"Q. I mean you were close enough and it was addressed sufficiently to you that you would not be mistaken on the context of the thing.

"A. I don't think so.

"Q. The statement was made that he would be called away to do certain trade union matters and would hence miss a large part of the convention; is that correct?

"A. That is as I can recall it, to the best of my recollection. [7570]

"Q. Where were the trade union matters to be handled, do you know? Where would he be called to?

"A. He could have been called to Washington or he could have been called to California. I don't recall. There is nothing now that I can recall to indicate where it would have been.

"Q. Was anything said about the length of time that he would be away?

"A. I don't recall that it was.

"Q. Or how soon he would have to leave?

"A. I got the impression, as I can recall now, I got the impression that he was leaving immediately.

"Q. And you think to either Washington or California?

"A. There was nothing said that I remember about it, and my knowledge—it is only from my knowledge of Mr. Bridges' work that I would draw that inference.

"Q. We agreed that you would not do that, Mr. Crouch, that you would try to tell us first what your recollection was, and then if necessary we would fill it in with what the customary matters were, but your recollection——

"A. I don't recall any mention of where he was going.

"Q. Just that Mr. Bridges was mentioned, that he was there, but that he was going to be called away on some trade union work and would miss the greater part of the convention?

"A. As I recall. [7571]

"Q. And then you saw him again on Saturday afternoon or evening?

"A. If my memory serves me correct—if my memory is correct on the date on which we elected the new Politburo, it would have been Saturday evening or Sunday morning. I stated there is a human element. I kept no notes. I made no memorandum. And that was about thirteen years ago."

The Court: We will take the adjournment, if agreeable to counsel.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: We will take the adjournment until ten o'clock tomorrow morning. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions or to permit any person to converse with you on any subject of the trial and not to form or express an opinion until it is submitted to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until Friday, March 17, 1950, at 10:00 a.m.) [7572]

Friday, March 17, 1950—10;00 o'Clock A.M.

The Clerk: The case of United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

Mr. Donohue: As I told you ladies and gentlemen of the jury in the closing moments of yesterday, it would be the purpose and plan of my adversaries, after continuing again their campaign of vilification against the government of the United States and those persons who have had the temerity from their point of view to testify against these defendants, to spend half our time in the discussion of their so-called alibi for the defendant Bridges on the night of Saturday, June 27, 1936. And I read you carefully yesterday from the transcript of the cross-examination of the witness Crouch, and I ask your indulgence to repeat again his closing paragraph on cross-examination:

> "If my memory serves me correct, if my memory is correct, on the date on which we elected the new politburo it would have been Saturday evening or Sunday morning. I stated there is a human element. I kept no notes. I made no memorandum. And that was about 13 years ago."

Now, of course, Mr. Hallinan and Mr. Bridges have an immediate purpose in seeking to destroy Paul Crouch and in seeking to destroy Manning Johnson, not only because of the value of that destruction in this proceeding, because they will say time and time again, and I thoroughly agree with them, Paul Crouch [7573] and Manning Johnson are professional witnesses. Why? Because they were professional Communists. They were not labor leaders who joined the Communist Party for ambition. They were professional functionaries paid by the Communist Party. You heard Paul Crouch testify. For 17 years, over many more states than 17, was he active in a high official position with the Communist Party. Manning Johnson, a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party for two years, is another. Who would know more about the activities and the identification all over the United States of the top echelon of the Communist Party than Manning Johnson and Paul Crouch? And just as Bridges and his co-Communist defendants here know that the American people are striking the bill that is the death knell of the Communist Party, they fear not only in this prosecution but that all over the land in the days to come, the witnesses Paul Crouch and Manning Johnson—professional witnesses, yes; professional Communists once for certain—and they want to destroy the ability of those two men in any court in the land to point the finger of accusation and identification against any one of their new comrades in the Communist Party.

And I say to you ladies and gentlemen of the jury, in rereading, as I did yesterday, the testimony of Paul Crouch, you must have in mind these things: Number one, in 1936 Harry Bridges, Comrade Bridges to Paul Crouch, was not the figure that Harry Bridges thinks he is today. There wasn't any particular reason [7574] for Paul Crouch in 1936 to be impressed with Harry Bridges. There were some 40 or 50 people present at this meeting of the Central Committee. And don't forget forever or for a moment that the only uncertainty in the testimony of Paul Crouch with respect to the Central Committee and Harry Bridges was not as to the fact that he was elected a member, was not as to the fact that he attended a meeting; his only uncertainty was as to when that meeting took place, and with all the skill and trickery at his command, Mr. Hallinan sought to pin him down to Saturday night so he could try to prove his alibi. And never forget for a moment that long before Hallinan raised the cry of perjury to destroy this witness, the witness had said in the early days of the convention, in some anteroom or standing in the back of the hall, "I heard Bridges in conversation with Jack Stachel and I heard enough of the conversation to know what Bridges was saying, because he had some labor meeting to attend, that he could not attend all the sessions of the convention." And Crouch said he never saw him on the floor of the convention, saw him only once again at this meeting of the Central Committee, whenever it took place.

And now, let us take a look at the record as to the witness Manning Johnson: On direct examination, again by me:

> "Q. Mr. Johnson, after the convention of 1936, at which you testified you were elected a member of the National Committee, did you meet subsequently with the National [7575] Committee as a member thereof?
> "A. Yes, I did.
> "Q. Where and when, to the best of your recollection?
> "A. To the best of my recollection, it was either at the Center or in a hotel in New York, because we had a number of meetings in different places during that particular time, which is always customary.
> "Q. And when?
> "A. That was right after the election of the National Committee.
> "Q. When you say 'after' you mean how long after? A. Shortly after.
> "Q. Will you tell us now, Mr. Johnson, the name or names of such persons as you can recall who were present in attendance at that meeting of the National Committee of the Communist Party?
> "A. Well, I can. There was Earl Browder, Jack Stachel, Jay Peters, William Weinstone, William Steiner alias Blake, Sam Don, James W. Ford, Maude White——

"Q. How do you spell that last name?

"A. W-h-i-t-e; Alex Biddleman, A. Brown alias Alpi.

"The Court: How do you spell the last name?

"A. A-l-p-i; Harry Hayward, Alexander Durba, Tritonberg, Morris Childs, Clarence Hathaway, Anna Damon, myself, Manning Johnson, Schneidermann——

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Do you know his first name? [7576]

"A. No. He was a district organizer from California, that district, at that time. I don't remember his first name. Paul Crouch, Harry Bridges—he was going under the name of Rossi at that time, alias Rossi, Puro—I forget his first name. George Hewitt alias Tim Holmes.

"Q. How do you spell his name?

"A. Hewitt?

"Q. No, the alias.

"A. Tim H-o-l-m-e-s. There were a number of others I ~~can't recall. I~~ might recall them later."

Now, the same Manning Johnson on cross-examination by Mr. MacInnis. [7577]

"Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Yes. You had met those ten or twelve persons?

"A. No.

"Q. Did you ever meet Harry Bridges?

"A. Yes.

"Q. When?

"A. I met him in New York City.

"Q. When?

"A. Right at the first meeting of the national committee after convention.

"Q. Who introduced Harry Bridges to you?

"A. Jack Stachel introduced him to the committee—to the national committee.

"Q. Did you meet him personally?

"A. No, he was sitting in the meeting with the rest of the members of the national committee.

"Q. Were you close enough to exchange any personal remarks or shake hands together or anything like that?

"A. Well, we were all in the same room.

"Q. The question is this: Did you personally meet Harry Bridges?

"A. Did I personally meet him? Yes, I was introduced to Harry Bridges.

"Q. You say he was introduced to a group. Were you at any time brought next to the man who you say was the [7578] defendant Harry Bridges to a point where you shook his hand and exchanged ordinary courtesies, remarks of introduction that people say to each other?

"A. I didn't shake hands with him. It wasn't that kind of introduction. They don't shake hands and that sort of thing in the Communist Party.

"Q. Well, did you ever meet him after that? A. No.

"Q. Was that the first time you had ever seen him?

"A. That was the first time I had ever seen him.

"Q. And you never met him thereafter?

"A. No.

"Q. Did you make any written memorandum back in 1936, which is of course thirteen years ago, as to the people you met at this meeting of what you call the national committee of the Communist Party?

"A. Do you mind reading that question?

"(Question read.)

"A. No, I didn't make any written memorandum of the persons present at this meeting."

Reading from 2484:

"The Witness (Manning Johnson): At the national committee meeting, at which Harry Bridges was introduced to the membership, we gave him a big ovation. He was introduced by Jack Stachel, who made brief remarks. After [7579] his remarks Jack Stachel said to the members of the national committee that in the future—in the future Harry Bridges would not be brought to members of the national committee as a security reason, that because of his strategic position in the labor movement out here on the Pacific Coast, that if it became known that he was a member of the Communist Party, he would not be able to move and work in the Party interests, in high labor circles on this coast. Furthermore, because of the fact that Communists on the West Coast were constantly under police surveillance, and that they could not make a move without being constantly checked, that in order to safeguard the key people that the Party had in the labor movement on the Pacific Coast that Bridges would not be asked to come into any more of these meetings.

"Furthermore, they said that they would maintain the past contacts which they had with Bridges, that he would be kept fully informed and aware of every decision made by the national committee of the Party.

"Q. In other words, Mr. Bridges occupied some super-secret position beyond that of Browder, Eisler, Stachel, Peters—any of the persons whom you have named—so that he was able to be introduced once, never seen again, but present in spirit thereafter, is that it?

"A. There were a number of Communists who move and operate [7580] in circles of that kind, where they are not permitted to attend certain meetings, where their identity and membership on leading committees of the Party are held absolutely secret. Not only are they kept secret, but they use different aliases in order to cover their movements and confuse the authorities, governmental authorities.

> That is a common and customary practice in the Party."

Now, on page 2512:

> "Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Mr. Johnson, concerning the occasion when you say Harry Bridges was presented to a group of fifty-odd people in 1936, did that occasion take place during the 1936 convention of the Communist Party?
> "A. (By Manning Johnson): That meeting—that closed session of the national committee took place right after—shortly after the election of the national committee. It was either before the convention adjourned or a day or so following."

That is Manning Johnson's testimony. And Mr. Hallinan and his crowd, across the breadth of this land, have spread the calumny that Manning Johnson perjured himself by saying that Harry Bridges was at a meeting of the Central Committee of the Communist Party in New York City on Saturday, the 27th of June, 1936, when Harry Bridges says he was in Stockton. There is the record.

I don't know where Harry Bridges was on the night of June [7581] 27, 1936. I only know that there is no word in this testimony wherein anyone says as a matter of fact that the meeting testified to by Paul Crouch and Manning Johnson took place on Saturday night, the 27th of June, 1936. And they can give you another blackboard talk, and they can use that diagram from now until the Fourth of July, but I have read you from the record the testimony of the two men who were in a position to know, who kept neither note nor memorandum, but who are telling you, ladies and gentlemen of this jury, under oath that Harry Bridges was not only elected to the Central Committee of the Communist Party in 1936 but that he attended a meeting of that committee some time after its election.

You go back to a convention you may have attended thirteen years ago upon which you kept neither note nor memorandum and try to pin your own memory down to the exact time and place at which a meeting, which was one of innumerable meetings that took place during that convention, in fact occurred.

You have heard the statement made by Mr. Bridges and by almost half the total number of 38 witnesses they called here for the purpose of proving Mr. Bridges' alibi. Again remembering that an alibi, to answer the allegations of this indictment, must begin in 1933 and run until September 17, 1945, to alibi Mr. Bridges out of the proof of his membership in the Communist Party, it is a strange thing that the only non-labor publication evidencing the fact that Mr. Bridges made a speech [7582] in Stockton, California, on the night of Saturday, June 27, 1936, was the newspaper of Saturday, which said that he would make a speech that night; no publication, excepting some days later the labor publication the Voice of the Federation, which said that in fact he made it.

The evidence shows that this meeting at which Harry Bridges made the speech was a joint meeting conducted jointly by five labor unions in Stockton, California. Have they brought before you, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, the minutes of the meeting of any one of those five labor organizations which showed that Harry Bridges did make that speech on Saturday night, if he made it?

And then, starting, as you see, on the Sunday preceding, on the 21st, and going up until the 4th of July, in order to establish his alibi, again not to the indictment but the incident of the proof, Mr. Bridges brings reams and reams of union records. And I say with respect to those that Mr. Bridges gave you the answer when, on Wednesday, February 8, at page 5255, Mr. Bridges outsmarted himself. He wanted to show you how cute and clever he was; he wanted to let you know that he was certain by a record given to him and held in his hand of a stated meeting of the board of directors of the ILWU that it was the first meeting that the directors of the ILWU ever had; he wanted to prove it, and prove how smart he really was, what a great recollection for detail this man had, by showing you [7583] he was sure it was the first meeting because a man marked present was not there. And here is what he said:

> "I know that because Harvey was a member of our slate and although we had the arrangement where he would be marked present at some meetings but he was busy on other business, he was organizing; he was excused to organize Warehousemen's Local 34."

That was testified to. And I say to you, ladies and gentlemen, that 10,000 words from me and a whole reel of moving pictures would never characterize the proof on that blackboard and transposed and added to on this chart was well as Mr. Bridges has characterized it himself: "We had a system whereby they were marked present even though they were absent."

Now, Mr. Hallinan——

Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me. Pardon me. That is another deliberate misstatement of evidence, of the Court please. The witness Rathborne, in whom this special prosecutor places so much faith, told the Court and jury under oath that he, who had kept the minutes of all of the meetings during this period in June and early July, testified that the minutes were true and correct.

The Court: Mr. MacInnis and Mr. Hallinan—you on behalf of Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Robertson, and Mr. Hallinan on behalf of Mr. Bridges—will have a full and fair and complete opportunity to argue the matter on behalf of your respective clients. [7584] Now, ordinary courtesies demand in argument that you not interrupt unless you have a vital objection. If you have an objection, urge it. I admonished you yesterday, where you have an argument, and if the matter arose, the matter of what Mr. Rathborne may have testified or may not have testified is something that you may argue, if the record so reflects, you may argue. I think Mr. Donohue, in fairness, is entitled to proceed without interruption.

Mr. MacInnis: I will say this to your Honor——

The Court: That record is so entrenched and so grounded into our procedure that I thought I would not have to interrupt you.

Mr. MacInnis: In cases of our right to argue, I trust that we will not impose upon either the Court or jury by misquoting evidence, and if we do, I certainly invite either your Honor or the special prosecutor to interrupt either Mr. Hallinan or myself. That is our position. We don't think that the latitude in argument allows a misstatement of what the evidence shows.

Mr. Donohue: My distinguished adversary's interruption calls to mind another of the homilies for which I am indebted to Mr. McMillan: "The hit dog yelps."

Now, subsequently to the mistake that Mr. Bridges made on the 8th of November and which I have just called to your attention by reading from the record, Volume 50, in realization of [7585] the fatalness of that mistake, Mr. Bridges came back in Volume 58, in order to change the record and to remove the deadly damage done by that unreflective, unconscious and quite likely truism, and he said, many hundreds of pages later in Volume 58, on February 23, fifteen days later, Mr. Hallinan asking the questions, and Mr. Bridges the witness:

"Q. What were you criticized for?

"A. No. 1, allowing a situation to develop"——

Not getting the answer he wanted, Mr. Hallinan interrupts his witness and says:

"Q. I mean as regards marking him present when he was absent.

"A. We were criticized for that.

"Q. What was the result of that criticism?

"A. There was no more of that. We were told to cut out the funny business and stay by our own rules that we had adopted."

I think it unnecessary to say more about the reams and reams of documents that Mr. Bridges and his counsel have so carefully prepared in order to convince you that by these records he can establish in your minds a doubt that Harry Bridges at some time during the 1936 convention of the national Communist Party in New York was elected to that committee and attended a meeting.

If you want any further indication of the value of these [7586] documents, listen to Mr. Hallinan as I quote from the record, his idea about documentary evidence—and he is now speaking about a piece of evidence that has been reposed in the office of the probation department of Los Angeles County, State of California, and which was brought here by direction of this Court under subpoena from this Court and in the custody of the probation officer. Mr. Hallinan says, on page 7471:

> "We don't believe it was dismissed then. There is no order dismissing it. Anyone can type in a thing on a card."

That is the same Mr. Hallinan who suggests that anyone could type in on the probation record kept in the office of the probation department of Los Angeles County, State of California, what the probation officer read from that card, "Case dismissed," with the initials and the date. That is the same Mr. Hallinan who suggests that impropriety, who will stand here until we have reached the point of exhaustion trying to convince you that you can rely on the reams of records purportedly made thirteen years ago to establish an alibi, not to the indictment but to one item of proof.

So, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I say to you that when they have vented their spleen against those who have testified against them, and when they have argued what to them is the most important because it is the only thing they can argue, the question of the perjury of Paul Crouch and Manning Johnson, [7587] don't be misled as to their motives, because remember, too, as I stated yesterday, Mr. Lawrence Ross—You can call him Rosenstein, if you will. He was Ross when Bridges knew him; he was Ross when Bridges and Schmidt accepted the services of the Communist paper for which he was then the editor, the Western Worker, in the 1936 strike. He was Lawrence Ross when Bridges attended the meeting presided over by Lawrence Ross as chairman at which Schneidermann, whom Schmidt, who only met him once, slipped and called him "Bill," and whom Bridges very familiarly called "Will Schneidermann," made his report on the current International Congress. [7588]

Lawrence Ross stated that as a member of the California delegation to that Congress he voted for Bridges and he voted for Schneidermann. As I said again yesterday, he was not the only delegate from California, and why didn't the defendants bring his co-delegates to deny the allegation?

And lastly, on this day, and perhaps more important than all, was the fact that through the lips of Mervyn Rathborne, Roy Hudson, a name to conjure with in the Communist Party, stated that Bridges had been rewarded by election and service on the National Committee of the Communist Party.

And then they have one more talking point. Or perhaps if you will indulge me for a moment, I will take just a few moments to call your attention to the statement of an alibi by a great text writer, and I incorporate, if I may be guilty of plagiarism, his statment as my own:

> "The defense of an alibi, though in itself most reasonable and just, it being sometimes the only defense which an innocent person can make against an unfounded charge, is liable to an objection, the truth and force of which have been exemplified in so many actual experiences as to occasion it to be viewed with peculiar suspicion and distrust. This objection consists in its great liability to abuse growing out of the case with which it may be fabricated > and sustained by false testimony and the difficulty with which such fraud and perjury are detected. There are two [7589] principal ways in which the fabrication of this species of defense is found to be effective: first, it is effected by collusion and concert between the accused or someone acting in his behalf and one or more individuals who for the sake of hire or an unrighteous friendship profess themselves willing and ready to testify to the necessary fact, though actually false and known to be so, and to accordingly venture upon the course of direct and wilful perjury; second, it is effected by inducing a person who is found to have honestly and innocently received an erroneous impression to state such impression as a fact in the character of a witness under oath. The former of these courses will require no explanation. The latter could be discussed for pages."

Now, when they have finished or perhaps I should say if and when they finish their discussion of the alibi, they will then come to another item of defense always remembering that only two of these 38 witnesses were in a position to and did in fact testify that Bridges was not a Communist. They will want to discuss this question of character evidence, because there is a well recognized principle of law concerning which his Honor will charge you in substance stating that the circumstances of a case may be such that an established reputation for good character standing alone may create a reasonable doubt as to guilt, even though, without such evidence of good character, the evidence of [7590] guilt might be convincing. Let me read you again from a great text writer and if I may be guilty of plagiarism, I will adopt his suggestion:

> "Like the conclusions arrived at by courses of presumptive reasoning in general, the inferences deductible from evidence of character are by no means infallible but on the contrary, liable to more or less error. The great practical difficulty subject to being encountered in the application of this species of evidence consists in the fundamental fact that the reputation for the possession of the particular quality in question is necessarily drawn from the exterior conduct alone, and it is by no means uniformly true that this exterior is the product and result of the internal causes assigned, upon the existence of which its value obviously entirely depends. It is not less true of psychological than of physical facts that appearances are often fallacious. Cases have occurred and continue to occur in this country as well as abroad in which crimes of the highest grade have beyond the possibility of doubt been proved against individuals who, down to the very moment of their discovery, have borne, even among those best acquainted with them, not only good but irreproachable characters, men whose reputation for uprightness in dealing has been almost proverbial, have suddenly appeared as forgeries on the most extensive scale. Men with characters for [7591] mildness and > gentleness and even the habitual observance of religious duties, have appeared as the perpetrators of atrocious murders. These instances of the apparently sudden ruin of the whole moral character which have sometimes astounded entire communities and are otherwise so inexplicable, become easy of explanation on the assumption that what appeared to be the character and was so reputed was in fact a mere exterior without any real internal foundation. The ruin has not been sudden but the reverse. The real character, where it has ever been good, has for some time been secretly corrupted and would have discovered itself sooner had the proper occasion sooner occurred.

> "Cardinal Newman once said character lives in a man; reputation outside of him. A man's character may be unknown and his reputation good or bad. He may have a good character and a bad reputation or a bad character and a good reputation: He may be a man who stole the livery of heaven to serve the devil, or as Shakespeare has said, 'The devil hath power to assume a pleasing shape.' "

And if I might further quote from Shakespeare, who seems to have a word for everything, let me quote one line from Hamlet:

"That one may smile and smile and be a villain."

Now, there isn't any necessity in these days for me calling your attention to the fact that in our own times persons have been charged and convicted of crimes that have shocked the [7592] conscience of our nation, and that incidents in our modern times are so fresh in our memory we can recall instances where the men have established their reputation for truth, honesty and integrity by the testimony of men who stand in the highest positions in the judiciary system of the United States. Undoubtedly the person so accused had a reputation for good character, but the verdict of a jury speaks the truth. Reputation is outside of a man. Character lies within. And the verdict of the jury dissipates the reputation and turns the inside of the man to the outside for the world to see what his character really is.

And so I am persuaded in my own mind that as you analyze, as you will, I am sure, under the careful instructions of His Honor, the value of the reputation evidence, provided you find in the first place that the witness called here established a reputation for good character on the part of these defendants. And I shall not speak of the unhappy situation where five representatives of the shipping interests in the State of California, under the lash of Lou Goldblatt, Bridges' union's secretary-treasurer, came here and sold their conscience and their souls for the dollar of profit.

May we take the recess at this time, Your Honor?

The Court: We will take the morning recess, ladies and gentlemen, with the same admonition to you, particularly during the arguments, as I have given them to you in the past.

(Recess.) [7593]

Mr. Donohue: Having vented their spleen on the Government of the United States and its witnesses, having paraded their alibi, and having congratulated themselves on their reputations for good character, they will then and finally, tell you about the testimony of the three defendants. Robertson said he was called a Communist all his life. Why? Robertson, the man who didn't have sense enough to keep quiet. Robertson, dull and unimaginative, but a pretty good rabble-rouser when you spelled the line out for him slowly. Schmidt—surely, cunning, cold, ruthless; the Communist Party member who gave Henry Schrimpf the card for his application. Schmidt, the man who would hide behind the skirts of his own daughter by calling her as a character witness. Maybe his wife, who wasn't called, and her testimony, which we didn't hear, may more truly have reflected his real character. And Bridges, president of the maritime division of the World Federation of Trade Unions. Bridges, a vain man. Bridges, egotistical, clever, dangerous. Bridges, the man with a greed and a lust for power. Bridges turning to the Communist Party for power is just as natural as a flower turning its face to the sun. Bridges, a fraud and a faker, who prates of the democracy of his union, the union he has ruled with an iron hand. Bridges, whose real devotion to the welfare of his union is a mask to secure the union for his own purpose, the whim of Soviet Russia.

Let me read you from the record, page [7594] 6495:

> "The supreme authority of the international union shall be in the general membership which from time to time through referendum and convention may delegate such powers as it deems proper, necessary and desirable to the international executive board, president or any other officer or officers of the international union."

And then:

> "In practice that is the way our organization functions, and in the first place, all of the officers are nominated by petition signed by the members. For example, any member of our union who has been a member for two years and obtains 250 signatures on a petition, may have his name put on the ballot to run for president, and then the requirements for other officers are one year service and 100 signatures. The officers are elected by direct, secret referendum of the membership. The international officers of the union, of which there are nine, constitute the international executive board, which sets the policies of the union between conventions. The conventions are attended by delegates who are elected by a secret referendum vote of the members of the various local unions. These delegates gather together in a convention, and the policies and program of the union are set forth and determined at those international conventions of ours, and the people directly elected by our 20,000 members gathered together in conference [7595] and determine the > policies of our organization and who run the union and who elect the officers, and with that kind of setup, it is obvious to any fair-thinking person that any small group could not be running the union because it is very easy for the members of the union to recall the officers if they violate the constitution or if they go contrary to the policies and programs set down by our international convention, and the major decisions of the convention are always submitted to referendum vote for approval by the membership before they become effective."

Sounds like Mr. Bridges, doesn't it? But it wasn't. It was Mr. Rathborne, speaking in 1940, as the confirmed Communist he then was—speaking the same thoughts, voicing and prating the same democracy in his union that Bridges, the Communist, gives you in 1950. On that subject the line hasn't changed, and it wasn't very many questions after that that Mr. Rathborne told you that as a matter of fact his union and its policies were dominated by the Communist Party.

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I think I should say to you at this time that in presenting the Government's evidence and in cross-examining the defendants and their witnesses, and now in expressing to you the views of the Goverment with respect to the evidence, I have sought to do so with a careful regard for the rights of these defendants and with painstaking care that no act of mine might in any manner or to any degree [7596] deny them their right to a fair and an impartial trial.

I have also sought to conduct this trial with the dignity and respect for this Court and for our entire judicial system that the people of the United States have a right to expect from one who appears in a representative capacity for them in a prosecution instituted in their name. To do so has not always been easy, for I was a man and a lawyer far longer than I have been a special prosecutor. I may for a long time wonder if perhaps in my zeal to protect the rights of these defendants and in refraining from engaging in a brawl for hire, I may have prejudiced the rights of the people of the United States. In your hands lies the answer to that question.

And as you listen to the views of Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis, I think you should remember that it was Mr. MacInnis who stated to you that he would prove that Manning Johnson was convicted of a felony. That proved to be a misdemeanor committed by a man called "Man Johnson," long since dead. And I think you should remember that it was Mr. Hallinan who sought to impeach the witness John Schomaker by reading from a transcript that didn't exist, a question and answer that was neither asked nor made. And who justified the same upon his right to trick a witness, it being evident that the exercise of that right would at the same time trick both judge and jury. Lest there may be any mistake about that, let me read from the record, page 1449:

> "Mr. Hallinan: . . . I have no intention of producing a [7597] document to confront this witness with, and now I suppose I am divested of the opportunity to ask other questions of a similar nature which I intend to ask and see if I could trick him into saying things that would disclose his manifest unreliability as a witness; in other words, his willingness under any circumstances to say what suits his purpose at the time. I submit, if I may be permitted to finish with one more sentence, I do not know anything that impeaches a witness more than to ask him a quetsion whether under oath on a previous occasion he did not state the exact opposite of what he has stated under oath here, [7598] and the witness replies, 'That is very possible, but I don't recall.'

"Now, I am satisfied with the answer and that is all I want. If they want to clear up the matter and produce some transcript, let them do it.

"Mr. Donohue: May I ask this: In order to determine whether the witness has been tricked by Mr. Hallinan, I ask Your Honor to ask the Reporter to read the statement that was made by Mr. Hallinan as a premise to asking the witness certain questions to determine whether or not Mr. Hallinan did not lead us all to believe that he was reading from a transcript, and if that is so, I think he should now produce that transcript.

"His Honor: It certainly was my understanding Mr. Hallinan was reading from a transcript when he addressed those other questions.

"Mr. Hallinan: And I will say that is the impression I tried to convey, not to Your Honor or the jury, but I tried to convey it to the witness to see if the witness, as I say, having no reliability, was willing to testify to anything, thinking, 'He has a transcript. I better say "Yes" or at least give a guarded statement.'

"The Court: He did say 'Yes.' I do not know this his remark would be regarded——

"Mr. Hallinan: That is up to the jury. [7599]

"The Court: Mr. Donohue, what have you to say?

"Mr. Donohue: I think, if Your Honor please, that we were all led to believe by the questions that Mr. Hallinan asked of this witness he was reading from a transcript of that testimony of this witness at a prior proceeding. This jury has a right to believe that.

"The Court: I will say for the record I believed it.

"Mr. Donohue: And this jury, if Your Honor please, had a right to believe, when he waved that document that this witness did make that answer.

"The Court: I believed further Mr. Hallinan's assurance to me that he was going forward in good faith. I accepted his statement.

"Mr. Donohue: It appears now he never did have such a transcript.

"Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, I do not think we should have a discussion of that kind.

"The Court: I say I believed

"Mr. Hallinan: If we have such a discussion, I think I convince Your Honor very easily. I told you this, when we had the discussion about impeaching this witness, which I abandoned at the time—I was going into these documents and circulars he had distributed around and I abandoned that for the moment. We had the discussion of their admissibility and I told the Court I would mark off on the document [7600] certain portions and wouldn't say anything about them; they were other people's encomiums of Harry Bridges, that I would display good faith to the Court in that connection. But to say, Your Honor, that counsel is forbidden the ordinary devices that lawyers have employed for hundreds of years to trick witnesses in lies and to show a disposition on the witness' part to lie when it is convenient to do so, that is to take away all the weapons for the discovery of truth."

And I ask you, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, as you listen to Mr. Hallinan, to recall that it was Mr. Hallinan, too, who sought to trick the witness Rathborne by the suggestion of the possession by him of a dictograph recording that did not exist. However, I am frank to say it was done in so amateurish a style as quite unlikely to trick anyone. And that it was Mr. Hallinan who said he had proof that the witness Michener had signed a Form 57 in which he had denied under oath two prior convictions of the prohibition act.

Reading from page 6266 of the record:

> "Mr. Hallinan: We know Michener answered those two questions falsely."

At His Honor's suggestion and request, we brought Mr. Michener back.. Where is the proof that Mr. Hallinan would trick you into believing he had?

And I ask you to remember that it was Mr. MacInnis who said [7601] he would prove that the witness Schrimpf had falsely sworn that he was not, nor had he ever been, a member of the Communist Party in an application made by him for his citizenship. And I ask Mr. MacInnis: Where is that proof?

And I ask you, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, to remember that it was Mr. Hallinan who became at least mildly upset when it was suggested during his cross-examination of the witness Rathborne, from a purported carbon copy of a letter, that he produce the original of that letter if there was such.

I caution you at this point, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, because Mr. MacInnis and Mr. Hallinan who not only engaged in the trickery I have just noted, but in addition, they have without exception characterized as a fraud every certified, exemplified, authenticated document produced by the Government, and produced in most instances at their request, whether those documents came from the files of the Immigration Service, the Department of Justice, the Department of Labor, the War Manpower Commission or from the records of the County Court of Los Angeles County, State of California. And, ladies and gentlemen, they will trick you if they can, for they have no faith either in our institutions or in their own cause. And I quote again from the record, page 7471:

> "Mr. Hallinan: I have lost a lot of faith in this court; I will tell you that; a lot of people and institutions I thought people could rely on I have abandoned faith in." [7602]

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I shall look forward with extreme pleasure to the opportunity some days hence to answer the arguments of Mr. Hallinan and Mr. MacInnis.

Thank you for your attention.

Closing Argument on Behalf of Defendant Bridges

Mr. Hallinan: The only part, the only description that Mr. Donohue gave of me that I feel much concerned in correcting immediately is the statement I am going to be tiresome and tedious because I will try to not be and not oppress the jury by saying a lot of unnecessary things.

As a matter of fact, when you start out on one of these arguments you should have a purpose, a reason, in consuming time at all in it.

Now, standing up and reciting off what the witnesses whom you have called have testified to is a great waste of time. The jury knows all of that. There isn't any question as to what the witnesses said. In one particular instance here or there it might be advisable to correct an impression or refresh your recollection, but what possible benefit is gained by saying, "This witness said that or this witness said this or this witness said the other thing?" We all know that. We all sat here and listened to them.

The problem that the jury is confronted with is to tell which of two sets of witnesses who are telling conflicting stories are telling the truth. That is the proposition. In other words, [7603] if all these witnesses that Mr. Donohue produced on the witness stand were telling the truth, then there isn't any question as to the effect that their testimony would bear: it would mean, of course, Mr. Bridges had been a member of the Communist Party; had testified falsely and so forth and so on. But the problem that confronts the jury now is to see, Mr. Bridges and his codefendants having denied this, who is telling the truth.

If counsel has some experience or some sagacity that so suggests a clue, why, then it is useful for him to produce it. Personally I take the position that a man practicing law having a larger experience in these things than a jury can possibly have may be of some help, although I wouldn't trade my hair or my blood pressure for Mr. Donohue's. I am several years older than he is, and I think that I have had more experience in the trial of cases than Mr. Donohue has, although that I only gather from his manner of trying the case and what he has said to you.

For instance, ladies and gentlemen, he picks out a small matter and he exaggerates it into a large one. With regard to the little woman Mrs. Murray, there is no proof of depravity or perjury on her part that she disagrees with either the theologic or political faith of Mr. Donohue. There are a great many people in the world, a great majority of the people in the world, who not only do not believe in the existence of a heaven or hell, but have never heard of it. So that the mere fact that a person says, "I do not believe in the existence of a heaven or hell [7604] and which I realize to Mr. Donohue are correct and orthodox, to say, that is the height of depravity is to inject something into human relations that the faintest aspects of justice would not permit.

Now, the young woman said, "I believe in justice on this earth." And some place further along she said to Mr. Donohue, "I consider your government corrupt and a tool of the monopolies." Neither of those things indicates that the woman wasn't telling the truth.

The contention that a government as it exists is the tool of the most powerful interests in a community is certainly not original with Mrs. Murray. The first knowledge that I have of that is in Plato's Dialogues, back some 2300 years ago, in which he made that contention, and people have said matters of that kind without being painted or cursed or considered unfit to be believed in a court of justice before Mr. Donohue ever encountered Miss Murray.

As far as her belief in heaven or hell is concerned, the whole matter comes to this: that instead of being a guage of perjury, isn't that rather an indicium of truth? Now, we are not children. We know that people are shocked by statements of that kind. Mr. MacInnis talked to this young lady. Her political and religious faith are entirely different from his, but, my friends, we are not expunging any records. The witness came in and gave the statement as she felt it and gave her statement [7605] as she knew and remembered it. If we were interested or if she were interested in deceiving the jury, it would be a very simple thing to say to her, "Now forget that; pretend yourself to be very orthodox in these things. People on the jury have certain prejudices, certain beliefs and sentiments; you should go along with them. By doing that you will be more useful to us." That would be the dishonest thing to do, and I doubt very much that the young lady would do it. I think the young lady is a very honest young woman, wrong-headed, perverse in these ideas, willing to pick up the gauge and fight Mr. Donohue and the august representatives of the government right from her own obscure little position, to stand, as she says, for justice on this earth.

Well, we won't worry about her too much anyhow because here is what we are going to do: Mr. Donohue, myself and Mr. MacInnis and numerous others, we are secure of justice on this earth; we are rich and well off, in peace and security, and my friends, we believe in heaven and hell; we are orthodox in our theology, and we are correct in our morals, and we are going to heaven. We are all of us going to heaven. And as one of the concomitants of all virtue is charity, when we get up there, Mr. Donohue and I and all of us are going up and we are going to talk to God, and we are going to say, "This little woman was wrong. Jean Murray hasn't any standing with you; she doesn't believe in a heaven or a hell, but she believes in justice on earth, and if she fought to get [7606] justice on earth while we were concerned with our own welfare on earth and the salvation of our own immortal souls, take some of the grace that flows over in over-abounding abundance into us and give some of it to little Jean Murray so that she may enter into the kingdom with us." That is what we are going to do, and that will satisfy the universal conscience in all respects. And while we are passing upon the subject of Jean Murray, we will take a little glance at a peculiar circumstance that shows some reflection also upon the testimony of Betty Texeira. Now, you remember that she said that Rathborne told her he had won a thousand dollars playing poker on the ship. She could not possibly have known at the time she testified here that the records of the marshal's office show that around that time Rathborne had received precisely a thousand dollars. So there is from outside some concomitant that sheds the light of truth upon what the girl said.

Now, to get up there and say, "They are lying, they are this, they are that, they are Communists," —what is the use of doing that? Here is what counsel is doing, ladies and gentlemen, and it is a phenomenon of our civilization that we are all familiar with. It is what you call the advertising man's approach to the practice of the law. If you get up and say a thing often enough and seriously enough, "He is a Communist, he is a Communist, he is a Communist," why, after a while a certain number of people begin to believe that he is, and that has been [7607] the fate of Harry Bridges now for 15 years. The newspapers, perjurers, officials, lawyers got up and said, "He is a Communist, he is a Communist, he is a Communist," and it is certain that a large amount of it is bound to stick.

Now, I might suggest to Mr. Donohue, having at one time made a study of the phenomenon of hypnosis, that if he get a shiny object like a half dollar and move it back in front of the jurors' eyes so that they keep looking at it, and then keep saying that, and then keep lowering your voice gradually, you sort of lull them into a sleep. They will accept your word. You may write on their minds and they won't pay any attention to anything else, so that you will have infused into them that thought by your own statement, although, of course, you do not know more about it than anybody else and maybe a little bit less.

Hitler exemplified this in his single statement that if you tell a lie often enough, finally everybody will believe it.

Now, another little matter that we might just glance at is the utility of arguing at all. In an opening statement there is some use. A lawyer gets up and he tells the jury in advance what he expects to prove. If he is fair, he will tell them the whole story. He is entitled, and he should say everything which he can reasonably expect he would be allowed to produce in the evidence. I might be wrong. Some ruling of the Court might bar out certain matters. There might be some failures of the proof [7608] that he is unable to supply. But he is entitled, and he should tell the jury exactly what he intends to prove. With some lamentable lack of success, I endeavor to do that in an opening statement to the jury.

Now, as far as the closing argument is concerned, I do not know whether what I would have to say would be any more persuasive. As a matter of fact, in the early part of that trial, the criticisms from my own camp were at least as vigorous as those from the other side, and every time I opened my mouth somebody would come up running from the courtroom—maybe a friendly newspaper reporter, one of my associates or something like that—and say, "Why don't you keep your big mouth shut? You are getting in bad with everybody. Everybody is sore at you." And ordinarily they point out one of the ladies in the jury box, saying, "When you said that, Mrs. So-and-So stiffened." And by the time I got through, this poor lady would have been as stiff as a ramrod.

I am not an amiable or a lovable person. Don't pretend to be. I am what I am. But I haven't anything to sell, and I am not trying to pretend to the jury or pretend to anybody else that I am any different from what I am. What is in me comes right out on the surface.

I started out in the case, Mr. MacInnis and myself, when Mr. Donohue came here, without any quarrel and with a hospitality worthy of the city, as he flatteringly tells us. Mr. MacInnis [7609] and myself went up to Mr. Donohue when he first came in here with all that old western hospitality, you know, a couple of fellows in chaps and gave Mr.

Donohue the big hand and said, "Tie your hoss up at that hitching post and come in and have a drink." And then when the other lad came carooting out here a few weeks afterwards we went up and did the same thing. We were as affable as affable could be.

Well, what was the result? I want to show you the first gun fired in the controversy that now carries Mr. Donohue to the disagreeable finality that he has put here. Here is Mr. Donohue:

> "We expect," he says, as he told you here in this argument, "to present this case with dignity to the United States, carefully safeguarding the rights of these three defendants, and I most respectfully observe to Your Honor that while the contemptible and contemptuous conduct of Mr. Hallinan, who has roamed this courtroom since Monday of last week like a mad dog, disregarding the rights of everyone including your own, I say, if Your Honor please, that the integrity of the courts of the United States require Your Honor at this time that action be taken, that we be not subjected to this kind of conduct in the future."

And he went on:

> "Mr. Donohue: If Your Honor please, I do not concede that the removal of Mr. Hallinan from the representation of Mr. [7610] Bridges would operate to the detriment of Mr. Bridges. I quite definitely feel to the contrary. I concur thoroughly and wholly in what Mr. MacMillan has said."

And Mr. Paisley arose and said this:

> "Mr. Hallinan—I will not refer to him as 'counsel'—I will not prostitute the word by using it in relation to this matter—he has desecrated this temple of justice, Your Honor. This is the temple of justice; he is trying to make this a bawdyhouse."

Now, under what circumstances were these statements made? And prescinding from my own situation, let us take this little statement of Mr. Donohue about Mr. MacInnis, whose reputation for courtesy and politeness is something that he deserves slapped down once in a while. He is too damned nice. They said this about Mr. MacInnis:

> "If Your Honor please, I do not know whether Mr. MacInnis is plainly stupid or cunningly culpable."

Now, getting back to the matter I was discussing myself, here is what it comes to. I am making the opening statement to the jury, trying to tell them what I expect to prove, and which I submit has been proved to the hilt. But Mr. Paisley jumps up and says, "Your Honor, if this is not contempt of court, I have never seen it in my career." Here is an officer of the United States Government now at the outset of the case accusing his opponent of contempt of court and citing the wrath and malice of [7611] the court against him.

> "Mr. Donohue: I object to the question and again state to Your Honor that Mr. Hallinan's > deliberate and repeated questions, which he knows as a lawyer are beyond the scope of that limitation defined by Your Honor, is highly contemptuous of the decision of this court.

> "Mr. Paisley: He has been told a dozen times that what went on in those prior proceedings had nothing to do with the simple issue in this case. He stands here repeatedly showing his utter contempt of Your Honor's rulings."

So here are all these fair gentlemen. Mr. Donohue is preserving the rights of the defendants that come into this court room and attacking another lawyer for doing his duty under difficult circumstances, and citing against that lawyer the hatred and rage of the court by misrepresenting to the Court the effect of what was going on, causing that lawyer to receive a sentence of six months in jail and disbarment from this court. And then, my friends, here is the cream of it: With a couple of bailiffs holding onto the lawyer so he could do nothing or say nothing, to demand that then and there the lawyer's imprisonment start immediately so that he would be removed from the case and that he be not permitted to represent further the man who had chosen him and selected him. I am going to repeat the one statement here, where the Court points out that possibly under the circumstances it might be an injustice to the defendant if he [7612] would not grant me the stay of execution which I solicited, not out of any concern for myself, but in order that my client's rights be protected, and that he be not mistreated and robbed of his rights to a defence. When the Court suggested that that might be right, that I be permitted to stay here and start the sentence after the finish of this case, what do these people do? They paid me the high compliment of getting up here and insisting and demanding and petitioning the Court that that request that I made be not granted and that my sentence be required to start immediately, that the case be continued two weeks and Bridges go out and find other counsel; other counsel who in two weeks could prepare a case as difficult and long as this. And here is this fine gentleman who has talked about fairness—his urbanity, his smoothness, as some of these people define it:

> "If Your Honor please, I do not concede that the removal of Mr. Hallinan from the representation of Mr. Bridges will operate to the detriment of Mr. Bridges. I quite definitely feel to the contrary. I concur thoroughly and wholly in what Mr. McMillan has said."

And poor little McMillan, a hack brought in here to lend this plot some sort of respectability, had first made the objection that I should not be granted that. So when we are talking of fairness, let us not ask, "What does this man say about himself?", but "How does he act?"

The Court: We will take the noon recess, ladies and [7613] gentlemen of the jury, and we will resume at 2:00 o'clock. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [7613-A]

Afternoon Session—Friday, March 17, 1950

Mr. Hallinan: I might remark that something in line with the criticism directed at poor Mrs. Murray was that directed against B. B. Jones. B. B. Jones certainly seemed to be, from outward appearances, a figure of honesty and veracity. He minced no words; he said what he wanted to say in his own way. But counsel takes umbrage at the fact that Mr. B. B. Jones called him a liar and used even stronger words in describing John Schomaker's story.

Now, in a more urbane civilization, an incident like that would receive a higher merit. You may remember Victor Hugo's story of the sergeant at Waterloo, Cambron, the last sergeant of the last square of the old guard, and the rest of the grand army had been swept from the field. He refused to surrender, and Hugo says that Wellington himself rode up to the square and called out, "Surrender, brave Frenchman!" and Cambron answered with an oath. Now, I am not going to offend the ears of the jury and spectators by stating just what the oath is, not too bad, but we will be delicate about the matter. Victor Hugo goes on and says he apotheosized an oath, he glorified a vulgarism. And the French now have a term "mot de Cambron," meaning "Cambron's word." So instead of indulging in a vulgarism, it means that a member of the Chamber of Deputies will stand up and say, "Mot de Cambron." I imagine in a French court if B. B. [7614] Jones had attended there and given the statement he did, that we would now have a new figure of speech, "phrase de B. B. Jones." In other words, "It is a god damn lie." So hereafter when we want to use that term, all we have to say is "phrase de B. B. Jones."

The subversiveness of the language of Mrs. Murray finds some backround in a document that I have no doubt will, at least at the end of this trial, find itself in the Index Expurgatoria of the Attorney General with the lists of all those American-sounding organizations that we have heard about. Here is the language; I disclaim it; I say it isn't so; I back away from it. I only say that it is some authority for the young lady's contention:

> "We have not one or two or three but many established and formidable monopolies in the United States. We have not one or two or three but many fields of endeavor in which it is difficult if not impossible for the independent man to enter. We have restricted credit, we have restricted opportunity, we have controlled development, and we have come to be one of the worst ruled and one of the most completely controlled and dominated governments in the civilized world,—no longer a government by opinion; no longer a government by means of vote of the majority, but a government by the opinion and the duress of small groups of dominant men. If the government is to [7615] tell big business how to run their business, then don't you see that big business-men have to get closer to the government than they are now? Don't you see that they must capture the gov> ernment?" ". . . must capture the government. They have already captured it."

Now, who is that? That is The New Freedom, by Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States and president of the University of Princeton. So that contention is nothing novel and shouldn't shock anybody.

Another little matter that was discussed here to which I want to call your attention again because it contains a phrase that may require some explication, in which Mr. Paisley, in carrying out Mr. Donohue's resolution to treat the defendants with great fairness that he has told you he came here prepared to treat them with, Mr. Paisley seconded him ably in that endeavor.

Now, I want to say this: that I am ordinarily fairly cool-blooded, do not lose my temper; but it is impossible to describe the feeling of dismay that I experienced when I suddenly found myself confronted with not the possibility but the probability that I would be removed from the case, with the three or four weeks of hard, active work that I had put in assimilating the material to be produced here, learning what the case was about, and trying to prepare myself for a proper presentation, and that poor Bridges should have to go out and [7616] find himself some person less versed in it, probably less experienced, and bring him in here to contest this matter, and the language, the immoderate language that was employed.

I defy Mr. Donohue to point out in this record or elsewhere, up until the moment that he made the speech that I read off to you, one word or one syllable that evidenced the least discourtesy on my part or that of Mr. MacInnis toward either of these counsel. We were courteous and we were kind to them. We came over and we greeted them. And I will say this: that we were a couple of little babes in the wood. When these gentlemen pulled their chops back over their teeth, we thought they were giving us an affable smile. It was the kind of a smile that the wolf gave Little Red Riding Hood when he met her in the timber. And in a short time the whole effect was changed by statements such as this gentleman has made. He has now run me through the metamorphosis of goat to dog and back to goat again, and I think about completed that entire circle.

And Mr. Paisley, with his delightful little remark, "Your Honor, this is a temple of justice; he is trying to make this a bawdy house." I have been busy in the preparation of the case, haven't had the opportunityto look up the exact significance of the term. I can't tell you what a bawdy house is; I have never been in one, but I have no doubt that Mr. Paisley will furnish you with an exact description. [7617]

In addition to that, this fairness that counsel has, there is another little matter that he played with all through the case; and finally, feeling that it was not sufficiently imbued into the jury and stirred up enough to arouse some prejudice, he came out with it in his closing argument. On every occasion when the name of Mr. Norman Leonard was mentioned as being of some assistance to us, or where there was any discussion of how hard pressed we were to get work done and what shortness of time there was, we were reminded that we had at our beck and call, undoubtedly, the law firm of Gladstein, Resner, Andersen &—some other man, I forget who. All right. And that was constantly drummed, constantly drummed. Law firm. And if somebody's name was mentioned, always, "You mean Mr. So-and-so of the law firm of Andersen, Resner, Gladstein &—". So that Mr. Bridges finally, in amusement, when counsel started in, "You mean Mr.—?" "Yes, the firm of Gladstein, Andersen, Resner and,—". and so on. Well, finally, out it popped. And by the way, permit me for a minute now to point out to you the sinister visage of the gentleman who has been assisting us, Mr. Norman Leonard—very nice, amiable, young man, nothing bad about him, nothing to be concealed.

As far as the firm of Gladstein, Andersen, Resner & Somebody is concerned, it is a firm that for many years has been devoted to handling almost exclusively work for labor organizations and liberal organizations; and in an evil hour for himself, [7618] Mr. Gladstein took upon himself the difficult and arduous task of defending one of the eleven Communists who were recently convicted in New York.

You know, when we were admitted to the bar, we took an oath, and that is one thing that has always stuck in my mind as sort of glorifying and justifying the franchise that the people of the country give us to practice law. It said this:

> "I will never refuse for reasons personal to myself the cause of the downtrodden and the oppressed."

Well, I assure you, my friends, that the carrying out of that promise is a very dangerous and very expensive procedure.

Now, we have had all of this talk about Mr. Gladstein, and finally Mr. Donohue can not resist, in all his fairness. You see, he doesn't want to have anything unfair done to the defendants as to who Mr. Gladstein is and that he represented one of the Communists in New York. And I suppose by that same interpretation, that makes Mr. Gladstein a Communist. Then, to go one step more, that makes his client a Communist. So that makes Mr. Bridges a Communist. And so that we do not fall short of the last distances of logic, then that undoubtedly makes me a Communist. But what is worse than that, the next poor devil I represent, he is going to be a Communist because I represented him. That is the fair procedure that was carried out by this gentleman in pursuance of the high purpose that he said he came here invested with. [7619]

Now, we won't pay any attention to little misstatements of the evidence, even where they arise to the dignity of being implications against the intelligence of the jury. For instance, he says this:

> "When Mr. Rathborne left the Communist Party, Bridges destroyed him."

Now, Rathborne testified that he left the Communist Party in June. Then in November he chose not to run again for reinstatement in the CIO, pulled out of it, got out of the way. Bridges made a laudatory talk about him and collected and handed to him $250. He says that when Rathborne got out of the Communist Party Bridges destroyed him! That is another example of the fairness.

And as far as Mr. Gladstein is concerned, now, there have been statements here from the witness stand as to Mr. Donohue's previous mode of earning a living. When Mr. MacInnis came abreast of the situation that existed in the court, in which I was a "mad dog" who should be sentenced immediately and forthwith sent to prison and prevented from further participation in defending Mr. Bridges, Mr. MacInnis and myself suddenly woke up. I felt like a man going in to engage in a boxing bout who finds his opponent has lead in his gloves and murder in his heart. We were up against something that we hadn't expected—here was something deadly and treacherous. That wasn't the ordinary criminal case at all. We thought we were coming in here [7620] and we were going to meet a number of people who said that they saw Harry Bridges at a meeting, a meeting of Communists—a meeting of people who professed things that high officials of the government didn't profess. We thought we were going to have Manning Johnson, something of that ilk, come out here from the east and say what the principles of the Communist Party were, and try to incite a hatred and a prejudice against people who even associated with Communists. But we had no expectation in the world that anybody was going to take the stand, as Schomaker did, and say that Harry Bridges signed an application; and we had no thought in the world that Crouch and Johnson were going to say, or anybody else, that Harry Bridges had ever been elected to any high office in the Communist Party because those were inventions that imagination could not conjure.

But when we found out what we were up against, when we found the hypocrisy behind the smile and the iron hand in the velvet glove, we started to find out some things about these other gentlemen, and we found them out to such effect that finally Mr. Donohue made a tacit truce with Mr. Bridges on the witness stand:

"I have asked you nothing about your personal life, don't you mention mine." So we won't. But let's ask Mr. Donohue this little question: If you represent and have connections, as your Mr. Pearson claims, with Frankie Costello, the Sicilian gangster and murderer; are you a gangster and a murderer? If [7621] your intimate is John Maragon, the five percenter, corrupter of Congressmen, are you a corrupter of Congressmen? If your chief source of revenue and livelihood is Milton Kronheim, conductor of the liquor lobby in New York, briber of Congressmen, are you a briber of Congressmen? If he purchased for his son, Milton Kronheim, Jr., your partner, a municipal judgeship as was alleged in the public print by the same Drew Pearson and broadcast throughout the world, are you guilty of a part in it? We exculpate you from it. We say you are not. We will judge you by what you do in this case. But don't judge Mr. Bridges, then, by the persons who have represented him heretofore. And we are not apologizing or not explaining that we offer any apology for Mr. Gladstein, because I think all Mr. Gladstein did was bravely defend a difficult case in a bad time.

Now, another suggestion is that the staff of the United States Attorney's office here is undermanned, so they haven't the facilities for prosecuting cases in the ordinary course of events and therefore they must go outside the federal family and hire a private lawyer to conduct the prosecution of this kind. Now, all lawyers dislike that, because when you have the regular constituted authorities, they may step out of line, but ordinarily you have some protection. They have their office to sustain, they are fearful of a reversal, they are fearful of criticism ultimately for having done an unjust thing. But I have never yet seen a special prosecutor in any case—and [7622] I have tried many of them—that the special prosecutor either from an original intention to do all he could to carry out the purposes for which he was put in the position, or being carried along by the spirit of the play or whatever it may be, did all he possibly could to get a conviction by fair means or foul. And that is precisely and exactly what has happened here. If the staff of the United States Attorney was undermanned, what was Mr. McMillan, the chief prosecutor of that office, or the chief deputy, doing here during all of this trial until the day before Lawrence Ross' perjury was exposed? He participated in the matter. He is an able man, a hack. I am madder at him than I am at either Paisley or Donohue, for this reason, that McMillan and I, I thought, were friends for years. We have always spoken to each other kindly, we have always gone along in a nice, affable sort of way. I have done him little favors and he did me little favors. But when these gentlemen descended upon us out of the East, these Assyrians clad in purple and gold, they swept everybody away. Everybody was unfair. They were such magnificents, descending upon us in carrying upon our ordinary little western court that McMillan fell in with him and he put up one of the strongest arguments of why Hallinan should be driven out of the court and why a stay of execution should not be granted to him. So I have little for Mr. McMillan.

Now, as I have said, too, ladies and gentlemen, in entering the argument I may feel advised that my personality is not such [7623] as to win over any hearts or any minds, and people think and have thought for a long time that I am not a very pleasant or amiable sort of character. And that may all be true. But the jury is not trying my character or my disposition. That is a matter that the jury is not to be concerned with. And the more affable and the more genteel you find the person addressing you, the more you had better look for something that is being put over on you. The man who has something to sell has to adopt a particular attitude in order to get it across. I haven't anything to sell.

Counsel read off that I have said I have lost a lot of faith in this court, meaning in this particular place, and persons and institutions that I had thought I could rely upon. Well, even before I entered this court I had lost a lot of hope, a lot of faith, and what's more important probably, a lot of charity. But the one thing that I still did retain was my sincerity, and I don't want to lose that. And I don't want to change what I have to say, I don't want to call fair foul or foul fair in order to please or placate anybody—I don't care whether it is a judge, jury, prosecutor or spectator.

All this is a matter of development. We don't start off in that way. When I was young I used to run around, you know, breaking lances on windmills and trying to rescue princesses—many of whom didn't want to be rescued—and rushing here to aid that cause and rushing there to aid that one. Well, that is all [7624] very well, but after you get thumped around a bit, you begin to get ringing in your ears, and you finally subside away from that. You get into the place where you crawl off into a corner and curse the injustices of life—maybe take a kick at it once in a while if they come too close. That is about the position that I have degenerated into. In the meantime, I haven't any desire to be offensive or to injure anybody, and sometimes when I am reproached with my manner of talk, action, I am kind of surprised that people criticize them, because I am like the tuba player that said he blew sweet notes into the end of the tuba but they came out kind of sour on the other end. We all have an idea, I suppose, that we are bigger and better and handsomer and more capable than we are. We are like Rostand's story of Chanticleer, the magnificent barnyard cock who had been deluded into believing that his voice was the sweetest in the world, and then one night out in the darkness of the forest he heard for the first time the heart-melting melody of the nightingale, and he was so ashamed and disillusioned that he cried out that he would never sing again. And the tiny bird, lost in the darkness of the tree, conceived his to be the heartbeat of the infinite night, answered him and said, "Learn, oh, comrade, this sorrowful but reassuring fact, that no cock of the morning or evening nightingale has quite the song of his dreams." And when he was going back to his habitation, he reflected sadly that he couldn't abrogate what he had. He said, "We can only [7625] sing the song we know, the song God gave us."

And furthermore, if there is any question about punishing me for being discourteous, talking too loud or otherwise being inappropriate, then I think six months in jail and disbarment is enough to take care of whatever I may have done in this little instance. And as far as my conduct alongside of Mr. Donohue's is concerned, I am a little like the irreverent Jew who was approached by the rabbi for failing to show up on the Day of Atonement. And he said to him "You are so smart!", he said, "You won't even come around and say a prayer asking for forgiveness on the Day of Atonement." So the parishioner said, "Well, rabbi, I will tell you how it is," he said, "I have a separate deal with God." He said, "I had a talk with him last night and I told him, 'Yes, I admit I cut a corner once in a while and I eat food that isn't kosher and I do a lot of things. I don't observe the regulations. But how about you? You fill the world with bloodshed and misery. You make orphans of the child and you slay the infant at its mother's breast.' Then I said, 'I will tell you what you do. You forget my offenses and I will forget yours.' "

And he said, "Well, God said all right, 'we will do that.' " So the rabbi thought a little bit and said, "Well you know," he said, "you let him off too easy. With the advantage you had you could have made him redeem all Israel." [7626]

To prescind from these matters that have been forced upon us by the statements of counsel, his criticisms of our conduct, his designation of our somewhat feeble reply, the really harmful things he said against us and his protestations to fairness, we come to consider, ladies and gentlemen, what I said about the matter of determining in this case who is telling the truth. Now, it would be futile and a silly performance for me to start reading off this person's testimony and that one's against it, here, there, and the other one, pretending that the jury will only receive what I have said and ignore what the witnesses have said—a device that counsel has used and which I have seen a thousand times, insurance lawyers and other persons of that sort, put through these little cases that are tried in the civil courts. But you have to consider this: that the great task of the jury in this case is to determine who is telling the truth in this case. Has the prosecution produced credible evidence to establish to a moral certainty and beyond any reasonable doubt the truth of the charge that is made here? And in order to determine your decision in it you have to consider the roles of the various persons that have participated in the drama. Now, it is the obligation of the grand jury to return an indictment if there is a reasonable suspicion that a person has committed an offense. Now, a reasonable suspicion is not a very strong force, so a grand jury returns an indictment when sufficient evidence is introduced before it to raise a [7627] reasonable suspicion that a crime has been committed and to put the person who is charged upon his defense for that crime. Ordinarily, as in this case, the defendants are not heard before the grand juries. Their witnesses are not heard. In this case it seems that certain facts that a grand jury might have taken into consideration, such as the previous perjury of some of the prosecution witnesses, was not presented to it either. But passing that up, the grand jury finds its indictment on reasonable suspicion. Now, the judge who tries the case, it is his obligation to allow the jury to pass upon the guilt or innocence of the defendants if, 'disregarding everything in their favor, and considering only everything that has been said against them, disregarding all inferences, all conclusions as well as all contrary evidence, a jury could find a verdict of Guilty. It is the duty of the prosecuting attorney to present the case for the prosecution as strongly as he can. Now, there is a sort of theoretical and hypothetical supposition, more honored in the breach than in the observance, that the prosecuting attorney is supposed to consult the safety of both the defendant and the prosecution. But, as they never do it, why worry about it? A special counsel is not much worse than regular counsel in that matter. The spirit of the game, the desire to win a victory, the personal glorification of the man, drives him to thing so that subconsciously he hides things away that would affect him under other circumstances, and he puts the case on as strongly [7628] as he can. So we will concede him that right. That is what he does, and that is all he did.

Now, I esteem that it is the duty of the attorney for the defendant to present the case as strongly as he can for the defense. I do not feel that we are under any obligation, and if we were under such, I think I might confess I would slide around the table to get out of it, to find anything or discover anything that would favor a conviction.

And then the question is: What is the function of the jury? Now, the function of the jury is this, that after hearing all the evidence, all the arguments and all the instructions, it must ask itself one question and only one question, and here is the question: Does there now exist a reasonable doubt of the guilt of this defendant? If the answer to that question is "Yes," then it is the sworn duty of the jury to bring in a verdict of acquittal. You can say, "I think the defendant is guilty; I believe he is guilty. I am almost certain that he is guilty." That is not enough. You must then ask yourself one other question: "However, can I say to a moral certainty and beyond any reasonable doubt that there is not one reasonable doubt left of the guilt or innocence of the defendant?" And however strongly you may feel, if your conviction falls short of that test, it is your sworn duty to acquit. Now, you go out afterwards and you can say to the prosecution or you can say to anyone else whom you wish, "I am fairly sure that the [7629] man was guilty. I feel strongly that he probably was. But that was not the question that I was sworn to try. I came into the court and pledged myself to one task and only one task, and that was to determine whether or not there existed and continued to exist after the case had been submitted to me one reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant. I found reasonable doubt. I acted upon my oath and my duty and I acquitted him," and that is the task of the jury. The jury is by far the most important portion of the trial, because while the lawyers can manipulate arguments and place witnesses on the stand and ask questions; while the Court can pass upon matters of law, instruct the jury, and so forth, the jury is the sole determiner of the facts in the case, and all these cases are issues of fact: "Is this thing so or is it not so?" That is the thing that the jury has to decide. And it is important also for the jury to have this in mind: that it is by no means an arm of the prosecution. The jury does not sit here as part of the task force that the prosecution can employ to destroy a man. The jury is a part of the defense. The function of the jury from historic times has been this, and this is its justification and this is its glory, because if all the jury is going to do is accept the word of a prosecutor and send people to ruin, then what is the use of a jury at all? Then we just fling ourselves on the mercy of the Donohues and Paisleys who are sent out here to prosecute. What is the use of wasting time if the jury is going [7630] to abrogate its high duty and its high privilege and hand it over to some person who comes out here and says thus and so? What the jury does is this: The jury is a collection of ordinary inhabitants of a country, the fellow townsmen, the co-citizens of the defendant, and they form themselves in a wall around him and they say to the prosecution: "Prove to us that this, our brother, is guilty to a moral certainty and beyond any reasonable doubt and we will deliver him to you. But prove less than that and you must go your way."

And it is the axiom of the law, my friends, too, that it is better that ten guilty go free than that one innocent man suffer. That is a rule of the law that has existed for centuries and is still the rule of the law. And it is the rule of the law that every doubt, every presumption, every question, must be turned on the side of innocence. The law stands before you with the scale in its hands. On the one side it puts the proof of guilt, on the other side is the proof of innocence. But wherever a question or a doubt ensues, the presumption of innocence, like Patroclus' sword, must be thrown in the side of the scale that demands an acquittal. That is not something that is asked of you as a favor. That is what you come in here and swear to do, and to abrogate that would be to do an injury to the jury system, to do an injury to democracy, to do an injury to democratic processes worse than any of these infringements that it is supposed [7631] certain persons are attempting to do to that institution. And that requirement of proof to a moral certainty and beyond any reasonable doubt, what does it amount to? Well, it is a confession to these established facts: One, that it is easy to accuse and difficult to disprove; second, that from time immemorial men have borne false witness against their neighbors; third, that against the terrible power of the state, the individual is helpless indeed; and, fourth, it is a confession to the frailty of human nature. To the temptations under which witnesses succumb to say what is not so, a confession to human fallibility and frailty in identifying the facts as they have happened. It is part of the mercy and a part of the justice that is ingrained in mankind. It is, in fact, finally what has been said, a part of that divine spark that our father Adam carried with him when he looked back through tear-filled eyes to hear across the flaming swords of the guarding angels the dying music of Paradise. And that presumption, that ruling applies not only to the entirety of the case but to every fact, circumstance and condition of it.

We are accustomed to consider countries that do not have the jury system as backward, reactionary, barbaric, undemocratic. In many European countries, especially those that we have been most recently inclined to criticize, cases of this kind are tried before a three- or five-judge court. The judges are appointed by the government, just as the judges in this country [7632] in the federal jurisdictions are appointed by the Government, and we instinctively look with suspicion upon the decisions of those courts, instinctively, and I think rightfully. The great institution that the Anglo-Saxons have transmitted to posterity is the jury system, the jury of ordinary men and women, the cross-cut of the population, the people who represent the defendant who are brothers of his, co-citizens of his, and charged with protecting him against the oppression of the Government itself. That is the glory of the Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence. [7633] And it is necessary and essential that a jury realize the dignity that it must ascribe to itself if the law is to be properly administered in courts of this kind.

The jury, as I have said, is the most important part of the matter. We could dispense with the judge, we could dispense with prosecuting attorneys and we could dispense with the defense attorneys, but still a jury could determine and pass for itself by its own questioning on its own motion on the guilt or innocence of a defendant. So don't take that high office that the people of the country have entrusted to you and make of it less than what they have expected you would make of it. You have to ascribe to yourself the dignity of that office.

Right now you occupy one of the most important offices in one of the most important trials in the world, because this trial has repercussions and is read of in far-off places in languages that none of us could ever understand; and this jury is the most important body, and each individual one of you is the most important man in this courtroom.

The safety of all of us depends upon that one element, and that element, the recognition of its dignity, embodies certain other virtues. You have to have integrity and you have to have courage. You can't feel that you are going to be embarrassed or upset to face some official and say, "We don't accept what you have said; we find in favor of the defendant." You have to have integrity if you are going to keep your oaths and you are going [7634] to keep your word; and if you drop those, then everything is gone. Then there is no use talking about democracy; then there is no use talking about republics; there is no use talking about the freedom of the individual or his right to free speech or his right to free action, or anything else; everything goes.

We live in a world surrounded by terrible forces. We are as though we were inhabitants in a clearing of the jungle. From outside it come all kinds of threats to our existence, threats to our happiness, threats to our security. We would become the victims of lust for gain and the lust for power, the avarice, the ambitions of men. And there is only one protection: that is the dignity that a jury ascribes to its office. It is like that line from Dante when he tells us how he, accompanied by Virgil, traversed some of the pathways down into hell, and was led finally along a narrow causeway beside which flowed a little stream and a rain of fire perpetually fell upon the victims of divine justice who lay beside it. "From this fire," he says, "we were protected by the thin vapors of the stream that bubbled beside us; by such shadowy bulwarks," said the poet, "do the Flemings between Kadzand and Bruges protect their land against the ever-threatening sea."

And by the dignity which a jury ascribes to itself, by its resolution to perform its duty at all hazards, and in accordance with the tradition for which it was created, rests all our security,—everything we have, our freedom, our liberty, [7635] everything.

That a jury will perform its duty and that it will obey that word and that commandment can ordinarily be taken for granted. But of course its resolution in that behalf is affected also by human frailty and environment. They come into court composed of educations, ideas, matters that have been infused into them from childhood. We all think that we have a clear and impartial view of numerous matters upon which we are thoroughly biased and bigoted. It isn't our fault; it is that same human nature and its frailties that we all fall heir to.

It would be rather difficult to assume that all of the jurors, having read about Harry Bridges over the years past, having seen and heard accusations and statements made against him, would not come in here with some prejudice and some feeling in their minds that the man probably is a Communist.

If you take a great heavy weight and suspend it from the ceiling, with all the strength you might be able to muster, you couldn't move it an inch; but if you give gentle taps upon its outward swing, you can soon send it crashing through the wall. And it is an easy thing where a prosecution has a prejudice already established against a defendant at the time it goes into court, to simply keep tapping it in the direction that it is already inclined to take, in order to secure an unjust result. And that is the thing that jurors must guard themselves against.

Now, you, sir, said that you had a bad opinion of Harry [7636] Bridges when you came in here. We didn't care about that. As I said about Jean Murray, the very acknowledgment of that fact was a gauge of the honesty of the prospective juror. We felt that any honest man or woman who would come in here would be speedily convinced that there was no guilt in Harry Bridges, and we were willing to take any honest person, even with the prejudice.

But what would it be if you decided this case upon a prejudice? What would it mean if you permitted to come into court and sit beside you a ghostly mentor, the shadow of things that you had heard outside, and take that phantasmagoria's advice instead of your reasoning of your senses and the things that you heard in the court? Why, it would be the same as though you sat here for four or five months, heard everything that was said, listened to all the evidence, the arguments and the instructions, and then went outside the door and picked up some person who hadn't been in court for one minute, and said to him, "You decide it for me; you pass upon what my verdict is going to be," because that is in effect what it would be. You take the man who came into this courtroom with nothing but a prejudice and with nothing but a feeling that there must be something to it; where there is so much smoke there must be some fire, and so forth, and you are saying to that person, ignorant of what has gone on in here, "I will surrender to you all that I have learned, all of my reasoning and all my [7637] judgment, and you decide it upon the prejudice that you already have." In other words, you would have all wasted your time, wasted your effort and you have defrauded us. And that is something we know isn't going to happen and something concerning which we have no concern.

If there is any figure, any historic figure, that is invested with the contempt of humanity, it is the unjust and biased judge; the judge, who, elected or appointed to high office, sits upon the bench with his mind made up in advance as to what he is going to do in a particular case and how he is going to rule before he has heard the evidence, and then conducts himself in accordance with that resolution.

From time immemorial from the earliest writings of the Talmud, the Koran, the Bible, and from the tomes of ancient Asiatic countries, history and tradition have recorded the contempt and the hatred that mankind has felt for the unjust judge; the judge who acts upon a prejudice and a bias, upon some motive or some consideration foreign and alien to what he has heard in the court. And for a jury to act according to that sort of tenet would be for the juror to constitute himself an unjust judge and to pass his decision and make his decision upon considerations that have justly deserved and received the contempt of all mankind.

Now, there is one difficulty with discussing prejudice, with discussing preordained opinion, and that is that, precisely [7638] and in proportion as he is stupid, does a person nurse and hold to himself his prejudices and his bigotries; precisely as people are ignorant and precisely to the extent that they close their minds against anything new, does a person nurse his prejudices. The German poet Goethe said, "Against stupidity the very gods contend in vain." So that nothing can be done to argue that sort of thing down. There is only one hope, and that is that the stupid person be also an honest person and then he will drive the thing out.

We select a jury upon the basis of its intelligence and its honesty. We try to appraise the people who come in here and sit here to determine what sort they are. We pick people that we feel are both honest and intelligent, and therefore, as I say, we haven't any fear but that any juror who came in here with a prejudice—and we assume, we allow that there may have been some—will not allow that to enter into his deliberations.

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you.

(Recess.) [7639]

Mr. Hallinan: If a jury forgets its importance and its function, it is never forgotten by anybody else. If a case goes wrong or if an unjust decision is returned, the judge doesn't take it upon himself to blame himself, the prosecutor doesn't say, "I misled the jury," or "I feel some qualms of conscience at this." They shrug it off immediately to the place where it properly deserves. They put the responsibility on the shoulders that the law designs to carry it—the conscience of the jurors themselves. And I have heard many a prosecuting attorney say of an unjust decision, "The jurors found him guilty." And that's all that is to it. Tolstoy points out that the division of responsibility in our civilization results in a tremendous lot of injustice being done, because each one shifts the blame onto somebody else; and that is illustrative of it.

The district attorney in a case charged with the protection of the defendant as well as with the carrying out of the law, says, "Well, the jury found him guilty, and then the judge had a chance to review it and he didn't do anything about it." The jury says, "Well, the prosecuting attorney advised us so-and-so, and after all, he is an officer of the state, and if we can't rely upon his word, what can we do?" And it wants to divest itself of responsibility. The judge says, "Well, the jury found in accordance with this and that, and I have nothing further to do." The sheriff who carries out the execution order says, "I received the order from the court and it was found by a jury, and that's [7640] all that is to it." So that the jury must realize that it carries the consequences upon its own shoulders; and the jury must realize, to repeat the figure, that it constitutes a wall around the defendant, that it says to the prosecution, "Before you can penetrate through this wall and take this man and imprison or destroy him, you must satisfy each individual one of us to a moral certainty and beyond any reasonable doubt of his guilt, or otherwise we will not surrender him."

In addition to that point of proof, to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt, the beneficence and the justice of the law, again, to the frailties and chances of humanity, and again a concession to the difficulty that man has of contending against fate and contending against the pressure of the state, invests him with another shield, and that is the presumption of innocence. He is presumed to be innocent. He never loses that presumption. It is a species of proof. It is a great witness that sits beside every other witness and supports and bolsters the witnesses for the defense and contradicts and questions the witnesses for the accuser.

The presumption of innocence is the strongest presumption that the law creates. It says, "Wherever a doubt arises, in the name of humanity, in the name of justice, in the name of mercy, resolve that doubt in favor of the defendants." Do that and you have carried out your duty. And that presumption of evidence applies not only to the total case as it is presented, [7641] but to each and every separate item.

So that all this talk about "Why didn't they bring in this one?" and "Why didn't they bring in that one?" is futile and is an attempt to miscarry, to dull, to set aside or overthrow the presumption of innocence, because it must occur to any reasonable person, as indeed it is the law, that where the question arises as to what a witness would testify to if he were called, the law supplies the answer: He would testify in favor of the defendant. The defendant has to produce nobody. The defendant is not called upon to refute anything by any witness. He isn't called upon to go around and scour the highways and byways to bring in Communists, ex-Communists or anyone else, because the law puts them on the stand for him in advance and says, "That witness would testify favorably to the defendant. We have made the illustration inescapable as to the full proof."

Now, using the same figure as to each separate part; a witness is mentioned, I don't care whether it is Norma Perry or B. B. Jones or Jean Murray or Ivan Hunter or whatever his name is, Hudson—the man Roy Hudson. The jury says to itself in response to the query that counsel addresses to them, "What would that witness have testified to?"—he says, "Why didn't the defendant bring the witness in and put him on the stand?" The jury says, "All right, why? What would the witness have testified to?" We take out the scale, the probability is even; maybe he would have testified for the prosecution, maybe he would have testified for the defendant. [7642] You cannot so speculate. Under your oath you take the full weight of the presumption of innocence and you drop it in the scale that leans toward freedom, and it leans toward acquittal, and you have to say to yourselves, "He would have testified in favor of the defendant."

So what obligation had we to bring in anybody? I don't care who they are. I don't care who they name. The presumption of law—not caprice, not anything that you are given a right to decide for yourselves, not any argument that might be advanced, but the rule of law—requires you to resolve the doubt in favor of innocence. And you must keep it in mind that the purpose of the law is not to destroy but to preserve, that you are a guard around the defendant and not a sword of the prosecution, and that you must not look upon these things that the law allows the defendant with suspicion or with distrust or with scorn. They are our protection, they are what you need, they are what you may need some time, as well as the defendants. Therefore, as soon as it is said to you, "Suppose So-and-So had been brought in; what would he have testified?" you say, "I don't know. Therefore, he would have testified in favor of the [7643] defendant."

We had an example of it. Suppose that following the pattern we took with everybody else we failed to call B. B. Jones. The presumption of law would be that Jones would refute the testimony of Schomaker. The duty would be upon the prosecution, charged with the heavy burden of proving this case to a moral certainty and beyond any reasonable doubt, to go out and bring him in. If he testified in favor of the defendant, the prosecution should not feel upset about that because theoretically the prosecution should be as interested in procuring an acquittal as a conviction in a proper case. But supposing they had gone out and put Jones on the witness stand. What would he have testified? Before he took the witness stand your obligation was to say he would have testified for the defense. As a matter of fact, he did. As a matter of fact, the proof coincided with the presumption, and you may rest assured, aside from any presumptions and aside from any arguments, any witness available to them who could have supported the case of the prosecution would have been brought in here. But no prosecuting department can put a witness on the stand and say, "I was at a meeting with 25 people, including the defendant," and then solicit the defendant to go out and find the other 24 people to prove that it was not so. The exact opposite is the rule. These gentlemen simply anticipate. They are so bold as to make their weakness their strength. If there were ten people at a Communist meeting at which Harry Bridges was present, [7644] no law, no duty, no jury can be satisfied by them producing one man. The question is, "Where are the other nine?" If he says, "We will let the defendant go out and get them," you say, "Why should the defendant perform this task of supererogation? Why should he do what the law has already done for him? What can he do about the presumption that each and every one of the other nine people who are alleged to have been at the meeting would say, "I wasn't there," or "Harry Bridges wasn't there," or, "It wasn't a Communist meeting." So the presumption applies. But what do they do? Boldly and brazenly they put the presumption on their side. They divest—these fair people who are watching out for the rights of the defendant and are so concerned that no injustice is done, they steal the presumption of innocence out of the hands of the defendants and try to add it to the case that they have built up against them. So we always have, wherever the question arises and wherever a witness is not produced, the one thing: You have to presume under the law and under the instructions the Court will give you that that testimony would have favored the defense; and wherever a question, wherever a doubt arises, into the scale of innocence is added that weight.

Now, to get more directly into this case I am going to read off to you four little citations, four little apothegms, statements, credos that help resolve the entire case. The first of them is by John Schomaker. It reads as follows: [7645]

> "Sometimes it seems the easiest way to dispose of a man is to call him a Communist."

The second is a sad realization by Lawrence Ross:

> "When you adopt one lie, inevitably you have got to adopt others to justify and support that lie. That is the lesson I have learned."

And a third was read out of an opinion of Judge Sears, who decided the second trial of Harry Bridges:

> "If I were to believe that O'Neil was framed or his declaration falsified, I would look with suspicion on the entire case presented by the Government."

And that was a Government official. And finally, Mr. Donohue himself, when he asked Father Meinecke, "Are you naive enough to believe that Harry Bridges, who has denied his association and membership in the Communist Party on every possible occasion, would tell you if he were a member of the Communist Party?" But I will say to you, ladies and gentlemen, that unconscious concession to logic is the answer to a very, very great deal of the testimony adduced by the prosecution.

Your Honor, it has been called to my attention by Mr. Mitchell that one of the jurors is somewhat ill. Might we take an adjournment in deference to that?

The Court: Yes. Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will take the afternoon adjournment until Monday next at ten o'clock. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case [7646] under any circumstances or conditions or form or express an opinion until the matter is submitted to you. Monday next at ten o'clock.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until Monday, March 20, 1950, at 10:00 a.m.) [7647]

Monday, March 20, 1950, 10:00 o'Clock A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

Mr. Hallinan: If we may go on from where we left off—glad to see you today, Mr. Donohue.

Mr. Donohue: Nice to see you, Mr. Hallinan.

Mr. Hallinan: I had not expected you to be here. I have a motion on this morning in the Appellate Court on which I am requesting a stay of execution in the contempt commitment, and I see by the paper that Mr. McMillan is opposing it. The brilliant, passionate address that you delivered in this court to prevent me from getting a stay of execution might have better success in the Appellate Court; too bad you didn't give it to me. And in addition to that, I always think it is more graceful for a man to do his own hatchet work instead of assigning it to somebody else.

However, he may have as good success as you would have.

Now, the defense, in a case of this kind, ladies and gentlemen, as must appeal to all of you, always has an initial difficulty when a case is declared or asserted to have been made maintained on a basis that does not consult the rights of the defendant, and in its amalgamation and presentation presents a basis of dishonesty or fraud because no matter how obscure an official may be who is involved in such a case, the most [7648] remote constable up to the highest public official always drapes around his own shoulder the aegis of the government and takes upon himself that sense of respectability and that dependency that jurors ordinarily have and should have for the government itself and in officers of the government. So that no matter what is said or how badly a prosecution officer may appear, no matter how fraudulent a case may be, the officer always directs the attention of the jury away from himself by saying that the suggestion that he has not acted fairly or properly, or that agents have gruffly gone around, bribed or coerced the witnesses is an attack upon the government, and then that always has the unfortunate connotation that we citizens of a country always associate ourselves with the government. We consider ourselves a portion of the government, the people that we elect and appoint to represent us. We try to hide from our eyes such weaknesses or defects as they may have because it is an assault upon our sense of security to do otherwise. So there is always that danger that has to be watched out for that because of our own personal vanity and our demand for a sense of security, we are apt to associate first the officer with the government, then the government with ourselves and think, "Well, what is said about these people is an assault upon ourselves."

Now, I had a rather graphic illustration of that one time during the Harding regime. The most astonishing and scandalous accusations were being made against persons high in the United [7649] States Government. The Secretary of the Interior, Albert Fall, sold the naval oil reserves to the Sinclair Oil interests for a miserable bribe of $100,000. The Attorney General of the United States, Dougherty, had engaged in numerous frauds against the government which gained him an enormously larger amount than Fall had received. They both went to prison for it. They were convicted and they were both sentenced to prison. The scandal was of enormous dimensions, involved a great number of people, and I remember riding down in a streetcar. There were a couple of men riding along with me, ordinary looking citizens, and the matter had not yet reached its apex. These two men were having a conversation and one of them was saying to the other, "Why," he said, "these so-and-sos that attack high officers of the govermnment, they would even attack the name of the President of the United States himself. It is just scandalous. It is just terrible."

So I relaxed and thought, "Well, we who profit by the existing order have little to fear from the common people. We can go on right from here."

That is the general attitude that people have. Now, there are numerous illustrations that we have all experienced where officials of the government, high or low, are not such exemplary characters as our traditions and statements that we have been reared on would lead us to believe. [7650]

A very eminent English philosopher, Bertrand Russell, has written a book called "Our Lawless Police." He makes the point that no confession except one made in open court with the defendant represented by counsel should ever be received in evidence, because it is common knowledge that police beat or extort confessions from people. A great many guilty people confess, but a great many innocent people, under stress of coercion, also confess. And I remember Theodore Dreiser's story of "An American Tragedy," in which the district attorney and the police official, the sheriff, satisfied of the guilt of the defendant, didn't hesitate to put a lock of the dead girl's hair on the defendant's camera, so that there couldn't be any question about the matter.

But particularly, in this case, the jury must make a demarcation between the government as such and certain officials of the government. Now, who is the government? What constitutes the government of these United States? Can any three or four people out of the million and a half employees of the government set themselves up and say, "We are the government and what we say and what we do is sacrosanct and beyond inquiry, and there is something wrong into inquiring into it"? Who are the people that germinated, planned, nurtured the plant that we now see unfolding here, for the last 15 years? Is the government Mr. Barber, who sits here? Is it Mr. Kaiser, back here in the first row where he can get a good look at the witnesses all through [7651] the case? Is it even Mr. Dougherty, gloriously out here from the East to do the work that these gentlemen have built up? Who was it back in 1938? Who was the government then? Was it Barber, Boyd and Kaiser? Or was it the Dean of Harvard Law School, who came out here and decided the matter? Dean Landis—one of the most eminent men in the United States, that took the direct and contrary opposite position to what they took. Which was the government then? In 1941, when a similar assault was made, was the government then still Boyd, Barber, Kaiser? Was it Judge Sears even, who ruled very slimly against Harry Bridges? Or was it Mr. Biddle's Board of Appeals that rejected and turned down with contempt the findings that Bridges, not was a member of the Communist Party, but had some affiliation with it? And when they were overruled by Attorney General Biddle, was he the government, or was it the august body, the Supreme Court of the United States?

And in the present instance, who is the government now? Mr. Barber, the absent Mr. Boyd, and

Mr. Kaiser? Or is it yourselves? Who are the people that we can rely on? Who are the government that we, too, have the right to put reliance on, and to say, "We depend on you for our liberty and our safety?" Do we have to throw ourselves into the hands of these people? Or are you the government? Aren't you the last word, the final syllable, in this whole drama?

When we discuss the lawlessness of the prosecution, and [7652] when we say things about certain agencies of the government, such as the FBI, when we give that organization the credit to which it is entitled—when we say as long as that governmental police body functions to detect crime and to bring criminals to justice, when they are running down kidnapers and murderers and dynamiters, we applaud them and they have their proper function. But when they change over to the safer, but more dangerous—for us—position of being a political police, concerned with detecting political heresies and aiding in accumulating things that will destroy political heretics, then we say they have failed their function—their mandate has expired.

When Harry Bridges said to a convention of the CIO in Oakland back in 1941 what he did about the FBI, remember that he was talking to people who had had experience in the very matters that he was discussing with them. He wasn't coming into a lot of strangers who knew nothing about the activities and labor-breaking devices of certain organizations in the United States Government. He was talking to men who had been through it and who knew what they were up against. Here is what he said. Now we are talking, first, about the 1941 decision, Judge Sears'. And remember, I said to you that there were four quotations from this transcript that were anchor points upon which this case could be decided. Now, here was the statement of Judge Sears, who had been a judge in New York, who had dealt with governmental agencies, who knew the extent to which they [7653] occasionally fell. And it wasn't any greenhorn saying something upon which he was improperly advised. He said:

> "If I were to believe that O'Neal were framed or his declarations falsified, I would look with suspicion on the entire case presented by the Government."

In other words, this experienced man, hostile, though he might be to the principles and the persons that Harry Bridges represented, still acknowledged that the government frequently does, or at least sometimes does, coerce witnesses or cause them to falsify their statements. And he said, "If I believed that this one man, that his statement were falsified or he was coerced, then I would look with suspicion on the entire case of the Government."

And I am going to call to your attention presently, my friends, that there isn't one witness that the prosecution has produced whose statement isn't falsified or who wasn't coerced. I am going to ask you to look with suspicion on the entire case of the Government.

But Bridges went on to say this to the convention of the CIO, again in reference to the FBI agents' testimony on the witness stand:

> "He (Judge Sears) said, 'They denied explicitly the alleged intimidation. They were, in my opinion, thoroughly credible witnesses. I believe them implicitly.'"

And we are coming back later on to Rathborne's story of what the [7654] FBI said and did to his brother-in-law Krolek to see how much validity there was to the FBI's denial of intimidation.

Now, Harry goes on:

> "Ask the many union men that have been arrested, intimidated and jailed by FBI agents for union and strike activities. Ask any union man who has had any dealings with the FBI, as to whether they are the angels and souls of honesty that the judge pictures them to be. I know, and the judge admits in his decision, that they violated the law by wire-tapping. I also heard them discussing using the equipment at a union meeting to be held in another part of the hotel when they recently tapped my hotel room in a New York City hotel. I made tests to prove that the information that they got on union matters through tapping my telephone wire was communicated to lawyers for strike-breaking purposes. It is noticeable that our request to prove this was denied by the judge, and the FBI has always denied that > they engaged in illegal wire-tapping or labor espionage."

Just a few days ago there was one in one of the national periodicals this comment:

> "While the FBI confessed that despite the law and decisions of the Supreme Court, they had listened to telephone conversations between the defendants, it was discovered by chance that FBI agents had gone so far as to illegally tap conversations between the defendants and their lawyers. The [7655] attorney charged that 81 FBI agents were involved in the investigation of his clients. The FBI set the number at 40. Even if the lower figure is correct, it will be seen that quite aside from the ethics and morals involved, it has cost the taxpayers a pretty penny to pay for the FBI's cynical breach of the law and disregard of every concept of human decency. J. Edgar Hoover is himself a lawyer. He ought to have some notion of the highly privileged nature of the relationship between lawyer and client. He is also presumed to know what the Supreme Court had said about wire-tapping."

Now, listen to this language:

> "If the FBI so disregards legal propriety, to say nothing of common decency, as to tap telephone wires in order to hear what a lawyer and a client may say to each other, then it is time for a free people, who never have—it may be hoped, never will—tolerate a secret police, to abolish the FBI, if nothing short of that will keep it within proper bounds. In the circumstances, it is proper to recall that whereas every other public official of high or low degree is responsible to someone else, the FBI alone seems to have a dangerous immunity from responsibility to some higher authority. Even the President must account to the people for his acts every four years, and in between times to Congress. No group, especially one set up with the [7656] sanction of law, should be permitted to operate as a mafia. It is undemocratic and dangerous for one man, whoever he may be, to have such powers as J. Edgar Hoober has abrogated to himself. A few years ago Mr. Hoover characterized wire-tapping as an archaic and inefficient practice. The federal law forbids wire-tapping. On February 2, 1949, Mr. Hoover in effect said that the FBI is above the law.

"The late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes called wire-tapping a dirty business. Today it is even dirtier."

Now, that wasn't written by Harry Bridges or some labor man, or anyone connected with it. That was written by Harold Ickes. And you know, who have paid enough attention to the constituting members of our government, and will remember, that of all the people who have been assembled in the Cabinet of a President in the last fifty years, Harold Ickes was the honestest. There was a man who had no concern except for the rights and interests of the people of the United States. He fell a sacrifice to that concern. He occupied the position—at least as high as the Attorney General—of Secretary of the Interior. And he tried to keep the dams, the hydroelectric plants, the national resources of the country that have been conserved and built up with our money, out of the hands of the power companies. And he fell a sacrifice to them. He wasn't secure enough. He didn't have standing enough to resist the pressure to get him out, and out he went. When Harold Ickes went out of the [7657] President's Cabinet, one of the great bulwarks of the American people against the encroachments of private interests went with him. Now, unembittered, still consulting only the interests of the American people, he writes these things as he sees them. And that is the language of a man who knows what he is talking about.

So the FBI is accused of tapping wires illegally, violating the positive law of the country as well as the decisions of the United States. Do they do it? Here is Mr. J. Edgar Hoover's reply of January 15th of this year:

> " 'The Federal Bureau of Investigation has 170 telephones in the United States and its possessions tapped in connection with internal security investigations,' Director J. Edgar Hoover of the FBI said tonight. Hoover said in his special statement, 'This statement contradicts the "hysterical utterance" of those > who would have us believe that wire-tapping by the FBI is unrestricted and is utilized on a wholesale basis.' "

Now, isn't that nice of him! Isn't it nice that they discharge themselves of the implication that it might be wholesale and say that they are only violating the law of the country in 170 instances. And note the phrase "internal security." Internal security consists in tapping wires between lawyers and their clients, in tapping wires between labor leaders and their associates. Anything that you want to call internal security becomes such. [7658] To descend from the mighty realms of the Washington marble to humbler surroundings, I would like to call your attention also to the description that Hancock gave of certain forces of the government, which are entitled to as much credit when they had their duty to put as much blame and no more when they abuse it as any of the people connected with the Department of Immigration and Naturalization.

> "I can tell you," he says, "about the Imperial Valley where people close to here under the influence of the growers assemble en masse to attack our unions meetings."

Now, this union meeting is a group of little itinerant working people, agricultural laborers, Mexicans, Texans, New Mexicans with their wives and kids up picking cotton and other things in the fields, and when an effort is made to get them some decent hours, decent conditions to make their lives tolerable and not a sink of despair, here is what happens:

> "Q. When you say 'attack' do you mean they had weapons of some kind?
> "A. Pickax handles.
> "Q. Any other weapons?
> "A. Why, I saw a lot of deputy sheriffs with weapons, but I don't recall I ever saw any of these armband citizens with anything other than I have mentioned.
> "Q. Did the deputy sheriffs go along with the vigilantes?
> "A. It was a mixed group of both." [7659]

In other words, the sworn officers of the law were out with loaded revolvers strapped to their hips to protect the armed vigilantes with their pickaxes, who were going to give these American citizens the rights that they were entitled to of free speech and free assembly, and the deputy sheriffs with their loaded pistols were just as much officers of the government as Barber, Kaiser and the disappearing Boyd. He goes on:

> "Now, Mr. Hancock, when you say the union was dissipated in those days and died out, what actually happened was that the leaders of the union were arrested for criminal syndicalism, isn't that right?
> "A. Yes, they were.
> "Q. Now, what was criminal syndicalism?
> "A. Well, as I recall it, it is a California act which declares something to the effect that > it is illegal to advocate force and violence, that is, it defines that as criminal syndicalism."

And then he goes on to say that about 10 or 12 people were arrested, charged with criminal syndicalism, confined in the penitentiary, two of them young women not yet 21 years old. And what happened to the charges? After these people had been in the penitentiary and their lives ruined and blasted, because I have met one or two of them since after they had been in the penitentiary for three years—three years taken out of the best part, the flower of their lives—the sentences were reversed and [7660] they were turned loose and set free. That is lawlessness in high places—without compensation, without even an apology.

The Bridges case, of which you form so important a part, has by this time, you may deduce, become one of the more historic cases, one of the cases that has excited the amazement and the concern of people all over the world, that we say it has been concocted, built up by private and selfish agents and interests, abetted and reinforced by a branch or at least certain representatives of a branch of the United States Government, because I think out of all the mystery and all the shadow that has enveloped it, three figures stand out conclusively as the manipulators of everything that has occurred here: Boyd, Barber and Kaiser.

The older gentlemen on the jury may remember the famous case, or at least the end portions of it, that once convulsed an entire nation and attracted attention and concern also over the entire world, and even the younger members may remember the recent announcement, the announcement a few years ago, the death of the principal figure involved in it. That was the celebrated case of Captain Alfred Dreyfus. In 1894 somebody sent anonymously to the French military department a communication which had been addressed by some person who had not signed his name to the German military charge d'affaires, von Schwarzkoppen, and the document showed a previous agreement to transmit to the German intelligence certain documents which were secret, in the files of the French military department. A similarity of the [7661] writing of Captain Dreyfus to the document in question turned suspicion upon him. And then there were certain difficulties when he was questioned: his ability to explain where he had been around the time the document bore date, and a meaner and more hateful connotation appears than here that there was at that time an anti-Semitic wave moving throughout parts of Europe, as it does recurrently, and Dreyfus, while surprisingly enough a captain in the French army, was a Jew. He was put on trial, and the evidence against him was extremely weak. This similarity, his inability to explain certain movements of his, and so forth—not more than to excite a reasonable suspicion—but the president of the military commission, without disclosing to Dreyfus or his lawyers that he had done so, displayed to the other officers of the commission a number of documents which reflected a terror of an assault by Germany upon France in the near future, and it so frightened the members of the board that they returned a verdict of guilty against Alfred Dreyfus and sentenced him to life imprisonment on Devil's Island. He was taken out on the parade ground, his insignia and buttons were stripped from him with all those circumstances of disgrace and dishonor that are used in such matters, and off he went to Devil's Island. He had been there about four years when von Schwarzkoppen was recalled to Germany and a maid who cleaned out his room found a letter, "a little blue letter," it was afterwards known as, which was signed by a Major Esterhazy, and [7662] showed also a connection with the German secret police. A man named Picquart, a major, received the letter and he turned it over to Dreyfus' brother, and Dreyfus' brother then made a comparison of it with the two documents that had already been introduced in evidence, and it was obvious that the original document had been writen by Esterhazy and not by Alfred Dreyfus.

In addition, it was discovered that Esterhazy, first, was not a Frenchman, and, second, he had been dissipating and gambling a great deal, and, third, he had applied for a commission in the Turkish army, expecting to leave France and go to Turkey. Dreyfus put these matters before the authorities. It seems inconceivable, but the immediate effect of it was that Major Picquart was indicted for turning a military document over to a civilian, convicted and sentenced to a year in prison. Emile Zola, the writer, became indignant at the matter and started to lead a further investigation. He was indicted and fled to England to escape imprisonment, while Dreyfus' brother continued to find out what matters he could. Eventually there were two camps, the Dreyfus and the anti-Dreyfus, and they actually engaged in riots in the streets. In England Zola wrote his famous book, "J'Accuse," "I Accuse," and set out the whole of the Dreyfus matter, and then popular opinion stormed and Esterhazy was put on trial by court-martial. He was acquitted surreptitiously and allowed to leave the country and took his commission in the Turkish Army. And then a real storm broke [7663] out and a demand for the retrial of Dreyfus. They brought back Dreyfus after six years on Devil's Island and they tried him again, and the same military commission found him guilty, but sentenced him only to the time he had already served. When Dreyfus refused to be satisfied with that, he demanded exoneration and so did Zola and all the other fair and honorable people who were massing themselves now to prevent injustice on a single individual. Finally they held a civil trial. My friends, the marshal of the French army and every officer of the French army was called into court, stood up before the lectern and refused to testify upon the ground that he was endangering the security of the state, and walked out without injury. Dreyfus was acquitted by the court. The French military personnel destroyed the records upon which they claimed they would be able to prove Dreyfus' conviction at any time.

Now, he was restored to his rank. When Zola's ashes were moved to the Pantheon, so far had the prejudice against Dreyfus been built up in the more ignorant and stupid of the populace, that some man fired a shot at him and shot him through the face, inflicting an injury from which he barely recovered. He became a colonel in the war in 1918 and died just a few years ago. Finally a symbol—a symbol of the justice of the French people—an entire nation rose up in indignation to see that the injustice that was done this one man was reversed. And also a warning—a warning against reposing too much faith in persons merely [7664] because they have been temporarily invested with part of the power, the dignity and the authority that resides in ourselves.

In the present case every lawyer who has had experience in criminal matters knows of police officers beating prisoners, exacting a confession, especially, as I say, if they can salve their conscience with a conviction that the man is guilty anyhow. Every lawyer knows of narcotics agents planting a bindle of heroin in the pocket of some suspected peddler, especially if they can console themselves with the belief that they know he is guilty.

But never—never does anyone see so long, so studied, so complete, so persistent a persecution of one man, one solitary individual, submitted for 15 years to such a crushing, destroying, one would conceive irresistible burden of pressure, of spying, espionage, persecution, a campaign of slander, vilification, lies—all directed against him. No one has ever seen such dissipation of the force and energies of a government agency. So that we have heard, ladies and gentlemen, disclosed on the witness stand, only 10 per cent of the iceberg that appears upon the surface, the names or identifications of 27 agents of the Immigration Department that had been working only for the last two years to destroy this man. And God knows what countless others preceded them in the 13 years prior to the beginning of this particular campaign. Never has anyone observed such waste of public monies. It will sound fantastic to you, but give it [7665] a little consideration. We tried to estimate here some time ago what it had cost us, the taxpayers of this country, for the 15-year wild animal chase that these gentlemen have seen fit to carry on, and we stopped at an estimate of two million dollars. It was running far beyond that. When you consider that a fellow like Rathborne has received a bribe of $5,000 in cash, plus the services of guide and mentor of Kessler down there, and another $5,000 for an entire year, himself and his wife supported at the expense of the government, that is, of ourselves, airplane trips all over the country, it cannot be that that man's testimony alone has cost us less than $40 or $50 thousand. And of the ten or twelve people who are assembled here, all the lawyers—I have never heard the Bridges case discussed that some heroic figure didn't get up and say, "I am not accepting money for this. I am doing it for the security of the country." I suppose we will hear that some time before we adjourn. You will find it is not incredible that at least two to three million dollars has been spent in an effort to get this man, a perversion of the common duties of these people we employ for other purposes. We employ the Immigration Department to see that persons who in our greatness and our vastness we consider fit to dwell among us, are admitted to the country, to find out what sort of people it may be, whether they will become dependents or whether they are of those selected races who, resembling ourselves so much, therefore they are in the image of God [7666] himself and not inferior persons who have a little more pigment in their skin, although their ancestors may have been the philosophers of antiquity. We are not interested in that. However, what do we find these gentlemen doing? Their prison is filled with unfortunate, despairing monuments, so that they commit suicide, while these fellows run around the country with airplanes, transporting this informer here and that perjurer there, building them up, coaching them—what have they done with getting Communists or the active militant labor leaders out of the labor movement in this country? What have they got to do with what they call the internal security of the [7667] nation?

They have a particular function and a particular department and, my friends, they depart from that particular function and that particular department because it is to their personal, financial and political profit to do so. They haven't any right, they have no reason, why they should have interested themselves in this case at all.

Of course, they will say, "Yes, but the department also is interested in them getting rid of such undesirable aliens as may have come in here." But that isn't what they are in it for at all. That is only their excuse, and that is what they will use to color it with.

We are told by Mr. Donohue—and, incidentally, let's say this, Mr. Donohue, while we are passing. What you think of me or what I think of you are matters of no concern to the jury, and do not help them determine the rights or wrongs of this case. I do not intend to indulge in such phrases, in retaliation for the phrase, "Hallinan and his crowd"—I am not going to say "Donohue and his mob," or matters of that sort. Standing up and calling names to people as good as yourself! We won't say better—as good as yourself, sir. It doesn't help determine whether your witnesses or mine, or ours, were telling the truth.

A special prosecutor, as I said, ordinarily has the defect that he is given a particular job for a particular purpose. Again, when we hear Rathborne disclose that certain high functionaries in the CIO, if you please, are going to employ a [7668] jury of United States citizens as hatchet men to get a recalcitrant labor leader out of the way and permit them to take control over his union—when you hear that, and when you hear that Barber goes back and hoodwinks the Attorney General by failing to disclose the sort of cattle that he is going to turn over to him to prove this case, and then comes in and hoodwinks the grand jury by similarly not disclosing that fact, we may look with suspicion upon the motive that actuate a special prosecutor.

That hired officials do the same thing is true;

but generally with more restraint. Now, for instance, a special prosecutor or general prosecutor is a public official, and under the law he is supposed to watch out for the rights and interests of the defendants—as this gentleman claims he did watch out, but which he didn't. And they are not supposed to say, and it is misconduct and reversible error for a prosecutor to say, things like that: "I believe the defendant is guilty, I put my own standing and prestige into the scales and tell you, determine this case not on what you have heard here, but upon my opinion and the secret things that repose in my heart." That is misconduct. Oh, they always manage to get it in in some way, but we let it go. What is the use of chasing every cat up an alley to beat it to death? Let them have it, let them say it. But we feel certain and assured that you are not substituting the opinion or the asserted opinion of a special prosecutor, even a general prosecutor, for your own. [7669]

We have in this District an especially eminent man as United States Attorney, Mr. Frank Hennessy. There is one little thing about him that will define to you what sort of a man he is. Some few years ago Jim MacInnis tried a murder case with some man who was accused of a murder arising in the federal penitentiary at Alcatraz. And Jim, with more innocence than learning—at that time—was trying to put in a line of testimony that I think could be called immaterial. And I strolled up in the corridor and was talking to Frank Hennessy during one of the recesses—not being in the case or not even being associated with Mr. MacInnis at that time; he was a very young man—and one of the deputies who was sitting in the case with Hennessy came up. He didn't know me. And he said, "Mr. Hennessy, I have some cases that hold that all that evidence is immaterial." He says, "That shouldn't go in." Hennessy says, "Listen, I know it. The poor devil is on trial for his life. If he thinks it will help him, let him put it in." If Frank Hennessy were trying this case, the case would never have progressed to this stage. As soon as it was disclosed what kind of people were testifying here, there would have been a motion for a mistrial of the case.

We have a precedent for that right here in San Francisco. You may remember the very recent case in which some three men were indicted and tried for the murder of a man named DeJohn here within a few months. And the principal witness for the [7670] prosecution was a woman named Venza. It was disclosed upon the witness stand that not only was she committing perjury on the stand, but had made false statements outside the trial. The case was submitted to the jury and the jury had been out for three or four hours when District Attorney Edmund Brown—be it said to his credit—appeared before the judge who was trying the case, and said, "Your Honor, I have been reading over the transcript of Mrs. Venza's testimony. I have compared it with statements that she has furnished to the District Attorney and the police, before she took the witness stand. They are in complete contradiction. I couldn't, on my conscience, permit a conviction of these people to be entered, knowing these matters, and I now move for a mistrial." And he showed the judge the documents that he had, and the judge granted a mistrial, and the jury was called back and told their deliberations were ended, and the three men were turned loose—until, at least, credible evidence could be brought in that would justify a conviction.

The Court: Would you like to take the recess, Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: In a few moments, and then we might.

Now, you would think that where the burden is imposed upon the prosecution to prove a case to a moral certainty and beyond any reasonable doubt, that the witnesses produced to fill that difficult task would be persons who should have at least a reasonable degree of integrity. You would think that you would look with suspicion upon every person that was put on [7671] the witness stand to testify against the defendants. But what do we have here? We have a group of people who not by any names that I call them at all, nor any reference that was made to them by anybody connected with the defense, but by their own description of themselves and their confederates and their associates, were, first, traitors; second, liars; third, perjurers; fourth, who in their own exact language, had for years lived lives of fraud and deceit—who by their own statements had been especially trained in schools how to get on the witness stand and commit perjury under oath; who by their own statement, their own description were "bloody, foul, stinking, slimy inhabitants of a cesspool." And those are the people that are now brought in here, and we are told, "Now they are washed white as snow. Their interests have changed. It is no longer to their interest to fill this description, it is to their interest to appear in the guise of honest men. So accept them at face value and destroy these three men upon their credibility." And we answer them with one apothegm: "When the leopard changes his spots and the Ethiopian his skin, thou shalt do well to change thy ways, young man, when thou hast learnt evil."

The Court: We will take the morning recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions.

Mr. Hallinan: Of course, it is a tedious thing when people have been sitting for four months or more in the trial of a case to anticipate that argument goes on like this hour after hour, but, ladies and gentlemen, you will bear with me; it is something that has to be done. I wouldn't care how far I had concluded your minds were already resolved; it would be almost a necessity that one would feel compelled to go ahead with it. I will take some time, I am afraid. I would ask you if you will kindly put yourself in the position of coming to court in these four sessions each day as though you were at school. Now, you have an inept teacher, but still he has to give the lesson as he sees it, and even though you may know it better than he, if you will give him the courtesy of your attention, I will be grateful for it. If I am tedious, if I am unpleasant, well, when you get outside you can take it out on me and don't take it out on the poor client. I want to be somewhat in the position of that Roman senator who started to make an address on an unpopular subject, and his associates ran at him with upraised fists, and he said, "Strike, if you will, but hear me." That is all I ask here.

With reference to the people who, as I say, have designated themselves by such unsavory phrases as I repeated a while ago, and who by their own acknowledgments were each and all trained and practiced perjurers, liars and traitors, bad people, treacherous, unreliable, they say, "We have changed. We aren't such [7673] any more. We are now honest men. We have been down at the conventicle and wrestled with the devil. We have emerged from it cleansed by fire. Now, we are not traitors, we are patriots. We are not liars and perjurers, we are truthful men. We are not slimy, scummy, bloody inhabitants of a cesspool, we are washed clean."

Well, we look at them with a little suspicion, but we say, "All right. There is room for every penitent. Who are we to judge you? Come on in. Come into the fold. Behave yourself as one of us. Remain honest and decent. We won't reproach you with your past. You can go ahead and carry out your ordinary occupations and we will see that you have your share of what each one should take. We won't discriminate against you. We won't call you any rash names or recall to your your ignoble or unhappy past. "Of course," say we to them, "for the time being we are not going to let you pass the collection plate in the church and we are going to count the silver when you come to dinner. But even in time that will fade away." So they express their gratitude. They take up this new life. But they come around and they say, "Now we are good people. We are like yourselves. We want you to do something for us. What is it? There is a certain man who was as bad as us. We want you to take him and put him in the penitentiary. We will tell you now he was one of us. He was one of our gang. He is a bad man. He is a bad man, and he hasn't reformed. So you take this man and [7674] put him in the penitentiary on the word of us honest, reformed, fine people."

We say now, "Wait, wait. Our forgiveness and recognition of your regeneration goes not quite so far. We are willing to be charitable to you. We are willing to accept your reform so far as it affects the treatment that we will accord you. But that is a far cry from saying that we will now take your word to destroy another man."

But, they say, "there are eight of us—nine of us. We will come one after the other and testify to what a bad man he is, what harm he has done."

But we say, "If one rascal turns and accuses another and says he was one of my gang, we look on that with suspicion. Don't you know," say we, "that it is the law, for instance, that a person can not be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of accomplices no matter how numerous they may be? The law based upon human experience looks upon that with suspicion." [7675]

It says, "Now, wait; you admit that you are a criminal, and you now point the finger at another man and say he was also engaged in the same activity with you. Well, it may be so, but the law provides it is a reasonable doubt from that alone, and says that kind of testimony must be rejected. You will have to bring in over and in addition to your own testimony sufficient to justify a conviction of that man, independent of your testimony, or the law kicks it all out."

That is the law on accomplices. "Now, while this may be technically somewhat different, so you can not be called accomplices in this thing, still morally you fill the same role, and we are not going to take your word. By the way, by the way," we ask out of curiosity, "what actuates you to this enterprise that you have embarked on? What is there in it for you? Let's not talk about nobility of purpose now and high attainments and moral regeneration that you talk about. Let's ask now, 'What is there in it for you? Come on, come clean; tell us.'" "Well, here's what it is. There's a police lieutenant in charge of the district that this man lives in, and he hates the man—hates him. And he is paying us money, large amounts of money, to accuse the fellow. Large amounts of money. Why does he hate the man? I don't know. Twice in 15 years he tried to frame him, get something on him. Couldn't do it. Couldn't find it. Couldn't get a thing. He was beaten. And the man ridiculed him and exposed him and talked about him, and this police [7676] lieutenant is just determined to get him, now. Just determined to get him. So he is paying us. But we are still telling the truth. We are taking the money because, you know, we've got to live. But we are still telling the truth." Well, we say, "Is anybody else interested in this project of yours?" "Oh, yes; oh, yes. A rival business man of this prospective victim, a fellow who has a shop around the corner and is trying to buy up this man's lease; he has given us the go-ahead, too. He wants to get this fellow out of the neighborhood. Then he will have all the business himself and he will prosper. So he has told us, 'Yes, you go ahead, work with that police lieutenant.'"

Well, we say, "Uh-uh (negative), we are not interested. You go on your way now and you had better go down to the conventicle and wrestle with the devil a little bit more. This sounds very bad. We are still not going to discriminate against you, and we are not going to prevent you from making your living and so forth, but when thief turns and accuses another man of being a thief, that is some reason for supposing that the other man is not a thief—but when eight or nine thieves turn and jointly, and conspiring together, accuse this man, it is almost conclusive evidence that he isn't a thief. We now are not only going to not permit you to pass the box in church and we are not only going to count the silver when you come to the house, but the next time you come, we are hiding the silver away."

And yet, incredible as it might appear, that is the [7677] concoction that is being presented to this jury to destroy these men. And furthermore, my friends, what kind of men, what kind of man particularly, are our collection of rogues assembled to destroy good men, honest men, decent men, men of integrity, fine men, men upon whose escutcheon there can not be pointed one blot or blemish? What is the proof of that? That I say it? Not at all. I am biased and interested. My statement in that regard wouldn't be worth the breath of uttering it. No more than the contrary statement of this gentleman is worth the breath that it took to utter it.

What right has he to characterize them by any of the terms which he loaded upon them at the recent hearing? What right has he to go outside the evidence in the case and concoct and invent qualities that they do not possess and which he knows they don't possess? Because the proof, the conclusive proof of what I said about them appears right in this court; and we should confine ourselves to this court. We shouldn't go out and inquire as to what happened in other cases in New York or any place else. We shouldn't try to pretend that we know things that are hidden from the jury, because none of us do—neither he nor I nor anyone else. We shouldn't try to pretend that there are other circumstances and other facts that are not revealed to the eye. The proof of the honesty and goodness of these men has been established beyond any peradventure of a doubt in this court. How? I will tell you. [7678]

If you bring in character witnesses of high standing, men of honesty and integrity, men whose own reputation is impeccable, then you help establish, of course, the high standing of a defendant in the community for truth, honesty and integrity. Suppose, now that instead of man of integrity himself, you bring in some little, obsure, dishonest fellow, a man whose own worth is scarcely worth the trouble of putting him on the stand. Then suppose you ask him about the defendant's reputation in the community for truth, honesty and integrity. Do you realize what you have done? Do you realize what a lawyer representing a defendant in a criminal charge has done when he puts even one character witness on the stand and asks him the reputation in the community of the defendant for truth, honesty and integrity? Do you realize the door of inquiry that he has opened? Do you realize the exposure of every act and circumstance of the man's life that you have subjected him to? Because as soon as that witness says that the reputation is good, the prosecution then forthwith asks him at once, "Would your opinion be the same if you knew this and this and this and this and this and this and this?" If any of those three men in his entire life had done one bad, one dishonest or even one questionable thing, we wouldn't dare put a character witness on the stand. And they know that thoroughly. They know that as soon as we put the man's character in evidence, they are entitled to shred it, to tear it apart, examine it, to look into it, to turn upon it the light [7679] of 15 years' research by the FBI, by the Department of Immigration, by their own special agents, and expose every word and circumstance and thing that those three men had done in their lives.

And what was he required to confine himself to? What was he required to confine himself to? "Would your answer be the same if you knew he was a member of the Communist Party?" In other words, "Would your answer be the same if this jury should return an adverse verdict?" That is all they could find to inquire about him. A poor man, emerging here in youth and poverty, with every temptation placed at his disposal to sell, to betray, to advance himself at the expense of others; and they couldn't dig up in the entire span of his life one word or one point that might turn the finger of shame or the glance of inquiry upon his character!

Now, let me ask you, my friends: How many people do you know who could subject themselves to that test and come off unscathed?

Many a lawyer has had the unfortunate circumstance of not knowing his client's character or of having been deceived by the client as to the episodes of his youth—then calling character evidence to establish a reputation that probably had existed perfectly good for 10 or 15 years, and then see flow in convictions of petty offenses, charges that were made, even slanders that were falsified and circulated about him. If Harry Bridges had not done, but even been accused of, a dishonest act, that question, with all the circumstances, the names of the persons involved in it, would have been asked each and every person who took the stand here to testify to his good character.

You will remember how they searched and dug out the misinterpretation of some phrase that he made in his speech at Stockton, in order to say, "Well, do you think a man who would say this is dishonest or has good character?" From 1939 on, Harry Bridges has testified in his own defense in as large a scope as he was required to testify to here. They couldn't pick out of all those days of testimony a sentence of contradiction, a lie, a fraud, an exculpation, that was even shadowed or designed to protect him a little better than the truth might have done. Not a word. He rises, my friends, out of this entire inquiry a rock-ribbed figure of honesty and integrity that few in this city could match. And the proof of it is not that I say it, but that we took his character and that of his two associates and spread them wide on the floor of the courtroom and said, "Search, Mr. Donohue; search, Mr. Barber; turn all your 27 agents loose upon it and see if you can find in there one flaw or one blemish that might cause a single member of this jury to look on him with hatred and contempt." And we told them in advance of our case that we intended to call character witnesses, and even the names of the most of the character witnesses we would call—in fact, all that we had present and ready at that time. [7681]

Now, I want to find a small excerpt here that will help illustrate what I have been saying, and put this in your minds at the start. For 15 years powerful, private interests, combined with these diligent, designing, dishonest searchers, have sought to find something that would destroy Harry Bridges. First, to have him kicked out of the country, and next, to immolate him for the rest of his life in a prison cell. And they have worked with FBI agents until, apparently, so far as now is revealed by this case, the FBI abandoned the matter. Then, with agents of the United States Goverment, the Immigration Department, private organizations, the FBI has dossiers on literally millions of people.

Anybody who has occupied a position such as these men has been screened, tested, questions have been circulated about him, his friends, his associates, his enemies have been convassed. His private and his public movements, utterances and documents, are known and entered. Everybody, for instance, connected with the Communist Party is known to them from stem to stern and truck to keelson. They know from beginning to end what persons were members of any national or central committee of the Communist Party, from its inceptive date to the present time. They know who they were, they have a close description of them. They know their names, their family connections, their activities, their trades—what they have done,—with most of them undoubtedly from seamen's registers and employment records, and so forth. [7682] They have their finger prints. They know that Harry Bridges never was a member of the Central Committee. They knew that when they put the first witness on. They knew that no man was a member of the Central Committee under the name of Dorgan or Rossi. They kept those things to themselves and they permitted these fellows to get up and, for hire, say that he had been.

Now, a few days ago a sort of amusing and interesting news item appeared in one of the local newspapers. It was about a man named Cvetic or some such name, who appeared before the Un-American Activities Committee within the last month:

> "Matthew Cvetic appeared three weeks ago before the House Un-American Activities Committee in Washington. According to the committee's records, he was a Communist Party official. But short, dark, 41 year old Matthew Cvetic had a big surprise. He was actually an undercover agent for the FBI.
> "For four days eager committee members heard his testimony. He had worked into the party, and for eight years had supplied information to the FBI. On the long list of Communist names he produced was that of George Dietze."

Now, previous to that, for eight years, he had been a Communist Party official.

> "George Dietze"—his name was mentioned—"was a German immigrant. He had come to > the United States in 1922 and settled in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania to become a [7683] jewelry engraver and a music teacher. At the time of Cvetic's damning testimony, George Dietze was a prospering man. But when the papers reported his Communist affiliations, his troubles really started. Friends and neighbors scorned him and his wife was afraid to leave the house. Mild-mannered, 51 year old George Dietze stood it for ten days, then packed his bag and headed for Washington. He, too, went before the House Un-American Activities Committee. His testimony gave the committee its second big surprise. George Dietze, too, was an FBI agent. Since 1944 he had been a trusted member of the party. And as such, he had worked side by side with Cvetic. Neither had known the other's true identity."

But now, there is a little episode that, because of its dramatic impact, brings to light and reveals the intense infiltration into the Communist Party and its public or secret sessions of the agents of the United States Government. I think that the slightest reflection will convince any person, especially those in whom a regard for the diligence and capacity of the FBI has been properly built, the abiding conviction to a moral certainty and beyond any reasonable doubt that these people know everything about every major Communist official in the United States, and probably every minor Communist official.

Some years ago, a few years ago, the New Yorker ran an amazing cartoon that has been reproduced since. It was a picture [7684] of a Communist meeting with a closed fist and other insignia on the walls, and, as they put it, long-haired men and short-haired women sitting around. The chairman got up and said, "Comrades and undercover agents of the FBI:—", and the impact of the cartoon consisted in the fact that everybody knows that is true. Everybody knows it without being told. But the FBI now for two decades has had its best agents right firmly in the Communist Party. When they go out to hound and dictograph and tap wires on a man who is only suspected of some Communist affiliation, for that was the original charge against Harry Bridges, you can imagine to what surveillance they have subjected people who were admittedly members of the Communist Party, who were high functionaries and officials in it, and, I tell you, and I say again, not from what I say but only that you use your God-given intelligence to determine it for yourself, they know from stem to stern and from top to keelson everything about everybody who has ever been a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, and they knew when they put those three scoundrels on the witness stand, on that subject, that each and every one of them was deliberately lying about it.

Now, listen to a few little notes culled from the record on their cross examination of witnesses produced here, the witnesses produced for a small matter, persons who were not of great consequence in the case. But listen what they knew about it. Dr. Eloesser. The dossier is open: [7685]

> "Didn't you serve with the Foreign Legion in Spain in 1937 or 1938? Weren't you a member of the American Committee for the Protection of the Foreign-Born?
> "Yes—yes—yes."

Or: "Probably," or "I was."

> "Weren't you a member of the American Committee for Jugoslav Relief?'
> "A. I probably was.
> "Q. Weren't you a member of the National Confederation for Constitutional Liberties?
> "A. I probably was."

In other words, here is Dr. Eloesser; give him not less than his due, an ornament of the human race, a man who has carried his great skill and his great learning all over the world among all sorts of people, and in whose interest you wouldn't think he would be the least involved, and yet stopping to arrest plagues in India, famine in China, pellagra in Tennessee, over in the Arabian Desert to try to cure the people of eye diseases. And they knew that that man was a member of those three organizations and they could confront him with it as soon as he took the stand.

Mr. Jones, B. B. Jones:

> "Didn't you work at the Millbrae Dairies and live on a ranchhouse on the Mills Estate in 1931 and 1932? A:. Yes." [7686]

In order to ask him some question, if he hadn't said something at a particular time, they were able to trace where that obscure man, a stevedore, a member of a waterfront union, a member of the Communist Party at one time but never an official, they knew where he lived, the exact location of his residence back in the year 1931 and 1932 on a ranchhouse on the Mills Estate.

The Rev. Mr. Peet who came over here from Mill Valley, and one whom anybody would have thought would at least be insured by obscurity from such an inquiry as this:

> "Aren't you mentioned in Appendix 9 of the Dies Committee Report as having signed a petition to defend the citizenship rights of William Schneidermann?"

That out of the hundreds and thousands of people who signed that document and other documents, they could pick the name of the obscure pastor from a small residential community like Mill Valley, and ask him and confront him with that:

> "Didn't you sign your name to that petition?"

Good heavens! What don't they know about anybody? Why, you would be afraid to take a bath, you would be afraid to take your clothes off lest your blemishes be exposed to public view!

Mahaffey, a small town labor leader:

> "Wasn't your name on a brochure announcing the first California convention of > American Youth for Democracy, May 6 and 7, 1944 at the North Star Auditorium, 1631 [7687] West Adams Street, Los Angeles, California?

> "Did you attend a convention in Seattle in the late 1930's? Was Henry Schmidt?"

So help me, they were able to go back twenty years and tell you what room Schmidt occupied and who shared it with him. Some of those names are so obscure and so unimportant, I do not remember what they testified about.

Mead:

> "On September 31st, 1938—"—this is Dewey Mead, San Francisco supervisor— "didn't you write a letter to the People's World offering your services to the People's World sustaining drive?"

Back in 1938! When Dewey Mead, the supervisor, comes in here they can pick out some liberal or, let us say, subversive act done in his life and confront him with it.

> "On August 15th, 1945, didn't you insert an ad in the People's World describing it as a pro-labor paper deserving of support?"

Good heavens! Didn't you feed your canary that day and underneath his cage put a piece of paper that you had clipped out of the People's World?

Christensen. Who is Christensen? Oh, the man over in the hospital, another obscure labor man who never had been a member of the Communist [7688] Party.

> "In 1942 weren't you on the subscribers' list for the People's World? In 1944 weren't you on the mailing list of the Communist Party?"

Now, we assume, because the gentleman is honest and, as Antonius said, "And sure, he is an honorable man," like Brutus, he would not ask him questions if he did not know that the information was correct.

> "Didn't you sign a petition of the ILWU urging freedom for Earl Browder?"

Here is this obscure working man that 15 years ago apparently signed a petition asking for freedom for some man who was sentenced and condemned on a political proposition. To know that that man had signed that petition is incredible and it is frightening.

Might we take the recess now, your Honor?

The Court: We will take the noon recess. Until 2:00 o'clock, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [7689]

Monday, March 20, 1950, 2:00 o'Clock P.M.

Mr. Hallinan: The amazing record of close and meticulous espionage information that the agencies of the government were able to bring forth and confront our witnesses with continues at the same rate.

Now, not to cover them all by any means, because I have several pages of close print on it, we produced on the witness stand Robert Kenny, former

Attorney General of the State of California and candidate for governor, and he having given his testimony is confronted with the inquiry as to whether he knew of the report of the People's World of December 7, 1939 that he was associated with Wendell Willkie on the Schneidermann case.

Not only do they have the information as to every activity that our witnesses engaged in, but they have it in so many forms that they can pull out documents that will seem to reflect most against the defendant's case or his witness in order to illustrate it. The fact that Robert Kenny was associated with Wendell Willkie in the defense of Schneidermann occupied space in every paper throughout the United States, conservative, reactionary, liberal, radical, but the one he is confronted with is a notation in the People's World for December 1939 that he was associated with Willkie in the Schneidermann case.

Then he is confronted with the report in the San Francisco Chronicle that he opposed legislation while a member of the [7690] State Senate, to outlaw the Communist Party in California,—a law which was passed and afterwards, as he said, held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

These matters of confronting a man, himself a multi-millionaire—Kenny is the holder of great oil lands, a man of prominence, standing, wit, erudite, learned, and a liberal.

I daresay that Kenny is, like a great many of us that, disagreeing with the concepts and principles of the Communist Party, still embrace the apothegm of Voltaire that "I do not agree with a single thing that you say, but will fight to the death to defend your right to say."

But they go on with the research into whatever he has done that seems to step outside the fine path that is to be set down for free-born American citizens by the appointed Attorney General of the United States. Everything that he has done that shows a violation of the spirit or the letter; a compilation of outlawed periodicals and outlawed organizations by that gentleman is put out here, and Mr. Kenny is confronted with it as though the things he should be proud of are precisely the things that he should be ashamed of.

He was affiliated with the American League for Peace and Democracy. In 1945 he was a sponsor of the American Committee for Spanish Freedom. He was counsel for the Hollywood Ten. He is now in court as counsel for the Bank of China. He is Hallinan's counsel. The Western Worker of December 16, 1937 reports [7691] that he appeared at a Mooney mass meeting at Los Angeles. The People's World of January 25, 1945 reports his letter to Franklin Delano Roosevelt urging a reversal of Biddle's deportation order in the Bridges case, and on and on and on.

Then you come to Henry Schmidt. The Voice of the Federation for December 1939 has an article that the ILWU blasts the Oregon Commonwealth Federation for taking sides in an imperialist war.

On October 5, 1939 an announcement that the Los Angeles Workers School with Lawrence Ross as instructor will hold a session.

This is in 1945: that there was a hearing in 1934 before the House Un-American Activities Committee in Los Angeles at which Henry Schmidt was mentioned. And they bring in here and produce, if you please, a hotel register from San Diego in 1935, 15 years ago. They know the exact room that that man, that obscure working man occupied in a hotel in San Diego during a CIO convention. In 1938 he was a member of a trade union committee for Gallagher's candidacy for secretary of state. He attended at Seattle in 1935 a meeting of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific.

Father Meinecke is confronted with an article in the San Francisco News of July 1940, and another in the Monitor of August 1948, and an article in the Labor Leader of July 1, 1940.

Then we bring in a man named Bailey, a man from Portola, a [7692] small lumber town. He is confronted with the fact that he held a minor office in the American Newspaper Guild; that the People's World of March 1944 reported that he was chairman of a class on labor-management relations at the California Labor School; that the People's World of April 30, 1946, reported that he was chairman of a forum on Russia, a discussion on Russia.

And then, without burdening the matter too far, Betty Teixeira is confronted, so help me, with an article that appeared in her high school paper 15 years ago, an article that reported that Betty Teixeira was one of a number of young people that indulged in some sort of liberal committee or some sort of delegation upon a matter that didn't appear to be within the bounds of what is now orthodox and what we are allowed to believe—out of her high school paper. That is how thoroughly, that is how completely they know everything that has gone on about Harry Bridges, Henry Schmidt, Bob Robertson, the members of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, and be well assured, Lawrence Ross, Mervyn Rathborne, and everybody else that they brought up here. They know all about them from the moment of their birth until the present date.

Of course, it must be obvious by this time that some person fairly high in the Immigration Department of the United States Government is bound and determined that he is going to get Harry Bridges; that if he fails by court proceedings and before administrative officers to have him deported from the country, he [7693] is now possessed of a golden opportunity to do a much more difficult thing, but a thing in which he is encouraged by what people deem to be a hysteria that is supposed to be sweeping over all of us. Personally I have never experienced it, and I have never met anybody who wasn't a driveling coward or an idiot who was laboring under this fear and hysteria that is advertised all over as being possessing and sweeping over the people of the United States. But taking advantage of it and the foreign policy of the government we now have in power, and supposing that other cases and other parts of the country will carry him along in its sweep, they essay now to procure a conviction of a criminal offense where they have been unable to secure a final judgment in a mere administrative proceeding before an appointed officer of the United States Government.

The proceeding undoubtedly had its genesis in the situation that was developed and testified to here—the "get rid of Harry Bridges" campaign started in as a natural part of the struggle between the employers and the employees on the waterfront back in 1933 and 1934. Then that fight being won by the union men, and it being realized that a new order had set in and they weren't going to stand any more for the system and procedures that had gone before, the waterfront employers dropped the matter; the stalking horse of "Get Harry Bridges out of the country" as a dangerous alien, first as an English agent, then as a Russian agent, or Communist, or whatever they want to call him. That [7694] stalking horse, across which they could shoot at militant labor unions in general, was dropped and permitted to collect dust and mildew.

Then along comes the Honolulu strike, in which these men, with a certain dauntlessness, I consider, move in to the futile despotism of Hawaii to do something for the working people there. Then it is resurrected, and it is going to be employed again so that we have a pronouncement of the Attorney General as to what he is going to do under the circumstances, and how the deportation of Harry Bridges will break the Hawaiian situation—meaning it will break the Hawaiian strike.

But then the Hawaiian strike is settled, and we wonder now what is behind it now. We suspect that these gentlemen, Murray, Carey, Curren, Ray, at the top of the CIO organization, finding themselves at dagger's point with Harry Bridges, are anxious to employ this same old structure now to do their bit. And as they have made some sort of an alliance with the Democratic Party to carry out their policies, they are enable to engage the hatred and the vindictiveness and the malice of the Immigration Department to assist them in it. So up it is resurrected again, decorated once more and set out to accomplish the ends that have so often failed. And it must be obvious, too, what the real purpose is. It isn't to take away citizenship or deny citizenship to Communists. You will remember that William Schneidermann, who was secretary of the Communist Party, who was an alien, [7695] who was an open and avowed member of the Communist Party, was denied citizenship some years ago; he took an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, in which he was represented by Robert Kenny and Wendell Willkie, and the Supreme Court reversed the lower court and held that William Schneidermann, although he not only had been but was then a high functionary in the Communist Party, was entitled to citizenship and it should be granted to him. And it was granted to him, and he became and ever since has been an American citizen.

Then we in this court, with the assertion of the purity of purpose this gentleman retails to us, see that Henry Schrimpf, acknowledgely a member of the Communist Party, became an American citizen at the very time that they are moving to try to get Harry Bridges out of the country. So it isn't any effort to keep persons who are Communists from becoming American citizens. That is just a false front. Nor is it to take away citizenship from people who became Communists after they became citizens. For, witness Krolek, who has become an American citizen and whose citizenship is not threatened. Witness Ross, a man who certainly deserves little encomium from the people of the country. But his citizenship is saved.

Nor is it intended in this case, although this is the base of the proceeding that is before you, to punish perjury. Nobody is concerned with perjury in this case at all. That mask has been torn away and that excuse has been long ago relegated [7696] to oblivion. We have seen people come into this court and deliberately commit perjury without any question, and walk out of here unscathed. We have seen Crouch and Johnson caught and detected in a bald, blatant piece of perjury, that they knew was perjury before those men ever took the stand—and walk out of here; and all our protestations and all our demands for equal and exact justice have fallen upon deaf ears. And we saw Lawrence Ross testify. Not only was he caught in perjury, but he admitted that he had committed perjury right in this court. He walked out of here. What has happened to him? Nothing. His family is transported, again at our expense, with an agent of the Immigration Department driving the automobile, to the remote places where he won't be reached.

We are not concerned with Communists or Communism. We are not concerned with punishing perjury. We are not concerned with getting rid of a person who has been a Communist. We are concerned with one thing, and only one thing—"Get that obstinate, stiff-necked, intransigeant Bridges, who started out with certain principles, wouldn't betray them, wouldn't sell them, stayed with them, wouldn't take program, wouldn't try to compel his union to take program, and is standing now in the same position that he was before; get rid of him." And, my friends, to such a degree of infamy has this matter fallen that you will remember Bridges' testimony, that following the government's inability to deport him on the last proceeding, a legislator [7697] introduced a bill in Congress, the first bill of attainder passed in the United States or attempted to be passed in the United States since the American Revolution, ordering the Attorney General to deport Harry Bridges, that one specific man, despite any laws. And such force were they able to employ, and so far were they able to corrupt the interested legislator, if not the integrity of those Congressmen, that it passed the House of Representatives and was only killed in the Senate after a scathing rebuke by the then Attorney General of the United States that it was unconstitutional, unjust and discriminatory.

So they have this concoction of persons fitting the description that we have already had, and which I think is a faithful and decent and even a moderate designation of what kind of people they may be. And with that aggregation they are now, again, going to get Harry Bridges—leaving it to twelve of his fellow citizens, who are certainly as much interested in preserving the individual from that kind of persecution and that kind of tyranny as he is himself. But they are going to get these twelve individuals, now, to be hatchet men for this proceeding.

Fortunately—fortunately—they entrust the concoction of the plot to the "Sorcerer's Apprentice." If you saw Walt Disney's Fantasia, you may remember the interpretation of the musical composition, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," in which Mickey Mouse was the little man who learned some of the charm [7698] that the old magacian was able to wield and managed to make the broom run his chores for him, carrying water. But he didn't learn what the word was to stop it, and presently the broom was rushing back and forth carrying two buckets of water and threatening to engulf the entire castle. He seized an axe and chopped the broom into a hundred pieces. But each separate piece now raises up and seizes two buckets and starts filling the water more and more, more and more, until finally Mickey Mouse, magacian, broom and all are swept out of the castle in a flood.

Well, the Sorcerer's Apprentice is Mr. William Kaiser. Mr. Kaiser has done such a strange and bizarre job upon this case as to raise the reasonable suspicion that Mr. Kaiser is not a stupid man, and he is certainly a man of diligence. But all that has been wrong in this case and can not be ascribed to mere negative faults. One can not say, "Here is something botched up by a stupid or indolent person." There is something in it that is positive, active—some madness—some frenzy—that engulfs and colors and shapes the whole proceeding. It is not strange that his diligence and his assiduity, flying around the country, baby-sitting, chauffeuring, shopping, coaching and training these people that they put on the witness stand, diligently and painstakingly going down day after day week after week, month after month to tell John Schomaker what to say, to tell Rathborne what to say, to tell this one what to say, to tell that one what to say, hauling one man down to San Diego to walk up a spiral [7699] staircase and another to Long Beach to inspect the facade of a house, sleeping in the same room with his charges, never permitting them to get out of his sight. Now, it is not surprising that under those circumstances he should have built up a false, fraudulent and rather easily suspect sort of a case.

But the peculiar thing about Kaiser, and what you might call the motivating principle and the very genius of this case; is that he never even by accident succeeded in procuring one witness who wasn't suspect immediately of being either a perjurer or acting under coercion; and that his utmost diligence could not suffice to bring before you one single document—I don't care whether it came from their files or the records of the United States Government in Washington, or the parole department of Los Angeles—not one single document that did not bear either upon its face or upon its manner of presentation and production, the obvious signs of fraud; that they haven't produced a single word of evidence that one wouldn't look at with keen suspicion as to whether it had not been so changed, so altered, so constructed or so instructed as to cause any person to refuse to accept it. And that is the distinguishing thing that Mr. Kaiser has added to this case. It is also distorted, confused by a kind of a mania, a sort of a determination as though he thought anything as it appeared as dangerous and a bad ingredient to the concoction, and it must be changed. Any document that was available to the defense must be hidden and concealed. Any [7700] witness, regardless of who he was, must be instructed to say a little more than the witness would have said, and to say it in such a strange and peculiar way that one would think that he were confronted with the products of a madhouse. So that every witness they have put on, almost without exception, had something about him that suggested a frenzy or an insanity in him. And I am satisfied that they have all flown from the strange recesses in the mind of that queer little gentleman who sits out there jittering, jibbering, shaking—if you have happened to notice him?—like a madman all through the case. An object of derision, an object of suspicion, an object of concern to everybody who has been in the case. [7701]

I will tell you this, my friends: if we the defense had produced that mass of perjured testimony, that collection of suspicious documents; if we had engaged in that hiding, concealing, coaching, every one of us would have been indicted for conspiracy to suborn perjury by now, and we would be convicted. And I will say this, that if there should be in the future a Congressional inquiry into this case, if there should be an indictment of agents and witnesses produced by this prosecution, I would guarantee that they could not be acquitted on the charge of suborning perjury because the case is such that you can't stop and say the witnesses committed in, and of themselves. They are too closely linked in with agents and officers who solicited them and who brought them to do what has been done.

Of course, many things are beneath the surface in the prosecution's case. We can't tell what goes on. We do not know what their procedure or what their steps may have been. Our attempts to investigate came to naught.

A young man named Kessler is put on the witness stand to give some testimony. We conceived that we were entitled to show what his interests and his activities may have been. We asked him, "Now fairly and squarely, didn't you accompanied by another agent named McGowan, go out and visit a man named Herman Mann whose wife was then dying of cancer, and offer to him and to his two children that if he would come in and testify against Harry Bridges, you would bring in the Cancer Institute of the United [7702] States to cure their mother?" And we offered in support of that question an affidavit by this unfortunate Herman Mann to that effect, and there was testimony from Harry Bridges that that statement was made to him by Herman Mann, and that the poor woman subsequently died of the cancer, and that shortly afterwards the agents returned and asked him if he was still prepared to take that up. Now, one would think that regardless of what bearing that might have upon a case that a prosecution confronted with that charge and that attack would at least have permitted the man say, "No." But they did not, and they would not do it. They have sedulously concealed and kept away from this jury under the forms and pretenses of legal objections what any of their scoundrels may have said before the grand jury. Let us grant that they are bound to some loyalty by some form of mistaken and perverted loyalty to protect these fellows from disclosure and from being shown for what they are on the stand. Certainly there is no reason why in the accusations that have been made against openly in court and under oath that they should hesitate to put Mr. Barber or a few of their people on the stand to testify as to what they did and what their activities were. But all is concealment, all is hid, all is to suppress; just that there should be permitted to obtrude from the mess sufficiently that the jury could hang its hat on. So help me, my friends, they have started out with the notion that this jury will want to convict, and "If we can give them just enough [7703] so they can say, 'We choose to believe this man in defense of our conscience and in defense of our intellect; we choose to believe in him and we return a verdict of conviction.' "—that is obviously the entire principle on which they have proceeded throughout the case.

Mr. Donohue enters the matter. It is not until last July or last April that he lends his hand to it. As I said before, Mr. Donohue's motives, his personality, his morals, whatever they may be, is of no consequence here, and it may very well be that he accepted the material handed to him in much the same fashion which we must assume the Attorney General of the United States listened to Mervyn Rathborne detailing the story that had been worked up between himself and Barber without ever being told that he was a felon, a convicted burglar and a perjurer, a practiced perjurer who had committed perjury on any occasions on which he chose to do so, and that when they were brought before the grand jury, the same false and fraudulent proceeding was instituted.

We will assume, and we will accept Mr. Donohue's statement, if he wishes to make it, that he knew none of these things, that he never suspected that that may be wrong. If so, there might be some little reflection upon Mr. Donohue's powers of observation. Ordinarily it is a rule that you can't cheat an honest man, and if Mr. Donohue had looked upon the evidence presented to him with the critical eye that his sworn duty [7704] compelled him to look upon it with or demanded that he look upon it with, he should not have presented such a case. And I am afraid that he has now fallen into the situation that subconsciously, and probably without intending to do so, he is going to be a good enough business man that at least he is going to palm off on the jury the deal that was palmed off on him. He may not stop and realize that, but that is a sort of human failing and one of the things that a person may well do without any conscious feeling of guilt or doing anything that is wrong.

He discussed in his opening statement a great many things about what this witness would say and what this witness would say, the force and effect of it, and all you would have to do is believe any one of the witnesses to insure conviction or justify conviction. That is not so at all. That is not so at all. The prosecution must of necessity depend upon three witnesses, only three: Crouch, Johnson, Schomaker. There are only three witnesses who have testified either directly or as a necessary inference that Harry Bridges was ever a member of the Communist Party of the United States. All the other witnesses are only window dressing. They only raise a sort of suspicion. They only allow a jury to develop a kind of dislike for Harry Bridges for associating with or affiliating with people who have been testified to be as bad and as degraded as the Communist Party members have been in this court. In other words, if they can raise an aura of hatred and venom against the Communist [7705]

Party generally and its members, then the jury might feel, "Well, you may not have been a member, but you sat down with them, you talked to them. You apparently sympathized with at least some of their aims, and for that we are going to destroy you."

That is something that they hope. But if the jury is going to confine itself, as I am certain they are, to a determination of the exact question in issue here, to wit, when Harry Bridges swore that he had never been a member of the Communist Party in the United States, was he telling the truth. And the only persons who say he had been a member is John Schomaker, who says, "I saw him sign an application, I delivered a card to him, and I saw him pay dues." His testimony is necessary to conviction, the belief in that man's testimony. A judge or a jury might feel that if Crouch and Johnson were telling the truth and Bridges were elected to the Central Committee of the Communist Party, that he necessarily must have been a member. But those three witnesses are the only ones who testified to such facts, and unless you accept them, unless you put everything else aside and accept those three men, you could not under conscience or morality or anything else return any except a verdict of not guilty.

Now, here is an instruction that the Court is going to give to you. The Court gives to the jury at the close of the case certain instructions which the law requires. The law says that the jury should be instructed upon particular matters, and [7706] particularly matters in issue in the case, and the Court informs in advance the instructions he intends to give. The prosecution submits some; we submit some. The Court calls them out and gives a certain number. We disagree with the prosecution's; they probably disagree with ours. But at any rate, they are the instructions of the Court and they become the law that you have to follow.

Here is one of the instructions, and see if this is not the nucleus of the entire question, if this does not narrow the issue down to make a resolution of this case depending upon the testimony of the three men I have just mentioned. The law says this:

> "The law recognizes various legal relationships that may exist between an individual and an organization. I shall not attempt to enumerate all such possible relationships, but among them are such as associations between a person and an organization, connections of a business, professional or other similar nature, affiliation and membership. Mere association between an individual and an organization does not constitute membership. The same is true of business, professional, social or other similar connections. A person may approve some or all of the aims or activities of an organization, but this does not make him a member of such organization. Even sympathy with the program of an organization or contributions of money to that organization [7707] do not create the legal status of membership.

"The law also recognizes that active cooperation with an organization in its activities does not constitute membership.

"I have also mentioned the legal relationship which the law designates as affiliation. Affiliation is defined as conduct of a person which indicates an adherence to or furtherance of the purposes or objectives of an organization. Even affiliation, if you find it to exist in this case, would not constitute the same legal status as membership, for the reason that membership refers to something more than and different from affiliation. Therefore, even if you find that the defendant Harry Renton Bridges has established or maintained a relationship with the Communist Party in the United States consisting of associations, cooperation in its activities or objectives or affiliation, but you nevertheless are not convinced to a moral certainty and beyond any reasonable doubt from all the evidence that the defendant Harry Bridges was every a member of such Communist Party in the United States, then I instruct you that the answers given by the defenant Harry Renton Bridges in the naturalization proceedings would be truthful answers and the defendant Harry Renton Bridges would not be guilty thereby of false swearing as charged in this [7708] indictment."

To repeat one or two phrases from it, a person may approve some or all of the aims and activities of an organization, but this does not make him a member of the organization.

Affiliation consisting of adherence to or furtherance of the purposes or objectives of an organization does not constitute membership. So no amount of association, sympathy with, affiliation with the Communist Party, its principles, its prerogatives, its programs, anything it wishes to do, constitutes membership in that organization. The Court will also instruct you and you are sworn to accept the instructions of the Court.

The law fixes certain requirements for the establishment of particular statuses. If the requirements of the law are not complied with, that status never takes form, never becomes a reality, however much the persons may have wished that it should become a reality or however much evidence may exist that such thing is so.

For instance, a man and a woman procure a marriage license, have it regularly issued, go through all the prescribed forms, appear before a minister of the gospel, have the marriage performed, properly certify the license they received, record it in the county, take up their lives, have their home and their cohabitation, numerous children, property owned together, identify each other as man and wife and call each other husband and wife, live as Mr. and Mrs. whatsoever their name may be. Then the man dies and he has in his possession at the time of his [7709] death a great fortune which he inherited from his father or mother, so that it is his separate property. The wife goes in and moves to have letters of administration issued to her and to have this estate regularly distributed so that she shares upon it. Then for the first time it is discovered that a preceding marriage which the man had had not been finally canceled and ended by a decree of divorce at the time of the marriage with the second wife, or indeed, until, let us say, the next day. Now, however unjust it may appear, whatever equities the law has since devised to work out some sort of a reasonable compensation to the woman so that at least she can share in the things that were accumulated as part of their joint efforts and would be under ordinary circumstances community property, she is not his wife, she is not his heir, she is ineligible to act as administratrix of his estate and she can not inherit a nickel of his separate property.

We see such things happen. Every lawyer who has had a reasonable amount of litigation has been confronted with pathetic and tragic things of that exact kind. But, in law—in law—that woman is not that man's wife, and nothing that she can say and no amount of proof of people who will take the stand and say, "Why, the man told me she was his wife; I know her children." The doctor who delivered them, the people who associated with them, and all their friends—it is all wiped out by the one inexorable fact that the marriage was void from the beginning; [7710] that they were never married.

If the strict rule of law can prevail to preserve and to carry out what must appeal to every person as being an injustice, then are we departing from our morality when we say that the strict rule of law should prevail in this case to prevent an injustice? Are we wrong then in asking that the same rule be addressed to Harry Bridges as would be addressed to the woman under those circumstances?

Of course, suppose, for instance, that a man has all his life been a member of the Republican Party. He has contributed money to its support; he has held certain appointive offices under it; he has voted year after year as a member of the Republican Party. Finally he becomes a member for a high office; he is a fit and worthy man; he is elected by an overwhelming vote. After he is elected, it is then discovered that he did not register as a Republican within the time required by law, but was a day late. From beginning to end, his entire election is undone; he can not hold public office. If he collects a nickel of the salary, he is liable on a taxpayers' suit to repay it, and the treasurer who paid him the money, even though he knew nothing about that fault in the registration, is required to repay the money given to that man into the public treasury, because he was not a member of the Republican Party at the time he was elected. Now, it is useless for him to parade documents or certificates, monuments. It is useless for him to call to [7711] the witness stand Republican Party bosses, officials elected and appointed. It is useless for him to state what his sympathies and what his predilections are. Under the law he was not a member of the Republican Party, and that finishes him.

If a man does not receive the sacrament of baptism, he is not a Christian, or he is not a Catholic, or whatever it may be, regardless of the fact that he may believe implicitly in all of the teachings, l of the statements that are addressed to the acolytes of this religion. He may attend the services of the church; he may make sacrifices of his wealth, of his person, of his safety to accomplish and forward its purposes, but he is not a Christian; he is not a member of the Christian faith.

Sometimes that fact is a very important matter where people are devout Catholics and there is a second marriage contemplated. Let us say that a man and woman are married, become divorced, and then suddenly he wants to marry another person and is anxious to have an annulment of the first marriage in the church so that he can continue to be a member of the congregation whose principles he has embraced. A search into the religious history of the spouse from whom he has separated may give him a clue that will enable him to satisfy his conscience and at the same time marry the object of his affections. If it develops that the previous spouse has not been baptized, then regardless of how that person may have carried out all the duties and all the procedures of the religion to which he was [7712] attached, the church will hold that he was not a Christian, and a marriage between a Christian and a non-Christian may be annuled in the church. And I have myself seen the great delight that has been manifested on one or two occasions when that exact situation turned up and people who had been long separated could be finally divorced, go out and marry other people. The mere accidental mischance that the ceremony or the sacrament of baptism had not been performed upon the previous spouse makes them within the eyes of the church not such a marriage as can not be annuled by the church.

Suppose—and it certainly is a wild supposition—that all these obscure sort of people who attempted or seem to have attempted to lift themselves to some force or some grandeur by becoming members of the Communist Party, if only that they should have the secret conspirational delight that seems to be a part of this procedure and which I think reflects badly against it, which would drive Mr. Paisley, for instance, into the Ku Klux Klan, to go around hooded with burning crosses and carry on such matters—suppose that that organization and those people became immensely wealthy; that by some investment in a particular place, there was a discovery of oil or gold or diamonds or magic cities of the east and suddenly the Communist Party was a party of millionaires, all of the 70,000 people had a stake in its holdings amounting to millions upon millions of dollars, and the Communist Party now having become opulent and, let us [7713] say consistent with the frailty of human conduct, not being any longer interested in the welfare of downtrodden humanity, decided that it would disband and it would divide its property, as the law would require, equally among its members. Harry Bridges could go into court and prove that he had sat down with the glorious heads of this organization; that he had taken orders from them, dictation, suggestions, advice; that he had sympathized with all their aims, fostered, encouraged them; refused to come out against issues that they were opposed to, supported issues that they were interested in. He couldn't get a five cent piece out of all the millions that they had accumulated; he was not a member of the Communist Party and that finished it. So that no matter what affiliations, sympathies, mutual cooperations may be proved, they all fall flat and they become useless unless they prove to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that he signed that application; and he received a book and paid dues, because I will show you presently by their own testimony, that those were the necessary concomitants of membership, and that without them one was not a member.

It hardly needs amplification to suggest that merely going along with an organization like the Communist Party that happened to have the same interests or the same objectives that one has himself, would not make one a member of the Communist Party as of the time in 1934, '35, '36 and '37 that Harry Bridges sat down and talked to them; that he accepted their help in the [7714] strikes that were going on on the waterfront; that it happened that their interests were the interests of the working man and his interests were those of the working man; it would be foolish to take a stand inimical or hostile to those people and to say to them, I don't care that you stand for the same principles that I do; out of fear of having same people attach blame for me for associating with you, I don't want your help," when that little bit of help, that little aid to what his men were already able to do that might be the very thing which would turn the tide of battle. Just as in the war, the Soviet Union hated capitalism and we hated Communism, but the Soviet Union was interested in destroying the German military machine and we were interested in destroying the German military machine, and we both went along together and succeeded in accomplishing that laudable purpose. But that didn't make them capitalists and it didn't make us Communists.

If Harry Bridges united with the shipowners, for instance, as he is doing now, to try to request the United States to recognize the existing regime in China so that the ships could move out of our harbors and that the stevedores and the sailors could be employed, that doesn't make the shipowners stevedores and it doesn't make the stevedores shipowners.

And what right has anyone to assume that if Harry Bridges had been asked those exact questions in Judge Foley's court he would not have answered them as truthfully as he answered them [7715] on the witness stand here. Suppose, for instance, that Judge Foley said to him this:

> "Mr. Bridges, we are informed by Mr. Barber"—or whoever it may be—"that the Communists in the years 1938 to 1949 stood for the following principles: They didn't want any war with Russia, hot or cold; they think that the United States ought to accept as an accomplished fact the Communist government in China, recognize it, resume trade relations with it; they think that the Marshall Plan should be so amended that it does not include shipments of arms by the Dutch into Indonesia, the English into Malaya or the French into Indo-China; they think that the United States Government should start a great housing project, build houses all over the country; they think that the government should start to take over the power plants in this country. What is your opinion on those?"

Well, Mr. Bridges might say, "I agree with each and every one of them," or, he may say, "I agree with so many and I do not agree with others." But I suppose he said, "Yes, I agree with every one of them."

All right. Next question: "Mr. Bridges, do you know William Schneidermann?

"I do.

"Have you ever sat down and discussed with him matters relating to trade unionism? [7716]

"I have.

"Have you ever accepted or followed his advice in such matters?

"It might well be.

"Do you know Roy Hudson?

"Yes.

"Has he ever visited your home?

"Indeed he has.

"Did you visit at his?

"Yes.

"Are there members of the Communist Party with whom you are friendly?

"Indeed there are. There are certain members whom I believe to be brave and sincere persons. I do not go along with them in all ways, but they are entitled to their own opinions. I won't exchange mine for theirs nor ask them to exchange theirs for mine.

"All right. Have you criticized certain policies of the American government in the past the same as the Communist Party has criticized them?

"Well, I don't know that they have criticized. I reserve the right to criticize the government. What am I here for if I can't? What is the use of becoming a citizen or my seeking to have a vote if I am bound hand and foot so I can't say a word against the people who have the power? [7717]

"All right, Mr. Bridges, you have answered all of those questions. Now, I want to ask you one other question. Have you ever as a matter of fact joned the Communist Party?"

And he says, "No, I never have."

Now, all the preceding questions have no relevancy and no bearing upon the determination of the issue with which you ladies and gentlemen are confronted.

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess. The same admonition to you ladies and gentlemen.

(Recess.) [7718]

Mr. Hallinan: I hope it won't upset your afternoon, Mr. Donohue, but the Appellate Court granted me the stay of execution.

Mr. Donohue: You knew that this morning; it wasn't even being argued.

Mr. Hallinan: It said in the newspapers it was, that Mr. McMillan was appearing.

Now to come, then, to the gist of that particular matter, while the testimony introduced by the prosecution is at least foggy as regards what constitutes membership in the Communist Party, they did introduce some slight evidence that I suppose we might take as being the minimum that must be required. Now, all through the case, of course, they have adopted a kind of an attitude that they are not going to tell us anything about the Communist Party, they are not going to bring in any records, they are not going to bring in any officials, they are not going to bring in their rules to show us how one becomes a member or how one separates from being a member, or what their principles or procedures may be. And then they take a double-edged method of excusing themselves from that by saying, "Well, you go out and bring it in. We just say it is so and you go out and disprove it." In exact defiance of the law, the rule of law that the burden is always upon them. I don't know whether the Communist Party has records, rules, application cards, or anything else. But they cannot excuse themselves from proving it [7719] in the regular fashion by taking the same attitude. It is up to them to serve a subpoena on the officials of the Communist Party, bring in their constitution, their rules and their—As a matter of fact, they probably have them all anyhow from their Congressional inquiries. But we are not required to do it.

However, they don't think it is worth while, since with a case that you are going to try by prejudices that were started fifteen years ago and must be good and strong by this time, what is the use of bringing in proof? So we have the absolute minimum of what one would call legal proof to establish when a person becomes a member of the Communist Party. And that is contained in the great and good Mr. Schomaker's designation.

Now this is all that we know about him:

> "Q. What happens, in your experience, to a member of the Communist Party who failed to pay his dues?
>
> "A. That was the cardinal law of the Communist Party. In order to be an active Communist, you had to pay dues as you had to be an active member. Otherwise, you weren't a member.
> "Q. Did you have to have filed an application?
> "A. You mean to join the Communist Party?
> "Q. Yes.
> "A. Certainly. How else could you become a member?"

So now we have that you had to pay dues, and you had to [7720] file an application.

> "Q. Did you have to have a card issued to you?
> "A. That's correct, yes."

So now to be a member of the Communist Party, you have to file an application, you had to have a book issued to you, and you had to pay dues. Now tell me, who in this case testified that Harry Bridges signed an application, had a card issued to him and paid dues? One man and only one man—John Schomaker. It goes on:

> "Q. Well, do you know of any instance in which persons were accepted into membership in the Communist Party where they hadn't signed an application?
> "A. Well, in my experience in the Communist Party, I never heard of any such instance, no.
> "Q. Did you ever hear of any instance in which a person was allowed to remain in the Communist Party without paying dues?
> "A. No, I said that was the cardinal principle of the Communist Party."

So, by their own evidence, their own witness, now, we have as a necessary concomitant to membership in the Communist Party, you had to sign an application, you had to have a book issued to you and you had to pay dues. The only witness who has testified to that is John Schomaker. The other two witnesses, Crouch and Johnson, put in some evidence from which I admit a necessary implication would arise that that had been done, [7721] because if a person is elected to the central committee of the Party, I suppose he would have to be a member. So that would be evidence—but only to the extent of supporting and strengthening John Schomaker.

So we have come to the point that upon the credibility of John Schomaker depends your verdict. Everything else is only window dressing, support, attempted confirmation, which without his initial anchor post is worthless and of no consequence whatever.

Now here is Mr. Rathborne on the same subject. We asked him if in conducting the investigation he went back and saw the Attorney General. The Attorney General said they were conducting an investigation of Harry Bridges, that they had evidence that convinced them that he was a Communist, that they considered him detrimental to the labor movement, and they wanted to get him out. Now here were the questions asked him on that. He said:

> "Q. I believe he (referring to Clark) said he had conducted an investigation and had proceeded sufficiently far to convince him that Mr. Bridges was a member of the Communist Party."

Now I asked him:

> "Q. Now 'a member of the Communist Party' or 'was a Communist'?"

His answer: [7722]

"A. My recollection is, 'was a Communist.'

"Q. Yes. In other words, you can be a Communist without being a member of the Communist Party, isn't that right?

"A. Well, I guess a distinction like that can be made. I presume it can.

"Q. Well, a person can have communist ideas, be entirely sold on the principles of Communism, and still not a member of the Communist Party, isn't that correct?

"A. That is possible.

"Q. And that is what Mr. Clark said; not that Mr. Bridges was a member of the Communist Party, but that he was a Communist, isn't that right?

"A. That is my recollection of the conversation, Mr. Hallinan.

"Q. All right. And nothing was said at all about Mr. Bridges having testified falsely in any proceeding, was there?

"A. No, sir. there was not. I am sure of that."

So now we have from their evidence, introduced by them, the testimony that in order to be a member of the Communist Party, which this gentleman is charged with being—Now, remember my friends, he is not charged with being a Communist; that is, in the general philosophical sense that a person may believe in communist principles, may think that the country should own the means and instruments of production, I think is [7723] the phrase, and that there should be a dictatorship of the proletariat to bring that around, which I understand, and that one man cannot make a living by exploiting the labors of another. Those are supposed to be the free principles. Now a man can believe in all those things, he can go out and talk them on a soap box or on a stage or any place else. He can teach them, he can instruct in them. If he didn't file an application for membership in the Communist Party, if he didn't accept a book and if he didn't pay dues, he is not a member of the Communist Party. And if Harry Bridges said, "I am not a member of the Communist Party," and had not done those three things, his answers were truthful.

So that one can be sympathetic to the principles of the Communist Party, he can attend meetings, conventions, he can make speeches on their behalf, he can read and distribute their literature. He can seek with them common objectives, even though those objectives be unlawful—which nobody has claimed that Harry Bridges ever attempted, in this case. Suppose that he even went so far as to get out with a musket and mount a barricade and say, "Let's overthrow the government." He still wouldn't be a member of the Communist Party, let alone that he simply accepted their help in getting decent hours and decent wages for working men. So nothing like that makes a person a member of the Communist Party. He can get out and oppose the Marshall Plan or the Five-Year Plan or the Morris Plan, or any plan he [7724] wants. And he isn't a member of the Communist Party. He can fail to make a public speech or even a private speech criticizing Russia, Brazil, the Republic of Andora or the Duchy of Luxembourg and he still isn't a member of the Communist Party. He can fail at any public or private utterance to criticize Vishinsky, whom our advisor instructs us is the master of "extorted confession," or Mr. Bruce Barber, who is a master of the perjured witness; and he can refuse to criticize Molotoff or Rudolph Valentino or Mickey Mouse, and he is still not a member of the Communist Party. He can drink vodka, he can light his pipe with a babushka, and he can ride around in a samovar, and he is still not a member of the Communist Party. He can grow a beard and like cabbage soup and not be a member of the Communist Party. He can refuse, in advising his friends or his union, to follow the foreign policy dictated by the third assistant secretary of the Navy, or even the first assistant secretary of the Navy. He can take upon himself the gift that we brag about so much, to damn the government and curse the president, or do any other thing that he may feel inclined to do. He can get out and scream like an eagle against using American money to maintain the French Colonial system in Vietnam and the Dutch Colonial System in Borneo and the English Colonial System in Malaya; and still he isn't a member of the Communist Party. He can do all those things, separately or in aggregate. He can add a whole lot of more things, and he still isn't a member of the Communist Party. [7725]

So that, finally and irretrievably, we come back to that laughing baboon, Schomaker, to find out what's the verdict in this case. All the witnesses who would establish simply that Harry Bridges attended meetings at which Communists were present, even if every other person there was a Communist, or who would say they saw him at conventions or at meetings at places where nobody else, so far as they knew, was other than a Communist, haven't any weight or validity at all in establishing the truth or falsity of the answer he gave to that one question. [7725-A]

And parenthetically, and it happened so long ago it slipped my memory, in the examination before Judge Foley, he was asked if he had not associated with members of the Communist Party and he said, "Yes, I sat down and talked with those people many times." The document is in evidence. You can read it. But here are a number of statements you might ponder now from the same Mr. Schomaker's testimony. He is talking about meetings of the Communist Party, and having located a certain party, a certain meeting that took place, the same one that Hancock testified to, he gives this limited description:

> "Everyone who attended that meeting, to the best of my knowledge, was a member of the Communist Party of the United States of America and were affiliated with the California District of the Communist Party."

All right.

"Everyone who attended that meeting, to the > best of my knowledge now, fell under that category."

So already there is a limitation to the force or gravity of the testimony. But go along a little with Mr. Schomaker. And now, in determining the force and the weight of evidence that Harry Bridges sat down in meetings of the members of the Communist Party, and in estimating how much weight will be given to that, we have to consider these limitations upon it. We have to consider what was said on that matter and whether or not it was customary or at least occasionally happened that [7726] persons who were not members of the Communist Party attended meetings at which everybody else was a Communist, or even attended straight out and out meetings of the Communist Party, because if you find that non-Communists attended meetings with Communists, in which matters that the Communist Party were interested were discussed, or that they even attended meetings with the Communist Party itself, then in all decency and following the presumption of law that favors innocence, and it resolves every doubt in favor of the defendants, you have on your conscience to find that it was in that relationship that Harry Bridges attended such meetings.

Now, here is Schomaker. "Up to the time that I severed my relations with the Communist Party, I carried messages from, particularly during that period 1933 and 1934, from Sam Darcy to Harry Bridges and other members on the waterfront."

"Q. That was after Mr. Bridges had joined, you say, the Communist Party?

"A. Well, even before, that he actually signed an application, that there were meetings of Communist groups with Bridges."

There is Schomaker: "Well, even before, that he actually signed an application, there were meetings with Communist groups with Bridges."

"Q. Now, you answered this, that before Mr. Bridges [7727] joined the Communist Party, he had meetings with Communist members, is that correct?

"A. Well, that is correct, yes.

"Q. And at those meetings matters were discussed relating to conditions on the waterfront, is that right?

"A. That is right.

"Q. All right, and at those meetings Mr. Bridges attended meetings at which everybody was a Communist except him, is that right?

"A. Well, that is pretty correct, yes."

Now, there is their star witness, Schomaker, before Bridges joined the Communist Party, according to his sworn testimony—not that I consider that swearing adds greatly to it, but he testifies, "that at these meetings Bridges attended meetings at which everybody was a Communist except him, is that right?"

"Well, that is pretty correct, yes.

"Q. Now, these meetings were recommendations made by the Officials of the Communist Party to Mr. Bridges?

"A. Were recommendations made?

"Q. Yes.

"A. Well, the policy was discussed and recommendations were not made directly to Mr. Bridges. They were made to the group.

"Q. At which Mr. Bridges was present?

"A. At which Mr. Bridges was present, yes. [7728]

"Q. You say that for a period of about 30 days prior to the time that you say Mr. Bridges signed an application for membership in the Communist Party, he had meetings with persons who are Communists, all persons being present, all persons who were present being Communists except Mr. Bridges, and you said that the number of Communists who would be there would be three or four, and I say in those instances were those three or four members of the Communist Party also officers of the Communist Party?

"A. Well, you could term them officers of the Communist Party in that sense, yes.

"Q. Well, I can't term them anything. I know nothing about them. I ask you were they or weren't they officers of the Communist Party?

"A. I would say they were officers of the Communist Party, yes, sir.

"Q. Now, at those meetings suggestions were made concerning the waterfront situation and what should be done about it, is that right?

"A. That is correct.

"Q. And recommendations were made by these officers of the Communist Party to Mr. Bridges as the reasonable course to be followed, is that right?

"A. Well, I wouldn't say they were made to Mr. Bridges. They were made to the group, and since Herman Mann and I [7729] were members of the longshoremen, that we carried out doctrines that Bridges would not dare touch in those days.

"Q. I see. In other words, the recommendations were to the group and not to Mr. Bridges specifically?

"A. As an individual, that is correct.

"Q. And Mr. Bridges, though not a member of the Communist Party, participated in those meetings, is that right?

"A. Well, he was there. Now, what you mean by participating is another question, but he——

"Q. I mean he talked and discussed back and forth, didn't he?

"A. That is correct, yes.

"Q. All right, and you say that you and the other gentlemen whose names you mentioned, being members of the Communist Party, were also members of the longshore workers' union, is that right?

"A. The ILA, yes.

"Q. But there were members of the Communist Party present who were not members of the longshore union, is that right?

"A. That is right, yes.

"Q. All right, but these men, I suppose, had some special experience or knowledge of labor relations or trade union activities that enabled them to make some suggestions that were advisable, is that right?

"A. Sure they did. [7730]

"Q. All right.

"A. Absolutely.

"Q. Where were those meetings held?

"A. They were held, some in Bridges' home, and we held some in Herman Mann's home, and some in the MWIU headquarters. I think we held some where I was living.

"Q. Any place else?

"A. There must have been others, but I mean to these particular places, because I recall them pretty well.

"Q. What about the Communist Party headquarters? Weren't there some held there?

"A. And there were some held at 37 Grove Street.

"Q. Which was the Communist Party headquarters?

"A. That is correct."

Now, according to Schomaker, for at least 30 days before Mr. Bridges is alleged to have joined the Communist Party, he attended meetings at which every other person was not only a Communist, but an official of the Communist Party. There were discussed other questions relating to the waterfront and the waterfront strike, in which, of course, they had a common objective, and those meetings were even held in the Communist Party headquarters, and under the testimony Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party. So what happens to the meetings he is supposed to have attended? What significance can be given to them?

Now, here is Mr. Michener: [7731]

> "Q. Let me ask you this: Before you joined the Communist Party you were already a labor union official, were you?
> "A. That is correct, sir.
> "Q. Well, before you joined the Communist Party had you ever sat down and had discussions about labor matters with people whom you knew to be Communists?
> "A. I believe I did. In fact I know I did.
> "Q. Were there any occasions on which you were the only non-Communist present?
> "A. Yes, yes.
> "Q. And in those discussions would you be talking over matters of policy affecting your own union and the men who worked with you?
> "A. Yes, sir, that would be the general discussion would follow in that particular connection."

Wilson:

> "I couldn't answer that question in the affirmative. I am sorry.

> "Q. And did you know each of the persons who attended the meeting that you have described to be also members of the same committee or group of Communist Party as yourself?"

Then an objection and then the answer:

> "A. No, I couldn't answer that question in the affirmative. Some of the meetings were attended by, only by people who were assigned to that committee. There were other meetings that other [7733] people came to who were not members of the committee.
> "Q. I say before you joined the Communist Party at all, and while you were in the labor movement in San Francisco from 1934 to 1940 or 1941, I take it you attended meetings at which Communists were present, is that right?
>
> "A. Oh, yes.
> "Q. And did you attend meetings at which Communists were present at which you were the only non-Communist?
>
> "A. I don't know.
> "Q. In other words, there might be people there who would or who would not be Communists so far as you know, is that correct?
> "A. That is correct."

And finally, this seems to me to be conclusive on the question, there is Krolek's statement of the whole proposition.

> "Q. Well, would there have been meetings during this period of time between members of the Communist Party and persons in the labor movement who might be sympathetic but who were not actually members of the Communist Party?

"A. Those meetings were quite frequent and they were generally called for the indirect purpose of organization.

"Q. In other words, on those occasions the persons who were asked to attend along with members of the Communist Party were being urged to support some move which would be to [7733] the good of the labor movement generally?

"A. That is right.

"Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Mr. Krolek, you were telling us on Friday last about many meetings which you attended in which there were Communist Party members and also people who were not members of the Communist Party; is that correct?

"A. That is correct.

"Q. And those meetings, I think you said in substance, would be meetings where the Communist Party members and various progressive persons or members of the so-called liberal groups would have the same end in view, is that correct?

"A. That is correct.

"Q. And I think you said that a meeting where members of the Communist Party met with trade union leaders or other people who were not members would be called an open meeting?

"A. That is true.

"Q. Did you have any categories into which you would divide the phrase 'open meetings'?

"A. Not specifically.

"Q. Well, now, for example, if a group of Communist Party members, let us say ten or twelve of them, were assembled and there were three trade union leaders who were not Communist Party members invited to join, would that be an open meeting? [7734]

"A. That would be.

"Q. Suppose you had the same group and there were only two trade union leaders who were not Communist Party members invited, would that be an open meeting?

"A. Correct.

"Q. Suppose you had the same meeting of Communist Party members and only one trade union leader who was not a member, would that still be an open meeting?

"A. That would be an open meeting. May I qualify this statement by this fact: That to people who were in the Communist Party as well as union leaders themselves, there were occasions at which, for practical purposes, a meeting could be considered a Communist Party meeting and yet have an outsider who may not have been a Communist Party member present at that meeting"

In other words, to repeat it:

> "that to people who were in the Communist Party as well as union leaders themselves, there were occasions at which, for practical purposes, a meeting could be considered a Communist Party meeting and yet have an outsider who may not have been a Communist Party member present at that meeting.
> "Q. That is exactly what I am probing to discover. In other words, there would be a real Communist Party meeting and yet there could be a person present, trade union leader [7735] or otherwise, who might not himself be a member of the Communist Party.
> "A. That is correct.
> "Q. Now, Mr. Krolek, going back as best you can over the period of time in which you were actually a Communist Party member, can you recall for us the names of any trade union leaders who were not Communist Party members but who attended meetings of the Communist Party or meetings with Communist Party members?
> "A. It is difficult to recall offhand. I believe one such individual might have been the leader of the Alaska Fishermen's Union in Portland. I believe his name was Martin Olson, who I do recall on several occasions was present at meetings.
> "Q. That would be Communist Party meetings? A. That is correct.

"Q. Yet he was not a member of the Communist Party?

"A. He was not a member of the Communist Party in name, but in fact, for practical purposes, he might be so considered.

"Q. In other words, he may have been a sympathizer, and even a deep sympathizer, but he wasn't actually a member of the Communist Party? A. That is correct.

"Q. Can you think of any other labor leader who fell into [7736] that category?

"A. There may have been others; possibly John Brost, in Portland. I recall the name of one man who I believe was present at meetings that were strictly sponsored by the Communists and yet I don't believe he was a Communist.

"Q. What was his last name?

"A. Brost, B-r-o-s-t.

"Q. John Brost. A. Brost.

"Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): What was his labor affiliation?

"A. I believe he was connected with the ILWU.

"Q. And he was not a member of the Communist Party?

"A. Not to my knowledge.

"Q. But I suppose he was deemed to sympathize with the general objectives of the Communist Party? A. That is correct.

"Q. About how many meetings can you recall that this man Brost attended with Communist Party members?

"A. It is very difficult to say. I recall him associated with one meeting; that is, I recall his presence there.

"Q. You can recall at least one meeting specifically? A. That is correct.

"Q. Concerning the man named Olson, who was a director of the Alaska Canneries Union, did you say?

"A. Alaska Fishermen's Union. [7737]

"Q. Can you recall more than one such meeting which he attended?

"A. I could not specifically state, no.

"Q. I don't mean specifically because I don't expect any exact dates, but is it your general recollection that Olson attended more than one meeting with members of the Communist Party?

"A. I would say several; possibly two or three.

"Q. And again, those would be meetings which you called Communist Party meetings?

"A. That is correct.

"Q. Although Olson was actually not a member of the Communist Party?

"A. That is correct."

Now, he says, "May I make this differentiation, however, qualify your question, that such meetings that were sponsored by the Communist Party, that is, held for a general trade union purpose, made no reference in those meetings of any sort pertaining to strictly Communist matters. In other words, the question of recruitment or organization as proposed by the Communist Party was not a point of discussion. The meeting was one of a strictly trade union nature."

So we now have, from sworn testimony of the witnesses produced by the prosecution, from Schomaker, that for at least 30 days prior to his admission into the Communist Party—we will [7738] show you that he can not say that because he didn't know Harry Bridges at that time—for 30 days prior to that he said that Harry Bridges attended meetings of the Communist Party, some of them even took place in the Communist Party headquarters, to discuss labor union matters when they both had the same objective, and Harry Bridges wasn't a member of the Communist Party. Then we have both Wilson and Michener saying that prior to their entrance into the Communist Party, they attended Communist Party meetings and were not members. And finally and conclusively, we have the testimony of Krolek that not before they became members, but for a long period of time * * * [7739] Not before they became members, but for a long time Olson and Brost, who had objectives similar to the ones that at that time the Communist Party were handling in that particular locality, attended numerous meetings, closed Communist Party meetings, although they were not members of the union, which, as we used to say up at St. Ignaitus, Q.E.D.—quod erat demonstrandum, meaning: Which was the thing we set out to show. And why, why, should anyone ask you to make a differentiation between Mr. Brost and Mr. Olson and Messrs. Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson? Why, you would drive yourself to this illogical and unjust conclusion that Messrs. Brost and Olson, the only testimony concerning whom is that they were not members of the Communist Party, could be convicted in this Court of such membership.

Mr. Hallinan: May we take the recess now, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Hallinan: Might I suggest this, your Honor: in adjourning I make the suggestion that a very fine gentleman, Mr. John McNab, a member of the Bar, formerly United States Attorney for the Northern District of California, a man of great ability as a lawyer, well recognized for his honesty, his integrity, his probity, his willingness to assist in every good cause who was one of the leading figures in the charities of the Salvation Army and other similar organizations, died a day or two ago, and he deserves the gratitude of the State of [7740] California for all the things that he did for them and all the tasks that he fulfilled, the high offices he held.

I would move the Court that when we adjourn we do so out of respect to his memory.

The Court: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Hallinan.

This Court will then stand adjourned out of respect to and for the memory of the late John L. McNab. I might say, gentlemen, that I knew him well as a youngster growing up in the law; I was trained and received my formative education at the hands of his brother, Gavin McNab. In addition, Mr. McNab was formerly United States Attorney in these Courts. He was a distinguished scholar, a stalwart leader and a great lawyer. This Court will accordingly stand adjourned out of respect to his memory.

The same admonition to you, ladies and gentlemen, not to discuss the case under any circumstances.

(Thereupon, an adjournment was taken until Tuesday, March 21, 1950, at 10 o'clock [7741] a.m.)

Tuesday, March 21, 1950—10:00 o'Clock A.M.

The Clerk: The United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

Mr. Hallinan: Finally, ladies and gentlemen, concluding on the last suggestion made that not only is the proof, if it could be considered proof at all, but the evidence based upon attendance at meetings at which Communists were present or even where only Communists were present of no weight in this case, because the testimony of their own witnesses shows that on numerous occasions persons not Communists attended even what they called closed Communist meetings, but there is another reason why that testimony has no strength.

Now, if you take, for instance, the situation; let us assume that Olson and Brost, who were heads of labor unions, the Alaska Fishermen's Union, on one hand, and another union on the other, as described by Krolek, and it is admitted and conceded and testified under oath by Krolek that neither of those men was a member of the Communist Party. Suppose now that they were on trial here as being Communists and the evidence is introduced that they attended all these meetings that Krolek said he saw them at; they attended all of them, discussed labor union matters that they and the Communists happened to be interested in together, that shows proof in evidence that they were sympathetic with certain aims and motives of the Communist Party. Suppose [7742] the jury knew nothing but that, nothing but that came from the prosecution's witnesses, then according to counsel, that would be sufficient proof that these men were Communists, although the actual fact as disclosed by Krolek is that they were not Communists.

What that amounts to finally is this: that the attendance at meetings at which Communists were present, discussing plans, ideas and notions with them, may or may not constitute some evidence that a person is a Communist. It would amount to a circumstance that the jury might consider. In other words, it would be circumstantial evidence tending toward that fact. But the Court will instruct you that this is the rule of circumstantial evidence: that circumstantial evidence must not only be consistent with guilt, but must be inconsistent with innocence. And that flows necessarily from the presumption that we have already discussed, the presumption of innocence, because if the matter is capable of two interpretations, it is the sworn duty of the jury to give it the interpretation that will result in a verdict of not guilty. That is the sworn duty of the jury. So that where you have an equivocal situation of a man attending meetings which, under their own testimony, could be consistent with membership in the Communist Party or non-membership in the Communist Party, then it is the sworn obligation of the jury to give it the innocent interpretation and hold that if Harry Bridges attended such meetings, sat in on meetings at which Communists [7743] were present, until there is evidence he was a Communist, that is not proof of any membership in the Communist Party.

Indeed, the matter gets sort of a ridiculous conclusion, because isn't this what it amounts to: "I know that this man is a Communist because I saw him at Communist meetings; I know they were Communist meetings because I saw him at them." Because certainly that applies to all the people who attended, any two or three or four people there. They say these people are Communists, they are all Communists.

> "How do you know that?"
> "I saw them at Communist meetings."
> "How did you know those were Communist meetings?"
> "Because I saw those people there."

And particularly when all the people who are called here are so unreliable, so loose in their designations and in their testimony, even as to their own friends and associates, that no reliance can be put upon them.

Here is a small example that crops out of the testimony. The prosecution witness Schrimpf says, "I was a member of the Communist Party from the middle of the year 1934 to the middle of the year 1935. Then I quit and I was no longer a member of the Communist Party." Then they put on the witness stand the witness Ross. I have his testimony marked here, but I am not going to bother to read it out of the transcript because your memories probably retain it. He said, "I knew Henry Schrimpf and he was [7744] a member of the Communist Party for the years 1934, '35, 36 and '37." So if they wanted to indict Schrimpf for perjury now upon the ground that he testified he was not a member of the Communist Party in the years 1936 and '37, what do they do? They bring their own man Ross in to say, "Yes, he was a member during those years."

So callous and negligent of the truth, so negligent of the safety of even the people that are associated together with them in the same plot and conspiracy are these people, that they do not even concern themselves as to what the other one has said. Anything goes.

And Michener states that his former wife is a Communist Party member; not that she was a member; she is a member of the Communist Party, though he hasn't seen nor spoken to her since the year 1945.

Even as between themselves, their testimony hasn't any sign, any indicium that they make any effort to determine what the truth is, whether or not they are exact, whether or not they are precise, whether or not the things that they testify here bear the connotations and imputations that they try to put forth.

Mr. Kaiser starts out now with the witnesses who testified to these meetings and who in and of themselves amount to nothing; that is, Schrimpf, Krolek, Hancock, Rathborne, Michener—all of those people, those five or six people who said that they [7745] attended meetings. That evidence amounts to nothing. Then he gets Crouch and Johnson, who are absolutely unreliably, committed perjury not only in this case, but in the matters preceding this case; he brings in Ross, who testifies to being a perjurer not only in this case, but in preceding matters, and under some sort of assumption that the whole is greater than the sum of its parts, tries to make a case out of that kind of evidence. It would be as though you had to get a certain bird into the air; it needs two wings to fly, so they bring in nine or ten birds, each with one wing, and by some sort of alchemy, think that they thereby create a whole bird that will fly where the separate parts will not.

In addition to these difficulties, I suggest that the remarkable testimony of Rathborne, supported and bolstered by similar statements by these other witnesses that all of these people who took the stand here were for a number of years, at least, if not at the present, trained, practicing, deliberate liars and perjurers, persons who had been instructed to lie on the witness stand and had trained themselves to do it. I do not see why, in logic at least, if not in law—and I have some strong belief that it should, even in law, and made the motion to that effect—it doesn't destroy the credibility of all their witnesses: Why didn't that matter, in and of itself, cast a doubt, cast a reasonable doubt upon all the evidence that they have introduced? Now, it is their testimony, not ours. They made [7746] no effort to explain it, no effort to remove it, no effort to get away from the effect of it.

Here is the predicament and the dilemma that anyone is put in who tries to find out whether those witnesses are telling the truth—remembering all the time that if there is a doubt it is to be resolved in favor of the defendants, and that all that need be created here, and all that you can require to be created here, is a reasonable doubt of the guilt or innocence of the defendant. Now, here is Mr. Rathborne who has sat down with Mr. Donohue and gone over the case with him, who has helped prepare the case, who has been employed by them, or at least a bribe given under the pretense of employment, right in the middle of the entire case, creating it, helping coach witnesses, working in with them hand and glove in everything that they say. And here is his testimony:

> "Q. In other words, being sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, you testify that for a certain period of time you had been a member of the Communist Party, is that right?"

On the witness stand:

> "A. That's right. I repeat that testimony now."

All right, but:

> "Q. Back in 1940, and subsequently in 1941, being put under oath and sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, first before the Un-American Activities Committee of Congress, and next before the Tenney Committee of the State Legislature, being asked that question, you denied that you had ever been a member of the Communist Party; isn't that right?
>
> "A. That is right.
> "Q. And the two answers embraced the same period, isn't that right?
> "A. Well, yes; I mean the same period is included.
> "Q. You were under oath on both occasions?
>
> "A. That's right.
> "Q. Do you know of any way—can you tell me any way by which one can determine which time you were telling the truth?"

Answer by Mr. Rathborne:

> "A. As far as my appearance in this proceeding, I can only say what I said before; it is up to the Court and the jury based on the evidence that I give and the evidence that other witnesses give, to determine the value or the weight and the truthfulness of my testimony.
> "Q. We are not concerned with that.
> "A. And I will state, if you want me to, that I am doing the utmost to adhere strictly to the truth in this testimony I am giving now.

"Q. You said that down at Washington, didn't you, and you said that before the Tenney Committee. What I want to know. [7748] is this——

"A. Apparently in that there is an irrecon —a contradiction which you can not reconcile."

Here is his own confession in it now, in that testimony, in that matter: there is a contradiction that you can not reconcile. Now, if we cannot reconcile it and he can't reconcile it, what obligation is there upon the jury to attempt to go outside the law and outside the ordinary rules of law and make a reconciliation of that sort of evidence?

Now:

"Q. In other words, what I want to know is, can you suggest any clue by which a person— I am not talking about the case, but you yourself—by which a person can tell whether you were lying in your appearance here or whether you were lying before the Un-American Activities Committee?

"A. I have testified and admitted that I did not give proper, right, correct testimony before those two committees.

"Q. Well, now, is there any way that we could know that, say tomorrow or next week, you won't testify that you gave false testimony here and that your testimony before the Un-American Activities was true?"

And Mr. Rathborne says:

> "A. I don't know how that question can be answered, Mr. Hallinan."

And I swear and confess, ladies and gentlemen, I don't know [7749] how it can be answered. Now, what ~~would~~ happen if, a week from now, you sat on a jury or a month from now, and Rathborne came in here as a witness and he then said, "The testimony I gave in the Bridges case was false; the testimony I gave before the Un-American Activities Committee is true, and I am repeating that testimony now." What could you say? Just that it is impossible to tell whether a witness in that situation is telling the truth. You would be like a person that was engaged in some place where there was a perpetual April Fool's Day where the principle and rule was that no matter what was said, it was a joke and a trick upon you and you couldn't rely upon it. Somebody might call you up and give you some serious and important information. You wouldn't know whether he was fooling you or sending you off on a wild goose chase, or whether you had better act upon the matter that he had given to you. It would be as though you went into a country where everybody was a liar, that the fact was exactly the reverse, so that you could not depend upon one single word that anybody said. So that, if a man told you that north lay in this direction, you could be fairly sure that it lay in that direction, or at least you would have no guide or compass at all. And this is the testimony that this man puts forth for himself. And, as you will see subsequently, for every other witness they produced here.

Now, he says, when I ask him: if you were to appear next week in a court and say that your testimony here was false and [7750] that your testimony before the Un-American Activities Committee is true, is there any way that anyone can tell whether you are lying or not? And he says: I don't see how that question can be answered. And then:

> "Q. What I would like to do is find some sort of reconciliation to solve everybody's difficulty, the jurors', lawyers', Court—everybody; that is all. You know of no clue that will identify the situation, is that right?
> "A. I want to thank you for being so solicitous of the difficulty——
> "Q. I am not concerned about you. I am concerned about whether the jury can solve it, whether you are a liar now or whether you were a liar then. Let me ask you this: You say, you testified here that the Communist Party instructs its members to lie on occasion in court, is that correct?
>
> "A. That is right.
> "Q. Under oath?
>
> "A. That is right.
> "Q. Points out to them that they are entitled to lie when they are sworn to tell the truth in a court; that is correct, is it?
>
> "A. That is right."

All right. Then——

> "Q. Let us get back to the original situation. Therefore, a person who is a Communist under such direction or [7751] education can deny under oath that he is a member of the Communist Party, can't he?
> "A. He can, yes.
> "Q. He can deny that another member is a member of the Communist Party?
>
> "A. That is right.
> "Q. Even though that person might be a member of the Communist Party?
>
> "A. That is right.
> "Q. He can also say that another person who is not a member of the Communist Party is a member of the Communist Party, can't he?
> "A. Well, I don't know any particular incident, but following the line of reasoning I would say that would be logical."

The situation here. In other words, consistent with his education that he talked about, it would be perfectly logical for a person who had been a member of the Communist Party to take the stand and say that a person who is not a member of the Communist Party is a member of the Communist Party.

> "Q. All right. He could also state falsely that he had left the Communist Party, couldn't he?
> "A. I suppose he could.
> "Q. In other words, being still in the Communist Party, he could pretend that he had left the Communist Party, couldn't he? [7752]

"A. I presume he could. I don't know of any instance of that kind.

"Q. And having left the Communist Party, he could pretend that he was still in the Communist Party, couldn't he?

"A. I guess any one of those combinations of circumstances would be covered by the general——

"Q. And he could, if there were a meeting of certain persons, he could falsely state that it was not a Communist meeting, couldn't he?

"A. I believe that is right, yes, sir.

"Q. And he could falsely state that it was a Communist meeting, couldn't he?

"A. I believe he could——

"Q. And there wouldn't be—Withdraw that. Is there any way that another Communist could know whether that particular Communist was telling the truth or not?

"A. Not unless he had discussed it with him in advance and advised him of the testimony that he was going to give.

"Q. In other words, just seeing the person sitting on the witness stand, it would be impossible to tell whether he was telling the truth on those matters or not, isn't that correct?

"A. Under those circumstances, that would be correct.

"Q. And it would be impossible to tell whether he had lied [7753] about the Communist Party from just seeing him on the witness stand, is that right?

"A. Well, following that reason, certainly.

"Q. And it would be impossible to tell that another person whom he had identified as not being a Communist was in fact not a Communist, isn't that correct?

"A. I believe we have been all through this a minute ago.

"Q. I am getting at it in a little different form.

"A. The same questions you asked in connection with the other question, in my judgment, apply in this form that you are now presenting them.

"Q. Then it would be almost impossible to tell if the Communist on the witness stand said a person was a member of the Communist Party, whether that statement was true or not, wouldn't it?

"A. If a man was up there for a reason and had been instructed and told and advised by the party not to give certain testimony or to deny certain facts that were true, yes, that would be the situation.

"Q. Then looking at him on the witness stand, you couldn't tell whether he had been instructed or not, could you?

"A. No, you couldn't.

"Q. In other words, there wouldn't be any difference in the manner in which he testified from just an ordinary witness committing perjury on the witness stand, is that right? [7754]

"A. That is right * * *."

"Q. So then it would be quite impossible, granting a person had been a member of the Communist Party, trained in the Communist Party philosophy, it would be quite impossible to determine on matters involving the Communist Party or Communists, whether he was telling the truth on the witness stand or not, isn't that right?

"A. If the man at the time he testified was a disciplined Communist, devoted to the Communist Party interests and cause, I would say that it would be very difficult to tell.

"Q. Well, now, the way you would find out if he were devoted to the Communist Party or its cause or principles would be to ask him about that, wouldn't it?

"A. That is one way.

"Q. You couldn't tell if he was telling the truth about the Communist Party or Communist principles?

"A. Another way would be to adduce evidence from other people that might indicate that he was a devoted and loyal Communist or whether he wasn't.

"Q. Then if you put other Communists on the stand to tell you that, you couldn't tell whether they were telling you the truth, could you?

"A. That could well be true, yes, sir.

"Q. So that coming down to it finally, it would be [7755] impossible for you to tell whether a Communist was telling the truth or not under all those circumstances?

"A. Under the circumstances I have enumerated, that would be a fair assumption.

"Q. All right. You go to this Communist school and you learn this philosophy and principles that you have just enunciated. That, I suppose, is taught to you, and it takes some little time to learn it, does it?

"A. Yes. I mean the particular—yes, it does.

"Q. Here is what I am trying to get. You were indoctrinated and educated into finally becoming a liar and a perjurer, isn't that right?

"A. That is right. That is right."

Now, I can not see any reason or philosophy in any answer to the contradictions inherent in the evidence presented by the prosecution, when their own witnesses, for whom they vouch, get up here and swear under oath that even a member of the Communist Party, who knew all their philosophy, all their procedures, seeing a Communist or an ex-Communist on the witness stand, couldn't tell whether a man was telling the truth or not about matters involving the Communist Party, including the statement that a person who is not a member of the Communist Party is in fact one. And if the persons trained in the indoctrination of that sort of illegitimate philosophy can not recognize when it is being employed, in God's name, what chance has just an ordinary person [7756] of finding out? And why doesn't that evidence in and of itself create without further discussion a reasonable doubt as to the truth or falsity of anything the witness has said?

Now we are going to fly in the face of human experience, of course, and say, "Yes, but he also testified that he has left the Communist Party and he is washed clean, and he is telling the truth now." Well, according to their own testimony you can't believe the witness if he says he has left the Communist Party. You do not know whether he has left it or whether he is still in it. You don't know whether there isn't some mysterious plot or plan going on against Harry Bridges in which all these people are still members of the Communist Party and that they have united with some of these Immigration authorities to get him. How can anyone tell? It would be just a guess or surmise. Every one of these people might be still, so far as we can tell, a member of the Communist Party, or he may never have been a member of the Communist Party. It is an April Fool's joke. If they tell you to look around, your coattail is on fire, you are not going to look around. If they ask you to go some place, that there is an important message waiting for you, you don't go. It is a conspiracy, a fraud, a conspiracy of deceit, and you are the victims of it.

How do we know that Mr. Donohue is not a member of the Communist Party, that Mr. Paisley or Mr. Barber is not? How do we know all these people are not still members of the [7757] Communist Party? How do we know that it is not the Communist Party that is out to get Harry Bridges? You can't tell from any of the evidence that is produced here. You pays your money and you takes your choice. You can make any kind of guess you want, and none of them is more fantastic than the story that they present to you here in apparent sincerity, with these cliches that they think add to the weight of what they say, but really detract from them, matters like, "I say with all the sincerity at my command"—cliches of that kind don't add to the weight of what the gentleman says. They detract from it. The truth is not enhanced by saying, "I believe in this and I believe in that." Or, "You can take my standing with you," assuming in my vanity that I have a great standing with you, and say, "Here, you take my standing now, and with all the sincerity I can command I say this is so." So I, being a hired gladiator, trying to win this particular case, ask you, who are fair, unbiased judges, to substitute my opinion for the opinions you have formed and throw your own reason out. That is the type of argument very frequently heard. It is based upon a peculiar misconception. The misconception is this, that if you get persons of ordinary intelligence, which is about equal to the biggest intelligence, because the heights are not very much —the differences between a person of ordinary intelligence and a person who is recognized as being of great intelligence do not amount to a whole lot in the long run. Sometimes you see the simplest kind of people [7758] arrive at the truest decisions. Their reasoning works as well as the most practiced mind. But the notion of some attorneys is that the minute you put a man or a woman on the jury, that they take their common sense and hang it upon a hatrack with their hats, and then they never try to use it any more. But all you have to do is keep repeating things, saying things, saying things, they are going to swallow it, they are going to substitute for their own judgment and for the conclusions that they should legitimately arrive at the statements of a prosecutor, or sometimes the statements of the defense counsel and I might suggest all such illusions might be gently put aside because it doesn't work. It is in the same category of these matters of repeating, repeating, repeating, the mass hypnosis, saying, "He is a Communist, he is a Communist, he is a Communist."

Well, that shows a kind of juvenile approach to the subject. In fact, it is downright juvenile. In fact, it is the identical thing that the kids in the street yell after Harry Bridges' little girl. Yes, when she goes down the street, the kids come out and yell, "Your father is a Communist, your father is a Communist." And we are going to be subjected now to somewhat the same kind of proof here to convince the jury and trust it with so momentous a burden and so tremendous a duty confronts this jury. And so far as washing these boys clean, let me suggest this: What sort of person goes into an organization and takes there a course in lying and starts out then and there upon [7759] a deliberate career of fraud and perjury? What sort of person was he originally? Can anyone tell you that a decent and honest man would enter an organization, and having entered it, go in and take a course on how to be a liar and a perjurer? Why, if he were misled into entering the organization in the first instance by some altruistic reason, as soon as he was confronted with this he would quit, he would get up, he would say, "I am not interested in a thing like that. I have been inducted in this organization by a fraud and a deceit. I assumed and believed that you were interested in the welfare of mankind in general; that you wanted to alleviate some of the difficulties and faults and injustices of life, and here I am invited to become at the very outset a criminal, that I am going to be instructed to get up and commit felonies. What do you think I am?"

Why, everyone, every novitiate they brought in there would rush out and denounce them. But what kind of men, what was their original nature, these people who can take the stand and boldly say, "I went in and took a course in perjury. I learned how to become a liar. I have led a life of fraud and deceit for 14 or 15 years." Did that man ever have in him any of the strands of integrity? Did he have in him anything that would make him credible or make him believe under any circumstances? Wasn't he of necessity, from the time that he first prattled his first little lie, a liar? What sort of man would make himself a party to such proceedings as that? And then to come out [7760] and say, "I am not a liar any longer"? What change in his nature, in the nature that led him first to embrace so invidious and insidious a philosophy has now been altered? Merely whitewashing the leopard's spots, you know, does not eliminate them, Mr. Donohue. I do not think anybody is going to feel that a person of such nature, a traitor, a liar, a perjurer, a dirty, bloody, slimy, stinking scum, inhabitant of the cesspool, to use their language, their own descriptions (and this is without my adding a single word because no eloquence could add anything to what they could say about themselves), that those kind of men could come out and then, for pay and for profit, get up on the witness stand and carry the least weight in anything they said? I do not care if they said it was daylight. Some reflection should be cast upon that observation. One should go out and satisfy himself that the sun was actually shining and he was not being deceived.

After every war there is always a great wave of violent crime because people who were originally of a peaceful disposition, becoming accustomed to acts and scenes of violence, have their natural sympathies hardened—not all, but a great many. A great many men who have participated in battles come out hardened, cynical, putting much less value on human life than they did before. Within the last year in the State of California, a young man who had never before he went into the army done anything that called the attention of the authorities to [7761] him, who led an exemplary and even a studious life, was arrested in mid-career of a criminal's course that he had entered upon, consisting of burglaries with dynamite, holdups with armed weapons, and in the course of the career he killed an innocent old watchman who had intercepted him in one of his burglaries and two police officers, one of whom had only stopped him for a traffic violation. When he was brought to trial, the story was really a pathetic one, because it was obvious that the unfortunate man was as much a victim as an actor in the tragedy. All the testimony went in to show his fine character in advance. But he testified to his participation in the war, the Japanese violence, the scenes of blood and carnage, the death of beloved comrades, the terrible things he had to participate in himself, and he came out with an utter callousness for the rights of others, an utter callousness as to the value of human life.

When honest man can be so changed by experiences, what pretense can there be that a lot of crooks who get in and take a course in perjury can walk out of a party because they are discontented with it for some reason, or even be kicked out of that party and forthwith become upright, as shining as snow, and make themselves such people as you can rely upon? If a man is in the Communist Party and he lies and commits perjury for the interests of the Communist Party, then you may be very sure that having parted from them, he will lie and commit perjury for his own interests. [7762]

However, nothing dismayed by this, our irrepressible and vicious little Micky Mouse takes these five elements that do not amount in and of themselves to anything and he inserts them in a mosaic that is built around one great thing he has been able to evolve, because in two years of such close association as to raise all sorts of suspicions, he has found, educated, groomed and made into quite a confident, avid, eager, willing turncoat, informer and perjurer, Mr. John Schomaker. In other words, they found this one man who, having been in a situation where some weight might be lent to his testimony, and who, not having been soiled and sullied by having participated in these other perjuries, is a new and sharp tool, and about him they build this mosaic, and these little people who amount to nothing but who give some, what they call conformation as to the stories and inventions—how much conformation I will discuss with you presently.

And then they have one other thing, a phenomenon novel in American history, though not novel in the history of mankind. In all situations where a great change is portending in the economic situation, where the persons who have occupied the superior positions feel their security in those positions threatened, a repressive force emanates from them to destroy and crush this novelty that is moving in on them. Now, I do not discuss that from a moral point of view or even from a practical or pragmatic point of view because it is in human nature to hang [7763] onto what you have, and I do not blame people for wanting to keep the things and positions that they may have obtained either by hard work on their own part or by hard work on the part of their ancestors.

But any rate, historically the situation exists, and we have then a strong, oppressive, well intrenched organization of persons working for a common purpose: to suppress this sort of spasmodic and natural and unorganized movement to change and correct —or at least to change; let's knock out the word "correct"—the existing situation. And then that powerful organization is always able to gather around it all sorts of jackals, poor men and bad and perjured people, who go out and do the dirty work for them and do their will. And we have often had at numerous times in the history of the world, and not too remote history, instances where a national prejudice would be generated against some specific type of persons, let us say on a religious basis, let us say on a political basis, a social and economic basis. And then you will always find a rush of people who will come in and aid and assist the powerful who don't need the aid in their operations of carrying out their campaign against such selected victims; and you will always find that the type of people who do this are reformed members of the majority that is now selected to be exterminated.

Probably the most striking example in history involves the celebrated so-called papish plot in England in the reign of [7764] Charles II. There was a man named Titus Oates, who had been for a long time a Catholic and who had even been a novitiate in the Jesuit colleges in France, who returned to England with a fantastic story that the Catholic Church was about to endeavor to overthrow the English government and restore the position that the church had held in England prior to the decrees of Henry VIII. He carried with him tales of horrible assassins who were going to kill the king. And as Charles II was sort of an easy-going fellow who did not care much about protestantism or catholicity, and as his brother James was a professed and practicing Catholic, a certain suspicion was engendered by this fellow's story, and finally other persons began to get suspicious that there might be some truth in it. Enemies of the government themselves took it up, took up Oates, got him to enlarge upon his story, and finally he became so bold that he stated that he had stood on one occasion behind curtains in the palace and had heard the queen discuss the assassination of the king; he was protected from the rage of the king and the queen by the enemies of the crown in Parliament, and he then began under the guidance and the prodding of such persons as were befriending him, to name names of persons in power as being involved in the plot. And then a popular hysteria was spread out. There had been, years before—you may remember the conspiracy, the Gunpowder Plot of Guy Fawkes, the charge that the Catholics tried to blow up the Parliament House. Two great fires that had ravaged [7765] London in times past had been falsely charged against the Catholics. Now, these fables were again revived. It was now said that they contemplated burning all ships in the Thames and that a French army was to be landed simultaneously, the Pope was to be installed in Westminster, and the Catholics were to rise up overnight and murder the Protestants. The hysteria caught on.

Oates was given an affidavit before a magistrate, and one day the magistrate was found murdered or at least dead, in a field. No one knows to this day whether he committed suicide or whether he was killed by some private enemy or whether it was simply an accident. A most remote possibility is that he may have been killed by some mistaken and zealous Catholic who believed that he was part of a conspiracy against faith, but at any rate it was seized upon immediately as a pretext to carry out a powerful campaign against the Roman Catholics. Warrants were issued; search and seizure parties proceeded all over the country. They searched the house of the secretary of the Chancellor. He had burned his papers, but among the papers he had not destroyed was a document that contained certain pious hopes for the restoration of the church in England, and added little more, but it was said that if he left behind so incriminating a document as that, how bad were the things he destroyed. He was arrested. The Chancellor was arrested. The Chancellor of England was put to death. The trained bands, that is the [7766] militia of England, were in arms in the streets of London overnight. Poor, unfortunate, terrified Catholics, a tiny minority of the country, were fleeing to the continent or in hiding.

I want to read you briefly a little description of the general spirit that prevailed, and this is by not a Catholic: this is by an anti-Catholic, a brilliant writer, but a man whose devotion to the Church of England frequently led him into unwarranted assaults on the Roman Catholic church, that is, the celebrated Thomas Babington Macaulay. In his History of England he gives this story of the papish plot, a terrible story, one of those stories that makes you despair of mankind, one of those things that brings a sense of insecurity upon you so that you think you can not rely any more upon humanity, justice or any of those instincts that we thought were so firmly rooted.

Here is how he continues with the story:

> "Meanwhile the courts of justice which ought to be, in the midst of political commotions, sure places of refuge for the innocent of every party, were disgraced by wilder passions and fouler corruptions than were to be found even on the hustings. The tale of Oates, though it had sufficed to convulse the whole realm, would not, unless confirmed by other evidence, suffice to destroy the humblest of those whom he had accused. For, by the old law of England, two witnesses are necessary to establish a charge of treason. But the success of the first imposter produced its natural [7767] consequences. In a few weeks he had been raised from penury and obscurity to opulence, to power which made him the dread of princes and nobles, and to notoriety such as has for low and bad minds all the attractions of glory. He was not long without coadjutors and rivals. A wretch named Carstairs who had earned a livelihood in Scotland by going disguised to conventicles and then informing against the preachers, led the way. Bedloe, a noted swindler, followed. And soon, from all the brothels, gambling houses and spunging houses of London, false witnesses poured forth to swear away the lives of Roman Catholics. One came with a story about an army of 30,000 men who were to muster in the disguise of Pilgrims at Corunna, and to sail thence to Wales. Another had been promised canonization and 500 pounds to murder the king. The third had stepped into an eating house in Covent Garden, and there heard a great Roman Catholic banker vow in the hearing of all the guests and drawers, to kill the heretical tyrant. Oates, that he might not be eclipsed by his imitators, soon added a large supplement to his original narrative. He had the portentous impudence to affirm, among other things, that he had once stood behind a door which was ajar, and had there overhead the queen declare that she had resolved to give her consent to the assassination of her husband. The vulgar believed, and the highest magistrates pretended to believe, [7768] even such fictions as these. The chief judges of the realm were corrupt, cruel and timid. The leaders of the Country Party encouraged the prevailing delusion. The most respectable among them, indeed, were themselves so far deluded as to believe the greater part of the evidence of the plot to be true. Such men as Shaftesbury and Buckingham doubtless perceived that the whole was a romance. But it was a romance which served their turn; and to their seared consciences the death of an innocent man no more uneasiness than the death of a partridge. The juries partook of the feelings then common throughout the nation, and were encouraged by the bench to indulge those feelings without restraint. The multitude applauded Oates and his confederates, hooted and pelted the witnesses who appeared on behalf of the accused, and shouted with joy when the verdict of Guilty was pronounced. It was in vain that the sufferers appealed to the respectability of their past lives: for the public mind was possessed with a belief that the more conscientious a past was, the more likely he must be to plot against a Protestant government. It was in vain that, just before the cart passed from under their feet, they resolutely affirmed their innocence: for the general opinion was that a good papist considered all lies which were serviceable to his church as not only excusable but meritorious."

Might we take the recess? [7769]

The Court: We will take the morning recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Recess.) [7769-A]

Mr. Hallinan: Now we have collected, by certain governmental agencies, a stable of witnesses about parallel with the ones whom Macauley describes. They retained, back around Washington and New York, like a cageful of trained cobras, these people to be sent out wherever the occasion might arise, here to get some Communist leaders sent to the penitentiary, there to smash a militant trade union, here to kick some poor college professor out of his job, there to have some person with a little militancy and protest torn up by the roots and banished to the land of his ancestors. You can take the names of Crouch, Johnson, Ross, a dozen others, put them in that book of Macauley's in place of Oates, Bedlow, Carstairs; and you have about the same result. Over a period now of a few years, with the aid of these weapons, with the aid of these auxiliaries, one would think a decent person would prefer to go down and expire rather than employ this system—let alone to crush and destroy an insignificant minority of people. They have battered and smashed and crushed and destroyed and wiped out the Communist Party of the United States. So that the miserable remnants of it are like those victims of the Assyrian kings that you see in the granite of Babylon, flying on before the hooves of the horses and the bows of the archers. Wiped out, through, frightened, terrified—justifiably so.

Having done that now, it is too bad to let all these trained and practiced rascals rot. So they are sent out now to [7770] get people who are not Communists, but people whom they will call Communists. Now we move up to a higher echelon. Having destroyed the people who were first, the nominal objects of this crusade, why, the next step up is, why not use them now to get rid of a few other bothersome persons. Who is there? Whom can we use them to get him too, because they will just say a bothersome fellow here? Is there any bold character that remains? What about Bridges? We can use there to get him too, because they will just say anything that they are asked to say. Huh! Are we limited to what may be true or what may be credible, or even reasonable? Not at all. They will just say it, that's all. Put them on the witness stand and say it. We have got the prejudice built up; you mean to say that you can't go out to a community and pick out a man like Bridges, who has been the object of a campaign of villification for fifteen years, whom everybody knows is a Communist because they have been told it so often? You mean to say that we can't use Crouch and Johnson and these soiled cavaliers, and they won't be just as effective as the most honest man? Ridiculous! All we have to do is put some evidence on that the jury can hang on to and say, "Well, we choose to believe this," regardless of how remarkable and incredible it is. We can use it. We will get him. And when we have gotten him, who is next? Who's next? Who's the next poor unfortunate victim that is going to look up from the counsel table to some fellow, when some fellow walks in the courtroom, [7771] and who says to his lawyer, "Who's this fellow? Never heard of him or saw him in my life before." And who will get up there and say, "Oh, yes, I know him quite well." You, Mr. Juror; you, Mrs. Juror; anyone, the Judge, the prosecutors. What security have they that they won't be the fall victim to it the next day? How little dignity we have left in our regard for propriety and decency and truth!

Mr. Donohue says quite calmly and quite frankly, "Of course they are professional witnesses." In other words, of course they are witnesses who make their living by hiring themselves out to testify against people. Of course they are that. What about it? What about it? Who can point the finger against some informer, some turncoat that says, "I was a member of this organization, I now turn around and I will take money from you, I will make my living, I will make a luxurious living, by coming in and testifying against my former associates or any person whom you want me to identify as having been a former associate." And there is no blush for them, there is no apology for them.

After the French Revolution had lost its purposes and Bonaparte had been beaten and the Bourbons restored to France, a lucrative living was made by a number of persons who had been French revolutionaries, squealing on their old associates at the behest of the returned king. And among them was Barere, who had been a member of the committee of public safety with [7772] Robespierre and Couthon. And he wrote a book, and he came to England and was made much of. This same Thomas Babbington Macauley wrote a criticism of his book, and it finished Berere and all his standing in one sentence. Mr. Donohue might do well to ponder that sentence and learn what the ordinary opinion of human beings in general is about hired informers and professional witnesses. Because in describing this gentleman, Macauley said, "To the profession besides which that of a pimp or a pickpocket is honorable, did now descend Barere."

And yet these witnesses are brought in here. Now if they were witnesses who had not previously been detected in perjury, if they were not witnesses who were not detected in perjury in this Court, there might be some sort of a suggestion or some sort of a shadow that would say, "Well, we might weigh what they have to say." But you would think that if he were not impelled by honesty, he would be impelled by policy to get up and say to the jury, "Now, ladies and gentlemen, I will not attempt to impose upon your credulity by pretending that these witnesses are entitled to the least value. I say you must and you should take their evidence and strike it out from your minds. It is absolutely unreliable. I tell you that from my experience as a lawyer and my principles and instincts as an honest man. You can believe it." He might go on and say, "However, these other witnesses, I suggest, are still credible."

But no, no! As though you were children, incapable of [7773] learning anything by yourself, he had the effrontery to present their evidence to you as something that should turn or change or alter your minds or determine your minds in a thing as important as this. Instead of saying, "These people are truthful and these people are good; and I, with all the sincerity at my command, so assert." It is generally the honorable policy to examine the witness and discover, "Now, is there something about this man that makes his testimony incredible or cast a shadow upon it, or puts in that category where I must say to myself, 'Now, while it may be true and while I am even inclined to believe it to be true, still there is too much doubt upon it for me to accept it at its face value'?"

Now you must discover in the witnesses produced here whether or not that element exists, and that is the only thing that, as I see it, a lawyer can be of any value to a juror in doing. [7774]

There are considerations discussed in the instructions or will be discussed in the instructions that are common to the law and are also based upon human experience and sound common sense, and that is you question first, "What is the motive of a witness? Is there any profit for him in saying what he says? Is he being paid by anybody?" And generally, if you find the witness got as little as a five dollar bill, you will look with some suspicion upon it.

"Well, he got something out of it. That is a little wrong. There is something a little bad about that."

And then you inquire, "Have you any connections with persons interested in procuring a conviction?" Well, even if it is only some small suspicious connection that throws a shadow upon the testimony, let alone a close and interwoven connection with the very persons who are fomenting and motivating the processes toward conviction. Or you look to see: "Has he said something that contradicts something that he said at another time? Has he in a previous proceeding in court said something different from what he says now? If so, how can we tell which was true and why should we bother?"

It is the principle of law that better than ten go free rather one innocent man suffer. That is enough to throw reasonable doubt upon his testimony. "We have done our duty. We have listened. There isn't testimony enough to satisfy our minds with that sort of witness," and he is rejected. Or you [7775] find that the person is doing something that shows a favoring of one side over the other. Why, I have known many cases where jurors—yes, and practiced judges, who had been on the bench for years, rejected in toto the evidence of a witness for no other reason than that while disclosing to one side what he was prepared to testify, he refused to tell the other side. Now, doesn't that show a sense of partisanship, an alliance with one side, a determination to further their purposes and of hostility to this side to whom he refuses to disclose this testimony? And in every one of the witnesses that are brought in here, you can find practically all of those matters, in addition to which, in all of them, there is that conduct which falls within the broad scope of the legal phrase, "any other fact fitted to deceive," upon which, becoming manifest, you are supposed to consult the credibility of the witness.

The processes of cross-examination are not very esoteric. If a man has been practicing law for a number of years, then he should know those small formulae by which a willingness on the part of a witness to deceive may be detected and pointed out. Now, he may not deceive at all. He may not say anything that could be shown to be a deceit. But as soon as the witness shows a willingness to deceive, that there is in him an inherent tendency or bias toward a deception on a particular side, that witness' testimony is suspect, and one of the ways that must appeal to anybody as an obvious method of determining that will even be [7776] an instruction of the Court, and it would be this: You have a person, a witness, who gets on the witness stand, and by his own memory now, without any memorandum, any refreshment of his recollection, without having gone over the matter with some other person who was there, or read some other person's testimony about it, he gives a clear and explicit picture of circumstances and events that happened ten or fifteen years ago, conversations, persons present, minutiae of details that would show an astonishing memory for small matters.

Well, you will suspect that he is telling an invented story, that he has been given a story to tell and he is telling it. How did he find it out? Ask him what he did on some matter involving himself six months ago. Now, if he doesn't know, if he can't give any explanation consistent with the felicity of detail that was embodied in the preceding narration, it is obvious that the man is telling a story that he has rehearsed, that has been built up, and that has been given to him to tell.

And so there is another device that is frequently used, and I have seen the most astonishing sort of things where a man would narrate a circumstance or the circumstances of a conversation that happened ten years before that did not too greatly involve himself or his own interests—persons present, the things they said, what they ate and what they drank—and who would not remember where he had been the day before, literally!

And another matter that must appeal to anyone is the [7777] inherent improbability of his story. Aside from the presumption of innocence, the inherent improbability of the entire tale must strike one as being a strong circumstance that he must look at to determine if the witnesses are telling the truth. There are times of fear and hysteria, and I deny that this is one of them. There are times when people are frightened, seeing ghosts and goblins that may not exist, and I deny that we American people are in such a state. But there are times and circumstances such as that tragic incident and period that was narrated in that papish plot that cost the lives of thousands of innocent people, causing thousands of people to be put to death, that sent thousands of others out into exile, in Van Diemen's Land in New Zealand and the faraway wildernesses of the world, that robbed people of all their possessions and confiscated them to the ground, because the people had created some sort of miasma of fear and terror so they would believe the incredible story that the little minority of the Catholics in England had planned and were about to perpetrate this terrible and great crime and this revolution.

The more improbable a story is, then the stronger should be the evidence and the more credible the witnesses who put it across. Suppose that you met some person who said he was down at the beach and saw a great sea monster lying upon the sand which had drifted ashore. You might look at him a little quizzically. He is not trying to sell you an interest in it or play [7778] an April Fool's joke on you, and while it is not an ordinary thing, you are finally convinced that the man is a credible and decent man, not inclined to fool you, that such phenomena have happened. There is a great sea animal that has floated ashore.

Now, suppose he tries to tell you, however, that that animal is not lying on the ground, but is suspended some six feet in the empty air. Then you no longer believe him. You think he is drunk, crazy or there is some other reason he wants to fool you. Finally he brings in several others in whom you trust and have confidence, truthful people, not jokers. And they affirm what has been said, that the creature is in fact suspended six feet in air with nothing to support them. Then you look for some natural explanation—maybe the destruction of the tissue has germinated gases to cause the animal to hang temporarily in the atmosphere. It might be possible. It is an explanation. It might be so. So you finally accept that, and especially when it is not taking anything out of your pocket or anything out of your conscience.

But suppose they tell you some persons came up and cut this animal into pieces, and then another man came down and waved his hand and the creature reassembled itself and entered the water and disappeared. Well, now, I do not know what kind of testimony would be required to make you believe anything like that. In fact, I do not think you would believe it at all, [7779] unless you were an exceptionally credulous and easy-going and receptive sort of person, because a deviation from the physical law of that type is such as to cause one to say, "That thing did not happen. You thought it happened. You may be truthful. There may be some legerdemain perpetrated on you. But, my friend, you are not going to transmit it to me. I do not believe it took place."

Similarly, a deviation from the moral principles into which mankind falls makes the story just as bad as that; to say that sensible, cautious, alert persons do things over a long period of time, that a stupid, careless, reckless suicide creates a situation that makes it difficult to believe the story of a person who is trying to put across that tale.

Now, we have Harry Bridges here, a man who by Mr. Donohue's high, praiseworthy designation, is at least a very clever sort of man. Of course, Mr. Donohue falls into that common error of ascribing to opponents motives less worthy than his own, which he should not do. You should always figure the other fellow is just as square as you are and then you will arrive at the truth. If you start off by thinking everybody opposed to you is a crook, a rascal or a scoundrel, if you work yourself into that sort of thing, you will lead a life of self-deception, and you will never be able to convince anybody else of the story.

And so this man, starting out as a common sailor, when he was 23 years of age, has now under the most difficult circumstances, [7780] against the opposition of unscrupulous rivals in labor unions who did not hesitate to stoop to murder to obscure their acts, against the calumny of enemies, treachery of friends, subjected to a surveillance of 15 years by powerful, unconscientious, unconscionable forces, striving to get something against him and to prove something upon him, living in a fish bowl, visible to every eye, knowing that his telephone is tapped, his walls are dictographed, and suspecting even when they are not that such is the fact, seeing the day that the man who stood beside him in the middle of a riot and endangered his life with him turn upon him and bear false testimony against him, and see tomorrow another friend who had cursed and reviled the previous traitor, now turned traitor himself, knowing himself to be the object of a campaign of vilification by all the great propaganda instruments of modern civilization, the press, the radio, even by word of mouth, who have seen such things happen as this, that his wife, his first wife, poor, unfortunate woman—and there wasn't any fire when she fell out of the window, Mr. Donohue; she just fell out of the window, and you know why people fall out of windows—she fell out of the window, the poor unfortunate woman. First she gives an affidavit that Harry Bridges has never been a member of the Communist Party, has never had any book issued to him; that Lundeberg, when he said that Bridges made an admission to him that he was a member of the Communist Party, had lied, that no such thing had ever [7781] happened; who then went into court and affirmed under oath the truth of that affidavit and, when the misfortunates of their lives lead them to a divorce, turns around and instantly hands to these people an affidavit contradicting that, so that he can not even trust the wife with whom he resides, can not trust anyone—literally, my friends,—his brothers and sisters, his friends, his children, his associates, anyone. All suspect! All suspect! Although he does not suspect them, although with all the treason and all the treachery and all the perjury that has confronted us here, and despite Mr. Donohue's statement that this man is a character assassin, I have never heard him say a word against any one of them. I have heard him say of people like Schomaker and Rathborne, "Well, they did all right but they were weak. You know, we have to give them credit. They did some good, but when a man as he is, they are weak. They buy them up, they buy them up." That is his attitude toward them. That man now, who even thinks that a good person, while still remaining good, is venal and can be bought up, so he must regard every movement with suspicion, so that he walks through a valley where his feet are in darkness and he doesn't know what pits are set forth but is certain that there are some, who knows that every minute of his life is of interest to forces who would destroy him, who knows that every word he utters, every letter he writes, every action he takes can be vended for a price. This [7782] man is supposed to have gone in before not one, not two, not ten, not fifty, not a hundred, not five hundred, but thousands of strangers and delivered himself into their hands; that, having taken oath that he was not a member of the Communist Party; that knowing if he is or becomes one, he will be instantly seized and thrown out of the country, because they endeavored to throw him out only upon the statement that he had affiliated with Communists; that this man walks like some kind of an insane fool into meetings, conventions, addressing them, congratulating them on their procedure, and showing himself to be one of the persons who is subject to this discrimination and injury,—a man whose enemies desire and hope at any cost to fasten upon him as a member of that organization, that he defies all the rules of safety and caution; that he isn't a careful and a prudent man at all but a reckless and silly man, and where he, by the forces and powers and principles within himself, the love of his fellow man, has been able to weld a broken and scattered gang of oppressed and mistreated and exploited men into a strong and powerful little union,—an organization that, having freed itself, can look around and go over to Hawaii and smash the feudal despotism of the Five Families over there and bring something of dignity and something of human values to the people of Hawaii and the working class of Hawaii, that can maintain his position against the violence and other treachery of people like Curran and, as has been disclosed, Phil [7783] Murray and Carey, who are supposed to be his friends and his superior officers; a man who can maintain himself in the position that he has been in and carry on his ordinary life must be a man of extreme intelligence and extreme prudence. He can not let his foot slip once; he can not cease to look around. I swear, ladies and gentlemen, he has the look of a hunted man; he has the look of a man who is constantly on the alert for danger. And this man we are invited to believe, puts himself at the mercy of Manning Johnson, Crouch, Schomaker, Schrimpf, Rathborne, all those cattle; that he delivers himself into their hands and says, "I, who can trust nobody, even those who are dear to me; I, who must lead a life of loneliness because one of my best friends the next minute may wield a dagger; I take and I deliver myself into your hands—into your hands who have entered a life of fraud and treachery and deceit, who by your own acknowledgment, is a rogue and a rascal, an associate of rogues and rascals, who has no faith to the country, who has no faith to his own family, no faith toward his friends—no faith—in your hands I deliver myself." And they have the effrontery to try to put over a story like that on an intelligent jury!

And Mr. Donohue himself recognizes the inherent improbability of such narrative, just as Rathborne recognized the inherent irresponsibility of him testifying falsely today and when testifying tomorrow and trying to tell anyone how he can [7784] tell which time he was telling a lie. Here is what Mr. Donohue asks Father Meinecke, and in it is the answer to their entire case. He says, "Are you naive enough to believe that Harry Bridges, who has denied his association and membership in the Communist Party on every possible occasion, would tell you if he were a member of the Communist Party?" And the irony of his voice was the answer that to the priest whose profession vests him with the obligation of not revealing what he hears, that even to that man Harry Bridges would not encumber himself; that he would not bare his breast to the blow of any person.

Then let us ask you this, Mr. Donohue: Are you so naive as to believe that Harry Bridges would walk into a convention of leopards and cobras and hyenas; a convention of persons who by their own description are liars, perjurers, who lead lives of fraud and deception, who are bloody, slimy, stinking, scummy inhabitants of a cesspool, strangers to him, a thousand of them—are you so naive as to believe that he would walk in there, after having twice denied under oath that he was a member of the Communist Party, and allow himself to be elected a sort of secret sub rosa member of their central governing community, expose himself to all of them, allow himself to be identified and have told in his presence that he is being given some fictitious name because it is important that he be not disclosed, thereby disclosing to this pack the value that may repose in informing against him, and then, to put some icing on the cake, Mr. [7785] Donohue, are you so naive as to believe that, after he had done that, he went out and twice more swore under oath that he was not and never had been a member of the Communist Party? And if you believe it, Mr. Donohue, you will believe anything.

May we take the recess?

The Court: We will take the noon recess, until 2:00 o'clock, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case.

Tuesday, March 21, 1950, 2:00 o'Clock P.M.

Mr. Hallinan: I have a friend, a lawyer named Dean Cunha, and Dean had a kidney stone for, oh, 20 or 25 years. It never disturbed him very much, although he knew it was present. Finally in this last war he was drafted into the Army, and then this concretion was discovered in the renal helix, and Dean got a medical discharge. And after he came back to his books, he remarked that he had always been told that if you kept anything long enough, some day it would be of use to you.

So, by analogy, in this case the very fact that Harry Bridges has been pursued and hounded and spied on for 15 years, in and of itself should be a very considerable proof that he didn't continue to go around in a reckless disregard of his safety doing the things that these gentlemen say he did and exposing himself to the fate that all the precautions that were supposed to be taken to avoid. In other words, he is supposed to be taking the most guarded precautions to keep himself from being deported as an alien, and at the same time he is walking into situations which only the strangest kind of a run of good luck could keep him from being deported.

It goes back so far that Schomaker testified, first, that Norma Perry, back in December of 1934 or January of 1935, had been discharged by Bridges as a spy for certain interests. They say she was discharged by Bridges for Communist Party [7787] affiliations. We don't care what it is. At any rate, as early as 1936 we hear from the testimony from the prosecution that they were going to the extent of inserting somebody in the organization to get information and hand it out. And a few months after she is discharged by him, according to Schomaker, she accepted employment in Lundeberg's office, his deadly enemy. So here he has the information that his official family probably contains spies.

In 1937 Schomaker was present when a dictograph is found in Harry Bridges' room. And Bonham, an Immigration officer in that district, appears before the convention and explains that it was not planted by the Immigration officers, leaving it to be suspected who else may have planted it, and there is a discussion from the floor as to the attempts that are being made now to break up the union by deporting any person who is a leader that is an alien. And Schomaker is asked this:

> "Q. Now, Mr. Schomaker, the man whose affiliation they were investigating at that time,"—that is, whose affiliation with the Communist Party or alleged affiliation with the Communist Party the Immigration Department was investigating—"Mr. Schomaker, the man whose affiliation they were investigating at that time and whose deporation they were looking to was Harry Bridges, wasn't it?"

Schomaker says:

> "Whom Mr. Bonham was referring [7788] to?"
> "Q. Yes.

"A. It was undoubtedly Harry Bridges."

And way back at the time that he says he signed up Harry Bridges or Harry Bridges was signed up, all sorts of precautions were taken, the mother's maiden name being employed, and he says of this time back in December of 1933:

> "Q. Now, will you tell me this: You said concerning Mr. Bridges' application, that there was something extraordinary about it; that it didn't go through, or the application didn't go through the ordinary channels; is that roughly correct? A. That is correct.
> "Q. And the reason for that, I take it, is this: That he was an alien and subject to deportation if he were known to be a member of the Communist Party, and hence his membership had to be kept concealed, is that right?
> "A. (By Schomaker): Well, not only for those reasons, because every member his membership was kept concealed, but in Bridges' case, extraordinary precautions were taken.
> "Q. For the reason that I have just enunciated, is that right?
> "A. Well, primarily, I guess you are correct on that."

So, according to Schomaker's testimony, at the time that this alleged card was signed, precautions had to be taken because it was known that Harry Bridges was an alien and subject to [7789] deportation if he were known to be a member of the Communist Party.

And he testified further that around that time an Englishman named James Branch had been deported simply and solely because he was a member of the Communist Party.

Similarly with Schrimpf, evidencing this necessity for concealment:

> "Q. (By Mr. Paisley): Do you know who selected the meeting places?
>
> "A. We never knew in advance.
> "Q. How were you notified?
> "A. Someone would come around and inform me. Very often Norma Perry phoned me, as many times as any other individual, where I was to meet. And these meetings, as I attempted to say before, were never given in advance; and the address was never given to you; they would pick you up in a car. Norma Perry had a car, and she was a pretty busy little woman in those days. She would drive you around to the various places. And incidentally, to make it more difficult, to remember these places, the Communists were overly cautious because many times I can honestly say I would travel eight blocks to go two [7790] blocks."

And Manning Johnson:

> "Furthermore, because of the fact that the Communists on the West Coast were constantly under police surveillance, and that they could not make a move without being constantly checked, that in order to safeguard the key > people the party had in the labor movement on the Pacific Coast, that Bridges would not be asked to come into any more of these meetings."

So in 1936, at the time he is supposed to have been engaged in this bold enterprise, according to their witness Johnson, Communists on the West Coast were constantly under police surveillance and they could not make a move without being constantly checked.

While Mr. Crouch adds this information to the same subject:

> "In connection with the West Coast, the outstanding party leader was Harry Bridges at that time, and it happened that Harry Bridges was known by the national officers of the Communist Party not to be a citizen of the United States, and therefore liable to deportation if his party membership was discovered. And for this reason the name of Rossi had been used for some time prior to this convention in reference to him and to his work."

And then, questioning when that precaution first became or was first called to his attention:

> "Q. You told us this one part, that Harry Bridges, being [7791] an alien, was subject to deportation and that those facts were known to the officers of the Communist Party. When did you first hear that subject discussed?
> "A. The first time I can recall hearing that subject discussed was in April, 1934, in a car between Denver, Colorado, and Cleveland, Ohio, at the time I first learned that Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party.

> "Q. Was it discussed in any of these conventions or committees during the period from 1934 to 1938, that the Federal Bureau of Investigation had agents planted in the Communist Party?
> "A. I cannot give a correct yes or no answer to that question.
> "Q. Well, can you give us a yes or no answer and then explain it?
> "A. My answer is no, with this explanation, that the leaders of the Communist Party considered it possible that the Department of Justice would attempt to get its representatives into the Communist Party, but in those days they felt very confident of their ability to recognize them and prevent them from joining the party."

And Ross. Now, Ross was testifying in a previous inquiry, one that was held before some Congressional committee that came out to California and procured testimony from him several years back. And in that time, as he acknowledged in this hearing, [7792] these questions were put to him:

> "Q. Would you care to estimate, if you know, how many of these are loyal and faithful to our ideas and ideals?
> "A. (By Ross): In other words, how many stool pigeons we have in the party?

> "Q. That's right.
> "A. No, of course, not. If I knew how many there were or who they were, they wouldn't be there at all."

And an explanation of that being asked by Mr. MacInnis:

> "Q. Mr. Witness, when you testified before the Congressional committee in December, 1934, at Los Angeles, you testified that stool pigeons were put into your organization by hostile organizations, is that right?
> "A. Yes, sir, I believe so."

So we have all of these witnesses, then, showing that back in 1933 and in the year 1934, when it is claimed that Harry Bridges became a member of the Communist Party, that it was known that spies, stool pigeons of rival and hostile organizations, and legitimate officers of the government, engaged in a proper undertaking of determining what was going on in the Communist Party, were actually members of the Communist Party and placed there for that specific purpose. And I say this, furthermore, ladies and gentlemen, that one of the conclusive matters in this case is that there hasn't been adduced by the prosecution here one honest witness, one man who could say that the things that [7793] he claimed to have discovered and knew, he learned in any legitimate fashion. Now, it would be inconceivable that this long course of membership in the party of that suspect nature, subjected to the surveillance that we all have been told and have had explained to us if was subjected to, that even by chance, not one undercover agent, not one employee of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, not even an employee of the Immigration Department, could be produced here to say, "I, too, saw Harry Bridges at some meeting of Communists." Even the mildest kind of a meeting. It would seem incredible that of all the people, the honest people who were employed legitimately to find out if Harry Bridges were a Communist over the last 15 years, that if he had been one, if he had been a member of the Communist Party, one of them wouldn't, if only by chance, have detected it. Let alone when they were employing all their assiduity, every means at their command, to discover and to detect that one fact.

And then with this situation existing as it did, with Harry Bridges and the Communist Party knowing that if he joined that organization, became a member of it, he would be deported,—here is the conduct in which he engages. And furthermore, in describing these gentlemen again, you will see that I am not using or inventing any names of my own. I am merely using the names that they have applied to themselves.

John Schomaker lied about the time that he started to work [7794] on the waterfront. He said he landed there in October of 1933 and that he was present in November or December at the latest, of 1933—he says the middle of December at the latest, when Harry Bridges is alleged to have signed a Communist Party application. It isn't true that he got to the waterfront in October, 1933, because he didn't leave the Veterans' Hospital until November, 1933. The suggestion is made, well, maybe he had accumulated time off and took it. Uh-uh (negative). They have the records. They stated that, the man who was brought in here said, "Here's the records that we have at the hospital, but the records of the actual hours by Schomaker are in Washington." They have that record, and if the records show that he had accumulated time and had taken it off on a credit, they would have the records here to establish it. So we won't be deluded by that. He didn't go to the waterfront until some time late in November, 1933. So that he couldn't have known Harry Bridges for more than a month. And here this man, who drifts in from nowhere and starts working on the waterfront—Bridges, with all this danger and all this suspicion hanging over him, hands over to that man his safety and his right to stay in the country. And what sort of a man is he?

> "Well, in the period of 1922 I bummed over the biggest part of the Western States. That is, west of the Mississippi.
> "Q. For how long a period?
> "A. Well, from the spring of 1922 to July the 31st. [7795]
> "Q. You were a tramp, is that right?
> "A. Absolutely correct."

A tramp, a hobo. Now, that is his language, as I say, not mine. And while that statement was made in cross-examination he gave the same answer on direct-examination:

> "A. Well, like all young guys that want to see the country, I just traveled around. I guess you would call it just bumming the country."

He joins the Marine Corps in July, 1922, and remains a member of the United States Marine Corps until his discharge in 1925. Now, a membership in a military organization in peace times is not such as to recommend one as being an example of diligence and faithfulness and hard-working proclivities. There is nothing wrong with a person who does, but it is the kind of a soft job that somebody takes who hasn't very much of a sense of responsibility.

And then he was asked where he went to, and he said he went to Santa Barbara, and his occupation while he was in Santa Barbara was that of a hod carrier. And then:

> "Q. What did you do after that?
> "A. Well, I toured the Western States again, through most of the Western States."

Then what did he do after that? For several years he goes down to the Veterans' Hospital, works as a guard, an attendant and a gardener. Sort of a handyman around a Veterans' Hospital, from [7796] 1927. He quit in 1928, went back in the winter and stayed again until 1933. So he was five or six years engaged in that occupation. Then he comes to San Francisco and goes to work on the waterfront, and he signs Harry Bridges, the cautious, clever man that counsel has been describing—he signs him up as a Communist Party member in 1933!

Now, the man, in addition to this, is not the sort of fellow that one would put much trust or much reliance on. He goes on to give some further descriptions of himself, and there are little things throughout the book, throughout the testimony, that indicate his character and his nature better than anything else that might be said. A certain eccentricity, peculiarity of nature. The kind of thing that would make one look askance upon this man, if anything important were involved. Mr. Schomaker, by counsel:

> "Q. Do you know the defendant Harry Bridges?
> "A. Do you know Harry Bridges?
> "Q. Yes, sir.
> "A. Well, I would know Harry Bridges. His wife Agnes used to call him Bill. That must be the same person, I guess."

Now, here he is called in here as a witness to testify in a case about Harry Bridges, and he starts out with a kind of flip eccentricity as though the identity of the person were in some doubt. And all through the transcript he was a juvenile [7797] and an infantile outlook and fancy. Do you remember such statements as this, page 1128:

> "I am no little Abner."
> Another: "I was reading a detective story."
> Another: "Sounds like one of them things you get out of a dime detective story."

Another: "Being there's a little Dick Tracy in me, too."

Later: "So I wasn't any Dick Tracy, running around . . ."

And when I asked him, "Well, who are all these people?," and what is the connection between the Dick Tracys and the Little Abners,—well, they are funnybook people, they are characters from funnybooks. Now, if you get little children, seven or eight or nine years old, who gives answers of that kind, and use that sort of language, they might be people that you wouldn't pay much attention to. But when a grownup man has that sort of juvenile mind, that sort of childish and infantile proclivity about him, to think that a man whose safety depends upon that fellow's integrity and good sense, hands over to him or in his presence executes an application card that is a free ticket to deportation from the country, it is straining at one's credulity.

"A. I think I made some kind of a statement about Little Abner.

"Q. Who is he?

"A. He is a comic book character.

"Q. And then in another place you use, 'I am no Dick Tracy.' [7798]

Who is Dick Tracy?

"A. He is a private eye, I think—takes an awful beating sometimes, too.

"Q. Is he some person you know?

"A. No more than I read the funnies. I see the guy there.

"Q. What is that?

"A. When I read the funnies, I see Dick Tracy in some kind of jam.

"Q. What do you mean by 'the funnies'?

"A. The funny papers."

And his description of the interview with Mr. Lipsit, who was an officer in the United States Army in the Intelligence Department before he was released from the army; went down to interview him, and the amazing and bizarre description that he gave of that man, which counsel picks up, that he was waving his tie. I don't know what the waving of the tie means, though counsel seems to interpret it as some indication that he had a dictograph concealed on his person. So I would suggest to you, in view of that, that if you are ever interviewed by anybody and he comes and waves his tie at you, what he is doing is tipping you off that he has a dictograph concealed on his person, and you should be chary about what you say to him.

Schomaker is a man who, I suppose, like all of us, attributes to himself virtues and qualities that he doesn't happen to possess; that he doesn't possess them is not his fault. He [7799] was born with the things he had, and it is impossible that he add to them. But he went into the labor movement, went into the Communist Party. Probably thought he would resurrect himself from the sort of hoboish life that he had led and the life of a general caretaker down at the Veterans' Hospital—make himself amount to something. He didn't have it in him. He isn't the sort of man that anyone would entrust with any matter of moment or concern. And Schomaker saw that his venture into the Communist Party raised him nothing. So he dropped out of it, back in 1939, according to his statement. Then he finds that his efforts in the labor movement avail him nothing to elevate himself from his previous condition and he drops out of ~~that~~ in 1945 or so. [7800]

And now he casts around for some way to establish new friends, new connections, to capture that glory that he thought these other organizations would give to him and which he failed to get. And what is open to him? What is open to him? His abilities are limited to the carrying of a hod. How is he going to satisfy the ambitions that soar above that occupation? Where could he turn? What could he do? Well, he has learned over a period of some years that there is one road to at least some temporary wealth and some temporary standing. By his contact, probably not too close, with Harry Bridges, he ~~has~~ put himself in a position where that man can now be a source upon which he, too, can prey. He has seen two previous efforts, two previous inquisitions in which other men, no better than himself and, in fact, on many occasions worse, rose up to some brief opulence, some standing with the government agents who are interested in using him for the purpose they had in mind, and it occurred to John Schomaker that he might get some temporary, at least, glory or some temporary profit from the same thing. And he turned himself over to these people, to Barber, to Boyd and to Kaiser, as a willing tool, willing to do or say anything that would further the purposes of getting Harry Bridges.

Now, it had become essential by this time, in view of the previous findings in these cases and in view of the decision of the Supreme Court of the other cases, that Harry Bridges must be proved to be a member of the Communist Party. All this talk [7801] about affiliations, associations, attending meetings, and so forth, would not do anything, and there is where John Schomaker finally saw the chance to achieve the supreme road, if John Schomaker could fill in that lack; if he could supply the keystone to the arch which, without it, it must collapse, then he has an importance that he never had before.

What is the result? He says now that he was greatly impressed at one time, and placed in a bulletin a statement that he had run across by chance. This was asked him:

> "At the time you put this into your bulletin, apparently the situation had made a considerable impression upon you that Father Ryan had said and you quoted: 'Sometimes it seems the easiest way to dispose of a man is to call him a Communist.' That was something that must have made a considerable impression upon you in order for you to print what Father Ryan said in the ILA Bulletin, is that right?
> "A. It made a tremendous impression upon me."

Into this limited and closed mind there had been injected some place along the line the statement of Father Ryan that it seemed that the easiest way to destroy a man was to call him a Communist. And this has made a tremendous impression upon John Schomaker, so much so that he not only retained it in his mind but embodied it in his writing and in his bulletin, and when he came out of the labor movement the one thing that offered itself as a means of advancement now was to accept the offers that would [7802] be open to call Harry Bridges a Communist.

Your Honor, might I suggest, I think the room at this time of day, it is so warm that it is almost impossible to keep from falling asleep. I feel myself dozing off.

The Court: I noticed this morning that the window was closed and I gave orders to the court attaches to provide us with as much ventilation as possible. The window are as far open as possible.

Mr. Hallinan: I noticed, too, several persons in the courtroom yesterday afternoon said the same thing was observable. It is difficult to get enough oxygen.

The Clerk: I may make this statement; unfortunately last night the workmen in the building worked on the window in the rear. It was nailed so it could not be opened this morning, but we have since had it repaired, so it is open now. If the members of the press do not mind, we could open that window.

Mr. Hallinan: Some of the members of the press even suggested that they were falling to sleep. It might be the tediousness of the discourse. I do not think entirely.

The Court: I think your remarks are pertinent. I felt the extreme heat this morning. We might take an additional recess if you wish now and air the courtroom.

Mr. Hallinan: I think that would be all right.

The Court: We will take a short recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition.

(Recess.) [7803]

Mr. Hallinan: Now, of course, I don't in the descriptions of Schomaker point out these little idiosyncrasies and eccentricities of his, of infantilism, as making or intending any implication against him or any criticism of him. That is not the point. The point is this: Would a man of even ordinary sagacity and with the slightest bit of prudence in his composition hand over to such a man a document that meant his entire safety from then on?

B. B. Jones, you could see from his appearance on the stand, is a strange and eccentric kind of character.

Yet these two men—according to Schomaker, he had known Harry Bridges about a month before he signed him up, or two months at the most. According to the record, he couldn't possibly have known him more than a month at the utmost.

There is nothing to show in the prosecution's testimony how long Harry Bridges is supposed to have known B. B. Jones in December of 1933, but

Jones said he didn't meet Harry Bridges until months afterwards in the year 1934. So at least, as we go to press, we have a situation in which Harry Bridges signs his death warrant on an application card and hands it over to two men who are at least, if not total and complete strangers, one of whom he hasn't known for more than a month at the extreme, and the other of whom he apparently has scarcely known at all--hands over the paper without any further question about it to two men of the eccentricities of the two men who are alleged to [7804] be involved; particularly with Schomaker, that Schomaker displays on this stand after he has been matured as far as he can go by bitterness, disappointment, frustration, if he still possesses the infantilism that make him a funny book, so that he talks in that fashion and with that strange and eccentric, almost frantic and hysterical laughter and he bursts out into. If he is that way, what was he 17 years ago? Was he then a person of such solidity and dignity that any person, a man who felt himself suspect and hunted; and in the very act of the transmittal of this alleged document there was discussed and stated the danger that Harry Bridges would undergo if it were discovered that he was joining the Communist Party, that he would be deported, and some further ceremony must be gone through and some further concealments made.

And then having received the document, what does he do with it?

> "In this particular case, Jones and I went into 37 Grove Street, went up the mezzanine floor, and Jones, with a smile, gave a card to Samuel Darcy.

> "Q. Was there some sort of a meeting that would pass upon the application?"

Here we have another strange point because, mind you, at this time Darcy and Bridges had not met, according to Shomaker. So not only now does Bridges hand over his life and his liberty and his safety to these two weird sort of men, but they take it [7805] up to the Communist Party headquarters and deliver it to another stranger. And then what happens?

> "Was there some sort of a meeting that would pass upon the application?
> "A. That is correct. It was a membership—I think they referred to it as a membership committee or application committee, and any applicants that would apply to join the Communist Party had to be proposed by someone, and from there it would go to a membership committee who would carry on an investigation as best as possible, and then the book would be issued if the peron was considered safe worth, and so forth—met the qualifications of being a Communist."

So our reckless friend has now not only entrusted his safety to Schomaker and B. B. Jones and Sam Darcy, but to certain unknown persons constituting members of the Communist Party who are to pass upon his membership, including, so far as he could surmise, possible representatives of the FBI or other agents of the government.

All right.

"Q. So that ordinarily a membership application was delivered first to a unit organizer and by him to a section organizer and by him it was delivered or it was turned over to a membership committee to pass upon the application, is that right?

"A. That was the general rule, yes. [7806]

"Q. When the application was passed upon verbally, what was done with the application card?

"A. Well, I never saw the application card again.

"Q. Do you know what was done with it? Was it filed? Was it sent to some central headquarters, sent elsewhere, or what?

"A. As far as I know, it was filed for a certain length of time and then destroyed.

"Q. How long was it filed?

"A. That is something I can not answer. I don't know.

"Q. Would it be for several years?

"A. I don't know. I haven't the slightest idea.

"A. I say, to the best of my recollection, that was the total of the functionaries"—he had named the functionaries of the Communist Party at the headquarters.

"Q. That would be, then, in addition to Mr. Darcy, there were five other persons whom you remember?

"A. Yes, that is correct.

"Q. Were there office stenographers there?

"A. There were, yes.

"Q. There were other people who would act as volunteer workers when they had a day or two off?

"A. That is right.

"Q. You do not know how many there have been? There might have been as many as twenty or as few as five or six? [7807]

"A. It varied with the campaign that was under way. If there was a vigorous campaign under way, there would be more. When things slacked off, there would be less.

"Q. You said at the end of the year, for instance, you turned in the old books and had new books issued. To whom did you turn in the old books?

"A. That is what I am trying to explain if you will permit me.

"Q. What was the name of the person to whom you turned them in?

"A. There was a Kay McGee at one time.

"Q. What was her job or her office?

"A. She generally was secretary to Sam Darcy, at times, I say. I think she was the director of membership drives.

"Q. Then who were some of the other people who occupied that same position?

"A. Betty Gannett occupied the position of membership director.

"Q. Did you get some of the books from her or turn in some of the books to her on occasion?

"A. That's right.

"Q. Anybody else?

"A. It was mostly a woman, that is, generally a woman and at this time there are two people that stand out prominently that I remember." [7808]

So we not only now have the application card turned over to these two men, transmitted to Sam Darcy, turned over by him to the membership committee who makes an investigation, then a fuller membership committee, and then it is filed under the custody of persons whom we don't know and whom of course Bridges couldn't have known, and then for the subsequent years during which he says these books were issued they were issued by casual volunteers who happened to be in there and performed that task.

Now, isn't this an obvious conclusion that one arrives at: There is no possibility in the world that Harry Bridges ever signed any application for membership in the Communist Party, because if he did he could never again dare deny that he had done so. Now, he might make some jest or some explanation; he might say it was done as a joke, or that he didn't mean to do it, or having signed it, he immediately demanded its withdrawal and he never went down there with a membership card. But no person of any prudence would ever dare say after he had signed a card like that and transmitted it to the custody of so many persons, that he had never signed the card, and no lawyer would dare risk the safety of his client by ever having him deny that he had signed such a card. And I don't care if the card was handed back to him. There would always have been the possibility that some photostatic copy of it had been made, and you could never safely deny it again. So if Harry Bridges signed that application and then went on and in three or four separate formal court hearings [7809] denied under oath that he had signed that application and was never confronted with it and never was presented with a photostat of it, he ought to drop all his union activities and go down and bet on the horses because he is the luckiest man that ever lived. Nobody else could ever have survived the possibilities inherent in that, and nobody except the most reckless and audacious person could dare take the stand and testify that he had never signed such an application card, because too many persons had seen it. How would he know, surrounded by spies, that agents of the government were not waiting in that room? How could he possibly know that this John Schomaker, who came out of nowhere and who knew him a month, was not an agent of the federal government, an agent of the Imigration Department? How could he know that B. B. Jones was not? How could he know Sam Darcy was not? How could he know that any of the people into whose custody it would fall might not be the very people who were waiting for it to use it as an instrument to destroy him? It is incredible, and it is ridiculous. And then we run into this: The other two men have denied under oath that they ever signed any application or received any book. And, my friends, when you take the three men and subject them to the possibilities of discovery on that one incident, the chances would become astronomical; there would be no possible chance that they could avoid being confronted with that document. And the fact that they could come in and Harry Bridges could come in during all these 15 [7810] years and say, "No, there was no application signed, there was no book issued," is conclusive that no application was ever signed.

As I say now, I think the one thing that is certain and I think the one thing we conclude is that the man is not a fool and he is not an insane man, and I assume that he would at least tell the lawyers who were representing the man what the truth was. And no lawyer would permit a client represented by him who had signed such a card and parted with its custody to ever deny under oath that he so signed that card, even if a lawyer wished that he could do so, and even if the client wanted to do so, because it would be to destroy him.

The most he was up against at any time was that he might be deported. But in these two deportation hearings, to take and put his liberty and his happiness at the risk, at the chance of that card turning up, would have been the height of folly, it would have been suicide. The least a lawyer would say, "Now wait a minute. You may go back to Australia; it isn't so bad; go on back; it is better than a federal penitentiary. I am not going to represent you if you say that you signed such a card."

And Harry Bridges himself, confronted with that probability, admitting that he has been at meetings, admitting that he talked to Communist and so forth, would never venture the hazard of saying that he had never signed an application card. [7811]

I remember an incident that is pretty well known to people, of some men who had signed a promissory note of some kind, and, a demand being sent to them for payment of it, they wrote back and made some question about having ever executed—not being in their recollection. And the person who had the note mailed it to them. So then, being in possession of the very document they had executed, they thought it safe to deny that it had ever been executed at all, and when a suit was instituted, they took that position. And the man who had mailed them the note then produced a photostat he had made it before he had sent it. And everybody knows the possibilities in those things. Here we have produced in this Court photostat after photostat of documents, just as good as an original. An exact replica of the signature of a person. Everybody who has had any experience with such matters knows how that can be done. In a minute. And to think that Harry Bridges, having signed such document, would then have the boldness and the stupidity and the daring to take a position over fifteen years that he had never done so is to challenge anyone's credibility.

And then we are asked to believe this fantasy.

In the year 1938, in March, a warrant for Harry Bridges' deportation upon the ground that he is a member of the Communist Party or affiliated with the Communists issued by the Department of Labor. Warrant is served upon him, trial is set for January, 1939. And then he goes to a party at a man named Shaw's house, and according [7812] to Mr. Schomaker, there was quite a few people there. Some were strangers to him and he didn't know them any too well, but there were quite a few people there. Then:

"Q. In what year did you say that meeting took place, Mr. Schomaker?

"A. That was in the early fall of 1938.

"Q. How many people were there at that time, in terms of numbers? (That is a question addressed by the Court.)

"A. I would say, I would estimate between 30 and 40.

"Q. Now at the meeting that took place in the gentleman's home that you have testified to, you say Mr. Bridges gave a talk. And let's see if I can find what you said Mr. Bridges said at Jack Shaw's house. 'We called a meeting for those people who were interested in the Communist Party.' Now, of course all those people were not Communists, as you have already said, isn't that right?

"A. That is correct.

"Q. All right. Thirty or 40 people. What percentage of them would you say were Communists?

"A. Well, at that time, oh, I would say about 50 per cent."

And what happened? Harry Bridges is supposed to have gotten up with a warrant for his deportation pending and addressed this 40 or 50 people, most of whom were strangers, only half of whom were Communists, and said to them, "I am a member of the Communist Party and I suggest that you join it too." In other [7813] words, now, not having delivered his safety to these men by signing a card that went among 25 or 30 or 40 people he didn't know, but now he turns his safety over again to 40 or 50 other people. Well, it would be like a man—if he had done these things—who might get a job in a shooting gallery, holding a target in his teeth and making bets that he wouldn't get any of his teeth knocked out. To assume that that kind of story can be believed, that this jury can be made to swallow the yarn that he has got up in a meeting at Jack Shaw's house in the autumn of 1938 and said to assembled strangers there, of whom at least half were not members of the Communist Party, "I am a member of the Communist Party and I urge you to join!" In other words, "I, who testified in 1937, almost a year ago, before Commissioner Riley in New York that I am not and never have been a member of the Communist Party; I, for whose deportation a warrant has been issued in March of this year, the trial of which is set for January of this year—I am either such a complete fool and such a reckless defier [illegible] all chances of fate or I have such a strange and abiding faith in all you strangers whom I see here, that I tell you, you can go down to the Immigration Department and you can sell the information that I am about to give you."

You see, they got the story together and they had two people support it before it was disclosed or before it occurred to anybody, that [7814] a warrant was outstanding for Harry Bridges deportation at that time. In other words, the sorcerer's apprentice, as usual, slipped up in some necessary thing. He omitted a necessary ingredient. Or worse, he threw in one that spoiled the whole cake. To conceive that that happened.

And here is another little thing. Pass that up; I will confine myself now to the two matters: One, the disclosure or the proof adduced, not by us, but by the defendants, that from 1933 on Harry Bridges was constantly under surveillance as a suspected member of the Communist Party, or only a sympathizer with or an affiliate of the Communist Party (because as I say, that was the original charge), and being so, have sworn that he was not, with a warrant standing out against him, he is supposed to have made this speech in the Shaw house to a lot of strangers after having first signed an application and turned it over to other strangers to deliver him into whatever hands they would choose. And then he goes on and he carries this along to its logical conclusion. This sort of folly. Now going to the statement that meetings that were attended were Communist Party meetings, we have Michener, who hadn't known Bridges theretofore, and he attended meetings with him in 1940 and 1943, after two hearings on the deportation proceedings! So help me! Not only the other, but after two hearings. He meets a complete stranger, this man Michener, and sits down at a purely Communist meeting with him. The meetings that Bridges attended with Wilson, [7815] Michener, all of those people, were either not Communist meetings at all, but meetings that Communists might have been at, and other persons were, or, they were such meetings as Collett described, in which a labor leader, having the same objective as the Communist Party happened to have on that particular matter and at that particular time, met with them to decide upon a program to accomplish their mutual purposes. Because, again, it is incredible that, if any other intendment could be devised Harry Bridges was now, after two hearings, submitting himself to the mercy of Michener. How did he know Michener wasn't an agent? How did he know Michener wasn't a spy?

And the best of all, of course, are Messrs. Johnson and Crouch. Johnson attends a convention in New York in 1936. Attends a convention in New York in 1936:

> "Q. That man that you now say was Harry Bridges was a man you had never met before?

"A. No.

"Q. By any——

"A. By saying that, I had not met him before 1936.

"Q. And you never saw him since?

"A. No, I haven't seen him until I saw him in the courtroom.

"Q. In that meeting of which you have told us you were never personally, man to man, introduced to him? A. No. [7816]

"Q. Well, tell me this: Would there be any place where there would be a written record of the members elected to the national committee in that year?"

And this is also as to the number of persons who would know of Harry Bridges' reckless conduct in going to a convention of the Communist Party and being elected to the central committee there.

"A. Well, there possibly is, and I will tell you why I say that: Because at a meeting, at the convention they would have 28 or 30 women stenographers. They took down a stenographic record of every single remark made of every speaker at the convention. They would type up in copies of 5 on onionskin paper. After they are typed they are given—given to each speaker to correct or make any changes or modifications. After that they are turned in and they are retyped and they are—some copies are sent to—were sent to the Communist International, and others to various Party commissions in Moscow. This—so—those are the copies that I can say that you can find the actual speakers, or you could possibly find the actual speeches that were made. As far as the general resolutions and parts of the summary that is finally edited, they may be published in some of the—in copies of The Communist, or some of the copies of the Daily Worker."

So you have 28 to 30 stenographers present taking down every [7817] word that is said at the convention.

"Q. Coming back to that closely guarded secret again, you say that stenographers were present during that convention?

"A. Yes, they always had them. They had them at national committee meetings, too.

"Q. There were stenographers present at this national committee meeting, is that true?

"A. That is correct.

"Q. About how many?

"A. Well, at the national committee meeting they would have possibly a half dozen stenographers, and they would have the typewriters in an anteroom, and they would take down the speeches stenographically."

The remarkable luck that enabled him, or the expectation of the remarkable luck that enabled Harry Bridges, to now carry himself through the signing of the application, which goes into the hands, so far as one can estimate, 20, 25 people, all strangers to him; that permits him to go to a meeting in a house and address the persons there and claim to be a Communist and ask them to join, and then go to trial on that exact charge three or four months afterwards and not have a single one of those people come in or be produced to testify to this bizarre conversation, has run its course to where he can now go to a convention of the Communist Party, attend it, be present with 25 or 30 stenographers taking down the speeches in one place, [7818] be elected to a national committee and have 10 or 12 stenographers taking the speeches down there, and sail safely through without that matter ever being discussed either in the hearing in 1938 or the hearing in 1941!

And Mr. Crouch. Look at the people who know and can testify that Bridges is a Communist.

> "* * * You told us this one part that Harry Bridges, being an alien, was subject to deportation. Those facts were known to the officers of the Communist Party. When did you first hear that subject discussed?
> "A. The first time I can recall hearing that subject discussed was in April, 1934, in a car between Denver, Colorado, and Cleveland, Ohio, at the time I first learned that Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party.
> "He stated that due—after discussing the value of Mr. Bridges as an asset, as a leader in the waterfront out here in California, that the Party would not be able to bring him forward as a member of the Party, because he > was not native born, that—and his Party membership would have to be kept in the background and not known, but with this limitation, that he was a very promising source, and that George Mink in particular regarded him as a potential future leader for the Party."

So now we have Crouch, Harvey, George Mink—they all know about it. [7819]

> "Q. Wait. We are getting a little ahead. I will come into that discussion presently. I said when.
> "A. To the best of my recollection, during the latter part of 1934.
> "Q. What part of 1934?
> "Q. The fall of 1934, and I am going into the conversations presently, but now I want to find out who were the persons with whom you had the discussion in the fall of 1934 relating to the necessity of Mr. Bridges concealing his Communist Party membership so that he would not be deported as an alien. Who was present?" [7820]

He has already had the conversation in the spring of 1934, in April, with Harvey.

> "A. Jack Stachel.
> "Q. Where did that conversation take place?
> "A. In a meeting of the Central Committee in New York and at subsequent meetings of the trade union commissions connected with the Central Committee.

"Q. When did you next hear that same subject discussed? Now, I mean the probability or possibility of deportation if his membership in the Communist Party should be discovered?

"A. After this I heard it mentioned so frequently that I can not recall the persons or the places where it was talked about.

"Q. Or the sequence in time, I suppose?

"A. Pardon me?

"Q. Or the sequence in time?

"A. Increasing discussion in 1935 and 1936.

"Q. And to a great degree after 1936?

"A. Yes.

"Q. Into 1937, for instance?

"A. Continuous from that time on as long as I was in the party.

"Q. By increasing discussions in 1935 and 1936 do you mean that the danger of Mr. Bridges seemed to be increasing? [7821] Was that the general context of the conversation, or is it that you heard it mentioned by more people and more frequent? Which?

"A. I heard it mentioned by more people and more frequently due to the increasing prominence of Bridges as a trade union leader and as a Communist Party trade union leader."

And then he runs off a list of persons with whom he discussed the matter: in addition to John Harvey, George Michael, Jack Stachel, Jack Johnstone, Earl Browder, Rob Hall, Paul Schlipf and a dozen top leaders of the Communist Party and J. Peters.

Then he heard them all discussed by the delegates to the 1938 convention.

> "You were asked about the 1938 convention. You testified there was a meeting at which somebody came in and made suggestions. Browder came in with Stachel. Browder came in with Stachel and Peters and there was a meeting of this presidium. Were the results of that meeting reported?
> "A. I don't know. They were recorded at the time by Earl Browder, who was taking minutes of that meeting, and the results of it were subsequently read to the convention.
> "Q. You remember that, don't you?
>
> "A. Yes.
> "Q. All right. So Earl Browder now took minutes of the meeting in which the list of candidates for 1938 was [7822] discussed and those minutes were read to the convention, is that right? A. The Names were read.
> "Q. Now, the name apparently of Rossi was dropped around this time because you said, 'We were to use the name of Dorgan or Dargan or a name like that, which I hadn't heard previously on the Central Committee. This was while we were discussing the matter concerning Harry Bridges.' You remember that, don't you? A. I do."

And then Mr. Donohue asked:

> "Subsequent to this meeting were you in attendance upon the floor of the convention when the names which had been approved by the committee were up for approval on the floor of the convention?" You answered: I was.

"Q. So the names of nominees were offered for approval on the floor of the convention, isn't that so?

"A. The persons nominated were also nominated on the floor of the convention.

"Q. So now the entire convention, consisting of the 700 or 750 persons when the man reading down the list said, 'The next person is a well-known labor leader,' the whole convention burst into stormy applause, is that right?

"A. In fact it was more than 750. It was over a thousand.

"Q. So that obviously stormy applause would indicate that [7823] the entire convention knew he was being referred to, isn't that right? A. Unquestionably.

"Q. So that this whole thousand people there knew at the time that the entire convention burst into stormy applause that the person whose name as a nominee on the Central Committee was Harry Bridges, is that right?

"A. I don't think there was a half of one per cent of the delegates who did not know that that was Harry Bridges. Practically all knew.

"Q. You all knew that? That was in May of 1938? A. Correct."

So if it had not gotten into ridiculous proportions by the time Harry Bridges was supposed to make the speech after the first story of the application, he is back at a convention in Cleveland or New York while a deportation proceeding is pending against him to deport him out of this country as an alien because he is an affiliate of or a member of the Communist Party. And so help me, he becomes a candidate for the Central Committee of that party, membership in which he is denying under oath, the trial of which is going to come on in a few months. He is nominated and elected at that convention and a thousand persons know all about it and go into stormy applause, and we are supposed to swallow that tale. That is the folly and the recklessness and the stupidity to which this able and intelligent [7824] man is supposed to have descended.

Well, they say, yes, but the thousand were blood brothers, you know. They trusted each other and they knew each other. Well, no such thing. We have the testimony of Ross that way back in 1934, four years before, they already knew FBI agents were being inserted into the Communist Party. We have the common sense to tell us that people were spying and exercising a surveillance upon that party, and we also have other statements that show there was no such camaraderie as must now be invented to sustain this tale, because Crouch goes on to give a description of the relation that existed between those people, and here is what he says: to illustrate that the persons in the Communist convention, who are now also supposed to share this great secret, were not closely amalgamated—and did anyone hear of such a secret? Was ever such a strange, bizarre secret concocted since the time the world began? A proceeding for Harry Bridges' deportation in 1938, another proceeding in 1941, a full dress proceedings in which the same forces with the same assiduity and the same corruption, too, that has been shown in this hearing, marshalled every bit of evidence they could to drive the poor man out of the country, and not one of all that thousand or 1200 people who knew that Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party and elected to its Central Committee came in or was produced, could be brought in to testify to that fact. When his best friends and his close associates were waiting for [7825] the opportunity to go out and sell their treachery against him, not one of one thousand or 1200 strangers came forward or was produced to testify to so important a fact as that. Why, I guess they will tell us now that they did not have one single agent, one representative of the Federal Bureau of Investigation present at the convention, either in 1936 or 1938. They probably will go to the extent of stultifying themselves and taking away the high standing that the Federal Bureau of Investigation has for diligence by saying there was nobody there who heard any such thing. And what was the close link between these people? He has been telling you how high in the offices of the Communist Party were Johnson and Crouch, what important persons they were, what ample opportunity they had to learn the things that they have narrated here. And here was how little they were closely connected with the other persons:

"Q. You were friendly, I suppose, with a great number of people who were high up in the Communist Party, is that right?

"A. That is correct.

"Q. Good friends? A. Yes.

"Q. Close friends? A. Some.

"Q. Intimate friends?

"A. With a few. [7826]

"Q. Trusted friends? A. With a few.

"Q. How many?

"A. The average Communist leader has relatively few who can be classed as intimate friends."

So that people who were there were not intimate friends. We are talking now about the people on the Central Committee. Let us take, say, this testimony:

"Q. Let us take, say, 35, because I don't remember whether it was 27 to 50. Take 35. How many of those 35 people would you say were intimate friends of yours?

"A. There were varying degrees of being intimate friends. Perhaps a half dozen might be described as being not far in error.

"Q. Then that half dozen, there was a mutual trust that existed between them, I take it, is that correct? A. Not necessarily.

"Q. Didn't you and this half dozen trust each other, become very friendly?

"A. Because I had been intimate friends with two different individuals does not necessarily imply that those two individuals were intimate friends of each other.

"Q. Would we say that maybe half of this committee, your relations with them were not very close at all. Let us put it this way. Some of them, I suppose, you had never met [7827] before they got on the Central Committee, is that right?

"A. (By Crouch): That is correct.

"Q. Then take the 700 or 750 people who were delegates to the convention. I take it you would only know a small percentage of them, would that be right?

"A. Of the 700 delegates to the 1936 convention, I probably knew about 200 personally.

"Q. Let us get this: You said at this meeting at which Mr. Bridges was nominated to the Central Committee that you as a district organizer was an ex officio member and was called into the Central Committee meetings and participated in the nominations, is that correct?

"A. That is correct.

"Q. About how many others beside yourself who were not members of the Central Committee had the same privilege? A. About a dozen.

"Q. So in addition to the committee itself there would be about a dozen district organizers and so forth, who were members, who were participating in this? A. Correct.

"Q. What I want to get is this: The list of names having been canceled by the nominations committee or selected by the politburo or whatever it was, was that read off to this presidium?

"A. That is correct. [7828]

"Q. And the presidium was not the Central Committee itself. It consisted of the organizers and persons like yourself who were not members of the Central Committee, is that right? A. Correct.

"Q. Again you stated here, just to refresh your recollection, didn't you vote for this slate of names on two occasions before the convention?

"A. I did on two occasions, in the presiding committee and in the final election.

"Q. You remember that is what took place?

"A. Yes.

"Q. So then the presidium voted on that list of names? A. Yes.

"Q. And then this list of names, which included Mr. Rossi, must have been explained to the presidium as meaning Harry Bridges?

"A. There was discussion in connection with it, in which the names Rossi and Bridges were used in the presidium.

"Q. You were told that Rossi was Bridges, isn't that right?

"A. There was reference to it, but that made it clear. I already knew it, so it wasn't necessary to explain it to me.

"Q. But the other people had to know it, too?

"A. It was made clear to everybody. [7829]

"Q. Then you went in before the convention and you voted on it again in the convention, didn't you?

"A. That is correct."

"You were then asked about the 1938 convention. You testified there was a meeting at which somebody came in and made suggestions. Browder came in with Stachel and Peters and there was a meeting at the Presidium."

Oh, I have read that already. The results of the meeting were recorded by the stenographers.

So that, according to Mr. Crouch, then, we have arrived at the point where the much-hunted and wary Mr. Bridges, at a time that he has a hearing on, a deportation proceeding, in which he is going to be deported, so far as he knows, not only if he is a member of the Communist Party but even if he is affiliated with the Communist Party, has not only freely and openly entered into an alliance with utter strangers to put his name in as a prospective member, have books issued to him and pay them dues, but turn his application over to the surveillance of casual volunteer workers who come in here, including God knows whom, but while the same deportation is proceeding, or the same deportation proceeding is pending, he allows himself to be known not only as a member but as elected to the Central Committee of that forbidden and outlawed party so far as he is concerned, so that over a thousand people know all about it. He personally confronts 35 or 40, 50 or 60 people, including nuts like [7830] Crouch, the lunatic fringe of the lunatic fringe. That is the story that we are supposed to believe. That is the story that we are supposed to swallow, and his luck continued to run so that he comes out five or six months afterwards. A trial is had with a prosecutor as diligent as the one who confronts us today, with the same triumvirate of searchers running around getting everybody they have, trying their best to get Bridges. And nobody turns up at all to disclose either the Shaw meeting, the convention in New York, the Central Committee, Bridges' appearance there or a word about it. Now, if that is not running your luck into such heights that it can be no longer accepted, I do not know what you carry that out.

There is Mr. Ross, a total stranger again. Harry Bridges said he did not attend any convention at Fresno. Ross said he did. Which is the likelier? He saw Harry Bridges, he said, at the conclusion of a Communist meeting in Fresno late in 1934 at which 60 or 70 persons were present. He saw him again at the meeting in Sokol Hall in the fall of 1945, at which 40 or 45 persons were present, and that Bridges was pointed out as a member of the Communist Party.

So here we have not only the other strangers who were present at Sokol Hall, but Ross, a total stranger to Harry Bridges, goes to a Communist convention and meets him there, meets another total stranger and goes on—there is a moving picture you might have seen called "The Invisible Man," which is the production of [7831] a book by H. G. Wells, in which this man finds some formula which, by drinking it, will enable him to become invisible. He has all of his faculties, his physical powers and so forth, but by some change of the pigment, the color of the blood or something else he becomes transparent. You can see through him. Unless Harry Bridges was such an invisible man, how in the name of common sense could he have gone through the proceeding these people say he did and still get up and assert under oath time and time again, "I am not a member of the Communist Party and I have never been a member of the Communist Party"?

I do not care how strong their story is. I do not care how much force or how much vigor they put in it. The story is incredible. It can not be believed. No such thing ever happened.

I will come later to a discussion of the fact and the proof that the government officers putting on this case knew that it did not happen. You know, unfortunately, ladies and gentlemen, sometimes a story, regardless of how incredible it may be, is still believed by people who want to believe it. [7832]

If people have in them certain malice, if they come to the position that, regardless of the proof, they are going to go along with the government officers, they are not going to take the statements of private persons or private lawyers against somebody appointed by a government agency—in other words, if they are going to come in and be dishonest, if they are going to come in and take a seat in a jurybox and say, "I am not going to give you a fair trial; I don't intend to give you a fair trial," then of course they will be found guilty. There is no use pointing out how wrong it is to them.

Do you think that 260 years ago is a long time ago? It isn't. Conceivably, a man living now could have a grandfather who lived 260 years ago. Human nature doesn't change greatly in that time. People are pretty much the same now as they were then.

Four thousand years prior to that in a book called "Ecclesiastes" an old prophet wrote:

> "Is there anything whereof it may be said, See, this is new? Behold, it hath all been of old > times in the days that were before us and there is nothing new under the sun."

260 years ago in this country there was an assembly of jury people like yourselves, like ourselves. They came in and took an oath that they would not act upon prejudice or preconceptions, they would give a fair trial to the defendants just as they would to the prosecution. And in rapid succession they they went out [7833] and they sentenced 20 people, their townspeople, some of them their friends, to death by hanging. And here was the story that they did it on.

There are, you know, in existence transcripts of trials that are quite ancient. The trial of Joan of Arc was recorded in a type of shorthand and was used as the basis of the book by Mark Twain and subsequently as the play by George Bernard Shaw.

The trial that I am going to discuss with you was presided over by gentlemen bearing high names, whose names still rank high. One of them was an ancestor of Leverett Saltonstall, at present governor of Massachusetts. Another was the grandfather of Nathaniel Hawthorne, the American author. The 20 people, my friends, who went out and died on the gallows, were 20 people like we are: they had loved ones and they had dear ones, and they had tears to shed and they had hearts to break, and the tears were as bitter as we could shed and the hearts broke as badly as ours would break, and it made their children orphans just as ours would be orphans, and it would be as bitter to us as to them if such a thing would happen to us.

Here is the story that the jurors convicted them on:

"The following is the examination by Judge Hawthorne:

"Judge: 'Bridge Bishop, what do you say? You here stand charged with sundry acts of witchcraft made upon the bodies of Mercy Lewis and Ann Putnam and others.'

"Bishop: 'I am innocent. I know nothing of it. I have [7834] done no witchcraft.'

"Judge: (to the girls): 'Look upon this woman and see if this be the woman that you have seen hurting you.' (to Bishop) 'What do you say now that you see they charge you? Do you confess?'

"Bishop: 'I never hurt them in my life. I never see these persons before. I am as innocent as the child unborn.'

"Judge: 'Is not your coat cut?'

"Bishop: 'No.' (Whereupon the judge examined her coat and found that it was cut in two ways and Jonathan Walcott said that the sword that he struck at Bishop with was not naked but was within the scabbard but that the rent made in the coat was apparently made by the very same sword as that Mr. Walcott did use.')

"Judge (addressing Bishop): 'What contract have you made with the devil?'

"Bishop: 'I have made no contract with the devil. I never saw him in my life.'

"Mercy Lewis: 'Oh, Goody Bishop, did you not come to my house the last night and did you not tell me that you would torment me?'

"Judge: 'Tell the truth in this matter. How come this person is to be tormented and to charge you with doing it?'

"Bishop: 'I am not come here to say I am a witch and to take [7835] away my life.'

"Marshall Herrick: 'How ~~come~~ you into my bed chamber one morning and asked me whether I had any curtains to sell? She is by some of the afflicted persons charged with murder.'

"Judge: 'What do you say to these murders you are charged with?'

"Bishop: 'I am innocent. I know nothing of it.' (Thereupon Bridge Bishop lifted up her eyes and all the girls were greatly tormented.)

"William Stacey, age thirty-six, thereupon said: 'About fourteen years gone I had the smallpox and Bridget Bishop did visit me and profess a great love for me in my affliction. After I got well, Bridget Bishop got me to do some work for her for which she gave me three pence which seemed to me as if it had been good money, but I had not gone over three or four rods before I looked into my pocket where I put the money but could not find it.

" 'Sometime afterward I met the said Bishop in the street going to the mill. She asked me whether my father would grind her grist. I asked her why she asked me that and she answered: "Because folks count me a witch." Then I told her I knew my father would grind it. But being gone about six rods from the said Bishop suddenly my off wheel here sunk down into a hole upon plain ground and I was forced to get one to help me get out. Afterwards I went [7836] back to look for the hole where the wheel sunk in but could not find any hole.

" 'After that in the winter about midnight I felt something between my lips pressing hard against my teeth and it was very cold insomuch that it did wake me, and I got up and set upon my bed and at the same time I did see the said Bridget Bishop at the foot of the bed and it was as light as if it had been day. It was either the said Bishop or her shape she having then a black cat and a black hat and a red coat. And the said Bishop or her shape clapped her coat close to the legges and hopt upon the bed and about the room and then went out.

" 'Sometimes afterwards I met the said Bishop by Isaac Stone's hill and after I had passed by her my horse stood still with a small load going up the hill, and the cart fell down. Then I went to lift a bag of grain of about two bushels but could not budge it with all my might.

" 'I fully believe that the said Bishop was instrumental in the death of my daughter Priscilla about two years ago. The child was a likely, thriving child and suddenly screached out and so continued in this unusual manner for about a fortnight and so died in a lamentable manner.'

"Samuel Gray of Salem, age about forty years, said: 'About fourteen years ago I was going to bed one Lord's Day night and after I had been asleep sometime wakened up, and, [7837] looking up, saw the house light as if a candle were lighted in it and the door locked. Then I saw a woman standing between the cradle in the room and the bedside and something looked upon me so I did rise up in bed and the woman vanished. Then I went to the door and found it locked and then I looked out again and saw the same woman whom I had seen a little before in the room and she was in the same garb and I said to her, "In the name of God what do you come for?" Then she vanished so I locked the door again and went to bed and then I felt something come to my lips cold and thereupon I started and looked up and again I did see the same woman with something between her hands holding it before my mouth and the child in the cradle gave a great screach as if it were greatly hurt and she disappeared, and when I took the child I could not quiet it in some hours. From which time the child before was a very likely, thriving child it now pined away and was never well, although it lived some months in a sad condition and so dyed.

" 'Within a week I did see the same woman in the same garb and clothes and by her garb and countenance I do testify that it was the same woman that they now call Bridge Bishop, alias Oliver, of Salem.' "

I am not going to go on with this sad, terrible recounting, but the same kind of evidence was given by John Hale, age fifty-six; Sam Shaltoch, age forty-one; John Lauder of Salem, age [7838] thirty-two; John Blye, age fifty-seven; Richard Coman, age thirty-two; Sue Sheldon, age eighteen; John Cook, age eighteen; Elizabeth Black, age about thirty.

The verdict was guilty, with death by hanging.

None of the witnesses was ever proved to have committed perjury. None of the witnesses was ever shown to have said anything except what he formerly believed to be true.

After the mania had died away and the fear and terror that had assailed those people had vanished, all the jurors got together and assembled in the church and signed a confession and repentance and stated how they had been misled and how they would never again on earth do so wicked and bad a thing; and the judge who signed Bridget Bishop's death warrant used to get up in the Salem church every Sunday and cry out for forgiveness for the monstrous thing he had done. What good did it do? What tear did it wipe away or what life did it restore?

There was only one thing the jury should have gone upon: the story was incredible. They did not need to be pointed out that this one had lied or that one had an interest; they had only to realize that things like that do not happen in the ordinary affairs of mankind.

They were sworn as you are sworn to indulge the presumption of innocence and to resolve doubt in favor of the defendant, and the fault and the curse and the reproach of the people of Salem, the jury of Salem, is that they did not indulge the presumption. [7839] They refused to look upon this story as incredible because it had been presented by 14 or 15 witnesses put on there by the government.

I say, my friends, that I haven't deviated a whit from the conclusion I arrived at when I first heard only a bare outline of the facts of this case: that no sensible, no fair, no unbiased person would believe it. There isn't anybody that can separate himself from saying, "I am going to go along with the government; I am going to follow what the prosecutor tells me; I am not going to listen to these fellows like Hallinan and MacInnis; I am going to hang on to my little prejudices and my little spites; I am going to be a mean cheat and come in here and rob these people of their liberty; I am going to swallow the story no matter how incredible it is"—because it is an incredible story, and you can't believe it.

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we will take the afternoon recess. We will resume at 10 o'clock in the morning. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions or circumstances.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken until Wednesday, March 22, 1950, at 10 o'clock a.m.) [7840]

Wednesday, March 22, 1950, 10:00 o'Clock A.M.

The Clerk: The case of United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The Court: Mr. Mitchell has a report on the matter of the absent juror, Mr. O'Mahoney.

The Clerk: I have heard this morning through Dr. Modezley of the San Mateo Clinic that Juror No. 10, Mr. Edward O'Mahoney, is quite ill. The doctor advises that he will be unable to leave his bed until next week, and that he has had a number of shots, treatment, and strongly advises against his reappearance.

The Court: The juror made a very heroic effort to return here over the weekend, as we may recall, and the Court is inclined to accept the report of the doctor transmitted to Mr. Mitchell. Will counsel stipulate to his excusal?

Mr. Hallinan: I think it was kind of obvious the man was sick.

The Court: Is that agreeable, Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes. We will accept that.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: According to provisions of Section 24(c) of the Criminal Rules of Procedure, the first alternate, Mr. Wolfsohn, may be substituted in lieu of and in the place and stead of the ill juror absent, and the juror who is now unable to attend, Mr. O'Mahoney. [7841]

The Clerk: Mr. Morris Leslie Wolfsohn, alternate No. 1.

The Court: The juror has heretofore been sworn.

The Clerk: Yes, Your Honor. He now takes the seat of Juror No. 10.

The Court: You may proceed, Mr. Hallinan, if it is agreeable.

Mr. Hallinan: The task of reading excerpts from transcripts is a tedious one. It would be much easier to give a recital of our own interpretation of it, and in consonance with their well meaning, amiable criticisms of me from the beginning of the case up to the present time, my associates, friends and so forth point out that it gets extremely tiresome. It might even be something that would annoy the jurors, continued reading of such matters. However, I assume that the jurors have a different notion of their function here than that, and that, tedious as it may be, the entire trial is an ordeal. It is frequently tedious, and it is a burden upon the jurors, a burden that they sustain with the greatest dignity and equanimity because, while it is customary to flatter jurors and tell them what a divine, intelligent and good lot of people they are, as though one would pretend to read a person's character by surveying his face, yet I think anyone will have to concede that the jury, throughout the more than four months of the trial, has paid the greatest attention to everything that has been said. And while we do not want to distress the spectators by having them come [7842] down here to hear something exciting and then merely listen to a lot of meticulous appellations from the transcript, that we must do. Of course, the trouble is, I am afraid, a lot of the spectators came here all the way through hoping to see some upset in which I would be sent to jail for contempt of court, and while we have to disappoint them in that I am afraid we will also have to disappoint persons on this other issue, because I think it is necessary to go through these things.

After all these months persons forget and they overlook the significance of very important things that have been said.

One of the very serious matters in this trial depends upon the appearance here of the witnesses Johnson and Crouch, and the reason that it is so important, the significance that these people bear, is not that their own collapse removes out of the trial that much of the evidence, but that any critical person, any person who is examining the case from the standpoint of a judge required by his oath to question the integrity of the witnesses produced by the prosecution, and indeed the entire case produced by the prosecution, as well as the integrity of the witnesses produced by the defense, and indeed the entire case produced by the defense, must recognize that where an effort has been made to impose upon the jury or to put under the guise of fair testimony perjury, falsehood, fraud, that the whole case of the side producing such evidence becomes immediately suspect, immediately suspect, and unless something is put in, something [7843] strong, something big to wipe away any such impression, something which will carry conviction of its own weight despite the reflection cast upon it by that type of evidence, the case necessarily falls.

A jury can not say that where this defect has been exposed that other defects probably do not exist between the surface of the other witnesses who have been called here: The great defect in the prosecution's case—and I will go so far as to say, my friends, it is a rotten hole in their case, a hole that exposes the deadly, the whole terminal disease within the carcass of their case resides in the exposure of

If a gang of men are associated for some criminal activities, it is perfectly proper, often necessary, for the prosecution to use some of them as state's evidence. If all the statements that these men have made as to their previous nature and condition of character are true; if the Communist Party gives its members the instructions that they say that it gives them to commit perjury, and so forth; if they occupied and deserved all the epithets that they applied to themselves; if they are liars, perjurers, lived lives of fraud and deception, slimy, scummy, stinking inhabitants of a cesspool—suppose they are all of that, and it is still necessary in order to prove a case to put them on the stand, that is all right. Well, they have changed their outlook; they are testifying to a fact here. But what is the situation? When the side that produces those witnesses knows—knows—that after they left that party to whose association they ascribe all their infamy, that they then also testified under oath in subsequent matters, some occurring many years after they left the Party, what of them then? What suspicion should be directed against them and how careful and how cautious should the side that puts them on the stand be in presenting them as persons worthy of credence? And wouldn't it be the duty of that side to at least call to the attention of the persons upon whom this testimony is now proposed to be imposed the subsequent defects in the character and conduct of the people put on? [7845]

But, my friends, what argument can sustain or justify a side that puts such characters on the witness stand knowing that they are going to commit perjury in this identical case, knowing that the statements that such people are going to make on the witness stand are false, and when they utter perjuries upon the witness stand, then endeavor to hide and conceal it, to protect such witnesses from observation and search? What can be said about the integrity or reliability of the side that does all of those things? Because in the matters of Johnson and Crouch precisely and exactly those things were done.

You will remember that in the Un-American Activities Committee evidence that was used here to cross-examine some of these people, there crept by chance into the record disclosures that such men as Earl Browder, or whatever his name may be, appeared before that committee and, without any requirement of subpoena or being put under oath, mailed and transmitted to that committee the 1938 and 1940 and 1944 lists of the members of the Central Committee of the Communist Party. Those things were apparently of so little matter of concealment that the '44 one was printed, obviously for rather wide dissemination.

Crouch and Johnson on the witness stand ran over them and said, "Well, I don't remember this one; I don't remember this one; this one is probably a fictitious name." But it was obvious that at least a list of the members of that Central Committee was pretty easily available. [7846]

And I do not care what anybody's opinion may be on it. I am sold to the conviction that from the beginning of the activities of the Communist Party in this country back in 1925 or whenever it happened, up to the present day, the United States Government through the FBI knows everything about everybody who had any size or importance in that party; that they know the names and they know the personages and they know the descriptions and activities of every person who was ever a member of their Central Committee, every one of them; and they know, and they knew right from the start, that Harry Bridges, under the name of Dorgan or Rossi or Harvey or Canfield or anything else, was never a member of the Central Committe. And they knew that there was no credible evidence, suspicion or suggestion that should deserve the dignity of being placed before the jury to make that assertion.

Now, here is one of those little indicia that come out in a case of this kind and suddenly burst out like an illuminating flash to shed light on a whole dark conspiracy of concealment. This Manning Johnson was subpoenaed as a witness in 1941. He recalls, he says, the fact that Mr. Bridges was tried in 1941.

"Q. Were you subpoenaed at that time as a witness on behalf of the Government?

"A. Yes.

"Q. Did you appear as a witness in that case?

"A. No, I did not appear as a witness in that case. [7847]

"Q. In other words, you were subpoenaed in that case and the Government decided not to call you as a witness?

"A. I don't know what the Government decided, but I was never called as a witness in the case.

"Q. Having in mind your answer, Mr. Johnson, that you were subpoenaed in 1941 as a witness for the Government, although not actually called as a witness and you did not actually give testimony, I want to now ask you this question: Had you prior to that deportation case brought against Harry Bridges in 1941 on the ground that he was a member of the Communist Party, had you before that time made any statement to officers of the Government in which you used the name Harry Bridges in connection with the National Committee of the Communist Party?

"A. Naturally, before they served me, I think, with the subpoena, I was interviewed by a representative of the Department of Justice. I don't recall who it was at the present time, and I can't tell you exactly when it was."

They knew that that man was going to take the witness stand and give that testimony before they put him on here, because you know everything your witness is going to say. They knew that when he was giving that testimony and going to give that testimony, and after he gave that testimony he had lied about it. They sat here in court, these gentlemen charged with the protection of the defendants, paid by the defendants [7848] as well as by all of us to watch out for and guard their interests, and they allowed that fellow to go off the stand having said that without correcting or contradicting it, because, of course, he had never said to the Government in 1941 that Harry Bridges was a member of the Central Committee; or if he had, the Government knew that statement was false and could be immediately and easily refuted and there could be no proof of it. Because, can you conceive that where the Government was trying to prove that Harry Bridges only affiliated with the Communist Party, let alone being a member of it, and had done all the things that they have done in this case, just as bad and even worse, were attempting to get an unjust verdict against Harry Bridges in that case, would they have failed to put in the evidence then open and available to them by a witness high in the Communist Party under subpoena who had told them the fact, and was willing to testify to the fact? Would they have failed to have called to the attention of Judge Sears the allegation and contention that Harry Bridges had been elected three years before and five years before a member of the Central Committee of the very party affiliation with whom he was denying? Is it conceivable that that could have happened? Isn't it obvious now to all of us that when Johnson got on the witness stand and said, "I told these agents back in '41, these people connected with the Justice Department, that Harry Bridges was a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party elected [7849] in '36 and '38," that he was lying; that he hadn't told them that story back in 1941, and that when he was making that statement up here these gentlemen knew he was lying? Or the other horn of the dilemma, whichever they choose: that if he did make that statement to them back in 1941, they knew he was lying then, and having made such investigation of the constituency of that committee that was elected within three years before, they knew that there was no possible chance of maintaining so palpable and so obvious a fable as that? So they knew that Johnson was committing perjury on the stand here, and they knew that he had never said any such thing as that. They also knew that he had lied under oath after he had evacuated the cesspool in which he had lived for all these years, because he went up to the Canwell Committee in Washington, D. C. and up there, with no cross-examination, no judge to restrain his testimony or to prevent him from putting in conclusions, nobody to check upon or contradict him—one of those committees that just hears what it wants to hear and rejects what it doesn't—under oath, and he is shown a picture of Harry Bridges having a cocktail with Molotov at the United Nations Assembly banquet in San Francisco. And he says, "Yes." He is shown it, and Mr. Johnson is asked:

> "Here is Exhibit 9 which was introduced here yesterday. I will ask you to observe this exhibit and see if you recognize any of the people there?" [7850]

To which Johnson replied, "Oh, yes, yes, yes. That is my old friend and comrade Harry Bridges."

"Did you so testify?

"A. Yes, that is right. If it is in the record, I so testified."

Now, he had already testified prior to that time in this hearing and before being confronted with that, that when he was at the convention in New York in 1936 he didn't meet Harry Bridges; he had never met him or seen him before, and he never saw or met him since until he had encountered him in this court. So when he said "my old friend" he was lying under oath, because he was trying—Anything you say is only an effort to convey your interror thoughts to another person. If you deceive that person by a flat lie, then everybody considers it a lie. But suppose the words that you use are only such as to convey to that person an impression different from what actually resides within your own mind, that is just as much a lie. When this fellow said, "Yes, yes, yes, my old friend Harry Bridges," what could any unbiased person conclude except that he had known Harry Bridges for a long time, that they were friends; that when he was discussing Harry Bridges he was discussing a man with whom he had at least some sort of reasonable acquaintance?

He is asked this question:

"Q. When you were giving your testimony what you wanted [7851] to do was deceive this Canwell Committee into believing that Harry Bridges had been a friend of yours, isn't that correct?"

A storm of objections from our friend over here. Overruled. And the man says, "No, I wasn't trying to deceive the committee; I just merely said it sarcastically."

> "Q. Sarcastically? A. Yes.
> "Q. Well, did you tell the Committee that you were saying it sarcastically?
> "A. Well, they could tell by the manner in which I said it that it was sarcastic."

Nothing was pointed out there. There in his discussions of Harry Bridges before the Canwell Committee he at first lied under oath to them by creating a background and a lying impression of what his relationship or his acquaintanceship with Harry Bridges was. And these gentlemen knew about it, because they had the Canwell Committee matters here, and they knew what he had testified to on that occasion.

He also said that before the Canwell Committee he had testified that he had attended two conventions of the Communist Party, one in Cleveland in 1934, and the other in New York in 1938. He doesn't mention to the Canwell Committee that Harry Bridges, who was his old friend and comrade, was also a member of the National Committee of the Communist Party. He is up [7852] there to earn his stipend—an honorable, professional witness, as counsel points out to us; a new and proper means of earning a livelihood. He knew he was up there to do all the damage he could to Communists, the Communist Party and to militant labor organizations that might be accused of Communism.

That is what he was there for. He was not up there just to tell a little story. Everybody knew what the general sketch was. What they wanted to do was get specific things particularly against the professors at the University of Washington. That is whom they were trying to get. And, my friends, alas—alas, that is whom they did get. That is whom they did get. And indeed—isn't this a curious little thing, too: I do not care where it is, if you are having a meeting of some Congressional board down in Tallahassee, Florida, or if you had them up in the tiptop of Scotland, and if you are inquiring about Communist infiltration in Pakistan, somebody would say to the witness, "Do you know Harry Bridges? Have you got anything about him?" It does not matter whether it is Mulholland back in New York City, the captain that Johnson said he first mentioned Harry Bridges to, or a committee in Washington investigating loyalty of their professors up there. Somebody had to say, "Have you something on Harry Bridges? Is there something we can transmit down to the gang who want to get him? What can you tell us about Harry Bridges?"

And knowing that he can say nothing about Harry Bridges to the Canwell Committee—"yes, yes, yes, my old friend and comrade Harry Bridges." Now, if he had in his mind that tremendously important fact that worst guarded of all secrets, that thing known to a couple of thousand people that Harry Bridges had been elected a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, [7853] wouldn't he have come out and said, "Yes, I know he was elected at such and such a convention of the Communist Party"? And furthermore, my friends, why did he say that he attended a Communist convention in Cleveland in 1934 and a Communist convention in New York in 1938 when he was in Washington and never mention that important Communist convention he says he attended in New York in 1936 in this court, which would have been useful to bolster this fable that Harry Bridges was elected to the Central Committee at that time? The omission of that convention is in itself a fraud and a deceit. Now, here is a strange thing that happened to Mr. Johnson, and talking about him—was it the "hit dog" or the "bit dog" yelps? The little homely apothegm that you picked up from Mr. McMillan?

By the way, when we preferred the charge or suggested that this case is to dirty for Frank Hennessy's office, it would be good policy to get McMillan to come in and sit around for an hour or two and take away some of that sting.

Well, Mr. Manning Johnson was a bit dog or a hit dog. You are not going to tie Mr. Manning Johnson up in any alibis. He has been burned on those, badly burned. When he was on the witness stand, they knew perfectly and completely and explicitly exactly on what day the Communist convention in New York in 1936 commenced, and the hour at which it commenced, and everything that had been done around there. I bet they could give you a list of the spittoons that were around the bar there. But [7854] Mr. Johnson is not committing himself to any such details. He says, "I will only say it was in the warm months of 1936, probably June or July." He didn't know. He hadn't been told that it was from June 25th to June 28th, 1936. He was not committing himself on any such deal as that. Why? Well, do you remember this, that Mr. Johnson, in order to pay his board bill and room bill to the lady who is not his wife, and a portion of whose flat he occupies in Harlem, had gone out to earn a few honest dolalrs in the Eisler case. And in the Eisler case, protected by the fact that he is a government witness, nothing could happen to him, he can say anything he wants. He can be detected. Might make him a little bit ashamed, might make him a little less apt tool, but nothing is going to happen to him, of course. If it happens too often he is going to destroy his utility as a trusted employee in this honorable profession of hired witness.

But aside from those things which, after all, are the risks of the man's business, and he is sort of new in it, a few years—and it is a kind of new profession in this country, too. You can't expect the pioneers in an enterprise of that kind to have the aptitude and the skill that future generations of them will have. A few years from now the professional witnesses that are produced here will defy the skill of a Daniel Webster. Might just as well put them on there and say they are hired witnesses and nobody is going to believe them. Just let them [7855] go off at that. But as far as trying to get any sort of entrapment or contradiction or tie them up in cross-examination, it won't be worth the doing.

But this young man deserves the credit of pioneering in a difficult occupation. He is breaking the ground for those who will come after him. So I am not criticizing him for that. But here is the unfortunate, poor Manning Johnson, who in the Eisler case said, "Yes, I met Mr. Eisler up near Niagara Falls"—and when you are talking of Communism, try to put them as close as you can to a foreign country because that invests them with the hatred, fear and suspicion that thieves naturally have for strangers and foreigners. If he is one of us, if he is part of our herd, then at least he is trustworthy. We know what he feels like. We know how he talks, and so forth. But if he happens to come from the other side of some sort of geographical line, he is suspect. That is inherent in man's nature, probably inherent in animal nature, too. The hatred will be saved for the stranger who lonely wanders in it.

In Latin the old Romans had the word "hostis" which had two meanings: an enemy, and it meant a stranger.

So we get Eisler up near the Canadian border—not that I know anything about Eisler, I hold no brief for him, know nothing about him except what I read in the papers—but he is up near the Canadian border, and Mr. Johnson sees him there and comes in and testifies. Mr. Johnson saw with Mr. Eisler, as part of [7856] this international conspiracy that he is now identifying, two well known Canadian Communist leaders, a man named Tim Buck and Carr. They were right with him. So here is the international conspiracy now in full flower, and Manning Johnson is Johnny-at-the-keyhole, sees the whole thing, comes down and testifies to it conclusively.

But lo and behold, to give the obverse of the medal of an alibi, the reverse of which was painted to you by Mr. Donohue, by one of those concatenations of circumstances that we can only ascribe to some sort of Beezlebub that has been picking on Mr. Johnson for a great number of years, and thwarting him by what he does, by the utmost of misfortunes, Buck and Carr at that particular time are in jail in Canada. They have been arrested in connection with some labor disturbance and they have been locked up in the jail, and there is the record, and you can't get away from it. Buck and Carr were not in the United States at that time at all. They could not have been. There was an alibi as tight and as clear—even tighter and clearer than the proof that Harry Bridges was in Stockton on June 27th. Whether it came from the flower of his own imagination—and I hope it did—I hope he possesses within himself those virtues—or whether it was suggested to him by others, which would be dishonest and therefore we trust has not occurred, Mr. Johnson got back on the witness stand and said, "I now want to withdraw that. That was a mistake. I do not identify the pictures that I am [7857] being shown now of Buck and Carr as being the men that I saw with Eisler, but the men that I saw with Eisler were introduced to me under the names of Buck and Carr and were said to be these men, that is why I so testified."

Now, we won't inquire into the unreasoning of suggesting that persons who are members of the Communist Party and who are trying to work in some sort of conspiracy with each other, should tell a fellow like Johnson, who was also a member of the Communist Party and a member of the Central Committee, I think Mr. Donohue says, that these two men are the heads of the Communist Party in Canada, when they actually are not, but are two persons going around under assumed names of persons who are such members. Wouldn't anyone say, "Look here, who are these two birds? Who are they? Are they actually the leaders of the Communist Party in Canada? No, they are not. They are just masquerading under their names."

What kind of deal is that? In other words, these men up in Canada are going to be blamed for the misdeeds of these two fellows. Why should they take their names? How suspicious that sounds! My friends, in these times kick reason out of the window. What do we care? That is something the jury can hang their hat on if they want to. It is an explanation they can accept if they feel so inclined, and that is all we are concerned with.

Then he finds himself in another situation in which he [7858] displays a certain amount of heroism, though I suppose protected in the same way, and it also gives the reason why counsel should look with such contempt and hatred upon the term "alibi." The term "alibi" only means elsewhere and if one is accused of having committed a crime at a particular place and he can prove he was some other place, a thousand miles away, I do not see why that proof should be looked upon with any more suspicion or contempt than any other defense that there may be. In the case of Buck and Carr, for instance, it was conclusive, but there was a case in which it was not so conclusive, and Mr. Johnson rushed in to save the man who had been trapped by the alibi. He had an associate, intimate, named George Hewitt, and George Hewitt appeared with Manning Johnson before the Canwell Committee in Washington and he went to town on a certain professor Rader. That man, he says, attended a Communist school in which I was a teacher in the state of New York from this date to this date in 1938. Johnson does not testify to any such thing. He testifies to the principles of the Communist Party and to Harry Bridges being an old, old friend and comrade. "Yes, yes, yes," and matters of that kind, and as to how he has himself been a stinking, et cetera, et cetera. He does not say a thing about Professor Rader having attended a school in New York.

Professor Rader is kicked out of his job. Professor Rader does not like that and he has a little fight himself, so he went around and he ran over all his life as far as he could, [7859] and he kept certain memoranda, and so forth. He went down and he saw his dentist, and he saw his doctor. His doctor because his health had been bad at the time, and he had been confined to a hospital some time around that period, and lo and behold, during all the time he was supposed to have been attending the Communist convention in New York, Professor Rader was either in a hospital in Seattle, Washington or confined to his home and undergoing treatment by a doctor who had records of it, and at one point he had attended to some dental matters, and at other times he was reported as having given lessons in the school in Washington. The alibi was conclusive.

The gentlemen from Washington who were relieving the under-staffed, the under-manned Department of Justice in the State of Washington whisked Mr. Hewitt—was it you?—whisked Mr. Hewitt to the airport and fled the jurisdiction of the state, and the grand jury indicted Mr. Hewitt and issued extradition proceedings to bring him back from New York on the charge of perjury, and it came on for hearing before a magistrate in New York, and then for the first time Mr. Manning Johnson appeared in that court and testified on the extradition proceedings that the two had been present at the school in Washington at which Professor Rader had been taking lessons during the period of 1938, and in truth and in fact Hewitt's statements had not been true. He did not testify to that before the Canwell Committee in Washington because nobody had asked him, and the judge in New York taking, [7860] my friends—I hate to say, I won't say, I am not going to say—you can't persuade me to say a judge's court to be influenced by what he considers to be popular opinion and newspaper talk, but at any rate, this judge denied the extradition and the warrant and the indictment against Mr. Hewitt is still pending in the State of Washington and he dare not enter that state, and Manning Johnson dare not enter that state, but they do not hesitate for a minute to bring him out here or put him on the stand, and despite all their knowledge of his perfidy, his subtleness, how far he is willing to go, they endeavor to persuade you ladies and gentlemen to resolve your consciences and your judgments in so serious a matter as this upon the testimony of so complete and arrant a scoundrel.

With Mr. Crouch the same situation, almost identical, except he adds a bizarre touch or two to it. Now, when a person appears and tells you that he was a private in the United States Army, convicted of some crime and sentenced to twenty years in a military barracks, then that is commuted after he has served four or five years, that he took a trip to Europe and they made him a brigadier general in the tremendous Red Army of Soviet Russia, look at him and say, "What manner of man be this? Is this true or is this some sort of fantasy?"

But swallowing the story, if you are willing to do so, and employ him to perform the same offices as Mr. Johnson, he then tells you he wants an agent in the room next to him, an [7861] agent in the room on the other side of him, and an agent across the hall for his protection. I think that any critical person would say not only does this bird display delusions of grandeur, but he also has a delusion of persecution. Paul Crouch is obviously an insane man. An insane man will frequently put on appearances of sanity. That man is an insane man.

However, Mr. Crouch falls precisely into the category that Johnson does, apropos, or in face of the government. After he got out of the Communist Party, where he justifies himself for lying on the ground that he was so instructed and disciplined, he lied under oath before other boards of inquiry. After he had been washed white as snow, he still committed perjury under oath. And when he came in here and testified, these gentlemen knew that he had committed perjury under oath and they treated the jury in precisely the same way that they treated the Attorney General of the United States in this matter.

When they put Paul Crouch and Manning Johnson on the stand, then the least they should have done was say to the jury, "Now, I want to tell you this, ladies and gentlemen: these two men have committed perjury under oath after they left the Communist Party, and here it is; we are not going to conceal the thing. Now we are bound to watch out for everything, and theoretically it is of no interest to us whether there is a conviction or an acquittal." But they don't do that. They hide and conceal, and they protest when you try to worm the thing out of the [7862] fellow. Because Paul Crouch, as they also knew, was not telling the truth when he said Harry Bridges had been elected in 1936, and they knew that he had testified falsely under oath prior to that time.

Now, he was called before the Un-American Activities Committee on May 6, 1949, which was certainly a recent thing. And he goes ahead and for page after page he identifies persons as members of the Communist Party. Page after page. Earl Browder, Eisler, William Foster, Sam Darcy, J. Peters, and then all sorts of less well known people—Nassonov, Taylor, Walter Trumbull, Emanuel Levine, George Pershins, Joseph Gelders, Mr. Nixon, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera—right down the line until he had identified 78 members of the Communist Party. And then to almost every one of them he affixed a vignette, a description of the man and his activities in the party. And some of them ran into pretty large and close descriptions.

Mr. Mink. " 'Mink told me he had been a taxi driver on the waterfront in Philadelphia and that he had been spending his time on the waterfront, in which he was chiefly interested; his main interest was among seamen, and in his conversations with me he expressed very ambitious aims of having Communist organizations among seamen which would control the industry throughout the world.

> " 'In his personal habits Mink was anything but an attractive person. He was a very heavy drinker, very promiscuous [7863] in his relations with girls——' ——"

Pardon me, I didn't mean to say that.

> " '——and it was quite a shock to me, with my idealistic conceptions of the movement to find one of the gangster characteristics like Mink rising to such top leadership.' "

Mr. Taylor:

" 'He was from the mining fields of Pennsylvania, from Wilkes-Barre if I remember correctly. He enlisted in 1929 for service in Panama and established civilian contacts in Panama, maintained correspondence through the underground channels which we established, served his enlistment without detection, and returned to the United States.' "

At that time an investigation, an indictment for perjury against Harry Bridges is even then pending, right in this court. Government agents were hot on the trail of anything that they might discover that would connect Harry Bridges with that. They are supposed to have been informed back in 1941 by Manning Johnson that Harry Bridges was elected a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party in 1936.

Then after giving all this list, even when the committee was getting very tired of it, and after enlarging upon his description of each of the persons whose names he gave, he was finally asked the question that is always asked: "Did you know Harry Bridges directly or indirectly?" And what was his answer? "I knew Harry Bridges, I met him at public meetings." [7864] Now here is a man who says that he sat in a meeting of the Central Committee of the party back in 1936, saw Harry Bridges personally present, elected a member of that, introduced by Jack Stachel, described, make a little speech saying, "I have been very pleased with your proceedings," and then have Stachel advise the other members of the committee, including Mr. Crouch, "Now because of the danger to Mr. Bridges, we are sending him back to the West Coast and we are not going to present him to you any more." Knowing, pretending to know all that, his answer to the inquiry in May, 1949, of the Un-American Activities Committee man, "Did you know Harry Bridges directly or indirectly?", he says, "I knew Harry Bridges, having met him at public meetings." And then he gives his little vignette also. He exhausts what he knew about Harry Bridges: "I knew him through constant reports given by Bill Schneiderman, district organizer." And, "Schneidermann's reports were on the conference with Bridges regarding policies, tactics and organization steps to be carried through. Schneidermann conveyed to Bridges the decisions of the district bureau and reported to us Bridges' reactions to them. In some cases Bridges did not always agree, and if it was a minor matter the bureau usually gave in."

So in that inquiry he did not even claim that Harry Bridges was, so far as he knew, a member of the Communist Party. The most he was trying to infer there was that Harry Bridges carried out Communist Party policies at the dictation of William [7865] Schneidermann, and he never mentioned this great and important thing that he knew, and which would be so important not only to that inquiry but to this.

And the Government knew he had so testified falsely, and they also knew this, that he testified before the election board right down in Mr. Paisley's own state, Tennessee, as to the aims, purpose and interests of the Communist Party. He was asked this concerning his testimony: "Did you testify that the position——" Pardon me. Remember, he has said the reason he got out of the Communist Party was that it intended to overthrow the government by force and violence; that is when he got out of it, he could no longer lend himself to that atrocious thing.

"Q. Did you testify that the position and program of the Communist Party was that the Communist Party never did and never will hold to a program of forceable establishment of socialism against the will of the people?

"A. I introduced that into the record, but I don't recall testifying to that in my own words.

"Q. Now, at the time and place I have just mentioned, you also while under oath read the following, did you not, quoting from the constitution of the Communist Party, on page 4 of the constitution, unanimously adopted at the tenth national convention, May 27th, 1938: 'The Communist Party upholds the achievement of democracy, the right of life, liberty and the pursuing of happiness, to defend the [7866] United States Constitution against its reactionary enemies, who would destroy democracy and all popular liberties.'?

"A. I read that into the record, to the best of my recollection.

"Q. And you also read the following into the record, did you not, further quoting from Article X, Section 5, of the same constitution and bylaws appearing on page 20, also marked Government's Exhibit 15 in this case: 'Party members found to be advocates of terrorism and violence as a method of party procedure shall be summarily dismissed from positions of responsibility, expelled from the party and exposed before the general public.'?

"A. I believe I read that.

"Q. Was it your intention that the election board should understand your testimony in such a way as, in order that the election board would believe the Communist Party at that time did not advocate the overthrow of the government by force and violence?

"A. I hoped they would get that inference from the documents I submitted.

"Q. My question is, was it your intention in appearing there to so lead the election board to believe? A. Yes.

"Q. And the purpose and intent of your testimony was to lead the election board to believe that the Communist Party [7867] did not advocate the overthrow of the government by force and violence? A. Yes."

So that these gentlemen, when they put Crouch on, knew that he had testified falsely under oath before the election board in Tennessee, knew that he had either concealed from the Un-American Activities Committee in the very month that they were seeking to indict Harry Bridges, the fact that Harry Bridges wasn't a member of the Communist Party, let alone that he had ever been elected a member of its Central Committee. And they knew when they put him on here that he was going to tell a different story, that he was going to tell this jury a deliberate lie, that they knew to be false.

The Court: We will take the morning recess, ladies and gentlemen. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case.

(Recess.) [7868]

Mr. Hallinan: With relation to the avenue of escape that counsel pointed out Crouch had indulged in, in which he says that he didn't commit himself to the fact that that meeting was on June 27, 1936—although we will show you presently that they are so tied up in it that they can never get away from it—the use of the terms "to the best of my recollection" does not relieve a person from having proven that his statements are false, or mark him as a person who is telling the truth. In fact, it is a kind of childish device that persons use who are going to attempt to commit perjury and at the same time avoid any possible consequences that might arise from its detection.

Perjury consists in trying to convey a false impression to a court and jury. It doesn't matter what words you use or terms you employ, a person who is committing perjury cannot escape it by saying that his words are capable of a different construction. The jury is then given the testimony of such witness, and he makes the statement, "I intend to convey to the jury a certain impression on my part," and then proceeds to say, "As my recollection serves me," or "To the best of my memory." That doesn't avoid it. That always occurs and they always have that philosophical out. In going over the testimony of Paul Crouch you will find on direct examination he only used the term "to the best of my recollection" once in thirty pages, and in cross-examination, the minute he thought he might involve [7869] himself, he used the term "to the best of my recollection" a total of forty-nine times in thirty-nine pages, one and one-half times to a page, as I say, for the obvious purpose of not committing himself and as an avenue of escape in case of detection afterwards. But as soon as the pressure got a little warm he used the expression "to the best of my recollection," from pages 2679 to 2683, a total of four pages, eighteen times; as soon as he found himself being jammed, he wasn't going to commit himself any of those times. But for the things that he knew, had received the advice, instruction, care, nurture, comfort, society of the following gentlemen, paid for by the——

You know, when I paid my income tax the other day and I realized that a large part of it was going to Manning Johnson and Crouch, my stomach just turned over and I got a sick feeling in the pit of my stomach when I thought I had to take some of my hard-earned jack and turn it over to those guys to hand out in the fashion that we have seen displayed. But that is just an aside.

At any rate, Mr. Crouch had these people: Agents McCluskey, Meyers, Zimmer, Attorney Boyd, Agents Noto, Kaiser and three unknown people who surrounded his room. So that that one man, that one witness, in order to be fixed up and polished, instructed and educated for the purpose that he was here, to hold him in proper fettle, protect him, feed him—change his clothes, I guess—had nine highly paid employees of the Immigration [7870] Department of the United States Government, nine people, nine employees working on that one man, correcting what he said, going over his testimony, guarding him and taking care of him.

With regard to the witness Ross the exact same situation applies. Now, Ross had been some high functionary of the Communist Party. He had been named by the Un-American Activities Committee years back as having been not Lawrence Ross at all but a man named Rosenfeld and born in the Bronx. So they had at least a clue to the situation on that. He had been editor of the Western Worker. He said that on three or four occasions while he was in the Communist Party he had his fingerprints taken by the police. They knew all about that man. They knew where he was born. They knew what happened to him. They knew who he was. Now, the poor wretch is a weak man and a liar and a crook; he is no damned good. But all the time he was on the witness stand there I felt a certain sympathy and sorrow for him because he was testifying under compulsion, too. And here is the proof of it. They went down and they kissed and cajoled and seduced Rathborne and got him to add to what he had to say, and bribed and bought Schrimpf; they baby-sat for Schomaker, and sent the agent out with his wife shopping for her; they sat in his house, and Mr. Donohue brought him up in his car and went out and showered upon that humble place the full light of his benignity. They nurtured him and carried him on and on and [7871] on.

But what did they do to Ross? Mr. Barber went into Ross's office, where he was living under an assumed name, his identity concealed. He spoke to him, and Mr. Ross went to Barber's room that night and signed a statement to become a witness against Harry Bridges. Why? Mr. Barber went into Ross' and he threw down a paper that told him he was born in Poland, he came here under a particular name, he landed at a particular place, he could be kicked out of the country instanter. And Ross picked it up, and he read it, and he thought it over for the afternoon, and he went over to Barber's room that night and said, "All right; what do I have to do?" And he was told what he had to do. When he came out here he tried to earn his keep and he tried to earn his way. Having been compelled and driven to it in the first place, then he made virtue of the necessity and undoubtedly a profit from it. He became a hired witness, and he was going to be one thing or the other: He was going to continue on in this lurking way as long as he could, or he was going to be exposed, kicked out of his job, probably even kicked out of the country, because I doubt very much if there is any naturalization there either actual or by his father having been naturalized. I don't believe it is there at all. I don't believe his father has ever been naturalized. I will tell you why in a moment. He thought to himself, "Well, I have to go along with them; I have to do as I am told to do, so I might as well go the whole way, and I might as well profit [7872] from it; I might as well make some money out of it. I might as well insure myself. If I am going to be a liar and a traitor and a perjurer, there is no reason why I shouldn't take the King's gold for it." Then he came in here. When he got on the stand he lied, and they knew he was going to lie, and he lied all the way through and they knew he was lying all the way through. And they not only gold-bricked the jury by not disclosing that, but they endeavored by every assiduity to conceal it and protect him, and then in every fashion that they could, to foreclose cross-examination, to stop us from discovering who this man was or what manner of man he might be. [7873]

So Mr. Ross didn't tell the jury a great number of things that were afterwards revealed on cross-examination. Mr. MacInnis asked him, "In the year 1924 you worked as a seaman, did you not?"

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. On the Luckenbach line?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You did not inform the jury when you were asked under oath by the prosecutor to state your employments, did you?

"A. No, sir, that was a very brief period.

"Q. Did you work for Spencer, Colligan & Son Oil Refinery?

"A. Yes, I did for a short while.

"Q. Did you tell the jury that when you were questioned?

"A. I hadn't recalled it.

"Q. What did you do in 1928?

"A. That may have been the year in which I wrote propaganda stories for the election campaign of the Communist Party in the Daily Worker. It may have been. I am not sure.

"Q. Now, you did not tell the Court and jury about that, two days ago when the prosecutor asked you to tell what your prior employment was?"

Mr. Donohue objects and informs the witness that he was not asked that question.

"Q. Didn't you join the Communist Party in New York in August of 1927?" [7874]

Now, remember he has testified he joined the Communist Party in Los Angeles in 1932. He has some reason all the way through for concealing certain matters in connection with his testimony, and these people knew, because he had testified before a committee of theirs prior to this time, that he joined the Communist Party in New York in 1927. So when he said on the witness stand that he joined the Communist Party in 1932 they knew he was not telling the truth. Why didn't they say, "Now, aren't you mistaken? Let us inform the jury correctly. You actually joined in 1927?"

"Q. Didn't you join the Communist Party in New York in August of 1927?

"A. I think I did make out an application card and then dropped my membership."

Now, you will see how that is false.

"Q. Did you tell that to the Court and jury two days ago?

"Mr. Donohue: Oh, your Honor, I object, if your Honor please. When we examined this man we did not attempt to cover every detail of his life for twenty-four years, and I think the impression of the inference Mr. MacInnis is attempting to draw by this line of questioning is unfair. I object to the question.

"The Court: The objection is overruled.

"Mr. Donohue: I object again on the ground he has not been asked that question. [7875]

"Mr. MacInnis: I would like to bring out what is entirely the fault of the witness or your fault.

"Mr. Donohue: I will take the responsibility, Mr. MacInnis.

"Mr. MacInnis: Will you answer the question? Will you read it for the third time, please."

And the witness answered:

"I was not asked." He said he was not asked if he joined the Communist Party in 1927, though he had been asked when he did join it.

Now, how long was he in that party? This is the one where he signed the application and then dropped it.

"Well, possibly a year. I am not sure. 1928 part of 1929—I don't recall—it was a short period.

"Q. Now, about ten minutes ago, Mr. Ross, you told the Court and jury under oath that you made out an application blank but did nothing about it. Now you say you remained in for a year or more?

"A. That was a technical statement, Mr. MacInnis. I was in the Party technically. It meant nothing much to me. I didn't take the active part I took when I joined after having dropped out for several years in 1932.

"Q. When the prosecutor, who represents the Government of the United States in this court, asked you under oath to tell about your newspaper work in New York, why didn't you then [7876] tell about your work on the Daily Worker in New York?"

And here is his answer:

"Well, for one thing the Daily Worker is not a legitimate newspaper, as I saw it."

That is the reason he does not tell this jury, in answer to the question as to what newspaper work he had done, does not admit working on the Daily Worker for a couple of years because, he said, "The reason I didn't answer that was I did not consider it a legitimate newspaper."

Remember, my friends, what we are concerned with here is to discuss whether these people, Johnson and Crouch and this man, lied under oath in your presence and before you, not whether at other times and at other places they attempted to lie and to deceive other persons. What is important is whether they came into this court and also committed perjury in the identical matter before us.

> "Q. Didn't you think it formed part of the background of your employment as a paid functionary for the Communist Party?
> "A. I think my newspaper experience primarily, and secondarily, the fact that the personnel of the Communist Party at that time in Los Angeles was largely foreign-born. They wanted someone who could front for the Party openly."

In other words, he now comes out with the allegation to disarm and turn aside inquiry that he is not foreign-born, he [7877] is an American citizen, and when they heard him say he was elected to this office in Los Angeles because they wanted someone who wasn't foreign-born, they knew he was telling a lie. They knew then he was foreign-born.

Now, it becomes apparent from certain questions addressed by Mr. MacInnis that Lawrence Ross is not the person he professes to be. We did not know a single thing about Lawrence Ross. We assumed his name was Lawrence Ross and he was born where he said he was born, and we hadn't any information at all from the Communist Party, the Western Worker or anyone else until Mr. MacInnis asked the question about his graduation from the University of Kentucky, and when he could not remember anyone who had been a member of his class, we were astounded; and then for the first time we started making inquiries—that was Friday—and by Monday morning we knew all about Lawrence Ross. And they will pretend that, with the FBI behind them and investigating that man for years and years and years, they did not know what we were able to discover in three days. That is the kind of fable they are going to tell you here.

As soon as Lawrence Ross did not know anybody in his class in Kentucky University, Mr. MacInnis started to work to find out why he did not, because he surmised immediately he never had gone to Kentucky University, and why should he pretend to have done so under oath unless there was something he was trying to conceal? His imagination certainly outleaped mine, [7878] because he surmised the man was not as he represented himself but an entirely different character. His imagination covered what could not have been deduced from the mere answer. And what we actually thought was this, my friends: We made an inquiry at the University of Kentucky as to whether a man of that name had ever been registered there. Then we inquired at the high school and they said nobody of that name had ever been registered there either, but the principal gave us another piece of information. He said, "In this community 'Ross' is commonly a Negro name. There are several people named Ross in this community, all of whom are colored people, but no white people named Ross."

And we thought this: We were not even going to expose it. We were not going to bring it out. We thought Ross was a Negro who had been passing as a white man. That was a concept that we had received. And it was not until a very active, very diligent and very intelligent young man in the East proceeded further upon some cue that he had received that Ross had been called Rosenfeld and was born in the Bronx, to find out just who Ross was, and here is how he found it out: There is a big grammar school in the Bronx to which everybody of humble origin goes. It is in the poor section of the Bronx. And when he made inquiry there he found a man who had been a classmate of this man and knew that Lipman Rosenfeld had afterwards changed his name and masqueraded as Lawrence Ross, and what we [7879] found out by so simple a procedure as that, they did not know a single thing about it. But Lawrence Ross, as soon as he found himself confronted with the possibility of being unmasked, he started lying to this jury just as loudly as he could. He wants to get out of here and get out of the State, and when the Court is considerate, and properly so, of his situation, he almost became frantic, and we were further warned that there was something pending by the smallness of the circumstances that he now deems so important to allow him to get away. What, for instance, what great thing hung upon whether the Tennessee Cotton Grower was published at the right time and under the proper auspices? His protests on that excited further suspicion.

> "The Witness: Yes, I expected to be out of here by Wednesday. Then there is the pressure of my job, a special edition coming up. It is an annual forecast edition, which we are way behind on. It would be terribly inconvenient to stay over until Monday, almost would demand a suspense of the publication. But it would amount to a monetary loss to the paper if that edition didn't come out on time.
> "The Court: And this matter of a special edition goes under your control?
> "The Witness: Yes, sir, under my direction.
> "The Court: Have you written editorial comment, and so forth?
> "The Witness: I have written some, but a lot of it is [7880] gathered by contributions from other people, and it is my job to compile it, edit it, place it in the proper place in the paper. And the paper, incidentally, has already committed itself to a publication date—and advertising material, and has solicited advertising matter on the strength of that publication date."

Mr. MacInnis receives a telegram. All the telegram said was that there was no person by the name of Lawrence Ross ever registered in the University of Kentucky, and he handed it to the Court. Telegram handed by Mr. MacInnis.

> "Mr. MacInnis: I would be glad to show your Honor what I have."

Then the Court began to press Mr. Ross that he stay here.

"The Witness: I spoke to my employer in Memphis on the telephone Wednesday night. I told him then I had been on the stand for that day and probably would be off the next day. That was yesterday. He said, 'Take care of yourself. We need you here very badly. I am having to send out wires in order to get some material in that only you can get. I doubt if I can get it. And please start back as soon as you can, we need you here very badly.'

"The Court: Yes. Could you do this? Could you, as a matter of the request coming from the Court, return to your place of business with your family and then return here again for further cross-examination at a later [7881] date?

"The Witness: Well, that would be very difficult, for this reason, that beginning with this month, January, we have a series of special convention numbers. This month we have an annual forecast edition which is a rather bulky edition, which we get out every January. That is the edition I am referring to now. Then early in February we start a series of special convention numbers dealing with various segments of the trade, the cotton trade and industry. And from now until I should say June or May 30, I think is the last one, these are published periodically. They require my presence there."

So he not only was anxious to get out of the court but he was anxious that he do not return. In further pursuit of the problem of whether he was deceiving this jury, lying to this jury under oath as well as his previous false statements before other bodies, I want to call your attention to these few things, and it may be said, "All right, he said he had to conceal his identity. These matters were addressed to his identity and he concealed them." But he also lied about other things, and lied to this jury.

> "Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): When you were talking about making this statement, did you recall that you had told this jury under oath that you had stopped deceiving people, is that correct?
> "A. (By the witness): Yes, politically. That statement was [7882] made with reference to political deception.
> "Q. Do you remember you were asked these questions and gave these answers before the Congressional committee in 1934 under oath:
> " 'In what capacity did you say you acted for the Communist Party?
> " 'A. Secretary of the Communist Party in Los Angeles.
> " 'Q. How long have you been so acting?
> " 'A. As secretary for about six months.
> " 'Q. Were you a member of the Communist Party prior to that time? A. Yes.
>
> " 'How long?
> " 'A. I have been a member of the Party since 1927.' "

So that in the Congressional meeting in 1934 in Los Angeles he said, "I have been secretary of the Communist Party in Los Angeles for about six months and I have been a member of the Party since 1927." [7883]

"Q. You lied under oath, then?

"A. I was a Communist at that time.

"Q. And you did lie under oath?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. ——"

Now he goes on further and he talks about the Communist Party not advocating the overthrow of the government by force. He has denied in 1934 under oath that the Communist Party has any such intention or any such desire. He was asked the purposes and objectives of the Communist Party, and the answer is, "Yes, the object of the Communist Party is to organize the working classes for a struggle to better living conditions. And also, if the Communist Party has succeeded in winning the majority among the population of America to establish the right of that majority to rule itself for the working class government.

"Q. Do you advocate a change in the United States? A. I do.

"Q. What changes do you advocate?

"A. I advocate that the government be a working class government and that the parties of the government be run by agents of the working class for the good of the working class.

"Q. Do you advocate bringing about these changes by the use of force if necessary?

"A. Only if the organized minority opposes the will of the [7884] majority.

"Q. And do you feel that that condition exists at the present time?

"A. No, sir, it does not.

"Q. You do not then advocate the use of force and violence? A. No, sir."

Now:

"Q. Was that your statement?

"A. I think so. Something along those lines.

"Q. Were you telling the truth, then, or were you telling the truth here in this court?

"A. I was not telling the truth then. I did not reveal the entire program, purpose, belief and philosophy of the Communist Party.

"Q. Did those conversations——"

This is about discussions he had with Kidder, Kaiser and Kessler.

"——concern themselves with the lies that you had told on the witness stand?

"A. With the misstatements that I had made. I call them white lies."

Now, the lies that he told you ladies and gentlemen were white lies. The lies he told the committee in Los Angeles in 1934 were political lies. So he calls them white lies.

"Q. You call them white lies?

"A. Yes. I think a lie is a statement made with the intent [7885] both of deception and winning something for yourself to advance your own position. I have nothing to advance in concealing those facts.

"Q. What did you call the lies that you told in 1934, when you misstated the date that you entered the Communist Party, or when you lied about the use of force and violence, according to your present mood on that score?

"A. I should call those typical exemplary Communist lies.

"Q. What do you call the lie that you told this jury last week, when you said that you used to deceive when you were a member of the Communist Party, but that you had turned off that part of your life and you were no longer deceiving anybody?

"A. I would call that political deception. I was no longer deceiving anybody."

Now, he is taken over by Barber, to see a man who had been described by Dean Landis, the Dean of Harvard Law College, who had the first deportation hearing, as a perjurer and a pathological liar; a man named Miles G. Humphries, who had helped collect and collate evidence with Mr. Barber for that hearing. And he is asked what he did over the weekend, and after evading and cutting around as to where he went and what he did and so forth, he finally says he went to see a man over in Berkeley. Doesn't give his name, doesn't remember the name of his house, where he was or anything else. Finally, it is worked out of [7886] him:

> "Q. Whose house was it?
> "A. The house of a former member of the Communist Party here.
> "Q. Named what?
> "A. Miles G. Umphries."

And he left off the H so audibly and so obviously that it was just a laugh to the persons who knew just whom he meant. And then:

> "Q. Umphrey?
>
> "A. Yes, sir."

So that we wouldn't detect that. All right. Then he said that on Sunday morning he went to church. Mr. Kaiser took him to church.

> "I was trying to place my activities with reference to this case. Sunday morning I went to church."

He says, "That can be checked, I believe. I was seen there. I was recognized there."

Now, I asked Mr. MacInnis, I said, "Ask him who recognized him there. You are going to find out it was one of the jurors. Kaiser found out what church one of those jurors went to, and he took this bird there and sat him down beside him"; and Mr. MacInnis, for causes that he considers proper, forbore to ask the question. But if any of the jurors saw Mr. Ross, who probably has no religious affiliation at all, but if any, has some [7887] remnants of adherence to the Jewish faith—that he should go to a Christian Science church on a Sunday was part of a design to influence somebody. So if you happen to be the person who was a member of that congregation and saw that man in church, well, he said, "I was seen. I was recognized there." He was calling it to the attention of somebody on the jury, that he had been in that church. He was going to pretend even at that time he was a member of it, although he afterwards said no.

Now, we come to the question of his return to Tennessee and the matter of his wife driving slowly because if she drove rapidly, as she blacked out one time, he might never see her again. And if I will be permitted, we will discuss that in our next installment, and now allow ten minutes to permit the operator to change the reel.

The Court: We will take the recess this noon until 2:00 o'clock, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, and the same admonition to you. The Court intends to recess today at 3:00 o'clock by reason of matters confronting me here, so you may be guided accordingly. Return here at 2:00 o'clock and we will run until 3:00 o'clock this afternoon, counsel.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [7888]

Wednesday, March 22, 1950—2:00 o'Clock

Mr. Hallinan: If Lawrence Ross had been only what we suspected or if he had been simply living in the manner that he has been to hide or conceal some matter personal to him or some cause of embarrassment or concern, even to him we would have extended the charity of keeping quiet about it. But we couldn't overlook the fact that the secret he was hiding and concealing, was precisely the thing that gave these men a handle upon him and that put them in a position where they could force him to do or say anything that they wanted him to say: That he wasn't an American citizen at all; that he wasn't born in this country; that he was born in Poland and had not emigrated here until he was a boy of some years; they say, "Well, he had a derivative citizenship from his father." We deny it. We don't believe it. We think it isn't so. We think that his father was never naturalized. We didn't even bother to inquire; we didn't go around in a negative attempt, because if they have a naturalization certificate, it would be right in here. There is something wrong about old Rosenstein's naturalization certificate, if he ever took it out at all. I would be willing to warrant that the man who confronted us on the witness stand is still a citizen of the Republic of Poland.

So we had to see then exactly what he was hiding and the purpose for which it was being done. Now, going along with the [7889] twistings and duplicities engaged in on the stand, he was asked this, as to the difficulties that he presented to the Court why he shouldn't be retained here; that his wife and children had to be gotten back specially; they had to be back the following Monday morning or something probably as disastrous as the failure to edit the Cotton Journal would have ensued. Then, presently, when he is held anyhow, and in inquiry, a close and diligent inquiry elicited, shows that his wife and children have returned. And he is asked:

"Q. Well, let's see what you said. The Court said this to you: 'Does your wife drive a car?' and your answer was: 'Not on the road very well, sir. She does some city driving.'

"The Court: I thought you might as a matter of expediency have her drive back and you stay here.

"The Witness: No, sir. I couldn't ask her to do that. I might never see her again.

"The Witness: That is correct.

"Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): But you nevertheless told us today that you decided, despite those apprehensions, to send her on?

"A. Yes, but she is not driving, Mr. MacInnis.

"Q. Oh, you told us this morning that your wife was driving.

"A. She is being driven. Let us put it that way."

Now we have this attempt to evade saying that one of the [7890] employees or agents of the Immigration Department was driving her, and Mr. MacInnis asked him:

"Q. Who is driving her?

"A. Perhaps the word should have been 'being driven' instead of 'driving.'

"Q. What is the name of the Immigration agent who is driving her?

"A. There is no Immigration agent driving her, Mr. MacInnis.

"Q. Who is driving her?

"A. There is a young woman driving her.

"Q. Who is that?

"A. I believe her name is Drum or Drumm, Drumm.

"Q. You say you believe her name is Drumm? A. I think so.

"Q. Have you met her?

"A. Pardon?

"Q. Have you met this person?

"A. Oh, yes.

"Q. Where? A. In San Francisco.

"Q. Who is she?

"A. She works in either a stenographic or clerical capacity in the office of the Immigration Service, I believe, or some government service." [7891]

So, finally, after a whole page of questioning that thing is out which he designs to conceal and keep from you. Well, then, he is asked, "Now what did you mean by saying that you instructed your wife to drive back slowly?" et cetera, et cetera.

"A. When I say she drove down to the south, I don't think it was a misstatement. I don't know how much of the driving she did. I merely didn't wish to trust her on the road alone since that unhappy accident when she blacked out at one time.

"Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Now, you told His Honor and the jury this morning that you had told your wife to go ahead by very slow stages, didn't you?

"A. That is correct."

And I submit, ladies and gentlemen, that the ordinary and natural conclusion that one would have drawn from the fellow's testimony was that his wife was not a good driver, she drove a little in the city, on one occasion she had blacked out; that it was extremely perilous and hazardous for her to drive on the open road, but she had nevertheless elected to proceed and drive along, and that this woman, oppressed by the order requiring her husband to remain here, was slowly crawling back toward home driving her children.

"Q. When you said that you had told her to drive very slowly, you intended to convey the information that your [7892] wife was driving the car, and that hence the driving would have to be slow?"

A lot of objections by Mr. Donohue, but finally we get the answer:

"A. I talked to my wife before she left and I said, 'If you do any driving, please drive slowly. We aren't in any great rush. I want you to be very careful and let Mrs. Drumm do all the driving possible, and as I say, there is no rush, no hurry. Just take it easy and I will be happier about the whole thing.'" [7893]

And so unreliable is this gentleman that on the smallest matters he can't be trusted even to say the same thing a half an hour later:

> "Q. Did you ever disclose to your brother that you had changed your identity to the extent that you were claiming your birthplace to be the State of Kentucky?
> "A. I don't recall doing that. I don't believe I discussed it with him. Incidentally, he, too, adopted the name of Ross at the time of the naturalization."

Now, you understand that at the time of the naturalization of his father, then Lawrence Ross and his brother carried out the naturalization. In other words, they dropped the foreign name and they took a name that, while being English, would be called, let us say, American. That is what he did. At the time of the naturalization he changed all his foreign affiliations, including the change of his name, and his brother changed his name at the time of the naturalization. Then it develops that he doesn't know when, if at all, his father was naturalized. And if it was, it was at a very young age, when he was only a few years old. And Mr. MacInnis asks him this question:

> "Q. Did you tell the jury under oath yesterday that your brother changed his name at the time of the naturalization?
> "A. No, sir.
> "Q. You didn't?

> "A. I told the jury I believed that shortly after I [7894] changed my name—how soon after I don't know—my brother adopted the Americanization as to his name. But that statement was not made in connection with any naturalization proceedings."

Although he has stated a few pages before, "Incidentally, he too adopted the name of Ross at the time of the naturalization."

And what sort of man is brought in here to support this story, too? A man who abandons his wife, one little child a couple of years old and another one still unborn; never returns to them. That's in such difficulty because of his wife trying to force him to carry out not only the moral but legal obligations of supporting his children that she even invokes the use of the Communist Party officers to try to force him to support his little children. No further mention of it. They are not the two children that he took back, that his wife drove back home, because according to his statement, by this time those two children would be 18 and 15, respectively, and the two children that were taken back home were 14 and 12.

His father, whom he says must be well along in years, although he lives up in New York in the Bronx, he hasn't seen for 11 or 12 years. And he hasn't heard from him. And he hasn't seen or heard from his mother in the same length of time. And he got a letter from his brother in 1940 or 1941, and that is the last time that he heard anything about him. The poor old father, [7895] that brought him out here from Poland and got him his education, nurtured him, brought him up. And his mother, he walks out cold as a fish and never inquires about whether they are alive or well. He is ashamed of them, is ashamed of their foreign extraction, probably their foreign accent. And their humble, but honest, method of earning a living. This bird, this liar and perjurer rejects and turns his back upon them. They are not good enough for him. Then he walks out and abandons his poor wife, carrying an unborn child, and with a little infant depending upon her, and never goes near them and doesn't support them. Now, what the story is on the other children I am not even going to try to guess. He says he was divorced from his first wife in 1941.

That is the sort of a man that they are bringing in here and still continuing to justify, even after his exposure.

Now, here is some more of his specious and subtle contempt for the regard of anyone—as he didn't care about the mother that bore him or the father that cared for him, the wife whom he embraced or the children that he had by her. What does he care about what this jury thinks of him or what anyone else things of him? He wants to make a sort of showing up here. He plays with words, the type of lies he can tell—Communist lies, white lies, political lies, actual lies. And then the hypocrisy with which he gives his prepared and deliberate statement as to his turning over a new leaf between Friday afternoon when he [7896] saw he was going to be detected and Monday morning:

> "The problem I was faced with, Your Honor and the Court, was a very serious one in my life, perhaps the most serious I have ever faced. I had two alternatives, as I saw it, as I wrestled with myself in the wee small hours of the morning: Shall I still keep these facts from the government and from the Court, brazen it out, stick to my lies, in an effort to save my marriage and my standing in the community——"

No, "stick to my lies in order to save the standing of the men who have employed me and are paying me.

> "——or shall I purge myself once and for all, altogether, and place a clean breast of it? And this I have elected to do. It was to me a great decision, a very difficult decision. I believe, I am sure, I have made the correct decision. I asked for help in this decision, help of a higher judge than sits in this court, and I was struck by one proverb I have read, 'Commit thy works until the Lord and he shall establish thy thoughts.' I have done my best to do that. That is the statement."

All right.

> "Q. Mr. Ross, did you think that I did not know that you were the son of Bernard Rosenstein, who came from Poland in 1903?

"A. You see, the reason for the wrestling with my conscience, [7897] Mr. MacInnis, is because I suspected you did know."

Now, there is a pretty cynical knife put to the substance of this specious and wordy and oily and unctuous account that he has just given of himself.

"Q. Well, let me ask you this, then, Mr. Ross: When you importuned His Honor on last Friday afternoon to permit you to go home because the two children of your present marriage had to be back in school, and when you heard the government counsel insist that His Honor ought to allow you to go home, you knew then that these questions were being posed to you, didn't you?

"A. I certainly strongly suspected it.

"Q. Mr. Witness, when you were questioned about whether or not you ever attended the University of Kentucky and were forced to reply that you could not remember a single classmate at that school, you knew then that the investigation into your past would, if continued for a day, reveal the truth, didn't you?

"A. I certainly strongly suspected it.

"Q. That was your motivation when you told His Honor that you had to get back to your job in Memphis, Tennessee?

"A. That was part of the motivation, yes. The others were the facts I stated to the Court.

"Q. And that was the occasion when you asked His Honor to [7898] be released back to your job, and when the prosecutor strongly urged His Honor to comply with your request?

"A. That should be a matter of record.

"Q. You recall it, don't you?

"A. It makes sense. It sounds logical."

So the gentleman acknowledges that his statements under oath to the Court for his reason for withdrawing from the case here at this time is something that constitutes a lie committed in the presence of this jury.

Well, I will get to this other point in a moment. But now, the purpose of our urging these things is because of the importance, not only from an evidentiary point of view, but as putting a new aspect and a new face on this entire case, of the fact that Harry Bridges was in Stockton, California, at a moment that Johnson and Crouch testified he was in New York City, and at a moment which their testimony placed, and which testimony was known to the prosecution to be false, and we will show you, if we haven't shown it already, that they knew it to be false.

Now, counsel deprecates the proof of this alibi—minimizes it, treats with contempt its importance—says, "Suppose he wasn't there. It is not contained in the indictment that he was in New York City or elected to the Central Committee either. And furthermore, these witnesses, this man Crouch, did not pin himself down to Saturday, because he said, 'So far as my recollection serves me.'" [7899]

That is one of those phrases, "if my recollection serves me right." So that is all he said—that is a sort of qualification, a qualified thing.

Now, they know, and they knew all along, precisely and exactly the day and the hour upon which the Central Committee of the Communist Party was elected in New York City in February, 1936. It has been demonstrated here, and we can show beyond a peradventure of a doubt, that it happened either (from their testimony) on Saturday afternoon or evening or on Sunday morning, June 27th or 28th, 1936. And they can not get away from it. That is pinned in so tightly they can not extricate themselves from it.

Counsel says also that we place great reliance, great store, upon that fact and circumstance. And we acknowledge that we do. The case up to that time was to us a most astounding one. We saw these people come on here one after the other and affirm the presence of Harry Bridges at meetings and activities and so forth, inconsistent with a man of ordinary sense and prudence. We supposed that as the case developed, as we would get a chance to put on evidence, we could show the jury the lack of force and cohesion in such evidence. But then along came Crouch and Johnson, and they put in this devastating testimony that on this particular time and at this particular place they saw Harry Bridges elected a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party. And finally, my friends, the weight of that [7900] testimony began to press upon us so much that we were simply discouraged.

It was a terrible burden to get up against. How many of these people were coming in? How many lies would finally make a truth? How much argument would we have to have? Did we have the power or the ability or the talents or the force to be able to convince a jury that this was all part and parcel of the same scheme and it couldn't be true?

And then suddenly all argument was dispensed with. We weren't called upon to do that any more. Who could go back sixteen years and tell where he had been on a particular night? What supposition could we indulge in that any such miracle would spring up? And yet, spring up it did. Spring up it did, like some kind of electric sword that had been furnished to us to cut down these two liars; and in cutting them down, to cut through their whole fabric and their whole tissue of the story that they had invented here, to show that the whole structure was just a cobweb manufactured by the spiders of hate and fraud and corruption—to cut it all down, to send its light flashing down the corridors we had already traversed, and to send its light down into the future so that nothing further would dismay us. And our hearts were untightened and we cheered up and we thought, "Well, the miracle has happened. We are not forsaken of God." The miracle is evident. Here is no argument, here is a fact that they can't get away from. Here is something that ties them down and pins them down so they will never be able to [7901] retrieve their lost cause.

And the corollary of it happened to them. Immediately their whole structure collapsed. From then on nothing worked. The well oiled machine that had run with apparent smoothness with Schomaker, Schrimpf and the other little fellow suddenly began to tremble and shake and fall apart and throw bolts around and the pieces of it fell out and the engine failed. They had scarcely gotten rid of Johnson and Crouch when the entire debacle of Ross took the witness stand. And so far had they progressed on the road to the ruin of their case that they couldn't resist the temptation finally to put the utterly incomprehensible and unbelievable Rathborne on the stand. And thereby to strip away every pretense that it was anything but a fraud and a frameup; and let that man expose the skeleton of it to full and shameful view.

So certainly we put great value upon that Stockton alibi. Why, it was one of those things that happens only once in a lifetime, that you pray for and hope for and that rarely come. That there should be suddenly presented to us conclusive, indisputable, neutral, unquestionable proof that at the exact time and place that those two unmitigated scoundrels were testifying under the guidance of these people and with their knowledge to an utter and flagrant lie, that the man was in a separate, distant place three thousand miles away, and that fact they couldn't break down. [7902]

It reminded one of that spirit that has activated and encouraged a great many people in days of darkness, the spirit that James Russell Lowell breathed when he said, "Truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne. Yet that scaffold sways the future and behind the dim unknown stands God, within the shadows, keeping watch above his own."

Because they are never going to get away from the proof of that Stockton alibi. Suddenly the three innocent men who were being accused of perjury were in the position where they could convict the witnesses that were accusing them of perjury. And however they may speak of the dates and however they may speak of the time, the evidence is conclusive. They can't get away from it. They will never get away from it.

If you wanted to find what happened on some ship that sailed around the Cape of Good Hope or the Horn a hundred years ago, you can find a log of that ship preserved and kept. The navigation department of the United States government has a log book of every ship that sailed since this country was founded. The log of every airplane is turned over to the Aeronautical Division of the United States Government. They can ~~tell you~~ the minute that every plane landed in the field at New York in the month of June, 1936. They can tell you the exact moment that every plane took off. They can tell you the moment that each plane left and arrived at the airport of San Francisco. And don't let them tell you they can't. [7903]

They claim that their man Johnson told them back in 1941 about this fact of Harry Bridges being at New York at the convention in 1936. At that time the proof was still easier for them to discover. In those days, you remember, if you traveled by plane, a close list of the passengers' names was kept. They could have found if he took a plane when he departed. They would know if he used a fictitious name, as they could tell by the handwriting he was the person. The enormous diligence that they have spent, so that seven, eight or nine agents have been working on one of their witnesses, will give you some sort of gauge as to how much energy they would put in on a thing like that, because that would finish the story. If Harry Bridges had been in New York in the month of June, 1936, he could not dare deny it.

Ask them to do this: Tell them to bring in the report of undercover agents T-17, K-36, O-54, who sat in at the convention of the Communist Party in the year 1936 and handed in an exact and close account of everything that had occurred there, including the date on which the persons were elected, the names of the persons, the descriptions, and what they say or any other figure that they used to designate such persons, and probably instead of a case of three they could give you twenty. Ask them to bring in the logs of the airplanes that landed in New York, and let us see whether it would have been within the time that ,they can allocate that Harry Bridges could possibly [7904] have been in the State of New York. But this is the date that they selected themselves, Saturday, June 27, 1936.

You know, it is awfully unfortunate that on that day Harry Bridges spoke at that Stockton meeting. I wonder if there could be any question in anybody's mind that he did attend the meeting at Stockton. Is there any reason why we should mistrust the record of the Stockton union on its expenditures, obviously written at the time it purports to be written, containing numerous other items, no alteration, change, erasure or anything of that kind? It is in the file of documents in evidence and you can read it. Then a totally neutral source, the Stockton Record, has a statement in there that Harry Bridges will address the Stockton union on the 27th of June, and Mr. Mahaffey urged this afternoon that the members all attend. And there is some significance in the term "urged this afternoon," because, remember this: The Stockton Record was an afternoon newspaper. Any of our friends of the Fourth Estate will tell us that an afternoon newspaper must have a deadline not later than eleven o'clock in the morning. So if Mr. Mahaffey urged "this afternoon" all members to attend, then he urged them not on Saturday afternoon but on Friday afternoon. That is the time that the statement was made up that was given to the Stockton paper. So he knew at least on Friday that Harry Bridges was going to address that meeting at Stockton.

Then we have Mahaffey's letter mailed a day or two after [7905] the meeting reciting that the meeting took place on June 27, that Harry Bridges spoke there, and he was invited to come back and speak at the Labor Day celebration. And that letter is published in its entirety, giving the date, in the Voice of the Federation. And then in a subsequent issue there is put down not only that he and Schmidt appeared there, but the substance and subject of Bridges' speech. And then, just like the incident itself, like the very happening, the very discovery of the fact that he was there, comes along the strange situation of these people who attended a society wedding there and saw him in a night club that evening, that they should be able to identify the fact that it was on that precise night of June 27 because the sister of one of the men had been married that night in Stockton, and here was the Stockton paper with the picture of the wedding party on June 27, 1936, and know that they went there in full dress, because they were ridiculed or scoffed at by some men who were present in the place.

That is another one of those miracles of chance. And those miracles of chance, my friends, only happen to people who are telling the truth. The truth is a terrible thing to be up against. You can run around, stamp it down, push it down, shove it down, and it is popping up behind you all over the place, and you can't suppress it. And here, while the inquiry is going on in this court and we are bringing down longshoremen and members of the union that they might claim were suspect, into our [7906] office comes a man of a totally different social and economic class from the ones we are putting on here and says, "Now, here, I have something that may be of value to you. My sister was married that day and some of the guests at the wedding went down to Mattioni's bar that night, and there they saw Harry Bridges, because they told us about it afterwards, and the only way I know it was that night is because that was the night my sister was married. I didn't go to the night club personally, but here are the names of some people who went down there."

And when we go down and get those people, when we go down and interview them, we find they have already been interviewed by the agents of the Immigration Department. In other words, they had discovered before we did the presence of the members of the wedding party in that night club and had interviewed them and had confirmed the fact that Harry Bridges was there.

So he says we make much out of it. Why, of course we make much out of it. We make the same thing out of it that the ancient Israelites would make when they found the manna spread upon the desert.

What are we going to do? Scorn the gift that God gave us? Scorn some proof of justice that has come down and has been handed to us like that to refute and destroy your case? You bet we put value upon it! And in order to refute it they would have to claim this: That the Stockton Record, Mahaffey, the union had been in some kind of conspiracy to advertise in advance that [7907] Harry Bridges was to speak there that night as though he knew he was going to be tried fourteen years later, and it had been claimed he was at another place in New York where he was actually going. They would have to claim that six or seven members of the union up there were perjurers and that they had altered their books to show it had not taken place. They would have to prove that the editor of the Voice of the Federation and the longshoremen had also been taken into this strange conspiracy and adventure and had misstated facts in their subsequent issue as to the happening of that meeting and Bridges' presence there. And they would have to claim that there was some falsification on the part of these people who had been members of the wedding party to go there and pretend that they had seen Harry Bridges at a place where he had not been, and even persons who wanted to believe that could not do it.

Now, the question arises, on what day of the year 1936 was the Central Committee of the Communist Party elected? And the answer from the mouths and the proof of their own witnesses is that it was on Saturday, June 27, 1936, or at the latest Sunday morning, June 28.

People are awfully unfortunate. I feel so sorry for poor Crouch and poor Johnson. They should have a better deal out of life. Do you know what they remind me of? A certain schnorrer, that is, a sort of professional beggar, went up to see Baron Rothschild one day asking for some financial assistance. As he [7908] made a good appearance, and as he wanted to get a reasonable gift from the Baron, he pretended he occupied some position higher than he actually did.

He said to the Baron, "I am the most unfortunate of men. You know, I was a member of the great Vienna symphony orchestra. It broke up. I can't get any employment. It is hard to get employment."

The Baron said, "Is that so? What instrument did you play?"

The man said, "The bassoon."

"Is that so?" said the Baron. "Why, I love the bassoon. I have a fine instrument in my library. Come in and play something for me."

And the schnorrer said, "Oi Gewalt! Didn't I tell you what an unfortunate person I am? With all the instruments I could have named I had to say the bassoon!" [7909]

From the time that the persecution of Harry Bridges started up until the present time, or until Crouch and Johnson left the Communist Party, there were ten or twelve conventions all attended by several hundred people, and Oi, Gewalt! of all the dates that they could have selected they had to select the 27th of June, 1936. And if that isn't misfortune, I don't know what misfortune is.

Was it the 27th of June, 1936, that this election took place? Don't forget, my friends, that in the Western Worker, the Communist paper, there was recited in advance the holding of this convention; that the convention would start on the 25th of June, 1936; and it gave the agenda, that is, the things to be done day by day. On Wednesday this is to be done; Thursday this is to be done; Friday this is to be done; Saturday this is to be done, and then it said, "On Sunday there will be the election, the democratic election of a new Central Committee and a mass meeting in Madison Square Garden."

Lawrence Ross was the editor of that newspaper. Suppose we had nothing more than that, nothing but that alone, and you were asked now, ladies and gentlemen, given these newspapers, what day was the Central Committee of the Communist Party elected on in 1936? You would say, "Well, unless there is some proof to the contrary or something to disturb my conclusion, I will say it was elected on Sunday, June 28, 1936."

All right. We say, "Now, we will add to that conclusion [7910] this piece of proof: A subsequent issue, after the convention had closed, said this: On Monday these things were done; on Wednesday these things were done; Thursday these things were done, and on Friday these things were done. All recited, and the document or the information apparently having been sent out to the paper sometime between Friday night and Saturday morning, gave the rest of the convention prospectively. It said, "On Saturday there is to be a lecture by a certain man, and on Sunday a new Central Committee is to be elected. There is to be a mass meeting at Madison Square Garden on Sunday." We say now, Does this militate against your conclusion or does it add to it? You say, "Certainly it adds to it. In other words, unless there is further proof or something to show that the statement is false, I would conclude that this newspaper correctly recited what had taken place on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, and as it does not show that the committee was elected on one of those days, and as it does say that the committee is to be elected on Sunday, I would assume now that the committee could not have been elected on any day except the ensuing Saturday or Sunday."

Well, we questioned Mr. Ross when he was on the witness stand as to the validity of the statements in that paper.

> "A. The Central Committee of the Party was elected at a closed session of the convention, not at Madison Square Garden. [7911]
> "Q. No, but it was elected upon Sunday, the last day of the convention?
> "A. I don't think so, no, sir.
> "Q. Do you think it was the day before?
> "A. All I can be certain of is, it was not the first day of the convention. It may have been at any business session after that first day.
> "Q. Well, now, on that point, would your memory be refreshed by any article upon the order of business in that convention?
> "A. I would read what you showed me, Mr. MacInnis, and——
> "Q. Well, would there have been any reason in the Western Worker, upon the issue I have just now shown you, to place a false date upon that part of the convention?
> "A. I wouldn't think so, no, sir."

Here is the man who is the editor of the paper in which this was published.

Showing him the paper now showing the agenda as it is going to be carried out:

> "Q. Now, isn't this true, Mr. Ross, that in numerical order the main points on the agenda of the convention of 1936 were as follows:
> " 'First, the fight against reaction, Fascism, war; the United Front; the presidential elections and the Farmer-Labor Party—reported by Earl Browder as [7912] General Secretary of the Communist Party' and that the second matter on the agenda was 'Party Organization, reported by F. Brown; the Problem of Forces, reported by Charles Krumbein'; that the next matter on the agenda was 'Organizing the Toiling Youth,' the reporter Gil Green; that the fourth item was 'The Struggle for Peace and the Peace Policy of the Soviet Union'; that the reporter was a man named Robert Minor; and that the fifth and second to the last item was the election of the Central Committee, and the last item, nominations of presidential ticket?
> "A. I followed your reading on these, Mr. MacInnis."

He was reading the newspaper.

> "You list them correctly as they are listed here in numerical order, but not necessarily chronological order as to the proceedings of the convention."

All right. So that is the agenda. That is what is going to be done. Then he is shown the paper, his own paper of which he is editor, recounting the order in which things were done.

Then Mr. MacInnis says:

> "Q. Now, all of those events, Wednesday, June 24, Thursday, June 25, and Friday, June 26, are reported as events which already took place"—that is, already having taken place at the time of the publication of the paper.
> "A. They are. [7913]
> "Q. Yes. Then having only two days left, Saturday, June 27, and Sunday, June 28, why, then, the article turns to the prospective or future tense, doesn't it?
>
> "A. Yes, it talks about the highlights of the——
> "Q. Yes. And it says that then all events up to Friday having been concluded, the highlight of the Saturday session"——

The importance of this answer: this man's newspaper in a later edition says, "the events of Wednesday, Thursday and Friday having been concluded, it says the highlight of the Saturday session was to be the report by Robert Minor on the fight for peace, and that the final session of the ninth convention on Saturday was to be held at Madison Square Garden and that on that day the National Committee of the Party was to be denmocratically elected?"

And Mr. Ross replies: "That is what this says."

Now, you will remember that he has already stated that there was no reason why that fact should be misrepresented in the paper that was shown to him.

Now, what about Mr. Johnson? I have excerpts taken verbatim from his testimony. These are some of the things that were sent to the grand jury and the Attorney General to get the witnesses indicted, but nothing has come of it.

> "Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Mr. Johnson, concerning the occasion when you say Harry Bridges was presented to a group [7914] of fifty-odd people in 1936, did that occasion take place during the 1936 convention of the Communist Party?"

Let's mark this down. Here is the convention. The convention is included within those five days.

> "A. That closed session of the National Committee took place right after—shortly after the election of the National Committee. It was either before the convention adjourned or a day or so following.
> "Q. It would be within a matter of a day or two at most? A. Correct.
> "The Court: Are we settled on this matter? The proceedings commenced on the 24th of June?
> "Mr. Donohue: So I am informed, your Honor.
> "The Court: And they terminated on the 28th of June?
> "Mr. Donohue: So I am informed, your Honor.
> "Mr. Johnson, having established by agreement between the prosecution and the defense that the 1936 convention of the Communist Party took place in New York between the dates of June 24 and June 28, I want to ask you now these questions: Do you recognize the paper just now shown you?

"The Witness: I accept the date as that the Government accepted or agreed upon."

Mr. Paul Crouch:

"To the best of my recollection"—a little avenue of escape—"I did not see the defendant Harry Bridges in [7915] '38 but I saw him very briefly in 1836 during the course of the convention and at a meeting of the New Central Committee which followed for the purpose of electing the Politburo of the Party."

Then he is shown this copy of the Western Worker, which a previous witness had said was edited by the Communist Party on the West Coast. The first issue shown was that of Thursday, June 25, 1936.

"Mr. Hallinan: It is not for the purpose of impeachment. It is just to fix these dates a little more specifically.

"Mr. Donohue: I thought we agreed yesterday on the dates of the convention."

Crouch:

"The convention ended on Sunday, June 28, with a meeting in Madison Square Garden where nominations were made for president and vice president. The convention was of five days' duration, opening on the previous Wednesday, June 24.

"My recollection is"—now he is shown the paper and he started to read the paper and he says, "I don't need this paper. My recollection is clear without reading this paper. My recollection is that on the opening day of the convention there was a report by Earl Browder, the general secretary of the Party, and immediately or shortly thereafter by Gilbert Green on the organization of the working [7916] class youth. The edition of the Western Worker for June 25 states: 'The nomination of the candidates will take place as monster mass meeting in Madison Square Garden in New York City.' On the next page it says, 'Historic Convention,' and gives the main points of the agenda of the convention as follows:

"1) The fight against reaction, fascism, war, United Fronts, the presidential elections and the farmer-labor party. Reporter, Earl Browder, General Secretary.

"2) Party organization. Reporter, F. Brown. Problems of forces. Reporter, Charles Krumbein.

"3) Organizing the toiling youth. Reporter, Gil Green.

"4) The circle for peace and the peace policy of the Soviet Union. Reporter, Robert Minor.

"5) Election of Central Committee.

"6) Nominations of presidential ticket."

Mr. Crouch continues:

"My recollection is that on the opening day of the convention there was a report by Earl Browder, the General Secretary of the Party, and immediately or shortly after by Gilbert Green on the organization of the working class youth and the Young Communist League. The newspaper reports that the Wednesday afternoon session heard the report of the Central Committee delivered by Earl Browder; [7917] that Gilbert Green, Secretary of the Young Communist League, reported Wednesday on the plight of the youth and then a report followed, also on Wednesday, apparently by Charles Krumbein—as I recall Krumbein's report, he reported on the cadres and organization of the forces in the Party, how to use personnel. Incidentally, in connection with this, I was a speaker in that discussion, on Negro sharecroppers from the South, farmers from the Middle West, the Farmer-Labor Party questions. Friday was devoted to a general discussion of the delegates, to the fullest discussion. As stated in this paper, the highlight of Saturday's session was to be a report by Robert Minor on the fight for peace.

"To the best of my recollection, the election of the Central Committee was held on Saturday."

Now, here where the agenda is set out it says that the election would be held either Saturday or Sunday, although it seems to say Sunday where the order in which the things to occur was set out in a subsequent edition of the paper where the order of things was set out as they are alleged to have occurred. Why should anyone suppose that the Central Committee was elected on any day except Sunday, June 28, with the possible exception that it could have been elected, as this man says, on Saturday, June 27?

> "The nomination of Earl Browder for president and [7918] James W. Ford for vice president of the United States was made at a public meeting held on Sunday, June 28, in Madison Square Garden."

There is a little reflection on the passing gallery: that the nomination of Earl Browder for president and James W. Ford for vice president of the United States was made on Sunday. That is only fourteen years ago. That a man who was a member of the Communist Party could run for president and vice president of the United States freely and without question.

> "The glory of Israel is fallen, O Jonathan, thou hast slain in the high places. How are the mighty fallen.
> "The election of the Central Committee was held, to the best of my recollection,"—avenue of escape—"on the previous day, Saturday, June 27."
> "The Central Committee was elected by the 700 to 750 delegates, to the best of my recollection, on Saturday, June 27."

Next page:

> "To the best of my recollection, an election of delegates to the Central Committee was held Saturday, June 27."

We did everything we could my friends to tie that meeting, to tie that election down to some exact date. Page 2665:

> "To the best of my recollection this was the last meeting of the convention as such. It was the last meeting [7919] at which the 700 delegates met as delegates before the formal session in Madison Square Garden. In other words, the election of the new Central Committee was the last official act of the delegates as delegates and the following day they took part in the formal public nomination which had already been previously decided as Foster and Ford at Madison Square Garden."

Page 2674:

> "An article in the Western Worker stated, 'The final session of the ninth convention Sunday was to be held in Madison Square Garden at a great mass meeting. At this session the Party's election platform is to be adopted and the candidates for President and Vice President nominated. A new National Committee of the Party was to be democratically elected.' "

Says Crouch:

> "That does not change my recollection of the procedure since that paragraph was trickily written to deceive the people by giving the impression that the Communist central committees are democratically elected, which is far from the truth, and it does not change my recollection that the election of the Central Committee was on the day before the Madison Square Garden meeting."

Page 2678:

"The convention after its election of the new Central [7920] Committee, had no further business, except to also act as delegates at the public meeting at Madison Square Garden.

"The public meeting at Madison Square Garden was held either in the afternoon or evening, to the best of my recollection.

"I am quite certain it was not in the morning, but I cannot recall whether it was in the afternoon or evening."

Page 2679:

"I cannot specifically recall whether the meeting of the Central Committee to elect the Politburo was held Saturday night or Sunday morning, but to my best belief and recollection it was held Saturday night."

In other words, here was a statement that they first elected the Central Committee, and then that Central Committee remained to elect somebody within itself which they called the Politburo, a smaller number.

"To the best of my recollection, it was held prior to the Madison Square Garden meeting, so it would have to be either Saturday night or > Sunday morning. It is humanly possible that I might be mistaken, because I remained in New York for not over two or three days after June 28 for the purpose of a series of conferences on various fields of party work. But my best recollection is it was held prior to it. I had only one meeting with the full Central [7921] Committee."

Now, you understand that what he is discussing is not the election of the Central Committee, which he has placed definitely at Saturday afternoon or Saturday evening, but the meeting of this Central Committee to elect the smaller Politburo from its own members. That, he says, might have been a day or two after Sunday, June 28th.

> "Using the Madison Square Garden meeting as the ending of the convention, then the meeting of the Central Committee would have been prior to the ending of the convention.
> "I stayed in New York a couple of days and had a series of conferences, various party meetings, trade union work, but I am nearly certain that the meeting with the newly elected Central Committee in which we elected the new Politburo was prior to the Madison Square Garden meeting and would have been either Saturday night or Sunday morning, to the best of my recollection." [7922]

And again, all of this goes now to not the election of the Central Committee, which he places definitely on Saturday night, but to the meeting of the Central Committee to elect the Politburo, page 2682:

> "After the Madison Square Garden meeting I did not have any meeting with the Central Committee, unless there is the element of possibility I may have been mistaken as to the date when we elected the Politburo. But aside from the date on which we elected the Politburo, I didn't have any meeting with the full Central Committee while I was in New York. I attended only one meeting with the full Central Committee after the convention was called to order, before I returned to North Carolina."

2682:

> "I saw Mr. Bridges briefly during the course of the convention as well as at this meeting which I testified."

Poor fellow! Look at what a mess he has gotten in. Having already committed himself to Saturday, June 27th, now he has got to account for some presence of Harry Bridges at an earlier date and flights back and forth that would rival Mr. Kaiser with Hancock, Krolek and all the others:

> "I saw Mr. Bridges previously during the course of the convention as well as at this meeting which I testified to, and to the best of my recollection in the early part of the convention. The convention started on Wednesday [7923] and it could have been Wednesday."

Say, by the way; just to show you how that Bridges earns his keep, here on Wednesday, June the 11th, he is attending an executive meeting at 11:00 a.m. in the morning, he gets off at 12:18 a.m. on the following morning from another meeting that he continues on. That day he worked 13 hours and 18 minutes, not counting the time that he probably was in his office before the 11:00 session.

Now, page 2685:

> "If my answer serves me correct on the day we elected the new Politburo, the next time I saw Mr. Bridges——
> "If my memory is correct as to the date we elected the new Politburo, the next time I saw Mr. Bridges would have been on Saturday afternoon or Sunday morning."

And if that doesn't pin down the election of the Central Committee to Saturday, June 27th, or Sunday, June the 28th, then we haven't any powers of demonstrating anything.

And let me ask you this, my friends. Suppose that the reverse was being contended here. Suppose that Harry Bridges was being accused in this trial of having been in Stockton, California, on Saturday night, June 27, 1936, that that is what the prosecution was proving; and suppose we were trying to prove that instead of that, he was in New York attending a convention of the Communist Party. What chance would we have of establishing that fact? There wouldn't be a reasonable doubt nor a [7924] captious doubt nor any kind of a doubt.

Does your Honor want to take the recess at this time?

The Court: Yes, we will adjourn, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, until tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock. The same admonition to you, not to discuss the case under any conditions.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Thursday, March 23, 1950, at 10:00 o'clock a.m.) [7925]

Thursday, March 23, 1950, 10:00 o'Clock A.M.

The Clerk: United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

Mr. Hallinan: Your Honor, I certainly owe you an apology for the bad estimate of the time that I would consume in the argument. I had collected certain notes that were sort of sketchy, and I had no idea that they would run into the time, and far from adding anything to it, I have taken out and eliminated some, but I still have some little time to pursue, and I apologize for that. Of course, the jury will understand that where it has had a case running four months and such a mass of evidence and a great many witnesses that a lawyer feels, even though he might be mistaken, conscience bound to discuss the things that he thinks might be of importance so a jury might take them into consideration, and we have not and we will not exceed any records or run into any improprieties and I certainly will not labor any point unnecessarily or repeat anything.

A case that was tried here in California some few years ago, the Lamson case, a celebrated case in Palo Alto, is worthy of note. Edwin MacKenzie, the very able and brilliant defense attorney, argued the case and properly, for seven and a half days, and the Insull case in Chicago, the closing arguments took five weeks, though neither of the cases consumed as much time in the actual trial as this case has consumed, and I assure you [7926] I will speed it as rapidly as may be done.

To finish the discussion of this Stockton matter, there can be no question or reasonable question that Harry Bridges was not in New York City on Saturday, June 27th, or Sunday, June 28th. Now, we have to be perfectly fair with the jury and discuss the possibility of whether there may have been just a mistake in the date that the witnesses gave for the election of that Central Committee, although there certainly should not be any question about it further, and if there was a question, that under the rule of presumption of innocence, it should be resolved in favor of the defendants. However, let us assume that there was something erroneous in the date that they picked and that Harry Bridges went there another day. Then unless these records have been fabricated, unless somebody foresaw 14 years ago that there would be a trial of this thing and deliberately fabricated a lot of records, why, he could only have gone there at one particular time.

Now, these meetings of the S.F.M.F.P. D.C.2, those are meetings at which Mervyn Rathborne, their witness, was the secretary. He says himself, despite his desire to help, that these were correct minutes and they represented what was supposed was said. And the same thing happens when we get to Tuesday, June 30th. Rathborne is again secretary. There is no reason for assuming that the ILA minutes were not just as correctly kept. In fact, on the ILA meeting that was held on [7927] Wednesday, June 24th, the very paucity of the record would bear some evidence of its truth. The meeting started at 9:00 p.m. and ended at 9:15, because there was not a quorum present. If somebody were fabricating a record, he could go a thousand times better than that, and he could fabricate records that would cover every minute of every day. If these could be gotten by with, then more could be gotten by with. So the only possibility that would exist for Harry Bridges having been in New York City any time within that two weeks would be this. Now, you will remember that the air schedule of the companies gave the time by the clock from San Francisco to New York at 19 hours and from New York to return at 21 hours, but the gentleman who testified here said that the schedules at that time were completed approximately 95 per cent of the time; in other words, there were 5 per cent of the flights that were not completed at all. And he said, of course he did not mean that the ones that were completed were completed within the scheduled time. That is not what he was trying to convey. And Bridges himself said at that time from his remembrance of the year 1936, even into 1937 and 1938, it took from 24 to 28 hours to get from San Francisco to New York or to return. That must be approximately true because there would be available, as I say, logs and records of the air companies they could produce to contradict that, officers, flight captains, men who steered those ships and would know whether or not that were true. So I think that statement [7928] can be taken as being fairly well established, that it took 24 to 28 hours to make the trip.

But let us say everything worked exactly on schedule, that Harry Bridges on Wednesday night could have foreseen that there would not have been a quorum at the meeting because you will notice at the next meeting of the ILA, which took place on that night, took four hours, from 8:30 to 12:18 p.m. It took four hours for that meeting. So there is no reason why he should not have assumed that this would not take three or four hours. The only possibility of Harry Bridges making that trip to New York within that time would be this: If the schedule was exactly correct, if the planes landed and took off as per the schedules, if he knew that there was not going to be a quorum at the meeting on Wednesday night and the meeting would adjourn at 9:00, 9:15 or even 10:00 o'clock, that he might then have rushed to the airport in South San Francisco and caught the 11:00 o'clock plane out to New York. That plane would have landed him, according to the schedule now, in New York about 8:30 Thursday night.

Now, according to this statement, it would not have landed him in there until 1:00 or 2:00 o'clock in the morning. But according to the schedule, 8:30 Thursday night. He could then have attended the Communist convention Friday morning because he would have had to take the 4:00 o'clock plane out from Newark in order to be back in San Francisco by 11:00 o'clock [7929] on Saturday morning. So there is a possibility if that could have been done. However, it would involve such inconsistencies and such a ridiculous situation that no one should accept that because if he did occupy this position in the Communist Party that they pretend, and it was important that he go to New York and attend a convention and be elected to the Central Committee, then why should he be rushed back to a little local union in Stockton on Saturday night to address a meeting there when that meeting could have been held at any time, put off to some other date? And in addition to that, you would have to assume that all of the people who testified to the arrangements that were made on either Thursday or Friday—this old man Silk who said that on Thursday or Friday he had talked with Mahaffey on the telephone and Mahaffey asked him if he could get Bridges to come up on Saturday night. [7930]

And then he went to Bridges, and Bridges said he would call or come that Saturday, he couldn't come the next Saturday because it was running into the Fourth of July. But if they could arrange the meeting for Saturday, that Saturday, all right, he would go up there provided he could get transportation.

Silk and Mahaffey testify that Silk phoned back and said, "All right, we can bring him up on this coming Saturday." Silk says, "I don't know whether that was Thursday or Friday, but it was either one" Mahaffey says he believes it was Friday.

Then there is the testimony that Harry Bridges attended the San Francisco Labor Council meeting at 8:15 p.m. on Friday night. Christiansen says he saw him there. And the arrangements were then made for Christiansen to drive him up to Stockton.

It might not have happened. He might not have been there. But remember, in the 1941 hearing before Sears, Bridges testified that during that year he attended every meeting of the San Francisco Labor Council that was held, and we do have sufficient records to show that there was a meeting of the San Francisco Labor Council held that night from 8:15 to 9:05 p.m. It is unfortunate that the minutes of that meeting were among those that were soaked with water that got into the basement of the Labor Council and we aren't able to produce them. But the very fact that we made such diligent search to discover them, my friends, is proof that these people were telling the truth. Because when you [7931] are not telling the truth, you are not trying to find anything, you are not trying to pick up any records or you are not trying to let people know you are looking for any records. You try to conceal, you try to keep it quiet, say nothing about it, lest the record come up and destroy you.

Now, another small incident that would seem to add color to what Harry Bridges said, that in the 1938 meeting he stated that he had had a conversation with a lawyer named Aaron Sapiro in San Francisco; and we find in the minutes of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific that Sapiro addressed that union on the afternoon of Friday, June 26th. Now, Sapiro was a resident of Los Angeles and came up here specially for that. And while it is by no means conclusive, it is some evidence that it was probably on that day that he had the meeting with Sapiro. In addition to that, if you take their statement, or if you take the statement of their witness Johnson, that he told them back in 1941 that Harry Bridges was in New York at the Communist convention on Saturday, June 27th, they would emphatically and certainly at least have questioned Bridges about it on that hearing, to determine whether it was any basis for Johnson's statement. And at that time the records of the Labor Council were available. Things were still fresh. There were plenty of records that could have been gotten. And in particular, all the records of the aviation companies would then have been available, at least to the search of the government. [7932]

Moreover, we would have to consider that people like Mr. Silk, Mahaffey, other persons connected with this driving up north, Christiansen—that they all committed perjury and that the witnesses who admit they committed perjury and who are proved to have committed perjury in this case did not commit perjury. We have to take and say that we reverse the presumption of innocence, that we now will hold that not only ordinarily people, who haven't any profit to gain from this except that they might want to help a man who is associated with their union, or might generally think that it was an improper or persecutory case, that they came in and testified falsely on those details. But, that Johnson and Crouch, who by their own statements are trained perjurers and liars, who have been shown to have lied while they were in the Communist Party, after they got out of the Communist Party, who are proved to have lied in this court on the very matters involved here, that they are telling the truth, and that all the people that we produced were telling lies.

Now, as I say, if people adopt that attitude, then there is no use trying a case; then it is another decision upon passion and prejudice.

The question that arises, could he have gone to New York after the meeting on Saturday, June 27th? Well, that is obviously impossible, because that meeting, according to the statements and records introduced here, lasted for several hours, up until around 11:00 o'clock. It would be too late then to take [7933] a plane from San Francisco. The next plane that he could have taken would have been on Sunday. He would have had to fly back to New York, would arrive some time Monday morning, and he couldn't be back in time to attend the meeting at 8:10 p.m. on Monday evening again.

So that from any aspect, any possibility, it can't be said, it can't be suggested, that there was merely a mistake on the part of the witnesses in the time that they selected.

Furthermore, when people come in and testify under oath on matters involving the safety and the liberty of other people, what kind of attention can you pay to anything they say when the counsel who puts them on the stand has to argue that they were merely careless or uncertain in their testimony, that they may have been a few days off, some possibility of that kind.

And, as evidence, too, of the sincerity of the defense, and I think that we are entitled to the credit of having taken this attitude throughout the entire case. we didn't reserve the evidence of Harry Bridges' appearance in Stockton until we had nailed it down and tightened it and interviewed all the possible witnesses and checked every possibility of error. We didn't wait until we had put it in a position where they might not have been able to overturn it. We came right in, in the middle of the case, not waiting until our own defense went in, and presented a matter such as that while Crouch was still on the witness stand. We turned it over to the prosecution, turned over [7934] all the evidence upon which the proof of Harry Bridges' presence in Stockton was based: the newspaper item from the Stockton Record, the expenditure book of the union, the letter of Mr. Mahaffey to the Voice of the Federation, the article in the Voice of the Federation citing the meeting at that time and what had been said, the copy of The Longshoreman a few days after this, giving the exact date at which he and Schmidt had appeared on June 27th. We produced an affidavit from Mr. Christiansen as to the time—the arrangements that were made, the time that they started, how they drove up, the approximate time that they returned, the incident of staying over at his house.

Now, we knew it was true, we knew that. We knew that no matter what they did or what inquiry they made, they couldn't throw a reasonable question upon that proposition. They might find somebody who didn't remember the thing or they might indeed find somebody who would contradict it. But the overwhelming weight of proof was conclusive, and we didn't care what they did. We didn't even bother to go down and interview Mahaffey until after they had interviewed him. We went down there at Christmas time, several days after his letter had been handed over to them, and then for the first time we went out and spoke to Mahaffey and asked him if he remembered and could confirm the incident. Because if Mr. Mahaffey had come in and said, "No, it didn't happen," Mahaffey would have been impeached by his own letter. And there was no reason for us to suppose that any [7935] of those gentlemen would tell anything but the truth.

I went up to Stockton to confirm the matter myself after Mr. Norman Leonard had been up there, and in the meantime agents of the government had been up there and interviewed and talked to the men who were produced here on the witness stand. Now, what kind of concealment or what kind of fiction or what kind of invention is it when you turn it over to the opposing party, so we will be able to check the matter, so we will be able to inflict a terrible injury upon anyone who would have testified falsely in it—to hand over all that to him and say, "Now, here it is. Go ahead and investigate that?"

And I will say this, too, that we were a little naive in thinking that all we had to do was hand this matter over to counsel, give it to him, tell him to go ahead; then come in here and say to him. "Now, will you stipulate that Mr. Bridges was in Stockton on the night of June 27th," thinking that if it is thoroughly proved, if they haven't any proof to the contrary, let's save the bother of bringing in all these people and bringing in all these publications and carrying witnesses from Los Angeles and Stockton and so forth. What does Mr. Donohue say? He says, "If I were in Stockton and I saw him, I would stipulate. As I was not, I can not do it." Now, isn't that a fair and an adult way to meet a question of that kind! We suppose, "Well, he probably honestly believes it wasn't so. He probably has some people who will come in here and contradict what these [7936] people said." And we sat by with perfect confidence that no break could occur in that. You can't go up and have a meeting with several hundred people, advertised in the papers, recounted around, and the men go to a night club and drink together and so forth, and then have that disproved by the suggestion of one or two people that they don't remember the thing. What do we find? That not only have they not gotten anything to disprove this testimony, but unknown to us, they had discovered that there was a wedding that night and that certain people who attended the wedding had seen Harry Bridges in Mattioni's night club.

And before we even knew those facts, they had interviewed those witnesses and confirmed the fact that they had seen him that night. And they didn't come in and tell us that. It was a surprise when we ran into those people afterwards, by the man coming in off the street to tell us that he had some information that might be of help to us. And then to find out that one of the persons to whom he directed us down in San Jose had already been interviewed by agents of the Immigration Service.

They can't say, "Well, all right, we will dismiss that thing, we will throw that incident out. He wasn't in New York. Forget about what Johnson and Crouch said. He is not charged in the indictment with being in New York and it isn't a necessary part of the proof." Well, it isn't that easy. It isn't that simple. Because there is too much in it that shows a desire on the part of the agents who collected this information [7937] and who knew what was going on here, to conceal it from the jury, to hide the matter, to distort it, that when they knew that their witnesses had testified falsely, to continue to defend them, to argue for them, to try to get them out of the court and off the witness stand, and everything else, it throws over the whole case an aura of fraud, an aura of deceit. Even in a civil case, let alone a criminal case, a proof of fraud on the part of a party doesn't only go to that particular incident, it goes to the whole case. It goes to the entire case, and they can't excuse themselves merely by saying. "Well, we will throw out this matter, that was immaterial."

If somebody is trying to sell you a building and he makes certain representations concerning the building, and one of them is fraudulent—only one of them—and a material matter, it invalidates the entire contract. If you have signed the contract and paid him the money, you can go into court and say he defrauded you in this instance. You can say, "He said this, and that was a lie, and I am now showing it to be a lie." It is no defense for the person who perpetrated the fraud to say, "Well, yes, but that was not of any importance. All these other things I said were true, and undoubtedly you bought the building not upon this representation which was false, but upon these other representations, which were true." The court will say, "No, you can't say that. If that were not material, if it didn't enter into the inducement that you were trying to use to persuade [7938] this man to buy your property, why did you say it to him at all? So you will not now be heard to come in and say, 'I told him this and I now admit that it was false, but it wasn't material, it was a matter of no consequence, it couldn't possibly have induced him to buy the building.' "

The law will say, then, "Why did you say it to him?"

And similarly in this case: the general impression, everything that they tried to create, is that Harry Bridges is some sort of a high functionary of the Communist Party. They put on witnesses to create that atmosphere and bring it in so that although the jury might believe that Crouch and Johnson were lying about Bridges being at that meeting, still in the back of their minds there is a sort of an indistinct background that Harry Bridges was a functionary of the Communist Party. After three or four months, the jury might somewhat forget as to the facts, as to where that information came from, but the idea is there. And the idea was put there purposely. Those people were put on there purposely to create that impression and that illusion, and they can't come in now and say, "All right, all right, we are caught in this one; we tried to defraud you and we tried to cheat you, and we tried to get you to give an unjust verdict upon this. But we will forget that now. We will throw that all out and we will just proceed upon people who haven't been proved to have committed perjury, and they are sufficient."

Now, to that I would say, "Well, you fooled me once and [7939] shame on you; but fool me twice and shame on me. We have detected this thing and from now on every witness you put on the stand, before and after that, is suspect."

When we went down to Los Angeles and talked to Mr. Mahaffey, consulted other matters down there, Harry Bridges and I went out to one of the studios, and we were taken around by a young man and shown the marvels of that fantastic world that is embraced within a Hollywood studio. We were led along a street that contained houses in the style of the old Dutch houses of New York—little bricks and fluted roofs and so forth. But it was a modern street of houses with people going in and out of the buildings and typewriters clicking through the windows and voices being heard.

And then we turned a corner, we entered another street and this street too contained houses in the style and fashion of another age. We walked along, the streets were cobbled here. There were lampposts, trees growing. But there was something strange about this portion of that internal city. No birds sang in the trees, no sound of life emanated from within the houses, it was like one of those cities that are described in the Arabian Tales in which all the inhabitants have vanished or been turned to stone. There was something strange and eerie about it as we walked along for a full block and a half. And then we came to one of the houses where the front door was open and the explanation then became obvious. Directly behind the door, the open [7940] door, was a blank wall to which the door was affixed by lathing, plaster and wire.

It wasn't a city at all, it wasn't a street. It was a facade street, a fraud, a sham. An artistic fraud and a sham, but still that. It was a movie set, designed for the taking of a picture, and certainly such as to deceive anyone as to its reality.

Now, we didn't have to go back, my friends, and open the other doors that we had already passed to know that they too were part of a movie set, that they were a sham, a pretense and a fraud. We didn't have to go back, having now discovered by looking in through this open door, to see how shallow, how vague, how fictitious was the apparent reality of the edifices that we had already surveyed.

What are we to do here? We come along through their witnesses, every one of them suspect—suspect either of fraud or coercion—but not too thoroughly disclosed. And then presently the door is opened on Crouch, the door is opened on Johnson, the door is opened on Ross. Nothing behind them but lies and illusion. Are we then required to go back and open the door into Schomaker's mind and Schrimpf's heart, to find out if they too are telling lies? And when we progress a few steps further, must we go up the stairs and open the door that leads to Rathborne's disclosures, to show the shallowness and the pretense that is behind them? We shouldn't have to do it, but we can [7941] do it.

I said that there were four sentences that were put in this record by enemies of Harry Bridges that acted as anchors and indicia of the whole case of the prosecution. [7941-A]

One was Schomaker's statement: "It seems the best way you can destroy a man is to call him a Communist." That made a very great impression upon me.

Two is Ross's statement: "When you tell one lie, you have to tell a whole lot of other ones to cover up and explain it."

Three is Mr. Donohue's question to Father Meinecke: "Are you so naive as to believe that Harry Bridges, who has always testified publicly that he was not a member of the Communist Party, would disclose to you that he was?"

And fourth, the statement of Judge Sears in the 1941 trial: "If I were to believe that O'Neil was framed or his declaration falsified, I would look with suspicion on the entire case of the Government."

If their officer, if the man who was appointed at their behest to conduct that hearing, pointed out that the falsification of even one witness or the exercise of coercion upon him so that he was framed, he was put in a position where he had to deliver the testimony that he gave, that that judge would thereupon look upon all of the evidence presented with a different, critical and suspicious eye.

With regard to the possibility of coercion, now, there is a simple coincidence of situations amongst certain witnesses that were introduced here. In other words, they produced witnesses here who were by previous things that they had done, or even by the accident of their birth and circumstances, subject [7942] to coercion and pressure from the Department of Immigration. Schrimpf was an unnaturalized alien. He had been living in this country for a long time. He had been a member of the Communist Party. And the possibility of his being naturalized was extremely remote, but the possibility of his being deported out of the country was extremely near. He was a man whom they could use as much as they could use Ross, in any way they wanted, because he was not in a position to defend himself against them. He could have been put out of the country with scarcely a hearing. All the things that they say about Harry Bridges, multiplied by ten, they had against Schrimpf and he couldn't get out of it.

Now, take Krolek: the same thing. He was born in Canada. He is not himself a naturalized citizen. He said he derived his citizenship through his father, having become a citizen, and again there is a suspicious omission in the evidence. It seems to me they would have brought into court the proof of the naturalization of Krolek's father so the jury would see that there wasn't any such hold upon him, that he was in fact an American citizen. And there is also the possibility, my friends, that they might try to cancel his citizenship because of his subsequent joining of the Communist Party. There is a handle upon him by which they can twist him.

What about Mrs. Harris? Well, Mrs. Harris' husband is an alien, a naturalized alien. She said that both she and he he had [7943] been accused of being members of the Communist Party, although they were not. But she was an intimate of the Schomakers, and there is some little thought or suggestion that the charge that they were members of the Communist Party may have as much proof behind it as the charges against Harry Bridges. At any rate, her husband and her security were in some danger. The danger may not have been as great as they were persuaded to believe it was, but there was a handle upon that poor woman by which they could twist her. And with Ross it was conclusive.

Upon every one of those witnesses a great deal of time and numerous interviews were expended before they gave any statement. Rathborne was a whole year being petted and kissed by them before he finally surrendered. Schomaker visits back and forth, month after month after month. But Ross, the menacing Mr. Barber appears in his office in the afternoon and he goes to Barber's room at night and signs a statement. Why? A native of Poland. He has a derivative citizenship from his father, having been naturalized. Where is he? Or if it was a derivative citizenship, is he in a position to fight the Immigration Department of the United States to prove that he has a right to remain in the United States? Should he risk it? Why not go along with it?

Two other witnesses, Michener and Wilson. Now, Michener says that he did not sign the affidavit that Wilson was required to sign. Maybe he did not. Maybe he did not. It seems [7944] rather strange that the Government should be so careless in his case, that he should receive a job and an appointment without having to sign a form that Mr. Paisley has assured us everybody employed by the Government has to sign. Why was he made flesh and Wilson made fish? Why did Wilson around the same time have to sign that affidavit, meticulously filling out the information in it, but Michener did not? I do not believe it. It might be true, but I do not think so. I think the inference from the evidence would show that Michener signed the affidavit and did not admit that he had been convicted of bootlegging on two separate occasions and served terms in jail for it, and I think Michener did not admit that he was a member of the Communist Party, and the record that they brought forward, the first record, showed that certain papers were omitted. On its face it said that. After we protest that, then they send back and bring out some sort of dossier which says, "All right, here are all the papers." Now, what happened in the meantime? Why didn't they bring in the entire thing in the first instance? Who had to go over it? Who had to extract, who had to substitute? I don't know, and they may not have done it. They may not have done it. But it is extremely suspicious.

And Wilson—here he signs an affidavit that is false. He says that he had not been a member of the very organization that he is called in here to testify concerning his membership in. And what explanation does the gentleman give? He says, [7945] "Well, back when Wilson signed the affidavit the United States Government had not yet committed itself to the principle of the Communist Party to overthrow the Government by force and violence, so it was all right for him to say that:" And that may be specious in an argument to the jury, but suppose they showed this to Wilson and said, "Look, Wilson, you signed this and you are going to be indicted for perjury unless you come up and help us out in the Bridges case."

Wilson says, "Now, wait a minute. I was not asked if I was a member of the Communist Party. I was asked if I were a member of a party that intends to overthrow the Government by force and violence, and the Communist Party, so far as I knew, had no such intention."

And they say to him, "All right, you go on trial now for perjury. You just take that position and we will bring in Manning Johnson, Paul Crouch, and a lot of these boys that have been testifying as experts in these cases, and we will put them on the stand to prove that the Communist Party does intend to overthrow the Government by force and violence. Tough times for people being accused of being Communists, Mr. Wilson, tough times! You find yourself a lawyer now who can get up and hear and persuade a jury that the Communist Party did not intend to overthrow the Government by force and violence. Nobody has been able to do it yet, so let's see you try that."

What is Wilson going to do? What is Wilson going to do? [7946]

So, of the people that they produced here, the only ones, except the ones that they admit were hired, professional witnesses, Johnson and Crouch, earning their honest stipend, the only ones that they did not have something on so that they could make them say what they wanted them to say were Schomaker, Rathborne, Krolek and Hancock, the only four people that they did not have something on, that they could not make them say what they wanted them to say. Why, Krolek said—the little he said, "I don't know, he is one of the closed doors. Let him stay closed." [7947]

Why do we have to inquire, "Is your father an unnaturalized alien? Is your mother? Is your wife?" What have we got with him? He didn't say very much. Practically all that he had to say we concede without him appearing here. He said that Harry Bridges attended meetings; that there were Communists present. And maybe, so far as I know, everybody present was a Communist; I have no way of identifying whether a man is a Communist or not. So, there, except for those people, they had three people whom they had right where they wanted and could do what they wanted with them.

But wait! Wait a minute! What am I talking about? There I am thinking of the police beating confessions out of witnesses. You see, I have had such experience in inferior courts and courts of less dignity and dealt with bodies that did not have so much respect for the law as agents of the Federal Government, and I allowed myself, I am sorry to say, to think that they might act in the same way that inferior officers do.

But again, what am I talking about? Do they coerce? Do they force? Do they oppress? Is it possible that the FBI would exercise against some poor fellow whom they had in their power approximately the same kind of coercion that a police officer might do when he beats up a man with a loaded hose? Well, unfortunately, the proof that they do is contained in this record, and not out of the mouth of a defense witness but out of sworn testimony of one of their own witnesses; and [7948] not just a chance witness of whom it happened to be asked, but one of their present employees, active, diligent, who has assisted and aided in perpetrating this entire fraud, Mr. Mervyn Rathborne. And Mr. Mervyn Rathborne gives conclusive proof of what they do and what they are capable of, and the type of coercion that you might infer was exercised against some of these witnesses.

Kermit Krolek is his brother-in-law, and Kermit Krolek and he were friendly at the time that Krolek gave Rathborne a statement about what the FBI had done to him back in 1941 when they were trying to compel him by force and violence to testify falsely and under duress against Harry Bridges. And Rathborne wrote out what his brother-in-law had said to him and turned it over to the Bridges Defense Committee.

Now, get the significance of this: This document that he turned over to the Defense Committee was not for publication; it was not for propaganda purposes; it was a secret, confidential memorandum of a conversation that he had had with his own brother-in-law explaining what that brother-in-law situation, experience and position had been with regard to becoming a witness against Harry Bridges. It was a matter that on its face should be truthful, and which Rathborne stated under oath, if it has any value, was in fact truthful and was an exact statement of what Krolek had told him. By these devices we have been caused and forced to expose our hand and put them out in every [7949] instance and warn the witness in advance and to advise and console him as to what he would be confronted with. We had to admit that all we had was a carbon copy of it, but by the time we had to admit that we got considerable information from Rathborne that confirmed what was in that carbon copy, and even after that he had to consistently go along with it and say that that had happened. Here is his story, not ours, of what his brother-in-law told him as regards the validity of the memorandum:

> "Q. This memorandum was not for public examination or publication, was it?
> "A. Obviously such a memorandum of that kind on the face is not for public use.
> "Q. Were you telling the defense the truth?
> "A. Certainly; I was making a report. I say I reported to the defense, yes.
> "Q. And you didn't put anything in that memorandum that you gave the defense except what had actually been told you by Mr. Krolek, did you?
> "A. My report to the defense would to the best of my ability accurately reflect the proceedings between Mr. Krolek, his wife and myself at the particular time and as best as I could reflect them."

Now, reading from the report and questioning him on it:

> "Q. Now, did Mr. Krolek state to you that agents of the [7950] FBI had visited him at work and asked him to testify as a Government witness at the Bridges deportation hearing; that he had informed the FBI that in his opinion he had no evidence to offer which would be of any value in the case; that he stated he also had told the FBI agents when they got in touch with him in November, 1940, and had given them the same answer and asked him why they were contacting him again; that a few days after the FBI agents has visited him at work, he was called by the FBI to an office located at 111 Sutter Street, San Francisco, which he stated is the local headquarters of the FBI; that at this meeting at 111 Sutter Street he was cross-questioned by the FBI and it was obvious that the FBI agents were attempting to intimidate him?

"A. Well, Mr. Hallinan, as I testified yesterday, my direct recollection of that conversation was that Esther and Charlie, or Mr. and Mrs. Krolek, complained bitterly to me about the treatment they had received at the hands of the FBI, alleged they had been intimidated and undue pressure put on them, and also that they had been hauled down to the FBI offices. That was my general summary recollection of the conversation that I had with them."

Now, ladies and gentlemen, as I say, that is the testimony of a Government witness, not of ours.

"Q. All right. Did the Kroleks tell you that these visits [7951] of the FBI had been repeated several times, that they had been called on at their home and at work?

"A. Well, it is my recollection that he said the FBI was bothering him or after him or pestering him or—definitely I have a recollection of words to that effect."

Now, I may suggest this: That if a person makes a memorandum of a conversation and you question him concerning that memorandum, it might not refresh his recollection and he might not remember from it the things that were said in it, but he would remember if something were put in there that he hadn't said; he would know immediately that the language that was being quoted to him was contrary to the spirit and purport of what had been told to him.

"Q. All right. But your recollection at the time this memorandum was written was better than it is now, isn't that right?

"A. Well, naturally.

"Q. And what you would have put in the memorandum would be nearer to the things that were told you than your independent recollection at this time, isn't that so?

"A. Why, certainly.

"Q. So if you put in the memorandum that Mr. Krolek told you that he had been taken to the FBI headquarters at 111 Sutter Street a number of times, that is probably what he told you, isn't that right? [7952]

"A. I wouldn't quarrel with it. I wouldn't —I mean, I am merely saying my recollection at this time is that I didn't know he was taken there a number of times. It seems to be that, to me, he was taken there once late at night.

"Q. All right. Do you remember that Mr. Krolek told you that he and his wife had twice been taken from their Belmont home to the FBI headquarters in San Francisco?

"A. I remember the discussion about being taken, and I think even late at night from his Belmont home, to the FBI headquarters; but again, my recollection is that it was once. But as I say, I won't quarrel with it.

"Q. All right. Do you remember now that Mr. Krolek told you that the FBI agents had really put extreme pressure on them to make statements that would be detrimental to Harry Bidges?

"A. I believe I testified to that yesterday.

"Q. Yes, you did.

"A. Before I saw the memorandum.

"Q. Yes. All right. Do you remember that both Mr. and Mrs. Krolek stated that they had been given the third degree by Mr. Delgurcio and approximately twelve FBI agents?

"A. Well, I have no recollection as to the number of twelve or as to Mr. Delgurcio. My recollection is several or a number." [7953]

Now, what was intended, my friends, when the FBI took that unfortunate man and his wife out of their home late at night, with every circumstance of uncertainty and terror, and took them up to a building in San Francisco, and several persons, probably twelve, sit around and exert upon them intimidation and undue pressure and seek to coerce them?

The Court: We will take the eleven o'clock recess, ladies and gentlemen of the jury. The same admonition not to discuss the case.

(Recess.) [7954]

Mr. Hallinan: Then continuing a few sentences more of this:

> "Q. Do you remember Mrs. Krolek stating that the FBI agents fired questions at her from all directions, that she became nervous and upset and started in to cry?
> "A. My recollection is that she became quite upset. Maybe she said that she became ill. I know at the time, one of the times I spoke to her or saw her, she was crying."

And:

> "A. I recall that he stated threats, intimidations and pressure was used on him.
> "Q. Now, did Mr. Krolek state to you that agents of the FBI had visited him at work and asked him to testify as a government witness at the Bridges deportation hearing?
> "A. I don't know if he used those exact words.
> "Q. I mean, the substance of it.
> "A. There was a conversation about that time along those lines.
> "Q. Did he tell you that he had informed the FBI that in his opinion he had no evidence to offer which would be of any value in the case, and that he told the FBI agents when they got in touch with him in November, 1940, he had given them the same answer and asked why they were conducting the investigation? Did he tell you that?

"A. I don't have a clear independent recollection of the conversation. I know I had a meeting with Mr. Krolek in [7955] which he discussed that the FBI had contacted him, and what particularly sticks in my mind is both that he and his wife complained very bitterly about the treatment that he got from the FBI, the alleged intimidation.

"A. They claimed they were intimidated.

"Q. In what way?

"A. By being taken down to the FBI office late at night and being held there for some hours and questioned very sharply.

"Q. Threatened?

"A. Well, that was their statement, yes, sir.

"Q. And intimidated?

"A. That is what they said.

"Q. And Krolek was very frightened, wasn't he? A. Both of them were.

"Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Rathborne. At any rate, Mr. Krolek stated to you that he had been very much terrified by this episode with the FBI, isn't that right?

"A. That is right.

"Q. All right. He testified that they did try to intimidate him and terrified him, isn't that right?

> "A. He didn't testify to that, he told me that."

Now, what did Mr. Rathborne advise his brother-in-law under the circumstances?

> "Q. Did he tell you that Mrs. Krolek was also supposed to [7956] have appeared at the same place that morning?"

In other words, he is subpoenaed to appear upon the hearing.

> "A. As I stated previously, I don't recall any discussion about his job. I just recall a discussion about generally he stated he was threatened, intimidated, coerced, pushed around and that is my general recollection of what he told me."

Now, that is the testimony that Rathborne was telling you ladies and gentlemen of the jury from this witness stand. Now, we are not reading out of any document that he signed some time ago or issued some time ago; it is what he testified here.

> "Q. Do you remember that Mr. and Mrs. Krolek told you this, or in substance this, that they had been taken down to FBI headquarters in San Francisco on the preceding Sunday night, severely grilled by FBI agents for approximately four hours, and that they had heard of the third degree but had never experienced it before, and that they were both in extremely nervous condition?

"A. That is substantially what I told you yesterday.

"Q. Is that substantially what they told you?

"A. That is the best of my recollection, yes.

"Q. Did he tell you Mrs. Krolek was also supposed to have appeared at the same place in the morning but because of extreme pressure on her by the FBI she had suffered a nervous relapse, was sick in bed and unable to appear; that [7957] Mr. Krolek told you before he was supposed to appear on the witness stand he informed the FBI that he would make any statements he thought necessary to protect himself and would in his testimony put in an appeal to the trial examiner against the persecutions, intimidations and methods used by the FBI in their attempts to force him and his wife to give false testimony against Bridges against their will? Did they tell you substantially that?

"A. I think—as a matter of fact, I advised him to do that, to do everything possible to refuse, not to testify.

"Q. And to notify the inspector that they had been put under pressure, third degreed, persecuted and intimidated, is that right?

"A. Yes."

Now, so true is the statement that the Kroleks gave Rathborne that he was able to tell his wife's sister and his brother-in-law, now, "If they put you on the witness stand before Sears, you will be under oath there; you just tell Sears what they did. You just tell him that they got you down there, third degreed you, and intimidated you, coerced you, threatened you and tried to get you to give false testimony against Harry Bridges."

The brother had been interviewed by up to possibly twelve agents. If that statement weren't true, then Rathborne would never advise his brother-in-law to get on the witness stand and swear it was true with twelve witnesses possibly [7958] confronting him to prove that it was not.

Of course, we are going to run into the same notion that once you accept employment by the government, you are above suspicion; that once you receive a paycheck from the United States Treasury which makes you part of the government, which makes you part of us, which makes any assault upon you a reflection upon ourselves, you are sacrosanct. Nothing should be said about you, all the faults to which flesh is heir fell away from you the minute you signed the document that made you a government employee. And from then on nothing should be said. And particularly if you happen to be a member of the FBI. This FBI, which protects us in a great many ways, which has its virtues and which has its faults—it is like Guizot says, that no man is entirely good or evil, that all persons are a mixture of the two forces. So that we see mankind proceeding at all times struggling in a division as to which one will have the preponderance. And it never goes to the extreme of the good or evil, it erects itself when it seems most likely to fall, but falters when its steps seem firmest." [7959]

If the FBI catches kidnapers and uncovers counterfeiters, and does all the things that a legitimate and good police force does, or if they detect spies or if they detect persons who are guilty of any kind of crime, well and good. But when, or as soon as, they step over into political fields and start coercing people to do a job of getting somebody, it is a totally different proposition, and I can just imagine the Vishinsky that Mr. Donohue proffers to hate and despise so much, as the coercer of confessions, leaning over and saying to an executive or a legal board in the Soviet Union, "Why, these scoundrels have the effrontery to attack the old OGPU," or the NKVD, or whatever initials they use to designate their secret police—the secret police that forms a regular mine of material for such funny books as John Schomaker delights himself with. Or we can imagine in Hitler's day, the chief prosecutor leaning across and saying to a jury trying people on a framed-up charge of burning the Reichstag, "Why, they even have the effrontery to attack the Gestapo, without which what would we be? Where would our safety be?"

That glorification and apoteosis of cops is a bad thing to allow ourselves to fall into. They are just human beings like everybody else. They are subject to the faults and failings of others. When they are sent out to do a job, they like to get it done. They have the same consciences that ordinary people have, and nobody is sacrosanct—I don't [7960] care who it is. The just man falls seven times a day, and nobody has a right to select any body of men and say, "These you shall say nothing about," especially when the charge that is leveled against them is that of having used intimidation, coercion, third degree, undue pressure, to procure false testimony against this very man who is on trial here—and coming not from the lips of any of our witnesses, but from the lips of their own witnesses.

Now, with Mr. Rathborne, proceeding to the other witnesses who appeared here. As I suggested, the genius, the guiding principle of Mr. Kaiser's life seems to be that he can do nothing right, that everything he does is all thumbs, done in such a clumsy, malappropriate way that even where we might be inclined to think possibly there is no fraud, fraud sticks its head up and wears, at least, the visage of fraud. Even the documents that are produced here, official documents, as soon as you look at them you think, "Well, what kind of a deal, what kind of a sell is this?"

Now, to start off with Rathborne, at the start; he appeared before the Grand Jury.

> "Q. How long were you in the grand jury room giving testimony?
> "A: I believe it was about—I believe about a few hours. Now, I am not—it might have been longer than that.
> "Q. And what part of the day was that? Evening, daytime, [7961] what?

"A. My recollection was, it was in the morning."

So he was in the grand jury room, now, in the morning for a few hours.

"Q. All right. Now, you testified (he said he was in there in the morning) for a couple of hours before the grand jury on the first occasion. How long did you testify on the second occasion?

"A. Rather a short period of time. I think maybe twenty or thirty minutes."

He said he had been before the grand jury once, until he appeared on the matter of the attorneys going down to investigate him. And then, when it was disclosed that he appeared on both the afternoon and the morning, he said, Well, the appearance in the morning was so short he hadn't counted it. He appeared for a few hours in the afternoon and then he appeared in the morning for twenty or thirty minutes. [7962]

And then Mr. Donohue furnishes us with the exact time that he was there:

"Mr. Donohue: Mr. Hallinan (he put a 'Mr.' on there), the record shows that Mr. Rathborne testified before a grand jury on the 11th of May at 2:00 o'clock, on the 12th of May at 10:00 o'clock——

"Mr. Hallinan: Pardon me. On May 11th?

"Mr. Donohue: At 2:00 p.m.

"Mr. Hallinan: May 12th?

"Mr. Donohue: 10:00 a.m.; June 1st, 3:25 p.m.; June 8th at 3:00 p.m."

In other words, the last appearances were such a short period of time Rathborne had even forgotten he had appeared there, hadn't even testified to them at all. Now, for this appearance he was not receiving anything except during the period of the grand jury testimony, and so forth, and so Rathborne is up there for, let us say, four hours the first afternoon, although he gives it an extra half hour the following day, four and a half hours, and then probably he appears two other times; 3:25 and 3:00 p.m. Let us say six hours altogether. And then they come out under pressure, after Mr. Paisley has told us, "We are not producing that; you ought to get out a subpoena. You subpoena us to bring in the records"; only under the compulsion of the Court this thing is finally brought in.

"Mervyn Rathborne, residing at Half Moon Bay, having been [7963] subpoenaed to appear before a special session of the grand jury on May 11th, 1945 —" he gets in there one day and stays there between two and four hours "—in pursuance of said subpoena did so appear and testify as an expert on the principles, policies, program, activities, teaching and philosophy of the Communist Party; that I will appear and give expert testimony giving the principles, policies, program, activities, teaching and philosophy of the Communist Party provided I am compensated at the rate of $37.50 for each day or fraction thereof that I am absent from my home in order to so appear and testify as an expert witness concerning the matters set forth, and provided further that in addition I shall receive travel expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence at $6.00 under the standard government travel regulation."

Then we have a certificate of attendance of the witness, the officer who is supposed to protect the taxpayers and the treasury by filing a certificate that the services for which payment is made have actually been given, and this is signed by John F. Boyd, the real beginner, the real top man in all the persecutions of Harry Bridges.

> "I certify that Mervyn Rathborne appeared before the federal grand jury in connection with confidential investigation——"

Wait. I want to get the May 11th one. [7964] Well——

> '——confidential investigation file No. so-and-so on June 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 7th and 8th, 1949, and to the best of my knowledge and belief, based upon information which I have received from government officers, he left Half Moon Bay at 8:00 a.m. on June 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 7th and 8th, 1949. I further testify that to the best of my knowledge, based upon information obtained from the witness or from government officers who escorted the witness to the place of departure, that he left San Francisco at 8:00 p.m. on June 1, 2, 3, 6, 7 and 8, and in accordance with information obtained from the carrier is due to arrive in Half Moon Bay, California, at 7:00 p.m. on June 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 7th and 8th. He left at 6:00 p.m."

Now, that covers the day that he testified so briefly that he did not even remember that he had testified at all.

Then here is the next one: Mervyn Rathborne makes the same sort of affidavit. He is an expert on the principles of the Communist Party. He is going to appear here and testify provided he receives $37.50 per day and $6.00 subsistence, and another certificate by Mr. Boyd that after all this investigation and questioning of officers he knows that on May 24, 25, 26, 28 and 31st the witness left Half Moon Bay and upon information obtained from the witness or from government agents who escorted him, he left San Francisco at 5:00 p.m., due to arrive at 7:00 p.m. at Half Moon Bay; and Mervyn Rathborne's certificate that [7965] he has to appear as a witness on May 11th, and he did appear and certify, and he has the intimate, detailed knowledge, and so forth, that will enable him to be this witness.

On May 11th he signs a similar affidavit, and we finally have affidavits from him saying that he left his home to appear as a witness before the grand jury on May 11th, 12th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, on the 24th, 25th, 26th, 28th and 31st—you know, it is a kind of queer little thing they put in, too. They omit Sundays in making this compilation. They skip, for instance, the 13th, which I assume was a Sunday, and the 27th, which I assume was a Sunday, and then they go on: June 1st, 2nd, 3rd, omit the 4th and 5th, and the 7th and 8th, and it hits a total of $1,000!

Now, who do they think they are fooling? Who do they think they are fooling? If they are bribing Rathborne to come in before the grand jury for $1,000 and testify to certain facts, why don't they come out and say so? If they say, "All right, we think he has information that is of help and we have so checked and so forth, that we think certain of it is the truth, we have to get the information, he won't give it to us unless we pay him a thousand dollars, and we are paying him the thousand dollars?" All right, at least that is an honest approach to the thing. But to take and fix up and doctor up three separate documents so they will space out the witness fee as an expert, which he did not profess to be, saying here that after he went to sea again [7966] he read over a few of the classic Communist writings, and he is an expert at $37.50 a day, and you bring it up still further, $6.00 a day subsistence, his transportation to and from Half Moon Bay, and they figure it out and they cut it up until it comes to exactly a thousand dollars. And then they put in those documents. That is a fraud, that is a lie, that is a deceit on the treasury of the United States. Nobody is going to stand for Barber and Boyd handing this fellow a thousand dollars to come in and testify before the grand jury. He comes in and he testifies for four and five hours, and then they come in and hash up an account that they can turn into the United States Treasury so as to deceive and defraud the man who issued the warrants to pay him, as though he were a witness for those periods of time upon a matter requiring expert testimony. They start off with that man lying and deceiving, lying and deceiving not only the Attorney General of the United States when they did not disclose to him what kind of scoundrel he is, but then they lie to the Treasurer of the United States when they pretend to him that they are handing over to this fellow a thousand dollars to cover his expenses in coming back and forth, when what they are doing is handing him a thousand dollar bribe.

If we gave B. B. Jones $50, you would never hear the end of it. If we paid somebody's expenses over and above the exact amounts that the law permits for transportation from a point like Los Angeles, and so forth, they would be screaming, they would be [7967] running to the grand jury, and we would probably be indicted. And they come in here with a shabby, lying fraud like that against the officers that are superior to themselves, to get the Treasurer of the United States to pay out a thousand dollar bribe to Mervyn Rathborne under the pretense and belief that he is paying witness fees for a man who has actually put the time in as an expert witness before the grand jury.

Then what happens over and above that? Up to the present time Rathborne has received, in addition to this approximately $4,000 he said he had gotten $3,400 and some odd, which was dragged out of him as though it were their pet teeth, and he says, "I also have gotten a check since for $400 or $500. I don't remeber the amount." There is $4,000.

So what they have done is taken this poor, weak, drunken man and bribed him with $5,000 to come in here and testify to destroy Harry Bridges. It seems incredible and yet it is true. And they do the exact same thing, they doctored the thing up, and they had him go down to the Immigration Department and show himself there during the day to say, "I am working for this amount. I am working for that amount."

And Rathborne, for all his mental and moral deterioration, still had sagacity enough and cunning enough that he was able to use the information that he had or said he had like a magnet to extract the gold from him, ten per cent at a time, five per cent at a time, and he carried them along, led them [7968] along, dickered with them until the commodity he was able to vend commanded the price that he was asking, and then he turned it over. That is the kind of witness that they have the effrontery to put on the stand to try to convict these three men. Bribed with a $5,000 bribe, and futilely [7968-A] bribed!

Let me give you a bit of information, a little tip. There are two people that you cannot get to tell a story: One is a drunk and the other is a child, because they will always mix it up and spill it out, and the first thing you know they start telling the truth, it comes bubbling out, and you have it mixed with your story, and everything falls away under it. They should never have put Rathborne on the stand. They maneuvered, and Mr. Rathborne, who is in need of funds to this extent: He doesn't remember what he is getting; he thinks he is getting $30 a day. That is what he thought he was getting when he was appearing before the grand jury. "I believe," he says, "I got $30 a day." And he actually was getting $43.50 per day, and they go around and add $43.50 per day for 23 days and they got exactly $1000.

Rathborne is in the same position as Crouch and Johnson with respect to his reliability. All right; he was a liar when he was a member of the Communist Party. And by this time I suppose we can accept, at least as a sort of starting point or a concession—let us take it as being what we call at worst a pious fraud upon everybody—that the Communist Party maintains some kind of a school where they educate all Communists to tell lies regardless of what you would like to say, how moral, how decent a person may have been; you go to the school, some retired seaman gives you a three weeks' course in converting yourself into a liar, a perjurer, a fraud and a crook, and [7969] you come out of there those four things. So then you go and you commit perjury. Let us say it is done under the compulsion of this great moral force that has been exercised against them in the school. We will forget that, wipe that out. But then we have Rathborne, after he has ceased being a Communist and right in this court, committing deliberate, practiced and thought-out perjury. We have his testimony before the Dies Committee, and the Sorcerer's Apprentice run over it, all thumbs again, and their eyeglasses looking backwards, and they overlook three very essential things.

"Why did you lie before the Dies Committee?

"Well, the ubiquitous Roy Hudson—yes, we will blame it onto Roy Hudson; he told me to do it. When I came out here that wicked William Schneidermann prodded me into doing it. That is what I will say. I was subpoenaed; I had to go in and testify, so I told a lie under the guidance of those two men.

"Sometime," he says, "I believe in 1940, I was subpoenaed by the Dies Committee, the Un-American Activities Committee, which is a committee of Congress, to appear in Washington, D. C., at a hearing and testify there. I was subpoenaed," he says.

"Q. And you received a subpoena from a committee called the Dies Committee, is that right?

"A. I believe the proper name was the House Un-American [7970] Activities Committee.

"Q. That is a committee of the United States Congress, is that right?

"A. That is right."

So he went to Roy Hudson, and here is what he did:

"A. In connection with the appearance before the Dies Committee I consulted with Mr. Roy Hudson of New York"——

This is Mr. Donohue's examination, not cross-examination.

"——and advised him of the fact that I had been subpoenaed and that I was going to appear, that I had to appear under the subpoena.

"I discussed this at some length with Mr. Hudson. It was a very serious thing, and I asked what the justification was; why, if I was to carry out my responsibilities, I should put myself in this position. We had considerable discussion about it. I believe it lasted for a good part of an evening."

In other words, he didn't go in now and surrender his immortal soul to Mr. Hudson on any first impetus. It was "Pull Devil, pull baker" for Mr. Rathborne's integrity. Mr. Rathborne's good angel was telling him, "Don't you go in there and lie even though you are under subpoena," and Mr. Hudson, representing His Majesty from below, was hauling at him, "Go on and tell them, Merve; go on in and lie. You are under subpoena and you have got to go in." Mr. Rathborne discussed it for the [7971] greater part of an entire evening. It was a very serious thing, and furthermore, the subpoena that had been put upon Mr. Rathborne and the circumstances under which he now found himself were so far from being a matter of his own choice that it stole upon him like a thief in the night, he was taken by ambush and unawares.

"Q. Had you made any effort to avoid being subpoenaed?

"A. 'I had no knowledge," he said, "that I was to be subpoenaed."

"Q. Let me ask you, was the policy of the Communist Party to avoid such subpoena if possible?

"A. To my knowledge it was, yes, sir."

And then we had lurking in the background another one of those little pieces of proof, another one of those little druids that keep running around under the floor and pops up in the most unexpected places, and no diligence and no caution and no effort will suffice to stamp them out or keep them from emerging into the light. We had a press release sent out by Mr. Rathborne at the time he appeared before the Dies Un-American Activities Committee, which he had forgotten, and which Mr. Kaiser had obviously overlooked or did not remember, and this press release contained a telegram from Mr. Rathborne to the Dies Committee saying, "My union is being slandered before your committee by certain interested persons, and I demand the right to appear before you and refute these calumnies." He wasn't under subpoena to appear at all; he wasn't under [7972] any compulsion to appear; he had appeared there voluntarily. And we show the document to Mr. Donohue. And you may not remember, but I remember with a little of that malicious satisfaction which I am weak enough to acknowledge still constitutes a small, infinitesimally small, part of my nature, but I do have that bad, bad little thing still in me, and I sat there and I saw Mr. Donohue read and reread and reread that document and cogitate in his mind something like this: "What the hell has happened now?"

Shall we take the recess?

The Court: We will take the noon recess, ladies and gentlemen. We will resume at two o'clock this afternoon. The same admonition.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:00 p.m. this date.) [7973]

Afternoon Session—Thursday, March 23, 1950

Mr. Hallinan: To finish off on Mr. Rathborne's credibility, not at another time, not while he was a member of the Communist Party or even in testimony thereafter, but right in this court, he goes on then when our friend here finally gets over his consternation at the revelation that his witness was not subpoenaed before the Dies Committee at all, wasn't there under any compulsion, didn't have to go to find out what he was going to say, but had sent a wire to the Committee asking to be heard and then had sent out a release including the wire. So, counsel having read the document at great length, Hallinan said to the witness:

"Q. This is the statement you issued to the press, is it not?

"A. I believe it is, yes, sir.

"Mr. Hallinan: Offer it in evidence as defendants' exhibit next in order."

Now, that would seem to be a pretty pertinent and material piece of evidence as to whether the witness was telling the truth about being subpoenaed or not, but up comes Mr. Donohue to champion him.

> "Mr. Donohue: I object, if your Honor please. I think it is time to start trying the defendants instead of the witness," etc., [7974] etc.
> "Mr. Hallinan: Then why do you object?
> "Mr. Donohue: You don't mind if I make an objection," and so forth. "I see no purpose, if your Honor please, in the statement this witness made to the press in the case involving the defendants Bridges, Schmidt and Robertson," and so forth.

He tries to keep away from the jury the fact that his witness is comitting perjury in this court, not in some other court. So the witness goes on. And, mind, we don't find fault with that. After all, one has a certain loyalty to the people he has, and even if you are highly respectable yourself and you employ the services of a gang of ruffians to do some job for you, the least you ought to do is to protect them. I don't blame you for that at all.

Then the witness continued:

> "Q. When you went before the Un-American Activities Committee, you didn't go in response to a subpoena, did you?
> "A. The record shows apparently I received a communication from that Committee, saying, as I recall it now—that is why I testified a while ago I was notified by mail or in person —as I remember, I received a communication from the Committee saying that I would be heard at such and such a time.

"Q. In other words, here is what happened——"

Rathborne interrupted: [7975]

"I was in error in saying it was a subpoena if those facts are correct.

"Q. Obviously that is right. Don't mind that. In other words, what you did was this: You sent a wire to the Committee asking to be heard as stated in that wire, that is correct, isn't it?

"A. Well, from the document it appears that that is correct, yes.

"Q. You weren't under any compulsion to go there at all; you were going there voluntarily and giving those answers, weren't you?

"A. Apparently from the document here that was the case, yes. My recollection of that was in error; I thought I was subpoenaed to go there, but apparently I wasn't."

It doesn't matter. His recollection might have been in error as to whether he was subpoenaed to go there or not, but in this court he had used the fact that he was under subpoena and compulsion to go there as explaining why he had lied to the Committee as to his membership in the Communist Party. And finally:

"Q. And you weren't under any subpoena or under any compulsion to go to this hearing, were you? A. Apparently not, no."

And he also tried to do a little fibbing, a little genteel fibbing to excuse his conduct and so forth with regard to that [7976] resolution passed by the World Federation of Trade Unions. Now, rightly or wrongly—let us say wrongly—those people, probably stung to fury and indignation at the thought that wrongly or rightly by them, I don't care, that Harry Bridges was just being again made a victim of the same type of unjust and unfair persecution that had been leveled against him for the past fifteen years, that they passed the resolution saying that if anybody takes the stand against Bridges and testifies falsely against him, we are going to blackball him from working on any ships. Now, that might be a wrong and wrongheaded and improper thing to do. But, after all, they conceived it was the right thing to do, and they went ahead and did it, since they haven't many other means by which they can protect their own. But this gentleman wanted to ring that in as being the reason why he was fixing a rate of pay for himself at 20 or 23 or 24 dollars a day, whatever it may be, and he said that he talked to Mr. Donohue in Washington, and that there was discussed the amount that he had been earning before he went to sea, or when he went to sea. And then he also said that he had fixed upon the WFTU matter as one of the reasons why he would have to get some employment in another capacity. So he was going to join the ranks of that new and wonderful profession which, as counsel says, "Of course they are professional witnesses"; he was going to join those ranks and march along to fame and prosperity with Manning Johnson and Paul Crouch. [7977]

And then to show that just as he had been put under compulsion by the Dies Committee to go down there and testify falsely under oath, now he is going to show he was put under compulsion by the WFTU to accept this employment and give up his work. So he says he had the discussion with Donohue, and then in the midst of it and as part of it, they come to the point where he had to hit upon some compensation and he said—and I am not going to read these out again—he said that there was discussed the WFTU resolution banning him from further employment on the ships. Now, after he got off the stand, he found out that the WFTU resolution had not been passed until a month or so after his conference with Donohue, and he found that out by having a talk with Kaiser, in which Kaiser phoned somebody and determined that. He came back on the witness stand and he did not reveal that he had been in error, let us say, on that point. He did not say, "Now, I want to correct an erroneous impression that was given here. I have found out in the meantime that the WFTU resolution was not passed until a month after I accepted the king's dollar from Mr. Donohue, and there was a mistake there." He waited and took the chance that it would not be discovered and nothing would be said, so the jury would have the impression that he was forced into this employment, and it develops then that he has not seen or heard or read anything about this matter in the papers until fully a month after he had left Mr. Donohue. He also said that when he was on [7978] the witness stand here testifying as to the conversations in Mr. Donohue's office, he then had the impression that the WFTU resolution had been passed. But, he says, after discussing the matter and discovering it had not, he did not intend to give that impression to the jury.

Of course, some objection has been made here to using devices, simple little tricks and devices to test the credibility of a witness. That is to find out whether the witness is willing to lie under oath. Now, that seems to me to be a pretty important thing. That is one of the things that you learn how to do, not only in the schooling that you get as a lawyer, but in the much harder school of the actual practice of a case. If a witness gets on the witness stand and shows a willingness to lie under oath, then that witness' credibility is certainly open to immediate challenge and suspicion, and counsel talks a great deal about devices, tricks and so forth, that were used to trap a witness. Well, since when has a witness been protected from having disclosed his willingness to lie under oath? Why, we have all been regaled from childhood with the stories of King Solomon threatening to divide the child to determine who was the true mother, and we have the stories of Daniel forcing the two perjured elders, who wanted to accuse Susannah of adultery, separating them and making each one answer separately under what type of tree this act had taken place, and one saying it was a walnut tree in one part of the garden, the other one saying it [7979] was a plane tree in another part of the garden. Their joint falsehood was established by it.

We are not, however, supposed to use any such method or devices on these people. We are supposed to go along and play a game with them, a little daring game with our clients' safety and liberty at stake. While they are cheating and while they are acting fraudulently, we are supposed to act according to some rules that are established by our opponents. If a witness shows a willingness to lie, that casts a doubt on all his testimony.

Now, here is Mr. Rathborne, asked about his conversation with Jean Murray:

> "Q. Did you have any discussion with her then about this case? A. No, sir.
> "Q. Did you have any conversation with her about your appearance before the grand jury or that you intended to appear before the grand jury? A. No, sir, I did not."

Now, he starts out to say that on that visit he made Jean Murray, the visit to her apartment, they were talking about social matters or something, and he is prepared and starts to deny that he talked to her at all about his testimony as a witness before the grand jury or anything about this case. So I asked him a simple little matter. I said, "Have you ever been [7980] dictographed yourself?" He said, "I don't know. You mean I have seen a doctograph machine, if that is what you mean."

> I said, "No, have you ever heard your own voice read off of one of them?
>
> "A. No, sir."

The change in expression and demeanor of the witness is striking. It should have been obvious to anyone. And he immediately then says, "What I discussed with her very largely, Mr. Hallinan, she wanted to know my reasons for either going or testifying or going to testify, and we discussed that. That was the main burden of the discussion."

Now, what kind of explanation and what kind of synthesis can they draw between these two statements: first, "Did you have any discussion with her then about this case?

> "A. No, sir.
> "Q. Did you have any kind of a conversation with her about your appearance before the grand jury that you intended to appear before the grand jury? A. No, sir, I did not."

The question about the dictograph, and immediately:

> "What I discussed with her very largely, Mr. Hallinan, she wanted to know my reasons for either going or testifying or going to testify. We discussed that. That was the main burden of the discussion."

So if Mr. Rathborne had not suspected suddenly that he [7981] might have been dictographed in that room of Miss Murray's, he was prepared to say they did not discuss the Bridges case at all, him being a witness or anything of that kind, that is quite obvious.

And then to show the tragedy of being on the wrong side, he afterwards concedes that the two girls went down to see him on December 15th and there, my friends, while we have had breaks that we could scarcely have suspected by diligence and by trying to discover and pull everything out into the open, we fell into evidence, and we came across matters that established the falsity of their witnesses; this is one of the lost opportunities. If we had only known that the two little amateur detectives contemplated going down and talking to Mr. Rathborne, that being after the case had started, we would have dictographed him. We would have had a wire recording in the automobile, and we would have a really fine fiasco on Mr. Rathborne. But, unfortunately, they went down without letting us know about it. That is on December 15th.

Nothing happens, nothing said. He squeals to Mr. Donohue about the girls having talked to him, and the story is invented. Then on December 20th the papers carry the story that Crouch and Johnson have been caught on the Stockton evidence, and that papers have been introduced showing that Harry Bridges could not possibly have been in New York on June 27th, 1936, and that we are accusing Crouch and Johnson of deliberate perjury in this [7982] court.

And then on December 27th the papers, according to Rathborne's testimony here, carried the story that we had sent photostats of all this proof we had to the Attorney General in Washington, to the foreman of the grand jury in San Francisco, to the District Attorney in San Francisco demanding the indictment of those two fellows for perjury. And two days afterwards—now, two days afterwards they procured the indictment of those two girls by that same grand jury. They bring Rathborne up alone, again hoodwink and goldbrick the grand jury, don't let them know he is a crook, a thief, a burglar and a perjurer. They do not give the two poor young women a chance to come in and convince the grand jury that that is not what happened. They simply return an indictment, and the reason they return the indictment was to try; to take the heat off of their two rogues and to do something in the meantime that would smear the defense. He also talked a little too freely when he was sending out releases to the papers. He put in one of the papers that the 1948 maritime strike was 80 per cent political and 20 per cent work and wages. Then he had to come in here and try to explain away, why it was no longer that, why it was not actually 80 per cent political, and what he meant by it, and a vague and circuitous discussion about what William Schneidermann had said three or four years ago about what the policy of the line of the Communist Party was at that time. [7983]

And then he could not explain why he told the Attorney General in 1948 that nothing should be done at that time, because it would make it look as though the strike was being reflected upon, and he can not reconcile that with the fact that the Attorney General said that at the time the indictments were returned against these gentlemen, that this would break the situation in Honolulu. He also gives a release to the papers that the reason he had broken with the Communist Party or Harry Bridges or I don't know what was on the third party issue. He was going to be a good Democrat now. He was going to throw a little wallop in the third party while he was about it. And then the record comes out that in the years 1936, 1938, 1942, 1945 and 1947 he had advocated a labor party, that he had advocated the formation of a third party. So he only has one little place in there in 1946, and he says, "Well, that third party that was formed in 1946, I was not in favor of that for the reason that it was not a grass roots party. It was a party whose formation was dictated from the higher levels." But when he started to determine whether he would get in the deal to destroy Harry Bridges, it was to the high brass of the CIO that he went. It was to Murray, Carey, Curran and Ray. It was not to the grass roots of men that he knew out here, the men who would suffer and the men who would lose by the ruin of their loss. The grass roots, the great Democrat was concerned that the only third party that he did not support was one that was derived from on [7984] high and not from a grass roots manner. So you have Mr. Rathborne on three or four occasions here deliberately committing perjury without the slightest notion, without the least bit of embarrassment when he is discovered, and he is presented to you as a witness whom you are to accept in determining what your verdict will be in this case.

Now, to come to some of these other people, and to come particularly to John Schomaker, who, after all, constitutes the major portion of their case, here is a man who has been all his life a nonentity, a failure, not blamable for it; he probably did the best he could with the materials that he had, but starting in from the time that they began to cultivate him, he was subjected to such pressure, such solicitation, such constant labor, education and assiduity by the agents of the Immigration Department as would invalidate any act that a person might make. If a person were to draw a will disposing of his fortune and give it to people other than the law elected as his heirs, and those heirs came in and contested it and showed that the person in whose favor the will was drawn had exercised one-half of the influence and domination that these agents executed upon John Schomaker, without any further testimony whatever, a jury would be justified in arriving at an inference that that will had been procured by undue influence and reject and throw it out entirely.

He starts in with the people that he met. He meets John [7985] Boyd. There was Mr. John Boyd and a stenographer and one other person. This is at a meeting in May, 1949. It could have been Mr. Kaiser, but John Boyd was there, a stenographer and one other person:

> "Do you know whether Mr. Kaiser was there?

"A. As I say, there was some other person. I can't say if it was Mr. Kaiser or not.

"Q. Now, had you met Boyd before?

"A. Prior to that?

"Q. Yes.

"A. I think yes. He came down to the house one time.

"Q. When?

"A. Oh, I think about two weeks prior to that."

Now, here is a man who is high in the national Immigration Department and he is going down and visiting Schomaker's house down in Menlo Park.

"Q. Let's see, how did that finally come about?

"A. I know I worked that day and I received a call the previous day, I think it was.

"Q. From whom?

"A. I think it was Jack McGowan.

"Q. And who is Jack McGowan?

"A. Well, he is an Immigration official. Just what his position is I don't know."

Now he has three people who were working on him at this time. Then he says he has spoken to Mr. McGowan before. [7986]

Then he says that he had spoken to Mr. McGowan before, Mr. McGowan had come down there, "on, I think, two previous occasions."

"Q. You say he came down on two previous occasions. When was the first time?

"A. Well, I would say it was around January.

"Q. Did he come down in the daytime or in the evening?

"A. No, he and Bruce Barber came down. It was in the evening after work."

So now you have got four in it.

"They stayed from eight to ten p.m."

Then his next meeting:

"A. Then later I saw Mr. Boyd again.

"Q. When did he come?

"A. Well, prior, about a week prior. It was on a Sunday, it was on a Sunday afternoon. Mr. Boyd and Mr. Kaiser and some other person came down.

"Q. Who?

"A. I can't recall. That third person is—I can't recall who that third person is.

"Q. All right. Prior to the time McGowan had come down to see you in January, whom had you spoken to connected with the Government on the investigation of this matter before you talked to McGowan in January?

"A. Well, we lived in McKenzie Drive. That is in north [7987] Palo Alto. And there was two fellows came down.

"Q. What were their names?

"A. I can recall one name. It was Phillips. But who the second person was, I cannot recall his name.

"Q. Did you hear his name?

"A. Well, they gave me their cards, yes."

So now you have got six people that have been talking to him.

"Q. What time did they get there?

"A. It was evening, after work.

"Q. What time would you say?

"A. Well, one of those guess deals where, around eight o'clock.

"Q. And what time did they leave?

"A. Oh, about ten o'clock, I imagine, or maybe a little earlier. They didn't stay too long."

That is Phillips and the unknown man.

"Q. Did you discuss the matter with them, anything concerning what you testified here?

"A. Oh, we just had a general conversation about G.I. housing and things of that kind."

Now, there are six of them, so here come a couple more:

"Q. Who else was there?

"A. Well, there was a secretary sitting there.

"Q. Anyone else?

"A. Several agents of the Immigration Service. [7988]

"Q. What were their names?

"A. I think Mr. Maxwell was there, and Mr. Woolley.

"Q. Woolley?

"A. I believe that is it. I am not certain about that, but phonetically it sounds like Woolley."

So now we are up to eight people that have interviewed him.

"A. Well, we went up to the thirteenth floor, the offices—they have offices in one end. That is the far end from the elevator. We walked down there.

"Q. Do you know whose office that was?

"A. Well, I assume it to be the Immigration Service's.

"Q. Did you see anything written on the door?

"A. No, I don't think there was a thing on the door, no writing, at least.

"Q. Had you ever been in that building before? A. I have, yes.

"Q. Several times? A. Several times.

"Q. Recently? A. Recently, yes.

"Q. Anybody else?

"A. And Mr. Wooley's wife and Mr. Gallagher's wife.

"Q. Did you talk to anybody in the meantime in that office besides your daughter?

"A. No, I talked to—she told me where she had been that [7989] day. I think Mrs. Wooley had taken her to the movies—Macy's, and saw Santa Claus at Macy's, and went up to—I think it was the Emporium, she said, and they rode on the merry-go-round and things up there.

"Q. Mrs. Wooley is the wife of one of the agents of the Immigration Department, is she?

"A. That is correct, and we discussed—general conversation with Mrs. Woolley and Mrs. Gallagher."

Then they went up to the Marines Building, and—

"A. Well, Kaiser and I went to the bathroom and he washed his hands and I washed my hands, and the agent went and washed his hands, and that was it.

"Q. Then what did you do?

"A. I put on my coat. We put on our coats and went upstairs to the barroom."

They are getting intimate.

"A. When we got there my wife—by the way, when we went into the lobby my wife—there was—this is—when my wife went to exchange her shoes at Macy's, this agent—he accompanied her to Macy's when she exchanged her shoes, and then he brought her to the Marines Memorial. We met her in the lobby. That is the way that deal worked out. And so when we arrived at Marines Memorial she was sitting in the lobby. So then when the stenographer and Mrs. Gallagher came in, then she accompanied them to the [7990] stenographer's room to freshen up, and we went up to Kaiser's room."

They went to the bar.

"Q. And how long did you stay there?

"A. Oh, we stayed there, had a few drinks, a couple of drinks; I would say we stayed there, oh, an hour.

"Q. Now, you stayed at the bar for about an hour, is that right?

"A. Well, that was a rough estimate, yes.

"Q. And who was present seated at the table now? There was Kaiser, yourself, the agent, your wife, and anybody else?

"A. Mrs. Gallagher.

"Q. Who was Mrs. Gallagher?

"A. She is the wife of George Gallagher, one of the prosecution attorneys.

"Q. And then where did you go?

"A. Well, we went then from there to—went back to the tenth floor to the dining room. In the meanwhile, Mrs. Gallagher excused herself and that left the four of us.

"Q. All right. And you had dinner there?

"A. We had—we did, yes.

"Q. Just the same people whom you have mentioned, less Mrs. Gallagher. And then how long were you at dinner?

"A. I think it was until—we stayed there until about [7991] nine o'clock.

"Q. And then where did you go?

"A. Well, my wife had dinner home and Mr. Kaiser and the agent left to pick up my daughter Susan to go home to Menlo Park, and I went up to the hotel, I mean, went up to the room, went back to the room and took a shower.

"Q. So Kaiser and the agent then picked up your daughter and took her down to Menlo Park, is that right?

"A. Well, they left with my wife and they went to pick up my daughter, Susan, yes.

"Q. They drove your wife and daughter back to Menlo Park?

"A. That is, they had to go and pick up my daughter first.

"Q. In this same Government car, I take it? Is that true?

"A. I didn't see the car. I don't know whether they flew down there or took a street-car or what. I don't know."

Then speaking of the room that he went to:

"Q. Is that the room you occupy now?

"A. Well, I sleep there, yes.

"Q. How long have you been staying there?

"A. Since—what is this, Wednesday—Monday night.

"Q. Is the room registered in your name?

"A. No, it is not. All I did, Mr. Kaiser had the room, rented it, and when I came in I just signed as a second party to the room.

"Q. What are they, twin beds in the [7992] room? A. Definitely, yes.

"Q. Does Kaiser occupy one of them at night?

"A. He occupies one and I occupy the other.

"Q. When you were first brought to San Francisco or came to San Francisco prior to your testimony here, what was the time immediately preceding your appearance here last Monday that you came to San Francisco?

"A. Well, there's this fellow, an agent that lives in Half Moon Bay, who came by about 20 minutes of 8 Monday morning.

"Q. What is his name?

"A. His first name is Larry, and I generally heard him referred to as Larry, and I don't recall his last name."

So now, including the gentlemen's wives, we have got up to ten, and now eleven agents that he is intimate with.

"Q. Now, when was it that this agent, Larry, drove you up? Was it on your return after Thanksgiving or your first appearance?

"A. Well, it was this Monday, last Monday.

"Q. That was the day before yesterday?

"Q. Now, did somebody drive you up on the preceding Monday?

"A. No, on the preceding Monday they drove me up on Sunday.

"Q. Who drove you up then?

"A. Well, I think Mr. Maxwell came down, came down and picked me up."

So now we are up to twelve. Then he goes on—McGowan phoned [7993] him in the morning to make the arrangements. He is taken to the Appraisers' room or building, and he meets McGowan and Kaiser. He is also up here on the preceding Friday, picked up by Maxwell upon a call from McGowan. He goes to dinner and stays at the Marines Memorial hotel with Kaiser. All day Friday he is at the Appraisers' Building. He goes to lunch with Maxwell. At 2 p.m. he goes to the post office with Woolley and Maxwell. Then he takes on a few more people that he has discussions with.

"Q. Now, whom did you talk to on that occasion?

"A. I evidently talked to Mr. Paisley.

"Q. Anyone else? A. Mr. Donohue.

"Q. Anyone else? A. And Mr. Boyd.

"Q. Anyone else?

"A. I may have talked to other people in there, yes.

"Q. Who?

"A. Mr. Maxwell, I guess. We talked about football and things of that sort."

So now we have added to the twelve Mr. Paisley and Mr. Donohue. We have fourteen people.

Then Woolley drove him home, and on Sunday picked him up again. Then on the next occasion he sees Mr. McGowan.

"A. Mr. McGowan—let's see. There is an angle in there [7994] somewhere. It was about thirty days, I would say, I saw Mr. McGowan and Larry.

"Q. Who?

"A. The Larry I referred to before.

"Q. That was the agent who lives in Half Moon Bay whose last name you can't remember? A. That is right.

"Q. Where did you see them?

"A. They were at the Appraisers' Building.

"Q. What day of the week was that, do you know?

"A. It was in the latter part of the week. It was a Friday or Saturday.

"Q. How had you gotten to the Appraisers Building that day?

"A. I think—on that occasion I think that Mr. Maxwell came down and picked me up.

"Q. How long did you stay there?

"A. I stayed there quite late that night. It must have been midnight, I guess, before I got out.

"Q. Whom did you talk to there?

"A. I talked to Mr. McGowan.

"Q. Anyone else?

"A. Well, Larry was there.

"Q. Anyone else?

"A. There may have been a few more fellows there, but I don't distinctly recall [7995] them.

"Q. And you talked to McGowan and Larry from about—let us say six o'clock, the time you got up there, until twelve midnight?

"A. I would say it was six.

"Q. What time?

"A. We got there maybe about 7:30."

Then he had dinner with them, and then he is driven down again to Menlo Park.

Then sometime later he is back to sign the statemen—honed by McGowan, driven up by Maxwell or Larry—he doesn't know which—, driven home by Larry. The previous two nights he had also been at the Appraisers Building, and two or three weeks prior to that McGowan had driven him up. About October 1. And he stayed some 45 minutes and talked about housing.

And in order that Mr. Barber, whose diligence certainly deserves commendation, be not thought to have been neglectful on this occasion:

> "Q. And during the same period, what other agents, if any, or persons connected with the Immigration Department or the Government, did you see?
> "A. Mr. Barber came several times.
> "Q. How many times did Mr. Barber drop in to see you?
> "A. Well, I don't think it was over four. That is approximately four or five times, I would say. The only person he came there with was McGowan. Now, whether or not he [7996] came with Mr. Boyd, I can't recall. But generally the times I remember, he was always with Jack McGowan.
> "Q. Is McGowan a married man, so far as you know?
> "A. As far as I know, yes, he is.
> "Q. Did you meet his wife?
> "A. I have, yes.
> "Q. When?
> "A. Well, I think that they were out house-hunting and they dropped in one day.

"Q. Did she stay for the 45 minutes, too, that he stayed?

"A. Oh, no, they only stayed a few minutes on that particular day. They were looking at a house in the neighborhood there.

"Q. And you said that he stayed about 45 minutes. Do you change that now?

"A. That was a different occasion."

All right. Then he has another visit with these gentlemen:

"A. Well, my appearance before the grand jury, I am pretty sure was on a Wednesday. No, on a Tuesday, I think. And the previous Sunday Mr. Boyd came down with Mr. Kaiser."

He has lunch during the recess with McGowan and Kaiser and Maxwell. Boyd and Kaiser just dropped in and stayed about an hour. About thirty days prior to that, Barber and McGowan came down and stayed about three hours. Then he has shed upon him the effulgence of the golden visitor from the East; Mr. [7997] Donohue comes into his humble cot, this hodcarrier, in Menlo Park and sheds upon it the effulgence of his personality.

"Q. Now, who else did you see?

"A. Well, Mr. Barber, Mr. McGowan, Mr. Donohue, Mr. Boyd and Mr. Kaiser.

"Q. Who else?

"A. To the best of my recollection, that is all I saw at that time.

> "Q. Well, what other Government agents appeared? Did Mr. Maxwell?
> "A. If you want to consider Mr. Maxwell, yes, and Mr. Woolley and Larry. I can't recall his last name, but I don't think that they ever entered the house."

Now, as I suggested before, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, if this man is an honest witness, if he has a story to tell, has some statement to make, if he isn't bargaining or dickering with these people as to what price they will pay him, if he isn't being coached and taught and asked to say what these boys think will be of value to the prosecution, what in the name of all common sense is the purpose of these constant visits back and forth, driving a man around, acting as chauffeur to him, baby-sitting, taking his wife out to buy a pair of shoes, having the little women get together—Mr. Gallagher's wife, Mr. Wooley's wife, all the wives come in and take the Schomakers right into their social life, have dinner with them, go around [7998] with them, fawn upon them? What is the purpose of all that? Suppose that this unfortunate man was financially honest, that he never asked for nor received a bribe or a nickel in connection with this case, that he didn't want a cent and that he wasn't paid a cent; but he had some ambition for recognition, he had some social idea, something that he thought would glorify him in a social sense. Isn't that paying him a bribe, too, to take him and work him into their group, their temporary group—because when the case is over, not one of them will look at him? To take a man and dominate him, have an agent of the Government sleeping in the same room with him where he can keep reminding him of what he is to say, any suggestion, putting a little thing in here, subtracting a little thing in there, until finally he has this story that he wants him to tell. And under such a surveillance and such education and coaching as that, finally a fellow of this man's intellectuality wouldn't know whether the story he was finally telling was his own story or a story that had been given to him.

And I suggest, if this were a will contest, if he died and there were a will made in favor of Mr. Woolley or Mr. Kaiser, it wouldn't take his heirs ten minutes to break the will, because if no other testimony was introduced except this constant running back and forth between them and the constant domination of that man by the agents, any jury would infer that they had substituted their will for his and that the document that he [7999] had signed was not the true expression of his own intention but only a resumé and a rehash of what he had been told to say.

But, my friends, he is vulnerable and his whole testimony is vulnerable from an even more obvious point. Now, as I suggested originally, when a man takes the stand and shows an intention to deceive, then you have to distrust his entire testimony. And if the intention to deceive is with the connivance of either side, you have to distrust the side that puts him on. It is just as much a deception if a person pretends to remember something that he doesn't remember or can't remember as if he says something that is pure and clear invention, that he has made up at the time. And that is the defect in Schomaker's testimony. Schomaker got up here and he narrated a series of events that he doesn't remember, that he couldn't remember, and that in all probability never happened. He says first that he joined the Communist Party in 1931 and he left it in 1940—a period of nine years. He attended a meeting every day, at least, and on Saturdays and Sundays two or three meetings a day.

> "Q. Mr. Schomaker, during the period of your membership in the Communist Party, did you attend few or many Communist Party meetings?
> "A. (This is direct examination) My period in the Communist Party, I attended a meeting every day at least, and on Saturdays and Sundays two or three meetings a day." [8000]

365 days times 9 years is 3,285, plus the 52 weeks of Sundays and Saturdays, multiplied by 3, is 408. So, according to Schomaker, he attended in that time approximately 3,752 meetings. And lest it be thought that I am juggling with figures, I asked him these questions:

> "Q. You testified here that you, during your membership in the Communist Party, a period which extended from 1931 to 1939 or '40, had a meeting every day and that on Saturdays and Sundays two or three. Do you remember that testimony?

"A. Yes, that is more or less correct.

"Q. And as I say, you remained in the Communist Party from 1931 until 1939. That is approximately eight years, right?

"A. That is about it, yes.

"Q. So that as a quick calculation, you had about 3,752 meetings in the Communist Party in that period?

"A. About that many. There seem to be more than that, even. [8001]

"Then in addition to that, you were a member of the union and attended a great many union meetings, isn't that right?

"A. I tried to attend as many as I could, yes.

"Q. Now, how many did you attend?

"A. Well, they met—at one time they met every two weeks, but anyway, we will say they met every week, and I tried to attend all the meetings.

"Q. When did that start? When did you join the union? A. In October, 1933.

"Q. And you left it?

"A. In we will say 1945. You know what I mean, to cover all the years.

"Q. At least a period of ten years. So you were at 520 or more such meetings?"

When he confirms that: "Yes."

So he has got over 4,000 meetings that that man has attended from 1933 up to 1945—over 4,000 by his own calculation. Now, get this part of it:

"Q. Now, have you any memorandum that you have prepared upon which you have based the testimony that you gave in this case?

"A. No, I haven't any memorandum.

"Q. Did you discuss with anybody what you were going to say?

"A. I discussed—I discussed with people the Bridges case, yes, but not what I was going to say. [8002]

"Q. Did you discuss with anybody what your testimony would be if you were called to the witness stand?

"A. It would be on the question of the Bridges case.

"Q. Did you discuss with any person the details of what you would testify to?

"A. Well, I discussed with them the questions of the meetings I had attended, and particular meetings, yes, I discussed it with them.

"Q. Were you shown any statement taken or given by yourself or by anybody else which contained the matters that you were going to testify on?

"A. Well, now, I may have been shown my statement, but I had never seen anyone else's statement; no, never.

"Q. What is the date of the statement you were shown?

"A. Well, I say it is possible it was when—I wasn't even shown my own statement, except,—wait a minute, except when I dictated it and then it was taken in shorthand, transposed, > and I signed it, and I haven't seen it from that day to this."

Now, it is important to remember the statement that he made here: "that I may have been shown my statement, but I have never seen anyone else's statement; no, never."

Now, he is asked about the conversations with these various agents, and he says they came down and parked their car in front and they rang the bell. These are the conversations with [8003] Barber and McGowan.

> "And I went out to see who it was, and there were McGowan and Barber and they introduced themselves. And I said, 'Come in, gentlemen.' And they came in and sat down and we began to talk and discussed football. One thing and then another. Religious possibly.
> "Q. Religion?
> "A. We discussed religion, too.
> "Q. What was the discussion about religion?
> "A. Well, different things, different religious sects and so on, very casual and broad discussion.
> "Q. How did it happen that they discussed religious sects?
>
> "A. Well, you know how it is.
> "Q. Were you and they of the same religious sect?
> "A. I don't know what religion they are.
> "Q. Didn't they tell you?
> "A. No, they didn't.

"Q. Did you, or did they ask you what your religion was?

"A. They did not, no. It was one of those informal discussions.

"Q. How long did it last?

"A. It wasn't very long; it lasted about 10 or 15 minutes and they went out to leave, and they couldn't start their car."

And then on Phillips and the other man: [8004]

"Q. Did you discuss this matter with them, other than what you have testified to here?

"A. No, we just had, it was a general conversation about GI housing and so on.

"What attorney did you talk to on that occasion?

"A. I evidently talked to Mr. Paisley.

"Q. Anyone else? A. Mr. Donohue.

"Q. Anyone else? A. Mr. Boyd.

"Q. Anyone else?

"A. I may have talked to other people in there.

"Q. Who?

"A. Mr. Maxwell, I guess. We talked about football and things of that sort.

"Q. The meeting that took place, that lasted 45 minutes in which these gentlemen dropped down, at that time did you discuss anything that you knew about this matter or your possible testimony in a proceeding of this kind?

"A. I don't think I did, no. He was looking 1 r a place to live, that is, he thought he might want to move down the Peninsula, and since I moved around quite a bit in the building trades, I was giving him the benefit of what I might know of the situation in that community, and we discussed mainly housing. [8005]

"Did they ask you anything about Harry Bridges?"

This is a later time, page 1328.

"A. I know they asked me about my—if I was ever a member of the Communist Party. I remember that.

"Q. Did they ask you anything about Harry Bridges?

"A. That is what I am trying to recall. There were so many things discussed it was a general conversation. And whether or not they asked me about Harry Bridges, I couldn't answer that.

"Q. Now, that was some time in April 1948, you think, is that right?

"A. Oh, no, it was, I would say, in May or June of 1948."

"Q. You had never discussed with any other government agent except, let us say, back in 1940 or '41 when you were up to that office, the matter of Harry Bridges, is that right?

"A. Well, at that particular time I can't recall of any discussion I had with any government agent prior to that. I do not recall it at this particular time, no.

"Q. (By Mr. Hallinan): Prior to the time, then, that Mr. Phillips left his card in May or June, 1948, no government agent had called upon you in any connection, is that right?

"A. In any connection? That is pretty broad. I don't know. You have got to explain what a government agent is. Maybe some post-office—— [8006]

"Q. I don't mean that. I mean some person who came down to question you either about Communist affiliations of your own or anything connected with Harry Bridges, Henry Schmidt or Bob Robertson.

"A. As I say, I can not recall any at this particular time, no."

Talking about his conversation with Mr. Donohue:

"Did it relate to any testimony that you were going to give here today?

"A. No, I don't think it did. No, because he doesn't know what testimony I am going to give, I don't think, or no one else does."

Or no one else does.

He says that Mr. Donohue called down to see him at his home just shortly before his appearance here. He said that Mr. Donohue only stayed about ten minutes, left his wife out in the car. This is the conversation that he had with him at that time, page 1334, if you want to check it:

"Q. Did it relate to any testimony that you were going to give here today?

"A. No, I don't think it did. No, because he doesn't know what testimony I am going to give, I don't think, or no one else does.

"Q. You said originally in your cross-examination you didn't have any memorandum of these events. That you have [8007] testified to, is that right?

"A. Do you mean if I had any memorandum on my person?

"Q. Yes.

"A. Why, certainly I haven't.

"Q. And you did not have any memorandum that you had read, isn't that right?

"A. If there is any memorandum I have read?

"Q. Yes.

"A. Why, no, there isn't any memorandum I have read."

So now let us remember this: that this man in the matters that he narrates on the trial here, is testifying from his memory; he hasn't read any memorandum; he hasn't read any memorandum or statement of what any other witness was testifying to; he comes up here uncoached, telling the truth as it appears to himself. He isn't relying upon any memorandum or any statement of anyone else, nor the memorandum prepared by anyone else. And then let us look at the meticulous memory that he has, and then we will look at it with respect to what his actual memory is as disclosed by the record when he is not testifying upon something that has obviously been given to him as a story.

Shall we take the recess?

The Court: We will take the afternoon recess. The same admonition, ladies and gentlemen, not to discuss the case.

(Recess.) [8008]

Mr. Hallinan: Now, I conceive this to be tedious, but I still insist, if you will bear with me, you will see the force of the thing because it struck me very forcibly while Schomaker was testifying and that is why I persisted in advancing this. Here we have this man of limited intellect, who in his youth was, by his own terms, a hobo, a bum, bumming around the country, hod-carrier, attendant and gardner at the Veterans' hospital, and then he comes up on the waterfront and works as a stevedore for a while, a man of obvious small intellectual capacity, and he is coddled, nursed and worked on by these people. He attends in a period of eight or nine years 4,000 meetings. He has all sorts of other affiliations, connections and so forth, conversations, private and public. And then there are instances that he gives now as remembering happened in these terms, without the use of any memorandum, without anyone telling him what to say or having gone over his testimony or reviewing it with him, after talking to all these agents about GI housing, football, religion and other matters of that kind, without Mr. Donohue or anyone except for his statement, and he never read his statement again, he goes back now some 16 years, and he gives this kind of a meeting with Harry Bridges. He goes out of the house and he professes to give almost the exact language. He is asked by the gentlemen to give the conversation, tell him what happened at this meeting. He says he is introduced to Bridges and Bridges is introduced to him. [8009]

> "Well, Bridges says, 'What's doing?' and I answered, 'We are out here to get an article for the Waterfront Worker and to discuss with you the problems on the waterfront,' which we did, and the upshot of the meeting was——"

And then an objection.

> "A. Well, Bridges said it was time something was done to revitalize the ILA.
> "Q. And did you make any response to that?
> "A. That is the reason we are here, is to write an article for the Waterfront Worker to do just that, and the upshot of it was that Mr. Bridges agreed to write an article. Bridges said he would write an article.
> "Q. Was that the end of the visit and the end of the conversation?
> "A. Well, we discussed other things. That is, the general situation on the waterfront.
> "Q. Can you recall now anything that Mr. Bridges may have said with respect to the situation on the waterfront or anything you may have said to him or Mr. Mann may have said to him?
> "A. Well, as I explained, we discussed the situation, and as Bridges said, we needed to take some action to revitalize the ILA.
> "Q. What did Mr. Bridges say with respect to the conditions on the waterfront? [8010]

> "A. Well, that the action needed to be taken to overcome the leadership of the people who were elected officials of the ILA at that time."

Now, not only the conversation starts out with Bridges saying, "What's doing?," and he explains to him, "We represent the waterfront workers and we came out here to get a statement from you, and Bridges stated that the action needed to be taken to overcome the leadership of the people who were elected officials of the ILA at that time."

> "Mr. Donohue: Mr. Schomaker, have you exhausted your recollection of the conversation that was had among you three persons at Mr. Bridges' home?
> "A. Why, no, there was more to it than that.
> "Q. Will you state in your best manner what you do recall of that conversation?
> "A. Well, when the objection was raised to the officers of the ILA that something needed to be done, and it was not quite clear just what was needed to be done, whether to continue to make the fight in the ILA or to divert it to the MWUI and to make a fight in the MWUI, which was an industrial union comprising mostly seamen, we kicked that around for quite a while.
> "Mr. Donohue: What was stated by any of the persons present, Mr. Schomaker?
> "A. I think it was Mann who suggested we should run an [8011] article on the basis of having the men pay up, those who were delinquent in their dues in the ILA, that we should stress > the fact that the members who were members of the ILA should pay up their dues and that those who were not members should join."

Now, if he is purporting to tell the jury that he recollects those conversations, those statements as having been made, then, of course, he is not telling the truth. He can not recollect them as having been made. And he tells the jury specifically it is his own recollection, and he is not telling them from any memorandum he has or any prepared statement that is given to ~~him~~, and here are trifling things he recalls as part of the first meeting he had with Harry Bridges: revitalizing the ILA, which, by the way, had been revitalized some six months or so before he even came on the waterfront, what position they should take with respect to the elected officers of the ILA, and that they should run an article urging the people to pay up their dues, and urging the other people who were not in it to join. He is that meticulous on this conversation that took place at that time.

And then going over to the conversation that he says took place at the time of this alleged signing up of Harry Bridges, and look how closely this is narrated, he puts in all the things that are supposed to constitute the facts leading up to the important matter that they had to have him say. He is asked about the conversation by Mr. Donohue. [8012]

> "A. Well, I remember the one there. The first thing Jones says is, 'How about buying coffee, Harry?' So a cup of coffee was only a nickel in those days, so he went and got three cups of coffee and we sat down."

Now, if that were recounted as having happened yesterday, there would be some sense and reasoning to tell it. Here he is telling you about something that happened 16 years ago. Jones says, "How about buying the coffee, Harry? So a cup of coffee was only a nickel in those days, so he went and got three cups of coffee and we sat down." So they brought the coffee back to the table and proceeded to discuss the situation on the 'front. That was what all stevedores did in those days—how lousy the conditions were and what things needed to be done in order to correct them. So in the course of the conversation Jones put the 64 dollar question to Mr. Bridges.

"Mr. Donohue: What was the question?

"A. Mr. Bridges,—the question was, 'When are you going to join the party, Harry?' since Bridges already had the application——"

Some objections.

"Q. What was Mr. Bridges' response to 'When are you going to join the party?'

"A. Well, Bridges acted kind of coy, you know, like he wanted to be coaxed a little bit.

"Q. What did he say, Mr. Schomaker?

"A. Well, his objection was, he said, 'What about the name?' and so Jones says, 'Well, that should be pretty easy to figure out, a name,' he says. 'Pick out any name, like T. J. Plant, for instance. That will be a good name.' So Bridges laughed and said, 'That would be a joke on Plant, wouldn't it, if I would get a party book in Plant's name and drop it in front of the Waterfront Employers down there and someone pick it up and let a little heat go on Plant for a change.'

"So he says, 'No, that wouldn't be a good name either.' So Jones says, 'The best thing to do it what is generally done, use a name that you are familiar with so you won't forget it, and I suggest that you use your mother's name.' So we discussed that, oh, on that basis for a while, then some guy called, came and called me outside for some reason, and I don't remember what, and I went out and stayed 15 or 20 minutes, and then as I was going back in, Jones was coming out.

"Q. Now, where did you and Mr. Jones go if you went together after you left this restaurant after you had this conversation?

"A. Well, we walked up Market Street.

"Q. And where did you go?

"A. To 37 Grove Street. He showed me an application of the Communist Party. This application blank was an orange [8014] card. It was about the same size card as the ordinary postcard, and on it was the insignia of the Communist Party of America. In the lefthand corner, I think, in that particular application it was, and it had some fine print which in a few sentences explained the aims of the Communist Party, and then it had the name of the applicant, the address, 'Are you a trade union member?,' the number of union workers employed in your plant, and then it had two blank spaces > for sponsors, and then at the end it had the name of the applicant."

Now, if it were not sufficiently ridiculous, if it did not sufficiently show invention that there should be detailed and given to this fellow a resume of the conversation, including the suggestion that somebody go and buy a cup of coffee, look at this for meticulousness of detail:

> "Mr. Donohue: Now, where were you when you first saw the application that you have just described?"

And he is asking him now about an application that he described that was issued 16 years ago.

> "A. We were walking along Market Street and we were just opposite the Lincoln Hotel."

If it happened yesterday, it would be sufficiently remarkable that a thing like that should be remembered. [8015]

> "Q. And when you say 'we,' you refer to yourself and B. B. Jones?
>
> "A. B. B. Jones and myself.
> "Q. Did you observe any handwriting on this application which you have described?
> "A. Oh, I did, because Jones showed it to me."

And then:

> "Oh, it was the handwriting of H. R. Bridges."
> "Q. Can you tell us to the best your recollection at the time when you and Mr. Jones reached Communist Party headquarters?

"A. We walked up Market Street, since we didn't have any money—short of dough in those days, so we walked up. I imagine it took us about 45 minutes. We arrived at headquarters at 11:00 o'clock."

Sixteen years ago, and, my friends, there is a little lie inherent in that, too, because you will remember that he told about around that time of the strike, he had a Ford automobile and he was running messages back to Darcy from the waterfront people. But here, "We were short of money, didn't have any money—short of dough in those days, so we walked up. And we arrived at headquarters at about 11:00 o'clock."

"Q. Who was present at headquarters when you got there?

"A. We saw different people there. George Morris was there. He was the editor of the Western Worker. There was [8016] a little guy there who sold literature. I don't recall his name. But we went upstairs. They had a mezzanine floor. We went up on there, this mezzanine floor, into the office of Sam Darcy, who was the district organizer of District 13."

"Q. (By Mr. Donohue): Now, you have stated that you saw B. B. Jones turn over the application you have testified concerning to Mr. Sam Darcy?

"A. I did, yes.

> "Q. How long did you remain at the Communist Party headquarters on this occasion, Mr. Schomaker?
> "A. Oh, 45 minutes to an hour."

Just try to think back two or three or four years to something that was of importance to yourself—not to some other person, but a matter of great importance to yourself, some momentous thing in your career; and try to remember the incidents connected with it, the day it happened, frequently the year it happened! See how closely you can come. And here this man comes in, and without any previous refreshment of his recollection from any memorandum or anything else, without having kept any note of it, testifying from memory, he can tell you the exact conversation that took place when one of numerous persons whom he says signed applications for him in the Communist Party signed their applications. He can tell the exact exchange of language that took place, who said what, the location on Market Street that [8017] they were when the man showed him the card, the people that they met when they went into Communist Party headquarters, a man named George Morris and a little fellow who sold literature there. The fact that they arrived at 11:00 o'clock and the fact that they left there in 45 minutes. That remarkable feat of memory as detailed to you now is for the purpose of establishing the necessary element, the one concomitant that they have to have in order to make this a case at all. They had to give that man some kind of a circumstantial story that should be told, or it wouldn't stand up at all.

Now, let's take him to the other incident and see if this doesn't transgress all the limitations of probability. The Grants Pass meeting. And as you can see here, my friends,—Now, after all these months of testimony about union meetings, the struggle, the controversies, the fights, the terrible things that took place, how inconsequential is the language and the conversation and each particular little episode that constitutes the mosaic of the entire picture. And yet, listen to this about the Grants Pass meeting:

> "Well, Walter Lambert told us to proceed to Grants Pass and to be parked in the courthouse square at 12:00 o'clock noon."

This is in the year 1935, 15 years ago!

> "Walter Lambert told us to go to Grants Pass and to be parked in the courthouse square at 12:00 o'clock noon, and [8018] somebody would come along and direct us where to go.
> "Q. Will you tell us if you recall about what time of day you left San Francisco?
> "A. We left about, it was around 9:30. It was about 9:30 in the morning.
> "Q. How did you proceed to Grants Pass?
> "A. Well, I met Bridges at 11th and Mission Streets. There is a service station there. I was picked up and we proceeded to drive in a Ford, a V-8 Ford. It was a coach model with only one door on each side, and we drove to Grants Pass, Oregon."

"Well, we pulled up into the courthouse square in Grants Pass and parked, and some fellow came along and said, just looked at us and said, 'Follow me.' And we followed him.

"Q. And where did you go?

"A. Well, we drove out of Grants Pass. It wasn't very far—two or three miles, I imagine, and we came to a—turned into a lane and parked the car at this farmhouse under a big tree, parked the car and stopped.

"Q. Did you meet any person or persons there?

"A. When we drove up there, there were two people underneath the tree."

"And so as we got out of the car, why, they walked over toward us."

A. Well, as I say, we pulled up to the lane and parked [8019] under this tree, and I got out on the right side and Mr. Bridges got out on the left and walked around the car. And Rappaport and Bert Nelson came toward us, and Rappaport, the first thing he said was, 'Well, you old wolf, I see you made it.' Every body laughed. I don't know, didn't know what he was supposed to make, but everybody laughed. And then Bridges said, 'Well, how's about the things in the Northwest?' 'Oh,' he says, 'everything is fine. Didn't we elect your district president of the ILA?' And he said, 'Yes,' he says, 'but the boys in Tacoma—,' —and Rappaport again says, 'yes, but the guys in Tacoma are not satisfied and they are making things kind of tough up here for us.' So then he says, 'Well, how about Bert here?,' he says, 'I don't think you have met Bert, one of our—he is section organizer of the waterfront in Seattle.' So he introduced Bert to myself and Bridges, and then we walked over to the—there was a chicken house there, and walked over into this chicken house, and we took a seat and began to discuss the business we came there for. [8020]

"Q. Can you relate to us . . . any portion of the discussion?

"A. Well, yes, the discussion was around the question of the termination of the waterfront agreement with the employers, and Rappaport particularly stressed the fact that the people in Tacoma, that is, the longshore group in Tacoma, were rather hostile to the way the election went. That was the first year that the rank and file had had a chance to vote for the district officials, and the result was that the old line officials were booted out, and the so-called progressive militants were put into office. And he says, 'I think they are going to cause considerable trouble when the agreements terminate, particularly among the seafaring crafts.' And we discussed the ways and means to bring the two, that is, the Northwest maritime groups, closer to the California and Southern California groups. And that was the extent of the discussion, was what needed to be done to do it. And the—well, that was the general text of the discussion along those lines."

"Q. About how long is your recollection of the duration of that meeting?

"A. Well, we left there in the early evening, I would say around four or 4:30."

Now, there is another example of close and meticulous recollection on a rather insignificant event that happened fifteen years ago. If this man had a memory like some sort of [8021] a machine that recorded everything down, it would be sufficiently astonishing that that record should be kept. But he isn't that sort of man at all. He hasn't a good memory. He has a very limited memory.

Now, he was interviewed by the FBI in 1940. Well, that is only ten years ago, five years closer to the position than we are now. He was taken to the FBI office and interviewed there, and he gave his statement, or he talked about that interview with Harry Bridges and the other people. Now, let's see how far he remembers the rest of the conversation with the FBI that took place in 1940, which would certainly be a graver and more serious episode in this man's life than a chance meeting where he went up to Grants Pass, to talk with two men, Nelson and Rappaport, about trivia connected with the union.

"You gave them a statement, then, didn't you? A. Gave who?

"Q. The FBI or the immigration agents or the Federal authorities investigating this matter.

"A. You mean O'Neil gave them a statement?"

The way he used to evade these things and put in these questions that would give him a chance to think out the answer to the preceding question!

"You.

"A. Certainly I did, absolutely.

"Q. When? [8022]

"A. I gave them two statements, I think.

"Q. When was the first one?

"A. The first one was, it was a shorter one I gave first.

"Q. It started a long time earlier than that. It was way back in 1940, wasn't it?

"A. Who, that I gave the statement——?

"Q. Yes. A. Not to my knowledge.

"Q. Weren't you interviewed by two agents named Cassidy and Lish in November, 1940?

"A. In November?

"Q. Yes.

"A. Well, I was interviewed by two fellows. It was 111 Sutter Street, but to my knowledge the statement was not taken. It was not visibly taken. Whether it was taken, now, is another question.

"Q. What place was that?

"A. I think it was 111 Sutter Street.

"Q. Yes, but I mean, what office, the office of what organization?

"A. Gee, you got me beat.

"Q. I beg your pardon?

"A. I say, that beats me. I don't recall seeing any notice on the door.

"Q. They questioned you then about your membership in the [8023] Communist Party, didn't they?

"A. Well, it was an extensive question, but what they meant or what they didn't mean—it is quite a while ago. I can't recall all the details.

"Q. And you told them you joined the Communist Party in 1934, didn't you?

"A. Gee, I don't recall. It has been quite a while. I don't remember what. I say, a statement wasn't taken, visibly taken. It might have been recorded, but there wasn't anything visible there.

"Q. Yes, but——

"A. I have been fooled a lot of times.

"Q. You told them you were signed a lot of times by George Morris, didn't you?

"A. As I say, I can't recall, but he is the guy who signed me up.

"Q. Didn't you tell them that?

"A. I may have and I may not have. I don't know.

"Q. Then they asked you if Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party and you told them you didn't know, isn't that right?

"A. That is very possible, yes.

"Q. No, isn't that so?

"A. I say, that is very possible.

"Q. Mr. Schomaker, anything is possible. It is so, isn't it? [8024]

"A. I wouldn't say so, no.

"Q. You wouldn't say so unless you were shown the document would you?

"A. That wouldn't prove anything, because those people didn't sit down and take a statement. If they took it, it was on the basis of a recording device, and I can't recall if I said yes or no. It is very possible that I said I don't know.

"Q. And then they gave you the statement, they put you under oath, didn't they?

"A. No, I can't recall being under any oath. I would be stupid if they put me under oath and not take any visible statement. I am not that stupid, I don't think. I am pretty dumb, but not that dumb."

Then he is asked about the recent—Now, here he has testified here in November and he is questioned as to a statement taken from him in May.

> "A. Well, one was taken in May and another was taken in—oh, three, four or six weeks ago."

Now he is, three, four to six weeks off in this matter. You remember that he couldn't recall in his conversations with Mr. Boyd if Mr. Kaiser was there or not.

"A. As I say, there was some other person there, and I can't recall if it was Kaiser or not.

"Q. Was it a man or a woman? [8025]

"A. It was a man, and as I say, I can't recall this third man. As I say, I don't remember the third person.

Which he had seen a few weeks ago.

"Q. What did he look like?

"A. Oh, an average guy. I can't——

"Q. Had you ever seen him before?

"A. I don't think I had, no.

"Q. How tall was he?

"A. Oh, he was the average size guy.

"Q. Did you learn his name?

"A. No, I didn't, no.

"Q. I see.

"A. Except later in the room when we got discussing this thing, why, each of them brought out a card and gave me their—I mean, showed me their card and their identification. But as I say, the third name slips my mind at this time.

"Q. You heard his name but you don't remember it now?

"A. That is possible, yes.

"Q. You did know it, though?

"A. Naturally. I knew that he was introduced, but I can't recall his name now."

He couldn't remember the name of the hotel that he was taken to, although he went there directly in a cab and he was in the hotel room for two and a half hours. [8026]

"Q. How long were you in that hotel?

> "A. Oh, I don't—it wasn't too long. It was, oh, I would say about two and a half hours."

Then he signed a statement.

> "Q. How many pages were in that document?
> "A. Well, there wasn't more than 15.
> "Q. Not more than 15?
> "A. I would say, well, maybe there was—maybe it was about, oh, about 22 I would say, to the——
> "Q. You don't know whether it was 15 or 22, is that right?
> "A. Well, it was between, around that number. Now, whether it was—I think it was around 22."

Now, these are things that happened in the same year that he is testifying in, not fifteen years before. He was questioned about a conversation that he had the night before. In other words, when he left, when he appeared here after having testified, he was asked the questions that he had, or, rather, the conversations that he had with these gentlemen the night before, and he couldn't remember what the conversation was. He said:

> "A. I would say we discussed the trial, yes, and the prosecution and the defense, in a general way."

But after trying to pick out for several pages what the conversation was, the most we could get is this kind of stuff:

> "Well, I said Hallinan is a smart guy, for > instance, and I think Mr. Donohue said, 'No, I think Mr. MacInnis is [8027] smarter.' "

And that is the way it went. And we couldn't get any statement as to what had happened or what had been said on that particular occasion.

> "A. Now, Kaiser and . . . went in and got the key in the room, and then I went up to the——
> "Q. And you went up to the room with him?
> "A. Mrs. Kaiser, myself and this agent—I can't recall his name now. It is rather an odd name.
> "Q. Had you met this agent before?
> "A. Yes, I have, yes.
> "Q. How many times?
> "A. Oh, I wouldn't—I would say six times, but for the sake of argument, to avoid any arguing about, I——"

I said:

> "Well, we are not arguing about it." [8028]

But here within the preceding week he can't recall the name of an agent who was up in the room with him, had dinner with him, whom he had met six times.

He is asked about his relationship; that he went up to the bathroom and washed his hands, and then the agent who went with him went to wash his hands, and then they went upstairs to the barroom, and when he got there his wife had gone to exchange her shoes at Macy's, and this agent accompanied her when she exchanged her shoes, and then he walked over to the Marines Memorial with the man whose name he can't remember. He went to dinner for an hour. And Larry, the man who was driving him back and forth and who lived at Half Moon Bay, he met him five or six times, and he can't remember his last name, although Larry, whoever he may have been, has been driving him back and forth to San Francisco within the last few months preceding his testimony. That is the man with the magic memory that remembers the details of all these other events!

On the week preceding this, the week preceding his testimony here—he has tesified that some fifteen years ago he met Harry Bridges at an exact location, at a precise time, eleven o'clock, drove in a particular kind of automobile, landed in town at a particular spot, saw two men under a tree, they parked the car, Bridges got out and walked around the back of the car. He is asked:

> "Q. Did somebody drive you up here on this preceding Monday? [8029]
> "A. Not on the preceding Monday; they drove up on Sunday.
> "Q. Who drove you up?
> "A. Well, I think it was Mr. Maxwell came down and picked me up."

Then here is the precise thing he said five minutes before:

> "Q. All right. Now, when prior to Sunday had you seen any of these people?
> "A. Well, I was here the preceding Friday.

"Q. Well, before then you were up here in San Francisco the preceding Friday?

"A. That's right.

"Q. All right. Now, this is on Friday after Thanksgiving or the preceding Friday?

"A. That was the Friday preceding the Monday that I came up here."

And on the very next page he is asked:

"Q. Now, this was on Friday night?

"A. That's right. Wait a minute now. That wasn't on Friday; that was on Thursday night. I said I came home on Thursday after working.

"Q. No. I am pretty sure you said that was Friday.

"A. Well, you can't put words in my mouth. After all.——

"Q. Well, now——

"A. Just coasting along there.

"Q. Well, which is it, Thursday or Friday? [8030]

"A. Well,——

"Q. I don't care which.

"A. Maybe you don't, but I do. So I came home on Thursday."

So he denies then, although it was quite fresh in everyone's recollection, I think, that he had said he had come up here on the preceding Friday; that the officers came down and picked him up on Friday and drove him up here.

"A. Well, I was here the preceding Friday.

"Q. Then you were up here in San Francisco the preceding Friday?

"A. That's right."

And on the very next page:

"Q. That was on Friday night?

"A. That's right. Wait a minute now. That wasn't on Friday, that was on Thursday night. I said I came home on Thursday after working.

"Q. No. I am pretty sure you said that was Friday.

"A. Well, you can't put words in my mouth."

He wants to put up an argument and a fight, he is so sure. His mind retains so lightly that he doesn't remember that just a few minutes before he said it was Friday night that he had come up, and he wanted to say that the effort to say that it was Friday night was a trick to put words in his mouth.

Then on the night or two before his testimony he went to dinner with Kaiser and McGowan. [8031]

"A. On that night I think we went out to dinner.

"Q. Where?

"A. It was a restaurant near there; I have never been there before.

"Q. Just you three?

"A. No, I think there was some other person joined the party, but I don't remember who it was now. I can't recall him.

"Q. A man or a woman? A. A man.

"Q. What was his name?

"A. I say it is pretty vague. I didn't pay much attention.

"Q. How long were you at dinner?

"A. Oh, about an hour and a half, I guess.

"Q. How did you address this man?

"A. I don't think I addressed him.

"Q. Were you introduced to him?

"A. Yes, I think I knew him previously, but I didn't pay any attention to him."

And here is an incident that happened between the time that he first got on the witness stand and the time he was asked these questions. He had been out in the evening with Kaiser and McGowan and another man whom he thinks he had met previously; they sat at dinner for an hour and a half, and he had known the man's name, but he couldn't remember what it was. [8032]

"Q. Would you give us the names of all the persons who appeared at your home from the time you moved in August, 1948, until your appearance before the grand jury?

"A. You mean all the people——

"Q. Agents or officials of the government who appeared at your home.

"A. I thought you meant anyone who ever visited us. You mean the government people who came down there? That is what you mean, isn't it?

"Q. At least that is what I asked.

"A. Heh-heh-heh. That was Mr. Jack McGowan and Mr. Bruce Barber, Mr. John Boyd——

"Mr. Paisley: Shouldn't he be required, your Honor, to ask if there were others. What is the use of sitting here and going over the same list? He has mentioned them a half dozen times.

"Mr. Hallinan: One thing, it helps test his memory. It gives a list of persons. If he repeats, there aren't so many that it will harm to repeat them again.

"The Witness: And Mr. Donohue, I think.

"Mr. Hallinan: Q. What is Mr. Donohue's first name?

"A. Gee, I really don't know.

"Q. Do you mean the attorney in court here now, or do you mean some official connected with the Immigration Department?

"A. He is the attorney who is sitting behind you, if my [8033] eyes don't deceive me.

"Q. That is Mr. F. Joseph Donohue. You do not know his first name?

"A. Mr. Donohue is all.

"Q. You did not know his name was F. Joseph? A. I did not, no, sir.

"Q: You didn't observe that in the papers or anything of that kind?

"A. There was no particular reason why I should."

Mr. Donohue has done him the courtesy and the kindness of forever immortalizing his home in Menlo Park. So that future generations will put a plaque up there, and his name was spread around in all the papers with glorious statements of the surprises he was going to spring on the defendants, and he had even designated Mr. Schomaker as his "Sunday punch." And yet Mr. Schomaker didn't even know what his first name was, or even if he had a first name. And he had even let himself forget that occasion to remember, the glorious memory when Mr. Donohue walked into the humble hod-carrier's hut, and so forth.

"Q. Was the grand jury session the first time you ever met Mr. Donohue?

"A. I think it was, yes."

And while that might some blow, Mr. Donohue, to your vanity, I trust that you have enough of it that you will survive. [8034]

The Court: We will take the afternoon adjournment. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any conditions, not to form or express an opinion until it is presented to you.

We will resume at 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to tomorrow, Friday, March 24, 1950, at 10:00 a.m.)

Friday, March 24, 1950, 10:00 o'Clock

The Clerk: The case of the United States v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The Court: Mr. Hallinan, am I correct in understanding that you will complete your argument during the course of the day?

Mr. Hallinan: I doubt it, Judge. I will complete it surely on Monday, but I am not sure that I can complete it today. I went over my notes and cut down a great deal to try to shorten it.

The Court: I was talking with Mr. Mitchell this morning in the light of our future cases, and he informed me of the likelihood that you would complete it today.

Mr. Hallinan: I don't think that I can do it. I will certainly complete it some time on Monday. I don't want to mislead the Court again; I have done it once to my chagrin, and I don't want to do it again. I will say that certainly on Monday I will have completed entirely.

Now, ladies and gentlemen, as I suggested before, if a witness takes the stand and tells a story he may or may not be telling the truth. The witness is up there and he tells his story. Then you are confronted with the problem of whether he is telling the truth. You search into what he has to say, search into the general nature of his testimony to discover [8035] whether it is true or not. But the only thing that you can get that will inform you is whether the witness has a willingness to lie under oath or not, under oath. Therefore a person can not trust him on the stand. Remembering all the time that if there is a reasonable doubt cast upon the testimony of that witness, his testimony, so far as the jury's duty is concerned, is destroyed, because as soon as it is subjected to a reasonable doubt, if you can't say whether you believe him or not or whether he is telling the truth or not, then that wit-authenticity or what is the credibility of a man like that?

And then he is asked this; he is asked, "It is possible that you might have had private conversations in which that was said?"

> "A. It is possible; I may have said it in conversations with individuals, yes, but I can't recall saying it in an open meeting, no. I say it is very possible in conversation, yes."

Now, if he were having a conversation, then there would be still a greater reason for assuming he was telling the truth. Suppose that we brought in people with whom he had had such a conversation that said, "Why, Schomaker told me in a private confidential conversation that Bridges was not a Communist and the people who have testified that he was were perjurers and liars." [8037] And then you say to Schomaker, "Did you say that to that man?", he would say, "Yes, I did."

> "What is you explanation?"
> "Well, I said it."

But the whole thing is that unless a thing is said under oath it hasn't any force.

He also states, in pursuing the conversation that he had with the FBI agents in 1940, not a thing of which he could remember:

> "Q. Weren't you interviewed by two agents named Cassidy and Lynch in November of 1940?"

And then he goes on in his usual evasion that it was on a particular subject, not remembering the man's name. "As I say, I can't recall." Et cetera, et cetera.

"Q. Then they asked you if Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party, and you told them you didn't know?

"A. That is very possible.

"Q. No; isn't it so?

"A. I said that is very possible."

So I say a person who has the disposition to tell stories when not under oath puts a doubt on what he says when he is under oath. [8038]

He testified to the conversation that took place at the Shaw house: I will presently explain to you why he included that. He included that because he was using what Mrs. Harris was going to say as one of the little anchors that he would fasten his own testimony onto and cover also as though that were some confirmation of his testimony instead of being the adoption of anything that came along that he could use. And as he was on the witness stand, it was first disclosed to him then, or he first had it brought to his recollection, that the Shaw meeting having occurred in the summer or in the fall of 1938, that in March in that year a warrant for Harry Bridges' deportation charging him with being a Communist or affiliated with them had been issued and was set for hearing for January, 1939. And then, it being pointed out how ridiculous it was that he should have gotten up in a meeting of 50 people, mostly strangers, half of whom were Communists, a great many of whom Schomaker didn't ness' testimony has no further weight in persuading the jury in so important a function as they have.

Schomaker, in addition to the matters that I have pointed out already, showed a willingness to lie either under oath or not under oath. As far as his statements he would make under oath, here is what he tells us:

> "Q. Now, did you ever say that anyone said that Harry Bridges is a Communist is a perjurer and a liar?
>
> "A. I couldn't—if you give me more of the speech and where it occurred—
> "Q. No, that one sentence. Didn't you use that once in addressing a meeting?
> "A. I wouldn't agree, I mean, admit that until I heard where it was."

In other words, now, he says that so far as he is concerned, he may have made that statement to other persons, not under oath [8036] of course, in a meeting, and now before he will admit that he made that statement, first he wants to be shown whether or not he is going to be confronted with a record proving that he didn't make that statement. Aside, whether he can be confronted with the record or not, isn't it important whether a person has discussed such matters outside of court? If he addressed meetings or meetings of friends of his, people with whom he was associated, fellow unionists, does that give him the right to get up and deceive them freely and say that people who testified that Bridges was a Communist were perjurers and liars? What is the *know, and publicly announce the very fact that would be essential to have him put out of the country, and also the fact that would, if he got on the stand in 1939 and denied that he had been a member of the Communist Party, bring about a conviction for perjury.

Schomaker, confronted with that, adopted toward it a flip attitude. He saw that he had been placed in a position, that he had now put himself in a position, in an unbelievable position, that couldn't be. Then he carried it along to a logical [8039] conclusion. I asked him questions like this:

> "Q. At the dinner at Mr. Shaw's, the party at Mr. Shaw's, didn't Mr. Bridges inform all the people present that if they would consult with Mr. Bonham, who had been investigating him for at least a year and a half, they could probably profit by handing out the information?"

He said—I said, "Now, isn't that what he said, Mr. Schomaker?

> "'A warrant is issued for my arrest, my deportation, coming on for trial in 1939. Bonham, the immigration inspector, has been chasing me now for years, dictographing me and trying to get something on me. You people can go down to Mr. Bonham, sell him this information that I am now handing over to you. A lot of people, a lot of strangers I don't know, but go on down, see Mr. Bonham, testify against me when the hearing comes up in January. You can make a profit of it.'"

I said, "Didn't he say that, Mr. Schomaker?"

Schomaker said:

"He may have, yes.

"Q. Are you sure he did say it?

"A. I am not absolutely positive, no.

"Q. But you think he did.

"A. I say it is very possible that he did make such a statement.

"Q. Your recollection now is that something was said that [8040] might have included that, is that right?

"A. It is very possible, yes."

In other words, that man has no more concern with whether he is under oath or not under oath. Now, those were false statements. He knew, of course, that no such statement could possibly have been made by Harry Bridges in the Shaw meeting, and he knew that the questions were being asked him in irony. And yet he says, "Yes, that might have been said, too. I don't recall, but it might have been said."

And then he comes to the point that caused so much concern and criticism, of a simple device for determining what his attitude is toward committing perjury. And believe me, my friends, I have never seen witnesses so protected by objections, hints from the prosecution, statements of the nature of the objections so that the witness is warned as to what his answer shall be in this case; and extracting from these people, these fellows, any sort of an admission or any sort of a clue was a very difficult task. If we had been given free rein with them, I don't think we would have had much difficulty at all in showing that he had no regard for an oath at all, that it meant nothing to him, that he testified falsely or he testified truthfully, just as his interest dictated.

I said:

> "Q. Now, did you ever testify under oath that you were not a member of the Communist Party? [8041]
> "A. Well, not that I can recall. I don't think I have ever been under oath many times before this.
> "Q. Have you ever testified under oath you were not a member of the Communist Party?"

He says:

> "Not that I can recall."

Now, a truthful man couldn't give that kind of an answer, because it would immediately occur to him, "Of course I didn't. I am a truthful man. If I were under oath and I were asked that question, I would have to say that I had been. So I couldn't have answered it that way," and he would say, "no." He would say, "I said no such thing. If you have a record down there that says, I didn't, that record is in error. There is something erroneous about it, or you are putting some construction on it. Of course I didn't testify to any such thing."

Let us ask this, my friends: Suppose Harry Bridges had been asked on the witness stand, "Now, Mr. Bridges, have you ever testified under oath that you were a member of the Communist Party?" and he said, "Not that I can recall." That would finish the case; that would finish it. In other words, that would mean that he was showing right then and there a willingness and an intention to lie when it suited his purposes, and it would also reveal that he probably had been a member of the Communist Party.

But here this fellow goes on on the same point. He is questioned about a proceeding in which he appeared in court some [8042] few years before, and which I suppose he wouldn't remember entirely what he had said:

> "Q. Do you remember being asked this question, 'Are you a member of the Communist Party? A. Who? Me? No.'"

I asked him:

> "Q. Did you remember answering that question?"

He says:

> "A. That is very possible, but I don't recall.
> "Q. Did you say it?
> "A. I don't recall saying it in that words, no.
> "Q. What words did you use?
> "A. Well, I don't know."

So he now gives us the information that his morality, the type of man he is, is this: that if he were asked if he were a member of the Communist Party, under oath, at the time that was indicated, it is very possible that he would have answered under oath that he was not a member of the Communist Party. And the most he can say is, "It is very possible I gave that answer; I don't recall."

So he comes squarely under the designation that Rathborne affixes to their witnesses, that you can't tell whether they are telling the truth or not. You can't tell whether they are telling the truth while they were members of the Communist Party, and you don't know if they are telling the truth after they get out. [8043]

Then we arrive at two more points that will finish the consideration of Schomaker. Schomaker was willing to say anything that he was asked to say. He was willing to accept any story and tell it, so far as he could remember. So every little point, every witness whose arm they could twist or who was willing to say some small matter of no importance in and of itself, that was taken up and embraced and enlarged and given to Schomaker, and then Schomaker would confirm that same statement.

For instance, in the matter of the application of Harry Bridges before Judge Foley, it appeared that Agnes Bridges had at one time, after there was a divorce between her and Harry Bridges, given an affidavit saying that Harry Bridges had a Communist ticket, although she had previously given an affidavit to the opposite effect and had testified to the opposite effect in court. But with the resentment that women sometimes feel, and men, I suppose, when they are divorced, she then wanted to do her ex-husband some harm. How can that be used to help Schomaker? Well, he says, "The day that Agnes Bridges fell out the window, Harry Bridges asked me to go up to his house and find his card before the snoopy reporters came around." In other words, he fitted that in. He fitted in anything—the Krolek meeting, the Hancock meeting; everything that he could do was fitted into Schomaker's testimony.

And then along came Mrs. Harris, and she gave some testimony [8044] that these gentlemen think is important for them, whereas the fact is it is very important for us. You know, Mr. Donohue's quotation of Shakespeare might be enlarged by that one from Henry VII:

> "Thrice armed is he that has his quarrel just.
> And he is naked though locked up in steel whose foul fraud is corrupt."

So anything that happens exposes the corruption and the falsity, and that is why we can hand over to them the information we have, let them canvass it and run it down. But they have to conceal everything from us. They bring in Mrs. Harris, who says she heard the statement by Harry Bridges in the Shaw house that "I am a member of the Communist Party," or "I am a Communist"— that is if. She was very much shocked and surprised, because she knew that the Government had been trying to prove that on Mr. Bridges, and she was just "flabbergasted" when he said the thing in public. Bridges says, "Of course I may have said on occasion, I undoubtedly have said things like 'If that is Communism, then I am a Communist; if getting people better wages and better hours and conditions is Communist principle, all right, we are all Communists, we all ought to be Communists.' " And he is talking at a meeting where there are some Communist functionaries being honored. A very ordinary sort of thing.

Mrs. Harris has this confused notion that he said, "Well, I am a Communist." She is very surprised he should say that. [8045]

Now, here is the destruction of that story, and here is the proof of what a fraud Schomaker is. Schomaker was a functionary of the Communist Party, and he attended that party. He would know that Harry Bridges was under deportation proceedings at that time. And if Mrs. Harris was flabbergasted, what would have been Mr. Schomaker's reaction? But Mr. Schomaker didn't remember that any such thing had ever been said. He didn't remember that that startling statement had been made.

Now, here is Mrs. Harris's testimony:

> "Yes, I asked, we were talking then from this story, we got talking about the Harry Bridges perjury investigation."

She has gone down to Schomaker's house, an old friend of his, and this will give you an illustration, too, of that fellow's treachery. She is an old friend of his, she goes down to his house and visits him. They have gone on trips, and so forth. Now, look what he did to that woman:

> "I asked, we were talking then from this story, we got to talking about the Harry Bridges investigation. And I asked John if he remembered that incident, and he said he did.

"Q. I see.

"A. I was the one that brought it to his attention.

"Q. What was said about the Harry Bridges investigation?

"A. Well, I just don't remember. Only just that I asked John if he remembered that time that we were up there and that Harry made the talk and made the appeal for membership, and [8046] he recalled it.

"Q. And did he say that he was already being interviewed by people connected with the Immigration Department concerning this Bridges matter? A. No, he did not.

"Q. Did you know an investigation was on at that time relating to Harry Bridges?

"A. No.

"Q. Well, you said—

"A. I think that he probably knew there was.

"Q. Did he say he knew there was?

"A. No, he did not.

"Q. Well, did he tell you he had been speaking with immigration officers at that time?

"A. No, he did not.

"Q. Wasn't it he that suggested this party? Was it you that suggested it? Is that right?

"A. That's right, yes.

"Q. It wasn't Roza Schomaker?

"A. No, it was I that told him to remember it."

Page 1940, line 6.

It was I that told him to remember it.

"Q. Now, as a matter of fact, are you sure it was you that suggested the Shaw party to John Schomaker, or didn't he suggest it to you, which? [8047]

"A. It was I that recalled it to John's memory.

"Q. And up to that time he said he hadn't remembered it, is that correct?

"A. He didn't say anything. We didn't even discuss it until the time when I asked him if he remembered that incident and he said, 'Oh, yes.'

And then he ran to see his friends of the Immigration Service, and he tipped them off that that poor old woman had some sort of a confused notion that Harry Bridges had acknowledged in a public meeting that he was a Communist, and he didn't tell her that he was working with the Immigration Department. And when she had that conversation with him, she thought she was talking to a friend, who wasn't prepared to betray her. And they went up and caught her and took her and forced her to say this thing. How? Her husband is a naturalized alien. She says that while she was not a member of the Communist Party, and her husband was not a member of the Communist Party, both of them had often been accused of being members of the Communist Party. So that fellow took the poor old woman and heard the garbled sort of notion she had that Harry

Bridges had said something like that at Shaw's party, which he hadn't even remembered, and he turned the immigration authorities onto her and he embraced and made a part of his perjury the story that he knew they would compel her to tell. And that is the explanation of the Harris incident. That is how much force and validity it gives to their story and how much it supports Mr. Schomaker. [8048]

There is only one thing that has puzzled me about Schomaker's testimony. Why didn't he say that he saw Harry Bridges sign that application card? Why should he have that sort of bizarre incident that he was in the building with him drinking coffee, then somebody appeared and he went out, and he didn't see the card until B. B. Jones showed it to him on Market Street? Why didn't he say that? Obviously the man has no concern for the truth; he doesn't care anything about it. I will tell you what it is. This is my guess; you can make your own. He has testified somewhere in answer to a direct question:

> "Have you ever seen Harry Bridges sign an application card?
> "No, sir, I never did."

He probably did it before the grand jury. Didn't he? Can we have his testimony before the grand jury?

You mark my words, probably before the grand jury or some place under oath, Schomaker has testified that he didn't see Harry Bridges sign an application card, and what further proof they thought they were going to get about that came to naught, and afterwards they had to have an application card, so he had to have that done. And then, as he undoubtedly has testified somewhere, things were going to pop in the future to destroy them, that they would now have him change that. He had to invent that rather bizarre story of somebody coming in and he walking out and then B. B. Jones showing him the document.

. Have you that letter that Roza Schomaker wrote to B. B. [8049] Jones? It is on yellow paper.

Whether he thought that he could handle Jones, or that he could use him, or that he could keep him from testifying, or whether they thought we wouldn't want to call B. B. Jones because he had been a member of the Communist Party, he took the chance. He had to name somebody who showed it to him, and he took the chance of saying it was B. B. Jones. When the letter comes up, I will read it to you, but as I remember the contents of the letter, it was something like this: It is a letter addressed by Mrs. Schomaker, Roza Schomaker:

"Dear Bruce:"——

asks him to come down and it says,

"You and I have many things to talk about."

And then it's signed, "As ever; Roza."

Now, there is a certain intimacy in that letter. There is a certain significance about it. It isn't a letter: "Why don't you come down and have dinner with John and me?" and so forth. There is a certain hint or suggestion in it, either that B. B.

Jones at one time had some romantic interest in Roza Schomaker either before or after she was married, that she felt that she exercised some power or control over him It has a certain teasing quality. And then the phrase, "As ever, Roza." What does that mean? What is the significance of that? That letter is a well designed letter to induce a susceptible person to assume that there is some relationship upon which she can count [8050] on existing in the person that wrote that letter.

"Menlo Park.

"Hello, Ben: How have you been?"

Now here is a letter written after Schomaker has testified.

> "Since you have lots of time on your hands, how about dropping down? There is plenty we could talk about. As ever, Roza."

Now, that comes pretty close to being the letter of a person who has had a previous romantic relation with a person. I don't know Roza Schomaker and I don't want to impugn the honor of people I don't know. There is something against her she is married to John Schomaker. But when I saw that letter, I thought Bruce, or Ben, or whatever your name is, you just missed a badger game. If you had gone down to talk about the plenty that you and Roza had to talk about, Mr. Schomaker and Mr. Kaiser would probably have come striding from behind the curtains and have confronted you in flagrante delicto and then have twisted Mr. Jones' arm a bit. It may not be so. I may be so suspicious, a thing that I so lament has crept upon me, and when I think of my juvenile innocence, how I used to accept things on faith, it is really a shocking thing to see how far I have gone down. But even in that instance I have in my mind's eye a picture just of talking to a child.

I have another little matter that I think will demonstrate that Mr. John Schomaker was building up here a prepared story. [8051] He isn't man of high intellectuality. Don't think when I say he had been a hobo, a bum or a hod-carrier, that I think a hobo, a bum or a hod-carrier are people who are any worse than lawyers or bankers or judges or anyone else. But a person ordinarily would not entrust his safety so readily to a person of that type and disposition, and Harry Bridges would scarcely entrust his safety to a man who had followed the avocations or lack of avocations that Mr. Schomaker had.

Mr. Mr. Schomaker's memory for recent events, even those occurring fifteen minutes before, let alone the night before, is so vague and uncertain that I also have another picture in my mind. And that is William Kaiser planted in his twin bed alongside of John Schomaker, after propping John up with a pillow and getting his milk and crackers ready, putting some names on the wall:

"All right, now, John, remember T. J. Van Ermine, R. K. Pyle"—in other words, people who perished like the flowers of a decade ago.

"Now close your eyes. T. J. Van Ermine."

"T. J. Van Ermine."

"Now look again."

But the peculiar thing that causes Mr. Kaiser to overdo everything, to spoil, the peculiar perversity that causes Mr. Kaiser to overdo everything, to spoil everything is nowhere illustrated so vividly as in the strange coincidence which exists [8052] between Mr. Schomaker's recollection of persons present at four or five of these 4,000 meetings he has attended in that time and the recollection of other people whose stories he has embraced.

And then here is a thing——

Mr. Donohue: May I ask Your Honor: Is this document in evidence?

Mr. Hallinan: These are just charts like the 1936 one. All they do is contain the ten or twelve items and the events just as though I would have put them down on the blackboard. I will show you what they are. They just show the coincidence between the persons identified by one witness and the persons identified by another.

Mr. Donohue: They have never been marked for identification?

Mr. Hallinan: We will mark them for identification.

Mr. Donohue: They are not in evidence?

Mr. Hallinan: There is no reason they shouldn't be used. I tried to get the chart we used here to illustrate the Stockton episode in evidence. It was objected to, but it was ruled that it could be used as a reference——

The Court: I will say this, gentlemen: In aid of facilitating the argument, subject to check as to the verity of the information contained thereon, you may use the same in your argument. [8053]

Mr. Hallinan: Then here is the amazing part of it: With that same sort of infantile idea as that which motivates his pupil, Mr. Kaiser would always make certain little changes and alterations in the record of the persons, but always in such a way as to make one say, "Well, here is such an obvious attempt to escape the idea that they are telling a prepared story."

The first of the matters is the Santa Clara prune orchard. Just remember that Schomaker was testifying from recollection, without having any memoranda at any time to refresh his recollection and without having gone any memoranda or testimony of any other witness. The Santa Clara prune orchard!

> "Schomaker—the time was June, 1934.
> "Schrimpf: We won't say 1934; we will say within a month prior to the July strike of 1934."

That is a little transition that shows that they are both telling the same story.

> "Schomaker: Time, June 1934.
> "Schrimpf: Time within a month prior to the July strike in 1934, hence June, 1934."

Sixteen years ago. They are accurate within the month when they went down to the prune orchard, and by happy coincidence of recollection, they both place it in exactly the same month.

Present:

> "Schomaker: Walter Lambert.

"Schrimpf: Walter Lambert. [8054]
"Schomaker: Henry Schmidt.
"Schrimpf: Henry Schmidt.
"Schomaker: Harry Bridges.
"Schrimpf: Harry Bridges.
"Schomaker: Myself.
"Scrimpf: Schomaker.
"Schomaker: Henry Schrimpf.
"Henry Schrimpf: Myself."

And now we come to the real genius that is displayed in these things:

"Schomaker: Elmer Wheeler.
"Schrimpf: An unknown man"—not that he is Wheeler, but there is a man there whom he doesn't know.
"Schomaker: Earl Browder.
"Schrimpf: Earl Browder.
"Schomaker: Sam Darcy.
"Schrimpf: Sam Darcy.
"Schomaker: Minnie Carson.
"Scrimpf: Unknown woman.
"Schomaker: One other.
"Schrimpf: Norma Perry."

Now, if there isn't a coincidence of memory and if there isn't a coincidence of recollection and memory and if there isn't an obvious gilding up of the lily—the substitution of "unknown man" and "one other" for the persons that the other witness or [8055] the confederate knows is so obvious a story as to suggest and conclude immediately that the entire thing is an invention and a silly, infantile, childish invention.

Now, let us take the next one.

First meeting to discipline Perry:

Schomaker: The time is December, 1934, or January, 1935—fifteen years ago!

Schrimpf: The time is six weeks after the general strike which was in May, 1934.

Both of them: It was a Sunday morning.

Schomaker: It was a Sunday morning at 9:00 o'clock, that is when we had the meeting fifteen years ago.

Present:

Schomaker: Darcy.
Schrimpf: Darcy.
Schomaker: Perry.
Schrimpf: Perry.
Schomaker: Schomaker.
Schrimpf: Schomaker.
Schomaker: Bridges.
Schrimpf: Bridges.
Schomaker: Schmidt.
Schrimpf: Schmidt.
Schomaker: Mann.
Schrimpf: Mann. [8056]

Exactly and precisely the names of the persons and locations—fifteen years ago!

Place:

Schomaker: Mann's house on Germania Street.

Schrimpf: Mann's house.

Now, what sort of children did Mr. Kaiser think he was going to deal with when this matter came on before a jury? What did he think of the intelligence and the intellectual integrity of the jury that was to listen to that? All right; the San Diego apartment house. This is better. We are really getting a little more artistic. You see, we started in with Schomaker and Schrimpf, but by the time we get up to Hancock, there are a little more refinements, it isn't quite as crude a job. It is like the persons who will succeed them, you know will be better than they.

Here we have the San Diego apartment house, all without any notes or memoranda or other things to refresh their recollection:

"Schomaker: It was in September, 1935."

Hancock: It was the late part of the convention of 1935.

The time, acording to Hancock, was 4:00 or 5:00 o'clock.

Who was present?

Schomaker: Schomaker.

Hancock: Schomaker.

Schomaker: Bridges. [8057]

Hancock: Bridges.

Schomaker: Schmidt.

Hancock: Schmidt.

Schomaker: Jack Johnstone.

Hancock: Jack Johnstone.

Schomaker: Stanley Hancock.

Hancock: Stanley Hancock.

Schomaker: Emil Ratin.

Hancock: Rabin.

Now they change the "t" to a "b." That would deceive anybody; anybody would know it was truthful; that they were talking from memory without any notes.

Here is the beautiful part:

> Schomaker: Sailors named Harry McNeill and J. C. Clark.
> Hancock: Some members of the SUP—Sailors Union of the Pacific. He has got the sailors, too.

Then we have a little exchange.

> Schomaker: Walter Lambert.
> Hancock: Walter Lambert.

Schomaker puts in William Schneidermann. Hancock omits him.

Hancock says there were eight or ten people. Schomaker says "one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten." So as this man says one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, the sailors must be either two or three—eight or ten people. [8058] And that is another part of the magic memory of John Schomaker.

Now, how does he get along with the great Ross? Not badly. And here we have another little thing, and this is a vaudeville touch.

Schomaker, without any memoranda, says the time was the early fall of 1935. Ross won't go that far; he isn't going to be committed to any such definite date; it was in the fall of 1935, but whether it was the early part, the middle or the latter part, he isn't going to say. But big John and his magic memory supplies that it was the early fall of 1935.

Who was present?

Schomaker: Bill Schneidermann.
Ross: Bill Schneidermann.
Schomaker: John Schomaker.
Ross: John Schomaker.
Schomaker: Lawrence Ross.
Ross: Lawrence Ross.
Schomaker: Harry Bridges.
Ross: Harry Bridges.
Schomaker: Henry Schmidt.
Ross: Henry Schmidt.

And then here comes the change.

Schomaker: Bob Hanoff.
Ross: Elmer Hanoff. [8059]
Schomaker: Betty Gannett.

Ross omits Betty Gannett, but he supplies Oleta O'Connor and Elaine Black.

Now, the inquisitive mind of scientific nature will construct from this another conclusion that is only incidental. Betty Gannett, whom I have never seen, I take to be a very large woman; and Oleta O'Connor and Elaine Black, whom I have never seen, I take to be very small. Therefore in the principle of abstract justice that illuminates these people, if Schomaker is going to put in a large woman and Ross is going to omit her, he should put two small ones in her place, so that the principles of universal justice is once more satisfied.

And then we come to the Jack Shaw party which

Schomaker and Irene Harris attended. Again no notes, no memoranda, no refreshing of recollection by reading other persons' memoranda or testimony.

When did it happen?

Schomaker: The time was in the early fall of 1938.

Irene Harris: Between August and December of 1938.

That is a pretty fair coincidence; the early fall would be between August and December.

Number of persons present:

Schomaker: 30 to 40.

Harris: 30 to 35.

Who was present? [8060]

Schomaker: Jack Shaw.

Irene Harris: Jack Shaw.

Schomaker: John Schomaker.

Harris: John Schomaker.

Schomaker: Slim Malin.

Harris: Slim Malin.

Schomaker: Mrs. Malin.

Harris: Mrs. Malin.

Schomaker: Charles Waugerman.

Harris: Mr. Waugerman.

Schomaker: May Waugerman.

Harris: Mrs. Waugerman.

Schomaker: Bill Schneidermann.

Harris: Mr. Schneidermann. [8061]

And then, because we have everything so well established, let's not be too close. We will throw in a couple of alternates. So Schomaker has Henry Schmidt and Walter Lambert, and Mrs. Harris says Peter Brown, Archie Brown and Mrs. Archie Brown. There is the only transition.

Now, if trying to put that over on people isn't an insult to their intellect, I don't know how far one has to go to insult the intelligence of jurors. To have that man get up there and give all this talk, under oath, as being without previous refreshment by any memoranda or testimony, without refreshing his recollection by other people's testimony—he can remember all those incidents and all those people! Lists were prepared and given to Hancock, Ross, Mrs. Harris, Krolek. They were told that those are the people that they are to name at these particular places. And then Schomaker memorized off those lists, with the little modifications that were suggested to give them a false appearance of truth, and then came up here and gave a prepared statement.

It would be just as though Kaiser, not under oath, and maliciously determining to get a conviction in this case at any cost, should be able to transfer some sort of astral body of himself onto the witness stand and say through its mouth the things that he wanted to say.

To make a resume of it, then, John Schomaker cannot be believed for any one of ten different reasons. And if one of [8062] them is sufficient to cast a reasonable doubt upon his credulity as a witness, his whole testimony goes, and their entire case goes, even if he hadn't been contradicted by

B. B. Jones, and even if he hadn't been contradicted by Harry Bridges.

First, here is a working man, a man of humble condition, a man of limited intellect, who went into the labor movement and thought that he was going to accomplish things beyond his capacity. Then frustrated, disgusted, vexed, he goes out of it. And as it is a frailty of human nature to not ascribe one's failures to oneself, he had to invent the lack of appreciation of his qualities and his talents by the men who had gone up beside him: Harry Bridges, Schmidt, Robertson and the others. They went up to office in these unions, while he could find no satisfaction but in getting out of them entirely. So he is a frustrated, disappointed, vexed man. And with that invention of a grievance against the people who didn't appreciate him, he is coddled, carried along by persons high in office—Boyd, a fairly high man in the United States Department of Immigration. He and his wife and children are introduced to social activities in company that they would not have experienced without this. According to the list that he gave, here are the people who talked to him, interviewed him, chauffeured him, baby-sat for him, shopped for his wife, and so forth. First, Boyd and an unknown man; McGowan, Barber, Kaiser, another [8063] unknown man, different from the first, Phillips, then a third unknown man; Maxwell, Woolley, Mrs. Woolley, Mr. Gallagher, Mrs. Gallagher, an agent with an odd name, Mrs. McGowan, Larry, Mr. Paisley, Mr. Donohue, Mrs. Donohue. Nineteen people. Nineteen people are used to seduce the allegiance of John Schomaker to this dark cause.

The second point of the resumé is that his story is inherently incredible, that a man who had had the simple occupations that he had appeared on the waterfront in 1933 could, within a month after his appearance, go up to Harry Bridges, an alien who by Schomaker's own admission at that time was under fear that if he joined the Communist Party he would be deported, and that very point was discussed at the time of the singing of the application, and he signs an application and hands it over to that man to take out and do with it as he will! And without having any reason for knowing whether the man is a Government agent, spy for the Industrial Association, or what he may be.

The third point is, he has shown his unreliability by testifying falsely under oath. He said that he came to the waterfront in October, 1933, although they had his record from the hospital—and they had gone over it, don't worry—showing that he came to the waterfront in November of 1933. He pushed it back a month so as to make it more credible that this occasion happened with Harry Bridges, that that took place. [8064] He pushes it back a month, and that is a lie under oath. Then he says that he had been, prior to this time, a member of the Hod Carriers Union in Santa Barbara, and we run into another one of those small and inexplicable facts that again come forward to assist the person who is telling the truth. By mere misfortune on his part, the very secretary who had been secretary of that union twenty-five years ago, when he was down there, is still alive, still the secretary, and still has his records, and has been so interested in the thing that he would have a recollection of the people who were members of his union—there being only a few over the period of years; and that he can come up and contradict him and show that he never was a member of the Hod Carriers Union. And they didn't bring Schomaker in to explain what that discrepancy was.

He lies about the formation of the Albion Hall group and the activation of the ILA. He says that he went to see Harry Bridges with messages from Sam Darcy when he first went down there, and the reactivating of the ILA and the forming of the Albion Hall group, and the thing that has destroyed this whole case, and what a fine fix we would be in if we didn't have them, were the records that have been preserved in the ordinary course of business by the unions. Schomaker, Schrimpf and Kaiser didn't stop to figure out that those records might be in existence, and they would have to be careful of what they said. So they got extremely reckless and committed themselves too far [8065] before they were contradicted by them.

The ILA had been reactivated, a strike had been had, the strike won and the ILA recognized by the Matson Company back in June of 1933, four or five months before Schomaker appeared on the scene. The Albion Hall group; the records were written out in longhand of the union, and they were handed over to these gentlemen subject to their inspection, showing that this Albion Hall group had been created even prior to that time.

He shows, as the fourth item, a willingness to lie on the very subject that he has discussed here, when he says that he may have said to persons in private conversations that anyone who said that Harry Bridges was a Communist was a liar and a perjurer; also that he may have said that to the immigration authorities, or the FBI in 1940.

He shows a willingness to lie under oath when he says in the hearing down before the police court that he cannot remember whether he testified falsely under oath that he was not a member of the Communist Party and says it is very possible, "I very well may have."

Why isn't he subject to the same suspicion with which Rathborne has vested all of the ex-Communists who have testified here? Isn't he also under the designation that they have put upon their own witnesses and the sworn proof that they have adduced, that they are trained liars and perjurers; who have had it ingrafted into their minds that it is perfectly all [8066] right to testify falsely under oath when it suits the purpose of the Communist Party, and who would then, in accordance with the ordinary dictates of human nature, think it perfectly proper to testify falsely under oath when their own interests were involved.

We have illustrated here the sixth episode, the sixth point—how he has told a prepared story given to him to tell on the pretense that he was telling it from memory without any previous refreshment. He has been shown to be the sort of man that he actually is by the episode of the unfortunate Irene Harris; that without disclosing to her that he was working with the immigration authorities to get rid of Harry Bridges, he engaged her, who was his friend and an intimate of his family, of old time, who had gone on trips with him, in a conversation about Harry Bridges—didn't disclose that he was a member or that he was working with the Government, heard her tell this incident in which she had been flabbergasted at the equivocal statement of Harry Bridges at a public meeting which she interpreted as being an admission that he was a Communist. He took it and embraced it himself and testified to it, and without her knowing it, put the officers on to her and told them where they could get another victim that they could work into a tool for the purposes of supporting this story.

He was undoubtedly trying to work some sort of a badger game on B. B. Jones, with the connivance of his wife. [8067]

And, tenth, he sat on that witness stand, and we tried by every means to extricate from him some statement as to the compensation he is receiving for his work here. And he evaded and he falsified and he said there was no definite arrangement and he had gotten, I think it was, a couple of hundred dollars that it may have been, or it may have been $100. And they sat here, knowing precisely and exactly what he had been paid, and they wouldn't tell us. They objected and they told us, "Get subpoenas out," and we knew what we could do toward finding out things that should be learned. And they hid and concealed what that man was getting, and the reason they hid and concealed it was this: the shock of learning what he was getting would be worse than any inference which the jury might draw from their refusal to disclose it. If they were paying Rathborne $5,000 for saying that he saw Harry Bridges at meetings at which Communists were present and never saying or claiming that he had any information that Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party, but only showing certain circumstances from which a jury could infer, if they so desired, that fact, how much are they paying John Schomaker to come up here and invent and put on the witness stand the necessary concomitant of their case without which they don't have any case—the three essential elements that they themselves have introduced here as requisite to forming membership in the Communist Party? How much did Schomaker wheedle out of them? What persuasions [8068] were exercised by the two schemers sitting across the table and bargaining back and forth for the price of his perjury? $10,000? $15,000? Take a guess. We won't find out until after this case is over, when there may be some kind of a congressional investigation as to just how much money was spent and why the immigration officials, Boyd and Barber, had to deceive and defraud the Treasury of the United States in order to get the payments made to Rathborne. Then for the first time we will find out how much John Schomaker is getting for his employment.

The Court: We will take the morning recess; the same admonition, ladies and gentlemen, not to discuss the case.

(Recess.) [8069]

Mr. Hallinan: Now, not to press the rest of the witnesses produced by the prosecution to an unreasonable extent, as far as Schrimpf is concerned, as soon as you find out that there is hostility between a defendant and a witness, the witness' testimony is suspect. Of course, the difficulty with ~~this~~ case is that they dig up everybody that they can over years of diligent application, enemies of Bridges, persons who are subject to a bribe, persons who have some ax to grind, tools of Phil Murray, Walter Reuther or some political or union enemy of Harry Bridges and put them on. Each one is disclosed in turn to be of no weight and no validity. But, as I say, they think the whole constitutes more than the sum of its parts, and by putting on one person after another who has no credibility at all, they finally build up some kind of gold brick that is credible.

Schrimpf, with the malice he has had and displayed toward Bridges for years, should be enough to invalidate him immediately. The circumstance that he, being an acknowledged member of the Communist Party, was admitted to citizenship without question although that fact was disclosed in 1943, at a time more dangerous, I think, than now, under the rules that they are establishing, no question made of him, the fact that in the same year he attains citizenship he becomes a walking boss at a salary of $600 a month, throws suspicion upon everything he has to say. And as far as his attitude toward Harry Bridges is concerned, while it is displayed in numerous instances, the [8070] outstanding one would be that in which he discussed the document that he signed, the paper that he sent around to criticize Harry Bridges and here briefly, reading from that:

> "Q. Now, I will ask you the question, when you said, 'lousy, slimy politicians,' did you mean Harry Bridges?
> "A. Not necessarily.
> "Q. Whom did you mean?
> "A. We have many officials.
> "Q. You have no idea whom you meant?
> "A. Oh, yes.
> "Q. Who?
> "A. Well, some of the officials."

Now, "lousy, slimy politicians" he publishes that in a newspaper and states publicly at a convention of the ILA.

> "Q. Could you tell me whom you mean by officers?
> "A. Well, in many ways I was attacked by Bridges, and I will make this for the record, that at one of our regular meetings in San Francisco he told the membership I was getting $10,000 a year from the shipowners.
> "Q. You had resentment against Harry

Bridges when he made that charge against you?

"A. On policy.

"Q. That was on policy only?

"A. That is right, strictly policy."

But strictly on policy, the body of Pete Canto was dug up [8071] enclosed in concrete from the marshes of New Jersey.

"Q. Well, now, may we have your answer to the question: When you use the phrase, 'lousy, slimy politician' part of that group?

"A. It applied to the politicians who went up and down the Coast, flying all over the country, and it could have applied to Harry Bridges. I mean it could have applied to Harry Bridges on some of those occasions.

"Q. You know you meant to imply Harry Bridges' name in that assertion, don't you?

"A. Yes, it could have been applied to Harry Bridges.

"Q. Let me see if I follow your remaining reasoning exactly, Mr. Schrimpf: You say when on July 29, 1937, you used the phrase, 'lousy, slimy politicians,' you could well have been referring to Harry Bridges because he had arisen on the floor and accused you of taking $10,000 from the employers?

"A. Well, I will say again, it is already in the record, he could have. He could have been the one referred to. He could have been one of those referred to in ~~the~~ statement.

"Q. But a moment ago, Mr. Schrimpf, you told us that Harry Bridges accused you of taking $10,000 from the employers at some meeting after the 1937 convention. So what matter did you have in mind on July 29, 1937, when you referred to him as a lousy, slimy politician? [8072]

"A. Well, there were other happenings.

"Q. Such as what?

"A. Well, there were many instances which happened on the floor.

"Q. Can you tell us one or two?

"A. Yes, I can state another instance. At one time, and this was before the convention, it had reference to a man named Deal, whose name was brought in here, the Deal incident. Incidentally, he carried on strike-breaking after we were back to work, even to the extent of hiring gunmen to break the bargemen's strike in 1935. The bargemen still stayed on strike and he was considered by our union not very popular, a long ways from the type of man to be taken in or made a vice president. He was made a vice president by our international officers, and I criticized this policy and the rebuke was by Bridges: 'Well, he isn't as bad as the rats,' or 'no worse than the rats.' I don't know just the exact language—'that Schrimpf runs around with,' and such stuff as that."

When he went up to the convention in 1934 he had been already accused by Bridges of taking a $10,000 bribe for some purpose. Let us say it is not true, but at any rate he was accused of taking it.

And he went up there and raged against Bridges to the extent that he gets up on the floor and characterizes him as a lousy, stinking politician and so forth, knowing full well [8073] that everybody there at least knows whom he is referring to, and he publishes documents of that kind. And he has been accused, as I say, by Bridges of taking a $10,000 bribe and running around with rats. Isn't it strange that he should have been one of the two men who were taken, or, as he says, taken, he and Schomaker, to the Naturalization Department to have a talk with Bonham at that time, and isn't it inferentially to be believed that he and Schomaker went there purposely to disclose to Bonham anything of value which they might know? And isn't it also to be inferred that they did not have anything of value to tell because Harry Bridges was tried a year and a half afterwards, and here was man so bitter and so hateful of him, whom he could have justified himself by saying, "Well, he accused me of misdeeds and said things about me." And Schrimpf doesn't testify against Bridges in 1939 as to these meetings that he says Bridges was present at, and he doesn't testify in 1941 either. And it is only after he has received something, at least his citizenship, though he is an admitted Communist, and his citizenship, according to the forms introduced here, is to be denied to people who are Communists within ten years last past, or at least who were members of an organization which advocated the overthrow of the government by force and violence, and still he is admitted.

Now, we tried to go into that question, and what is the result? They sedulously avoided asking him anything about it so [8074] as to bar us.

Mr. MacInnis says on cross-examination: "You obtained your citizenship during the war when citizenship was rather difficult to obtain?

> "Mr. Paisley: Just a minute, Your Honor. That is not within the scope of the direct examination.
> "The Court: Sustained.
> "Mr. MacInnis: Pardon me, Your Honor. He mentioned on direct examination he was naturalized in the year 1934.
> "Mr. Paisley: I recollect no such testimony as that.
> "Mr. MacInnis: I will be glad to find it, Your Honor.
> "Mr. Paisley: I did not ask him about his naturalization."

In other words, they avoided that so as to prevent the defense from inquiring into whether there was any consideration for his testimony here based upon the naturalization, and that was submitted to the Court, a very narrow, a very unfair objection, that the mere fact that we could not inquire into that important matter was that he avoided asking it, carefully avoided asking on direct examination.

Mr. MacInnis again asked about his naturalization.

> "Q. You became a citizen, Mr. Schrimpf, in what month of 1943?
> "A. I believe it was May.

"Mr. Paisley: I think that is immaterial. That is not cross-examination of anything brought out on direct. [8075]

"Mr. MacInnis: It is preliminary.

"Mr. Paisley: I did not examine him as to when he became a citizen. It doesn't seem to me that it tends to impeach him or discredit him in any way. It is not within the scope of the direct examination.

"The Court: The objection is sustained.

"Mr. Paisley: Yes, Your Honor. It is not cross of anything brought out on direct examination. Therefore, it is not within the scope of his direct examination, and it has no tendency to impeach him or to discredit him."

And Mr. MacInnis spent some eighteen pages trying to find out if he could, something about Schrimpf's naturalization, and we haven't found out yet. [8076]

As far as Irene Harris is concerned, as I say, the woman obviously made some mistake as to what was said at a public meeting and built that into a sort of alarmist idea that occurred to her. It was seized by her pal and friend, Mr. Schomaker, handed over to his employers to use as a weapon to force her to say what they wanted her to say.

As far as her recollection—and I don't tend to go through the record and read it—she says, starting at page 1918 to 1948:

"Q. When did you see Roza Schomaker last?

"A. I saw her one day last week; it might have been Wednesday, but I am not sure."

Then she doesn't remember. Here she testified it might have been Wednesday, that she wasn't sure whether she went to the Appraisers Building before or after she visited the Schomakers; then she changes that to say that it was not last week, two weeks ago, that she went to visit Schomaker. And then I asked her this, whether she could tell, whether she could remember if it was as close as yesterday, and she said, "I can't, no."

And I'll bet that when she went down to the Schomakers she went down to say to them, "What have you done to me? Did you give this information to the authorities?" and Schomaker said, "Why, no, of course I didn't. I don't know how they found it out. They asked me about it, too. They came down here asking about it." That is why she went down there. [8077]

All right.

"Q. When did you go down to the place on Sansome Street?"

This is after she said she went down two weeks ago Wednesday; she went down in the meantime to the place of the Schomakers.

"Q. How long?

"A. Well, I just don't know what day it was.

"Q. Was it as much as a week later or a day later or what? A. I just don't know.

"Q. Well, can you tell me this: Was it as close as, say, yesterday or the day before yesterday? A. Well, I don't know."

Then she can't remember the name of the agents that talked to her, or if they brought her down on Thursday, the day before she testified.

She says a few days after she got the subpoena she went down to see the Schomakers. Then she produced a subpoena and the subpoena had been served upon her two days before her testimony here. She didn't compare any notes with Schomaker as to the people in the Shaw house.

> "Q. Now, nobody told you that Mr. Schomaker had named these people as being present at the Shaws' house, is that right?
> "A. I didn't know that Mr. Schomaker did name them.
> "Q. You didn't compare any notes on that subject with anybody? [8078]
> "A. None whatever.
> "Q. Is that right?
> "A. None whatsoever, no, sir."

Her husband was naturalized in 1940. She doesn't remember. I said:

> "Now, please give this your attention. See if you can't tell us from memory. You were questioned at the time your citizenship was restored as to whether or not you had ever been a member of the Communist Party, isn't that right?
> "A. I do not remember. I may have.
> "Q. Now, coming forward six months, when your husband was examined in your presence, he was asked if he had ever been a member of the Communist Party, wasn't he?

"A. I don't know.
"Q. You don't remember that?
"A. No, sir."

Here she is so accurate about a casual statement that she hears back in 1938 in the Shaws' house, and then in 1940 when she and her husband are naturalized, she doesn't remember if they were questioned about possible membership in the Communist Party. And here:

> "Oh, we in our auxiliary had little discussions, that would come up, Harry was accused of being a member and other people was. I had even myself been accused, but I [8079] wasn't, and the other ladies denied it, too. That was all there was."

So Irene Harris, with her husband, having been accused of being a member of the Communist Party—whether she was or was not, I don't know—is in a position to be delivered by Mr. Schomaker over to her enemies.

Now, Michener comes under a somewhat different category. He is one of the people who is connected with labor union officials who want to get rid of Harry Bridges, and his whole attitude on the stand was somewhat different from that which activated witnesses who were under compulsion. He was evasive; he told untruths; he went along with them, and he was assured and he knew that he didn't have to worry about that record of the affidavit coming forward. He could afford to bet a hat or a suit or an automobile that any affidavit that he signed which was false was not going to be produced here. Michener had the calm assurance that, whether he signed an affidavit or not, you weren't ever going to see it and we weren't ever going to see it.

And he was quite evasive about one little matter. He was asked where he went out in the evening when he came down here.

> "A. Oh, I went out to the San Francisco airport.
> "Q. Did you go there to meet somebody?
>
> "A. No, sir. [8080]
> "Q. About what time in the evening did you go out to the airport?
>
> "A. Oh, it was around seven o'clock or a little bit after.
> "Q. Who accompanied you there?
> "A. Mr. Kaiser."

Now, up to that point, he has gone out to the airport. We want to know what is doing, what is in the air, what is stirring up.

> "Q. Whom did you see out there?
> "A. Well, I saw quite a few people, sir. I mean, anyone particular individual you had in mind, I will be glad to testify as to that. I mean, who did I see out there—there were quite a few people, sir."

Very polite, very wise.

> "Q. We are to understand that after dinner you and Mr. Kaiser went out to the airport, is that right? A. That is right.
> "Q. About seven o'clock?
>
> "A. That's right.

"Q. To what particular part of the airport did you go?

"A. To the main lobby or station there at the airport.

"Q. You mean the place where passengers congregate or wait for planes?

"A. That's correct, sir.

"Q. And what did you do there? [8081]

"A. Well, I didn't say that Mr. Kaiser and I went out there alone, sir. We took a passenger out to the airport, sir.

"Q. Who was that?

"A. A man that testified here previous to myself testifying, a Mr. Lawrence Ross, Larry Ross."

He didn't want to let us know that he took Mr. Larry Ross out to the airport, and he hedged and he crawfished and he moved around as well as he could, until finally there wasn't any further way to get out of it, and then he admitted he was out there with Mr. Larry Ross.

Now, here is another little example of his evasions:

"Q. Did you ever work in Missoula, Montana?

"A. Not in Missoula proper, sir. I worked out of Missoula, Montana, at Bitterroot Valley for a logging camp there for a while, and also worked on numerous ranches up at the Bitterroot Valley, which is a short distance from Missoula, Motnana."

He knows, as soon as this question is asked, just as Mr. Donohue knew when questions were put to Ross about his attendance at the Kentucky University, that here was something that he wanted to cover up and conceal.

"Q. Who is Thomas Michener?

"A. Thomas Michener is a brother of mine. Thomas E. Michener, you are referring to? Thomas E. Michener? There was a [8082] Thomas Michener, an uncle of mine, also.

"Q. Did you ever go under the name of Lewis Kelly? A. No, sir.

"Q. You were never called that?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. That was never an alias of yours?

"A. Never an alias of mine.

"Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Michener: A little while ago in answer to a question put to you, I think by his Honor, who had asked you for the reason, the background that you had in mind in not making up your mind to testify for the Government, your reply was that you reflected about the two previous Bridges cases and that you remembered the things that were brought out about the character of the witnesses who testified against Bridges in those cases, and you said you remembered the things you yourself had said about those witnesses, didn't you?

"A. I think the record is very clear on that, sir.

"Q. What reflection did you have about your own character? What did you think might be brought out against you if you testified here?

"A. What I thought would be brought out is what has already been brought out in the paper that I read last night, wherein it terms me as continuing the parade of stool pigeons that are appearing against Mr. Bridges. [8083]

"Q. Nothing else?

"A. That is what——

"The Court: That was in the People's World? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): Nothing else?

"A. Nothing else, sir.

"Q. You didn't think anything else concerning the background of your life might be brought out here to your discredit?

"A. I didn't think so; I really didn't, sir.

"Q. And you were never known as Lewis Kelly, Jr.?

"A. I am under oath, sir. I say I never was at any time.

"Q. Were you named in the District Court of the United States in and for the District of Montana in Case No. 6096 as Lewis H. Michener, Jr., also known as Lewis Kelly, Jr.——

"Mr. Paisley: Your Honor, he can ask him if he has ever been convicted of a felony, and I think that is as far as he can go. I do not think that you can discredit a witness by proving he used another name. The witness said he did not, but even if he had, that does not discredit a witness."

They knew that what we were trying to prove was that he was convicted of some bootlegging offenses, and that he wouldn't get a job with the Federal Government, he would not have been [8084] granted the job if he correctly answered two questions in his application: "Have you ever been convicted of any offense involving a penalty of more than a day or two," or whatever the time is.

2. "Have you ever been a member of an organization that advocates the overthrow of the Government by force?"

We knew that he must have lied on those matters or he wouldn't have gotten a Government job; so that he knew he would have to try to keep him from disclosing it. Mr. Paisley knew that he was convicted of these bootlegging charges and knew what we were driving at. He said:

> "Your Honor, he can ask him if he has ever been convicted of a felony, and I think that is as far as he can go. You cannot impeach a man by proving he used another name. The witness said he did not, but even if he had, that does not discredit a witness.
> "Mr. MacInnis: Well, your Honor, I have some information about this man; not all of it is complete.
>
> "The Court: Let us be careful and let us be specific.
> "Mr. MacInnis: I am going to stick to that one question at the present time as to whether he was named as Lewis Kelly, Jr.
> "Mr. Paisley: Well, now, your Honor——

"The Court: The witness has said that he was never known as William Kelly, Jr. [8085]

"Mr. MacInnis: Lewis Kelly, Jr.

"Mr. Paisley: Your Honor, Lewis Kelly, Jr., is what he asked.

"Q. (By the Court): At any time in your career? A. That is right.

"Mr. MacInnis: I will return to that, your Honor, when my information is supplemented.

"The Court: You say you have information about this man?

"Mr. MacInnis: Yes. Merely to show your Honor I did not ask the question idly, and reserving the right to return at a later stage to these questions, I will pass to your Honor the information that I just received."

So the cat is out of the bag. So Mr. Paisley is going to make a romance out of it.

"Mr. Paisley: Your Honor, if he wants to prove that the witness was convicted back in Prohibition days, back in 1932, almost twenty years ago, in a couple of liquor cases, we will stipulate to that. There are a lot of cases holding, your Honor, that type of testimony is not even admissible to discredit a witness.

"Mr. MacInnis: These boys are getting more gracious every day. Maybe there will be some things you can stipulate to in a few [8086] minutes."

So, knowing perfectly well what the purpose was, that we felt, believed that Michener, having taken a government job, had undoubtedly signed an affidavit identical to the one that George Wilson signed and that he wouldn't have gotten the job if he had admitted the bootlegging convictions and he wouldn't have gotten the job if he admitted the membership in the Communist Party, we assume that there was a handle upon Michener. There was a hold upon him. And we wanted to find out if that weren't so, because the jury is entitled to know if the witness is in such position that compulsion or coercion could be exercised upon him. And they did everything they could to conceal that fact.

He also went into an amazing discussion as to the manner in which a card had been issued to him in the Communist Party; so that it went back and forth between wives, parties, running over a course of years, until it was impossible to keep track of just exactly what had become of that card, in the various matrimonial difficulties that Mr. Michener found himself involved with.

But the outstanding one that shows duplicity on Michener's part and duplicity on Mr. Kaiser and another agent of the government's is that which relates to the card from the Hotel Shaw. Now, here's what they did. Since the Crouch and Johnson episode, they have been terrified of pinning down any witness to any one particular incident of time. So that we wouldn't come in with some incontestable proof that the defendants couldn't [8087] have been there at the time, or that they were in some other place. But before Johnson and Crouch fell apart on the stand, they had fixed definite times with the witnesses; in preparing their cases, they had fixed a definite time, for instance, for the meeting which Michener was going to testify to as having happened out in the Sunset District. And they had fixed a definite time as to the meeting that Rathborne and Wilson were to testify took place in the Hotel Governor. As soon as they saw the possibilities confronting them—the terrible possibility, the unspeakable possibility, the atrocious possibility—that the truth might be revealed, that the defendants weren't at those meetings, the awful thing that their case might be shown to not be a valid case, the awful opening that might be made in this courtroom through which the truth could walk; why, then, they dropped the cards and they hid the cards and they told the witnesses, "Don't pin yourselves down." That is proved by the experience with the Michener card.

Here is the predicament they got in. Michener had been in San Francisco in February, 1940, and—I have forgotten where this is.

Here is what they did. They testified that Michener had been at a meeting of the Communist Party some time in the year 1940 and that must necessarily have been in the fall of the year. [8088]

I have gotten myself rather confused on these dates. Might we take the recess, Your Honor, and I will consult this in the recess?

The Court: Yes, we will take the noon recess and resume at 2:00 o'clock, ladies and gentlemen of the jury. The same admonition to you not to discuss the case under any circumstances.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [8088-A]

Friday, March 24, 1950, 2:00 o'Clock P.M.

Mr. Hallinan: My confusion with regard to the documents that I had here in the Michener case was due to the fact that I had forgotten that we had substituted a photostatic copy, and I thought that the photostat was a duplicate of the original; but there are two exhibits here. It was to illustrate the frailty of human recollection that here is a point that I considered very important and had in mind for some time and made notes on, and worked up a little discussion about. Then I forgot about it. Now, if I had been born, if I had been so fortunate as to have been born with the memory of a John Schomaker, what a lawyer I would have been!

But this is the difficulty that they find themselves in with regard to these documents. This shows, my friends, the deception that runs through this whole thing. And it shows how Michener was taken in with it.

Now, I assume from Michener's testimony here, knowing nothing more about it, that at first he felt himself in some sort of a grip, with the affidavit that he had signed, whereby there was some sort of a handle, or some sort of a club held over him that would compel him so to testify. And so, of course, his evidence would have been of that limited sort that gives just all that is necessary to give.

But then he consulted with the Reuthers, with Reuther's [8089] brother, and he found now that far from being on the unpopular side as far as the persons in power, in the plan he was working on, if he went against Harry Bridges he was just like Rathborne, he was on the side that was popular. So he did come in and he did all he could to help out. And this is the peculiar little thing they did. They had this whole case down to days and hours and close, meticulous details. That is a good thing to do. That seems to show truth. In other words, if you have a document or a record to back up a series of witnesses, it gives a certain confirmation to what they say. But in this case, because they had the misfortune to have gone and let it be run by little Mickey Mouse, and because they were on the side of a fraud, it didn't work out. Then they found that every record they had, instead of confirming what the witness said, disputed what the witness said. And after they had gotten through with Crouch and Johnson, they found that the Sorcerers' Apprentice had chopped the broom up so much that it was running all over the place, and they weren't going to take any more chances of having any record come in and destroy a witness.

So they sunk the records that they had prepared and which they were going to use to bolster the witnesses. They sunk the record of Michener's visit to San Francisco in August—August 28, 1940. They had withdrawn this card from the files of the Shaw Hotel back in October of 1949, and then they returned it to the woman who ran the hotel, according to her statement, and [8090] told her to keep it in the safe. At any rate, whether that was a fact or whether they simply retained it in their files; the card was put in such place that the defense wouldn't get a chance to check it. The card was set aside. "I am going to use it in this trial to bolster Michener's testimony as to the meeting out in the Sunset District." And they were going to give a date to it, August 28, 1940.

All right, Mr. Michener gets on and after they have prepared the card, Crouch and Johnson blow up, on June 27, 1936. So there is going to be no more of that. So Mr. Michener, now, who has fixed his time for coming to San Francisco by his stay at the Shaw Hotel, is told not to pin himself down. And instead of putting it at August 28, he says some time in the fall he attended this meeting. Then we sent down and checked over the files of the Shaw Hotel to find what date he stayed there in August. Thinking we might show that there was something that militated against it. And behold, we don't find any record of Mr. Michener in the fall of 1938 or of 1940. The only thing we find is that he stayed there on February the 9th, 1940. Then we confront him with that on the stand. Now we say, "How can you explain that the only record we find there is of February 9, 1940?" and Mr. Paisley makes all kinds of objections; that that is no way to prove whether he was there or not, let him bring in the hotel people and produce their records—knowing all the time that they had a card of August 28, 1940. Well, [8091] we persisted in the matter. We said, "All right, we will do that and bring him in." And then they got concerned and worried about it, and the little mice started running all over the place to determine what they would do about the card that they had secreted. [8091-A]

And finally they decided to put the card in; that that is the lesser of the two evils. The man has said it was in the fall of 1940; he has been specific about it; he has named the people and even gives the subject, the distribution of funds of Labor's Non-Partisan League. Mr. Kaiser overlooked the fact or did not know the fact that the only money that had ever been in Labor's Non-Partisan League had been distributed two years before that in 1938 and there wasn't any money left to have furnished a fund. But at any rate, that was the subject of general inquiry, and they are going on with that subject. You have started out with a prejudice and you want something to hang your hat on to convict Harry Bridges. What do they care about whether a few details are right or wrong? They put Mr. Kessler on, and when he brought in the card I made this statement:

> "May I say this, your Honor: What he says is very true, and when they called the witness to the stand, while the witness' presence on the stand seemed to us of great importance as opening a doorway that we desired to open"—that is, I wanted to ask Kessler to show his interest about his communication with Mann and the efforts of the Immigration Department to extort evidence out of people by promising to cure their sick of cancer, and things like that that have been disclosed—"a little further reflection illustrated the fact that when fraud and [8092] corruption are involved in a case, the slightest incident may open a door that you never suspected, and this little card that was put in so inadvertently now, if your Honor please, convicts the officers of the prosecution of fraud, corruption, deceit and concealment, and I will show you how in a moment."

And then we start in to question about what was done on this card. Now, that card was a matter of great moment to them, and that they were undetermined as to whether they would put it in or not put it in might be gathered from these matters. The card is discussed by Michener: "I talked to Mr. Wooley"—he make the same effort that Ross did about Humphries, to conceal the matter.

"Q. Who? A. Wooley.
"Q. How do you spell that?
"A. I couldn't tell you.
"Q. What is that?
"A. I couldn't tell you.
"Q. Wooley? A. Yes, sir.
"Q. W-u-e-l-l-i-e? Who else?
"A. Mr. Kaiser."

Now he is asked who he discussed it with. He says Wooley, then Mr. Kaiser. [8093]

"Q. Who else? A. Mr. Kaiser.
"Q. Anybody else? A. Mr. Barber.
"Q. Anybody else?
"A. That is all I can think of."

You have to work that out of him one name at a time.

> "Q. Did you have any conversation with any of these people concerning a card that you signed at the Hotel Shaw, the one that was shown to you, the one that was marked for identification?

And watch this evasion:

> "A. Do you mean at the noon hour?
> "Q. Yes. A. No, sir.
> "Q. Did you have a talk with anyone after the noon hour about this card?
>
> "A. No, sir.
> "Q. No discussion on the subject of this card at all, is that right?
>
> "A. No, it isn't right.
> "Q. Well, did you have a discussion with somebody about it?
>
> "A. Not during the noon hour.
> "Q. You said after the noon hour?
> "A. No, sir, not after the noon hour. [8094]
> "Q. When did you have conversation with him? A. This morning.
> "Q. What time?
> "A. Oh, I would say between 9:30 and quarter of ten somewhere.
> "Q. With whom did you have the talk then?
> "A. Mr. Kessler.
> "Q. Where? A. In this building.
> "Q. Between 9:30 and quarter of ten?
> "A. Approximately that time, I would say.

"Q. Did Mr. Kessler have the card with him? A. He did.

"Q. Where did the conversation take place?

"A. That took place in this building on the Fourth floor.

"Q. Who else was present?

"A. It really wasn't a conversation over it; he showed me the card.

"Q. Who was present?

"A. Mr. Kaiser, Mr. Wooley and Mr. Paisley."

And Mr. Kessler being briefly on the stand:

"Q. When did you first talk to Mr. Donohue about this card?

"A. I believe it was this morning. I know that it was.

"Q. Is that the first time you spoke to him about it? [8095] A. That is right.

"Q. Did you talk to any other attorney about the card between the time you got it and the present moment?

"A. I talked to Mr. Paisley and pretty much the same thing would apply.

"Q. When did you first talk to Mr. Paisley about it?

"A. I believe—it was approximately the same time that I talked to Mr. Donohue.

"Q. Was he with Mr. Donohue this morning at the time you showed Mr. Donohue the card?

"A. No, I don't think so. I think Mr. Paisley saw it just previous to that or just after.

"Q. How about Mr. Bruce Barber?

"A. Yes. I have.

"Q. Did you talk to Mr. Boyd about the card?

"A. I showed the card to Mr. Boyd this morning previous to showing it to Mr. Donohue and Mr. Paisley."

Now, why did Mr. Kessler have to go around and show this card to Kaiser, Barber, Mr. Donohue, Mr. Paisley, Boyd, Kaiser and Kessler? What was all the excitement about? Why did he have to go and consult them? Well, the whole thing was this: There was a discussion as to which would be the better thing to do now, to just keep the card out of evidence or to open the door to a charge that they were attempting to suppress the card and bring it in and take the chance of that. So they [8096] decided on, as I say, the lesser of the two evils and finally put the card in. And if it were only the witness that was engaged in this concealment, it would be bad enough, but it is obvious that they first procured the card, had Michener fixed to say that this was the date on which he had that meeting, and then, fearful that they would have some question on the card, suppressed it, and then when they found themselves in a worse fix, because the only registration card date was in February, they decided to pull it in again. And the fact that this card was involved in that meeting is shown by Mr. Kessler's testimony in which he said that he knew that the date of this matter, referring to the date of this card, referred to the meeting that Michener was testifying about. Kessler's testimony was:

> "Q. Now, did the report state the occasion on which Mr. Michener stayed at the Shaw Hotel? A. That's right.
> "Q. What occasion was that?
> "A. At the time he attended a Communist Party meeting in San Francisco.
> "Q. Now, have you made enough inquiry into that to determine that this is the Communist Party meeting that Mr. Michener said he attended in the Sunset district sometime in the fall of 1940?"

Then there is a running fire of objections by Mr. Donohue. Mr. Kessler finally answers, "I believe it was included in the [8097] report."

> "Q. In the report he had spoken of two meetings he had with Mr. Bridges which he said were Communist Party meetings, is that right?
> "A. No, I didn't say that. I say that the time he stayed at the Hotel Shaw referred to the same time that he had attended a Communist Party meeting in the Sunset district in San Francisco."

So they had to start out with the report which Mr. Kessler had read and in which this card was identified as establishing the time that Michener had attended a Communist Party meeting in San Francisco. Then he ran into a further difficulty. His memory is so good on some of these matters.

Mr. MacInnis asks him these questions—he said Mr. Kline drove up with him.

"Q. I suppose you stayed together when you were here in San Francisco?

"A. We did not stay together here, but we did stay together on the way up as a result of some motor trouble I had, we stayed together at a motel.

"Q. You went to the Shaw Hotel?

"A. That is correct, sir.

"Q. Did you stay there alone or with any other person? A. Stayed there alone."

Then it develops that on the card that he has is the name [8098] William Clark. He says he knows no William Clark and that undoubtedly the man who stayed there was Kline, who came up with him, and that if it was Kline he used the name of Clark; that that is the only explanation he can give and he now remembers that Clark must have stayed with him. He has a memory that some nine years ago, back in 1940, he attended a meeting at which everybody was, or at least was supposed to be, a member of the Communist Party, and that they discussed there the distribution of the funds of Labor's Non-Partisan League, some two years after they had all been distributed—a matter that would be of considerable triviality, as you may have gathered by a statement of the various union meetings and various conventions and matters of that kind he has attended, but to this intimate detail he adds:

"Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Michener, in the room at the Shaw Hotel were there twin beds on the 26th of August, 1940?

"A. I wouldn't recall whether they were single beds or double beds. But I thought you had someone here from the hotel.

"Q. I asked you for the fact, and if you will just confine your answers to the questions, you will have difficulty enough. You don't remember, then, whether the person who slept in that room with you under the name of William Clark slept in the same bed with you, do you?" [8099]

And he answers, "No."

"Q. Well, there was some person slept in the same room with you, at any rate, was there not?

"A. That is my recollection. Yes."

He is so explicit on the matter of just what the subject was of discussion at a meeting in the Sunset district, but he cannot even say whether or not the man who came up with him slept in the same bed with him, or whether it was that man, or it might have been.

And he also testified that the card was never shown to him, which leads to the further conclusion that these gentlemen were reserving that card to determine just how they were going to use it, and that they could depend on the witness going along with them, because he says this:

"Q. So from the time you signed the card back in 1940 up until this morning you had never seen that card, is that right?

"A. That's right, sir.

"Q. You didn't see a photostat of it?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. This card was never shown to you by any person? A. That is what I said.

"Q. You hadn't seen it from the time you signed it until you saw it this morning?

"A. That is right. [8100]

"Q. You are sure of that?

"A. I am sure.

"Q. He asked you this morning if this was your signature, and that is all that was said, is that right? A. That is right.

"Q. Were these gentlemen present when he showed you that card?

"A. They were present, yes."

So now we have the rather remarkable situation that the card, having been mentioned by Mr. Michener, or his stay at the hotel having been mentioned by Michener in a report, and they having made an investigation and mentioned that there was a card which establishes the time that Michener was here, and Kessler having read that report and knowing that same circumstance to exist, never took the matter of that card up with Michener until after we had had the discussion with Michener as to whether or not the only time he had stayed here had not been back in February. And then he says they showed him the card. Now, either that is an additional fact bearing on his credibility, or else it shows a disposition for the prosecution to play fast and loose even with the witness it is bringing up here. [8101]

Now, to come to the last of their witnesses, Wilson, the testimony that Wilson gave was a matter of no consequence. He said that he attended a meeting at the Governor Hotel with Harry Bridges and that, so far as he knew, all the people there were Communists—no, he didn't say that. Withdraw that. Here is what he said. He was asked, "Was that a meeting of union labor people or was it a Communist meeting discussing union labor matters?"

He said it was a Communist meeting discussing union labor matters, and that is just his opinion and conclusion and would not have any weight at all. But even that small matter was extorted from this man. While they bring him back and say, "Were you threatened with the loss of your job?" "No."

> "Were you threatened that you would be prosecuted for perjury if you did not come up and testify against Harry Bridges?
> "No."

But they did not ask him if he had not had the conversation with Harry Bridges in this matter in which he told him he was under such pressure that while what he knew about Harry Bridges amounted to nothing, that he would have to go in and take the stand and say what he did know, and that Bridges told him, "All right, that is all right; go ahead. If that is all you know, that I attended a meeting or two, I don't care about that. Go ahead; protect yourself. Don't get yourself in that jam." They [8102] didn't ask Wilson if he didn't have that conversation. And it does not need any argument, it doesn't need any evidence to convince people who saw poor Wilson here on his first appearance that he was a man on the rap.

There used to be a little fellow who practiced law down in the police courts down in San Francisco named Jimmy Carroll. He was an ex-prize fighter and a strange but lovable little fellow and possessed of a great wit. One day I was down in the corridor and they brought in two men. The police were bringing them in. They probably had been in some sort of terrible auto accident. They had bandages around their heads, bloody spots, one man had his arm in a sling, another a crutch, and they were barely able to manipulate their way in. I said, "Gosh, Jimmy, I wonder what happened to them." Jimmy said, "They just gave a free and voluntary confession."

When they put Michener on the stand it was obvious he was a man on the rap. Now, supposing they said, "Now, look, Wilson, you are going in and make this statement about at least one meeting you attended with Bridges or we are going to indict you with perjury." Suppose they put him on the stand and said that to him. Then he might say, "Well, all right; I will tell you about those meetings. I will try to make them do something to take it back again." If they exposed the man with the rap on him and turned the screws in front of you, then am I supposed to go up and give an extra twist to make him take it back, and then [8103] they will give him still a further twist to make him make a retraction. Is that the way we are supposed to work the thing with a man who is obviously under force, under duress, who hates it, revolts against it, but can't do anything about it? But they wouldn't do such a thing to Mr. Wilson. Why, suggest that Mr. Barber would go down and put the screws on Mr. Wilson? No. Out of the mouth of their witness Rathborne came the tory of how they put the screws on Krolek, not out of anything that we have testified about. All they had on Krolek was that he was alien. He was born in Canada and had one of these derivative citizenships here. But they can go down to his home in Belmont in the dead of night, with every circumstance of oppression and terror, and bring him and his wife up three or four times to the FBI headquarters in San Francisco, question them, intimidate them, threaten them, coerce them, render the poor woman ill so she had to stay in bed, and make the man so frightened he was hiding when his brother-in-law went down to visit him—they could do that to him; what could they do to a man that they could send to the penitentiary for the exact same crime that they are now charging Harry Bridges with? If the statute of limitations has not run against Harry Bridges, it has not run against Wilson. In fact, his signature is later than the 1945 date. So they can take this document and say to Wilson, "Now, you come up here and do what you are told," and Wilson had enough resistance and enough spunk to give them only a minimum [8104] of what they required from him.

I say this, my friends: Under the circumstances you can't tell whether Wilson was telling the truth about that meeting or whether he was not shading or slanting the story in just the direction that they wanted it slanted. It is identically the same proposition as handing Rathborne $5,000. He may be telling the truth, but that $5,000 is an awfully strong argument that he is not. And similarly with this man, the club that they held over him and the willingness that they have shown to use the club is enough to cast doubt upon his testimony, too. To say and criticize us that we did not take the man and start in on a long cross-examination, bring up before him the statements he had made and the documents he had circulated as a member of the Harry Bridges Defense Committee, and demand whether or not he was lying then or lying now, confront him with anything we might be able to bring up—what is the use? What he said was nothing, and it was obvious he was saying it under compulsion. To go up and try to expose even the circumstances under which he acted would have been a discretion to intrude into something that does not do anyone any good to come to the realization of. You find out so many things in this trial in this court that one recoils a little from pressing these matters too far. Opening up a man's soul, descending into it, and finding the torments under which he is acting would be like Dante when he stood before the oak tree in the forest of Arno and regarded the door that opened [8105] into it, and when he opened that door and walked into it he descended into hell. Nobody wants to open up George Wilson's heart and trample around in it and thrust around in it to find why he was just weak enough to force him to say something and just strong enough so that they could not force him to say anything of importance.

Mr. Donohue indulges a device that is rather well known in rural communities. Of course these eastern lawyers think that everybody who lives west of Pittsburgh is a rube anyhow. But that device consists in this, of advising the jury to watch for the tricks of the defendant so they can get away with all manner of tricks themselves. Now, we have been castigated and criticized, and inquiry directed upon little tricks and devices that we used to try to determine if the witnesses produced by the prosecution were lying or had the instincts and character of liars. But these gentlemen go further than that: They trick the defendants, court, jury, witnesses—everybody, everybody. And calling the attention of the jury to the old juvenile devices that we have employed, it is like the barker who gets up at the fair and he says to the rubes assembled outside, "Now, there are a lot of pickpockets out here. Be careful." The rube instinctively feels in his hip pocket to find if his purse is there. The accomplice is watching for that, he comes up, slits the pocket open and takes the purse out and departs.

These gentlemen start out with telling this jury there is [8106] only one issue in this case, that the only thing of any concern is whether or not Harry Bridges committed perjury and these two men conspired with him to allow him to do so. That is all we are concerned about. All this matter about unions, political influence, controversies between union heads and Bridges' effort to get Harry Bridges—window-dressing, window-dressing; just invention of the defendant to distract the jury's mind away from the real issue.

Then they put Mr. Rathborne on the stand as a witness and as a part of the prosecution, because he is an employee of theirs.

It is a rule of law that the reason that a prosecution is instituted is of no weight in determining whether a person is guilty or not, providing, of course, that the members of the prosecution do not take the stand or the reason for the prosecution does not enter directly into the controversy.

Suppose a police officer is a personal enemy of yours, wants to do you a great injury. He catches you speeding one time and you were speeding. Now, the fact that he allowed everybody else to go by and arrested you, though dictated by his malice, has nothing to do with whether you were violating the law or not. But suppose there is a controversy between you and him now as to whether you were actually speeding. Then his motives and his malice enter into it as establishing his credibility as a witness, and Mr. Rathborne is taken right out of [8107] their camp and put on the witness stand to try to prop up the fallen structure that fell when the brothers Ross, Crouch and Johnson collapsed under it. Of course, all he did was sprawl across the ruins and involve them in still worse confusion.

But here is Mr. Rathborne's first connection with the case, and here is where the purity of their motives can not be questioned. He goes to see the Attorney General of the United States. Remember, now, all we are concerned with is whether Harry Bridges committed perjury in 1945 when he was admitted to citizenship. [8108]

> "He, the Attorney General, said they were making an investigation, and it was their opinion, that on the basis of, as far as the investiagtion had proceeded, it was the Government's opinion that Mr. Bridges was a Communist."
> Now, remember, not even " a member of the Communist Party," but "was a Communist."
> "——and that something should be done to remove his influence, because they figured it was dangerous to the country.
> "Q. Well, did he tell you also that they contemplated trying to get Mr. Bridges indicted for perjury?
>
> "A. No, sir, they did not.
> "Q. Didn't tell you that? A. No, sir.
> "Q. All right. And he told you also that they wanted to get Mr. Bridges out of the labor movement, is that right?
> "A. Well, he didn't, I don't recall he put it that way. He said they wanted to remove the influence of Mr. Bridges and other Communists."

Now, still not even "members of the Communist Party."

"Q. From the labor movement?

"A. From the labor ranks, yes.

"Q. All right. So Mr. Clark told you, then, that their information convinced them that Mr. Bridges was a Communist, he was detrimental or dangerous to the security of [8109] the country, that he wanted to get him out of the labor movement, is that right? Is that the substance? Is that substantially correct? Or they wanted to remove his influence from the labor movement? A. That is substantially correct."

Then he calls on Mr. Carey.

"Q. You told Mr. Carey that the matter you were interested in was this, substantially: that the Government was undertaking some sort of proceeding against Harry Bridges, accusing him of being a Communist and removing either him or his influence from the labor movement, is that correct?

"A. I related to Carey, as well as I could, the substance of Mr. Clark's conversation with me.

"Q. And that was substantially in the question I just asked you?

"A. Yes, that is right."

And then, not sufficiently satisfied with such high authority, he next goes to see Tommy Ray:

"Q. So you went first, then, to Tommy Ray to find out what would be his attitude toward you testifying against Harry Bridges, is that right?

"A. Well, more than that. The whole matter of his attitude and Joe's toward the degree of Communist infiltration, how effective it was, whether in their judgment it would be in fact a detrimental—a menace to the country [8110] in case of hostilities, and this whole situation was discussed with them.

"Q. But then you also discussed with them what their attitude would be toward you taking the stand and testifying against Harry Bridges, is that right? A. That is right.

"Q. And did Tommy Ray say it was all right with him? A. I believe he did.

"Q. Oh, now, what did Joe Curran say about helping get Harry Bridges? Didn't he say, 'Lie, steal, do anything you can to get him.'? A. No, he didn't.

"Q. What did he say?

"A. You know he wouldn't say that.

"Q. Well, let me ask you this.

"A. Joe and I were friends and I don't know.

"Q. Well, he gave the undertaking his blessing anyhow, didn't he?

"A. That is right."

So up to that time we have no word at all, nothing to indicate that Mr. Bridges is charged with being a member of the Communist Party. And this is back in July of 1948. We have nothing to indicate that it is believed that Mr. Bridges committed perjury. It is only that they say that Mr. Bridges is a Communist and they want to get him out of the labor movement. And Rathborne, [8111] who goes back there and consults the Attorney General, goes on then to consult the high brass of the CIO, to find out if he shall lend his strength and his help, now,—not to vindicating the majesty of the law or punishing perjury, but to getting Harry Bridges out of the labor movement. And of course having resolved to use the powers of the Department of Justice to get Harry Bridges out of the labor movement, it was only necessary to look around and find out what particular avenue could be used through which to build on. And finally, having digested and gone through the thing, and probably concluding that they couldn't get him through any administrative proceedings because their experiences in the past when Harry Bridges was in a much worse case, because that had been so disastrous; and they couldn't get away with anything before a court, so they determined that they would use what they conceived to be the miasma of hysteria that was sweeping the country to see if they couldn't get a jury to convict him of a criminal offense.

What criminal offense? It is like your enemy, the cop, stopping you at the curb; first he checks your driver's license and then he checks your registration certificate. Next is the amount of air in your tires, then whether your lights are working. Then whether your brakes are in good order, whether you parked too far from the curb; or any other thing that may occur to him. And if he can't find anything, having gone so far and having been determined that he is going to get you, and being [8112] that unjust, having the morality that is so unjust that he can set out to get you at any cost, my friends, it doesn't take much more to make up the story that will get you.

And this nonsense that Harry Bridges might be a detriment to the country or an unsafe element in the country. Who would that appeal to? Well, the same way. You are supposed to have hung your good sense up with your hat, and you are supposed to be guided by the propagandas and the statements in the papers about war, that we are all in some sort of terrible danger, and the most terrible thing that might happen to us, and if it weren't for certain employees of the United States Government, we might as well have vanished off the planet altogether. Then they are going to find something on that.

Now, here is where they are confronted with a difficulty. Today Mr. Bridges is a menace to the safety of the country, unsafe in the structure. He is one of the underpinnings that has been eaten by the termites and they want to replace him. Unsafe for the security of the country. But then the just persons say, "Well, now, wait a moment. Wait a moment. If you are saying that now, then you tell us why, back in 1941, when he was not only a menace to the country but a strong metallic prop, when he was being commended by officials all over the country and praised for the work he was doing to keep the ships moving and the cargoes being loaded, and when he was being commended by the State Legislature, when his union was getting E's from the Navy [8113] and praise from the officials, you were trying to get rid of him then. And then back in 1939 when it was neither the situation where he was a pillar of security or a weak link because of having his feet eaten up with termites, but it was purely neutral, there wasn't any world war, any hot war or cold war or anything else back in 1938—and you tried to get him out then. So, says you, "You sound to me a little like the wolf in Aesop's story where the little lamb was drinking at the stream and became terrified to observe a wolf was drinking beside her. And the wolf turned to her and he said, 'What do you mean by muddying the water that I am drinking?' The terrified little lamb said, 'Indeed, sir, that can not be for the water is flowing from you to me.' Well, the wolf said, 'Well, when I was around here last year, you called me a lot of tough names.' And the lamb said, 'That couldn't be, either, sir; I wasn't even born last year.' 'Well,' the wolf said, 'then it was your father.' And, leaping upon her, he devoured her. 'Alas,' said the lamb with its expiring breath, 'any excuse will serve a tyrant'."

And when these gentlemen come out and start to get Harry Bridges, they do it, too, with every circumstance of fear and violence that they can muster. They end up by making us about as afraid of them as we are of the Russian bogey.

Shall we take the recess, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes, we will take the recess, ladies and gentlemen of the jury. The same admonition to you.

(Recess.) [8114]

Mr. Hallinan: Here is the situation that the defendants are confronted with now when they run into this case. A grand jury hearing is had in the month of May, 1949. Witnesses are sneaked in, testify, are sneaked out and vanish. Nobody knows who they are, where they come from, what their identity is or the nature of any evidence they gave. An indictment is returned. In the State courts in the State of California if a person is indicted, on his first appearance in court for his arrangement the district attorney is required to furnish him a stenographic copy of all the proceedings before the grand jury, to give him a copy, a stenographic reproduction of all the testimony that was introduced against him before the grand jury. That certainly seems to be a very fair and decent thing. For some reason which I can't explain, because many of the rules of the Federal Court are fairer than the State courts, there isn't such a rule. So the defendant goes on trial without knowing a single word of what the evidence is against him, nothing except the bare charge contained in the indictment. He doesn't know who testified against him; it might have been his next-door neighbor; it might have been his brother; it might have been a total stranger whom he never heard of. He isn't given an opportunity to investigate it or determine. An over-conscientious public official might think that that is not entirely right and let the defendant or his attorney know generally what he is charged with. But here not one [8115] word is allowed to leak out. Even the releases that are given by the attorney and by the witnesses to the press are propaganda releases. They are not statements the witness testified to in the jury room; they are statements designed to justify the witness, to glorify and enlarge him, and to frighten or blacken the reputation of the defendants, that is all. But not one word could we learn as to what had been said by any single person in the jury room. And we could only guess at the identity from persons who went down there and sat in the anteroom to see if they could identify who came in, and they could only pick out one or two people. But concerning Crouch, Johnson and Ross, nobody could even surmise or know what kind of evidence they were going to give. And then what do we get? We are ridiculed, defied, scorned by the prosecution; statements are made in the newspaper, "We have some surprises for the defense," as if that were honorable, "We are going to surprise the defendants," as though that were fair; "We are not going to let them find out what our witnesses will testify to," as though that were the right way to treat another human being regardless of who he might be. And then they tell this to the defendants, "Why, you are not given a copy of the grand jury testimony. When the witness is discharged, you can go down to him lawfully and say to him, "Now, be fair; you testified in this case; we are not asking you to change anything. What was your testimony?

What was the nature of it?" What [8116] are we up against? They put their witnesses under a false and fraudulent oath not to reveal anything, an oath that the law does not permit them to put them under, and which the witness does not have to follow, he can morally ignore it. They put the witnesses under oath so the witnesses wouldn't have an excuse for refusing to tell the defense attorneys what they had testified to. For all we know, those persons may have testified to murders, to thieveries, to robberies, to anything. We had no way of knowing what they had to say.

The lawyers who preceded Mr. MacInnis and myself in the case, with justifiable diligence, went down to see men with whom they had been personally acquainted, whom they had never done anything wrong to and who had not done them any wrong, to see if they could coax them to tell what was the general nature of the charge being made against this man, what he was being confronted with, what preparation they could make for defense. What kind of a deal is it against you when the first thing you know about the evidence that is going to be introduced is when you come into court and hear it from the mouth of the witness and then you have to run around and find out what you can to destroy the witness' credibility or prove that he isn't telling the truth or something that will show that he is mistaken or that there is something wrong with him? What kind of a deal is that to hand a person?

And when the lawyers go down to interview Mr. Rathborne [8117] and Mr. Schomaker, they not only learn nothing, but they are immediately put at peril and an effort is made to frighten and intimidate them. A grand jury session is called to investigate their daring in going down to find out what their clients were confronted with so they can prepare some sort of defense to it—a thing the absence of which should be a reproach to them is treated as though they had done something disgraceful or shameful, and that is flaunted all over the public sheets as though it were some reflection on them, whereas the opposite should be the thing that should cause them to be blamed. Mr. Donohue comes out with this. Mr. Rathborne is asked:

> "Q. The statement you are talking about was not the Attorney General's, it was Mr. Donohue's: He sent to the Examiner this little gem: 'Donohue, taking his first official cognizance of the visit of Bridges' attorneys, George Andersen and Herbert Resner, with Government witness Mervyn Rathborne, last Saturday announced, "The United States Government is prepared with every resource at its command to detect quickly and to punish severely any person or persons who may interfere with in any manner or to any degree molest any of its witnesses who have given or may be called upon to give testimony." ' "

So here we have an announcement in the public press by the private attorney called to handle this case that the United States Government, meaning Messrs. Kaiser, Barber and Boyd, [8118] and now calling upon him as an auxiliary, is prepared with all the resources at its command to not only punish any person who—what? Who goes down and threatens a witness or offers to bribe a witness or does something criminal? No. Who interferes with or molests a witness. You are molesting a witness, I suppose, if you ring a bell; you are interfering with him if you stop him on the street and ask him what he has been doing. And was this an idle threat? No, not at all. When these two poor girls went down to their old friend to say to him, "Mervyn, why are you ruining yourself? Why are you taking this terrible position that you are taking, and why are you telling things that you know to be lies? Are you bought?" He is allowed to come up here before that same grand jury secretly, go in there and tell the story that he has told on the witness stand, and those two poor young women are not afforded an opportunity to go in and explain to the jury that it wasn't so, and it isn't pointed out to the jury that he is a liar, a fraud, a practiced perjurer and a reformed burglar. Now, the two poor girls are in the situation that the defendants find themselves here, facing a felony charge for having dared to molest or interfere with, quote "any of its witnesses who have given or may be called upon to give testimony." That is the situation that we find ourselves confronted with, and that is the atmosphere that is built up here.

Now, if Mr. Donohue had not gone out of his way to point [8119] out to the jury how tricky we are, perhaps we would pass up the opportunity to inquire whether Mr. Donohue might stoop to a little trick himself. Mr. Donohue is so secure and he has so little concern about what may happen or whether his vaunted word may be brought into question—and I don't bring it into question. Sure, Donohue is an honorable man; we have been told that many times. When Ross was on the witness stand, and he was asked about whether he could give us the names of any of his co-pupils or classmates in the University of Kentucky and he couldn't do it, or name any of his teachers, of course it became obvious to everyone that there was something wrong or that this man was concealing something for some purpose, and the situation was at once heightened in our camp that we were on the track of something that would prove this man wasn't what he pretended to be at all. We were not alone in that. With a perspicacity at least equal to our own, Mr. Donohue's instincts indicated to him the same circumstance. After Mr. Ross had been unmasked, Mr. Donohue made this statement to the Court, page 3651:

> "Of course, if your Honor pleases, we are not fools, and it was apparent to me when Lawrence Ross was on the stand on Friday afternoon and was unable to identify a single student in the University of Kentucky, that perhaps he might never have gone there, and for that reason at my direction on Friday afternoon the telegrams heretofore [8120] identified were sent."

So, having exculpated himself from the onus of folly,' I fear he may have taken upon himself a still worse burden, because after Mr. Ross testified last Friday afternoon that he did not know anybody at the University of Kentucky, and after Mr. MacInnis asked that the witness be held over because he had certain information which he wished to inquire into, here is what Mr. Donohue had to say:

> "Mr. MacInnis: Now, in respect of the further cross-examination of this witness, I have, as I intimated to your Honor this morning, some anticipated material. I cannot say what its length will be. I am sure I will have it by Monday morning. If your Honor would order this witness held over, we would appreciate it."

Now, by this time it is Friday afternoon and Ross has finished his testimony. So it wasn't anything that occurred after this time that apprised these gentlemen, who are "not fools," that Mr. Ross might be a fraud and a fake. And Mr. Donohue made this retort to Mr. MacInnis' request that the witness be held over:

> "Mr. Donohue: On that question, if your Honor pleases, this witness has stated that he came here by automobile with his wife and family. He has stated that he is the editor of a trade journal. He has been here available to the defense now for three days. The per diem which our Government allows witnesses will not maintain himself and his [8121] family. His children have to return to school. He has to go back to his work. And I most respectfully say to your Honor that on other occasions counsel for the defense have asked that witnesses be held over until they get from some far, distant place some information which is pertinent, and it never seems to be. Now, I thoroughly agree with your Honor that witnesses should be subjected to a full and complete cross-examination, and as your Honor indicated this morning, that is a privilege which you have allowed to the defense and one which your Honor stated would be permitted to us at the proper time. In the light of that fact, and not attempting to be obstinate or stubborn about it, but in appreciation of the fact that even under the California Code, a witness is entitled to his discharge when reasonable opportunity has been afforded to examine him, and yet at the same time not to preclude any right which the defense may have to examine this witness further on some particular subject, I ask your Honor in the absence of the jury to ask Mr. MacInnis to state to your Honor exactly what he expects to prove on the material which he hopes he may get. And if your Honor in his sound judgment then feels that it is pertinent, proper cross-examination, at whatever sacrifice—and it will be great—I am sure the witness will remain. But otherwise, I don't think that under the circumstances he is here he should be asked [8122] to remain here from now until Monday morning on a statement of Mr. MacInnis that he hopes to get some material from some far-distant place without your Honor knowing or without counsel for the Government knowing what he expects to prove, if anything, by this [8122-A] material."

Now, that would be fairly innocuous if Mr. Donohue two or three days afterwards, it probably having slipped his mind that he had made such a sterling fight to help Ross get out of the chair, Ross having persuaded him with his argument, and they followed him with a bitter demand that he be allowed to go back so that the culture of the south not be blasted by the failure of the Memphis Cotton Grower to come out in its proper rotation, if Mr. Donohue had not disclosed that he and his associates, not being fools, suspected that their witness was about to fall apart. Now, what consistency can he make in his declamations to honorable conduct and his criticism of our tricks in the face of realizing that a disclosure is about to befall that will expose the witness with something he is not, for something other than he claimed to be, and he puts up this kind of argument to get out of the court. And if he cannot get him out of the court, at least make these fellows tell him what they have. What do they expect to prove? Put them in a different category from what we are in! "We do not have to disclose to the defendants the evidence that they are up against nor anything that was disclosed to the grand jury by our witnesses. If they try to find out we will indict them. We will put them in jail. But, Judge, make them tell us now what has he got? What is in the air? What do we have to look out for when he comes back here on Monday morning?"

That is the Brutus who is such an honorable man, so that he [8123] can talk about tricks. And there is another little thing that makes me think that they knew all along all about Mr. Ross in addition to the ordinary conclusion that we would arrive at from the nature of his activities, the fact that he had been arrested and fingerprinted, the fact that in the Un-American Activities record it showed that he was supposed to have been named Rosenfeld and born in the Bronx; so it seems to me they would have run that down. But here is a little thing that occurs also. Ross says he went and wrestled with his conscience Friday night, and then finding that Mr. MacInnis' inquisitive nature seemed to be on the side of his conscience, he yielded to it and decided to make a clean breast of the whole deception. But it was not until Saturday morning that he acquainted Mr. Bruce Barber with the turmoil that had been on in his heart and that he disclosed to him the difficulties he was then under. And then he says that on Monday morning Mr. Bruce Barber told him about his father's naturalization:

> "Q. Now, you told us yesterday that Mr. Barber gave you information about your father's immigration record?
> "A. That is correct.
> "Q. And that he told you the facts of your birth in Poland, your arrival in this country, the fact you were a derivative citizen, and that that was based on your father's naturalization papers? A. Correct. [8124]

"Q. Now, what did he tell you about your father's naturalization? When did he tell you it took place and where?

"A. I don't recall that he told me.

"Q. Where?

"A. I think he said the year 1915 or possibly 1914, somewhere around there.

"Q. When was it that he conveyed this information to you?

"A. Yesterday morning before I came to court."

This is Tuesday morning that he is testifying, so on Monday morning, after Mr. Bruce Barber of the Immigration Department has been informed on Saturday that the man is not what he says he is, that he has missrepresented his name, his education, his relatives, all about him, over Saturday and Sunday, which one would ordinarily assume to be days on which public records were unavailable, he is able to procure and inform this witness that as a matter of fact he was born in Poland, as though the witness did not know it. Mr. Bruce Barber told him. Well, we have it:

> "You were born in Poland. Your father came to this country. He was naturalized in 1914 or 1915, and you have a derivative citizenship."

Now, where did Mr. Bruce Barber get that information? You know, one would think, if one were a person employed by the United States Government and occupying an important position, and accusations were being made against him day after day of [8125] fraud and conspiracy to engage in a felonious desire and design to put people in prison, that that man would get on the witness stand and tell you what he really did know about it. But Mr. Barber sees fit to sit here month after month being named by the witnesses who come here as having accompanied them on trips, the imputations and inferences being clear, obvious and direct that they were acting under coercion, pressure or bribery by the——

(A bell rang outside the courtroom.)

Is that a fire?

And—well, he does not see fit to take the stand and explain those things away. I would like to know how Mr. Barber found out, if he did find out, between Saturday afternoon and Monday morning all the secret of Mr. Ross' birth. Now, we learned from Friday afternoon to Monday morning a certain amount. Yes, we discovered who he was, his father and so forth. We did not know he was born in Poland. We thought he was born in The Bronx, too. They knew all about him at that time.

And then to show that Mr. Donohue was not alone in his desire to get Mr. Ross off the stand, to keep him from being questioned and to protect the matters of his identity, all the lawyers involved were apparently alert to the proposition was wrong with Lawrence Seton Ross. First we have Mr. McMillan:

"That has already been asked and answered, if Your Honor please.

"Mr. MacInnis: If the answer is a benign one, it won't [8126] hurt you gentlemen, I don't think.

"Mr. Donohue: Oh, no.

"Mr. Paisley: We have other things to do, Mr. MacInnis; so has the jury. Don't take up too much time.

"Mr. MacInnis: Oh, don't be hurt.

"Mr. Paisley: We want to get rid of this case some time.

"Q. (By Mr. MacInnis): What was your father's name? A. My what?

"Q. Your father's name.

"A. Sedon—S-e-d-o-n.

"Q. Sedon what? A. Ross.

"Q. Where did he live?

"A. He isn't living now, sir.

"Q. Where did he live?

"A. In Bell County.

"Q. What was his occupation?

"Mr. McMillan: Oh, may it please Your Honor——

"Mr. MacInnis: I have a purpose in this.

"Mr. McMillan: Haven't we gone far enough in cross-examination?

"Mr. MacInnis: I am not sure who this man is.

"The Court: I think, not only with respect to this witness, but many of the witnesses who have been produced in this case have been subjected to probably the most searching [8127] cross-examination of any case in which I have ever participated.

"Mr. McMillan: Yes."

But he misinterpreted what the Court was about to say, because the Court goes on:

"And I think that having gone this far, we might just as well go to the extent of finding out who his father was and his occupation. I will overrule the objection.

"Mr. McMillan: May it please Your Honor, the other day, very respectfully I asked Your Honor to lay some limitation upon the extent of this cross-examination, and really, as I said then, with becoming diffidence on my own judgment and out of all respect, it has really begun to get interminable, and I really don't want to personally sit here until the frost is on the pumpkin and the fodder is in the shock."

That is one of the little homely apothegms you may take back East with you that you picked up from Mr. McMillan.

Mr. Donohue: In what year did that take place?

Mr. Hallinan: That is 3420. Mr. Donohue hops in. Mr. MacInnis now wants to interrogate Mr. Ross a little more:

"Q. What was the date of your first marriage, Mr. Ross?

"Mr. Donohue: I think, if Your Honor > please, that there are some personal privacies in a man's life to which he is entitled to guard even as a witness."

Now, the date that a man married is not such a shameful [8128] matter that you should hide it away from all eyes. I know women, and I suppose men are just as bad, conceal the date of their marriage lest they betray their age, but that is their only interest. The fact of their marriage they take to their credit.

> "Mr. MacInnis: This is coming to a point upon which he gave testimony at the instance of the prosecutor.
> "Mr. Donohue: Every objectionable question Mr. MacInnis covers by telling Your Honor he has a point. I haven't seen the point of any of them yet. Object to the question, if Your Honor please. It obviously has no bearing on any issue before this Court."

Then another question.

> "Mr. MacInnis: I have a very fixed purpose, Your Honor."

No, it is the same question.

> "Mr. Donohue: May I say, Your Honor, that this witness testified on direct examination with respect to many matters directly concerning these defendants. He has been under cross-examination now for a day, and the cross-examination consists of repeated efforts to pry into this man's personal life. Now, whether this man was married before and divorced and the circumstances of that marriage and divorce can only be a purely collateral matter, and any answer which this witness has made to any question asked by Mr. MacInnis on that collateral matter, he is bound by it, he may not seek to impeach him on that question. And therefore I most respectfully say to Your Honor that [8129] there can be no legitimate purpose in attempting to break down the testimony of this witness against these defendants by attempting to pry into his personal and private life."

So Mr. Ross is protected from having his private life pried into by all the diligence that counsel can muster, and as he seemed to be the only person around here whose private life Mr. Donohue did not seem to be very intimately interested in and willing to explore, it seems to me that these gentlemen knew in advance that further inquiry into Mr. Ross' private life would be of great harm to the prosecution.

Now, how are you going to explain—and when you get up here I want you to do this as a kind of a special favor to me because of your kindly feeling. I want you to explain how, when you knew that Ross or suspected that Ross was somebody other than he was, did you then endeavor to have the Court excuse him and send him on his way or, at the very least, to compel the defense to disclose to you what he had to say. Or what we were inquiring about.

Now, here is what we call a minor or a second rate trick. This one does not arise to the dignity of that one. The wedding party at Stockton disclosed themselves to the defense, and before we get a chance to interview a gentleman named Mr. Sawyer, the Immigration Department has already interviewed him, and the witness says on the witness stand that when he went to Mattioni's he is not sure any longer whether he saw Harry Bridges there or [8130] whether he heard Harry Bridges had been there or was coming in the future. In other words, a very honest expression. He knew that in some way Bridges was connected with an appearance at Mattioni's but he could not remember any longer after this lapse of time, after fourteen years, whether he was still there, whether he had seen him, whether he had just heard he had been there or was coming there.

So on cross-examination Mr. Donohue says to him, "I take it, Mr. Sawyer, that the information that you gave the gentlemen from the Immigration Service was substantially as you have testified here today as to your recollection of the event?"

And the witness said, "Oh, no, I told him I thought I did see Bridges there."

Now, they had the report. He said, "I think I perhaps gave him a more definite impression that I had talked to Mr. Bridges."

So Mr. Donohue is going to be very "flahool" with his information—that is an Irish expression meaning generous. Mr. Sawyer says, "I do not know whether I saw Mr. Bridges there or not. I may have seen him there. It may be I heard he had been there or was coming."

Mr. Donohue has a report from the Immigration agent showing Mr. Sawyer said he did see Mr. Bridges there. So Mr. Sawyer can't resist saying, "Of course, that is the same thing you told the agent that you have told here." [8131]

And the witness says, "No, no, I told the agent that I had seen him."

So Mr. Donohue knew, when he asked that question, that the witness had said that he had seen Mr. Bridges.

And then here is another little one I would like you to explain if you will. This is a kind of cute little touch. When Schrimpf was on the stand and we were trying unsuccessfully to get the record on Schrimpf's naturalization—and, incidentally, we have never seen that document which the naturalization record mentions, to wit, the FBI report on Mr. Schrimpf in connection with the Bridges case. You take the exhibits to the jury room with you, and if you turn to the Schrimpf documents you will see a letter there from the FBI to the Immigration Department saying, "We have nothing except what is in your own records concerning Henry Schrimpf. We call your attention to letter dated so-and-so upon this witness' connection with the Harry Bridges case. You have a report on that matter."

But the report isn't there. That is taken out and removed. That probably would show what Schrimpf had told them back in 1937. But, anyhow, we are trying to find out what can be discovered as to how Mr. Schrimpf managed to get naturalized in 1943 after having been a member of the Communist Party, the exact same thing that is supposed now to invalidate the naturalization of Mr. Bridges, and Mr. Donohue says, when we say the hearing examiner is the proper person who should identify this matter, [8132] he says, "I must say to Your Honor, as long as counsel has raised the point that the hearing examiner from our records who conducted this hearing is no longer in the Immigration Service, and we have made every possible human effort since this matter came to our attention a day or two ago to locate him and bring him here, and we can't find him.

"The Court: Are you prepared to disclose his name?

"Mr. Donohue: His name is Houser.

"The Court: How long was he in the government service?

"Mr. Donohue: I will have to ask Mr. Boyd if he knows.

"Mr. Boyd: I am not prepared to answer, sir.

"Mr. Donohue: I can find that information for you.

"The Court: All right. At least his name is Houser.

"Mr. Donohue: We understood he was an attorney practicing law in Los Angeles. I called the Los Angeles office of the Immigration Service the day before yesterday and asked them to make every human effort to locate him, that I wanted to talk to him."

And no human effort that they made from that day to this enabled them to produce Mr. Houser as a witness. We had to go and expend the superhuman energy of calling up the State Bar and asking them for Mr. Houser's address before we were able to accomplish that difficult task of finding him and bringing him here.

I understand that Your Honor wishes to adjourn? [8133]

The Court: We will take the adjournment, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, now until Monday next.

Mr. Hallinan: I might say, Your Honor, I will easily be through before the close of Monday.

The Court: Monday next at 10:00 o'clock, and may I again admonish you not to discuss the case under any conditions or form an opinion on it until the matter is submitted to you, particularly not to discuss with any person any subject connected with the trial.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to Monday, March 27, 1950, at 10:00 [8133-A] o'clock a.m.)

Monday, March 27, 1950—10:00 o'Clock A.M.

(The following proceedings were had in chambers out of the presence of the jury:)

The Court: I called you gentlemen in this morning by reason of an advice I received from Ed Mitchell yesterday, and that, with one other matter that I had to take up, I thought deserved an informal discussion rather than matters of open discussion in court.

First, a report from Ed Mitchell concerning the illness of one of our jurors. What is it?

The Clerk: The illness of juror's wife. On Saturday, approximately 4:30 or some time around 4:00, Mr. Chipp, who is Juror No. 5 on the panel, the fifth from the right in the back row, Mr. Henry William Chipp, phoned me in a state of great upset and, in fact, between emotional outbursts of crying, said that his wife who had been in the hospital, had suddenly collapsed—that was the word he used—and that he was desperate and felt that he would not be able to appear at the trial this morning; that he had taken it up with the doctors, mentioned that there were three doctors present at the bedside of his wife in Herrick Hospital——

The Court: What is the name of the hospital?

The Clerk: Herrick Memorial Hospital in Berkeley, and that Dr. J. L. Wood, who was in charge of his wife's illness, [8134] and who had been his own physician, had suggested, in fact stated, that he should not attempt any further jury service and the doctor would like to have me call him.

I attempted to get him, and he was engaged, I presume at the hospital, and not available. I left my number and he called back and stated to me that Mrs. Chipp's condition was very puzzling and very serious; that he was a man of an intense emotional type; that he was nervous; he had been suffering under the strain of this jury service; that he had noticed that he had not reacted well; that he felt that he should not be requested, if it were possible, to give any more service, as he was quite undone over Mrs. Chipp's condition.

I called yesterday to see what the condition was and the condition was worse. I phoned this morning before I left home and found that an operation is being prepared for Mrs. Chipp, or they are trying to prepare her for surgery, which may be critical—not critical; the word was "fatal"; and that they had broken the news to Mr. Chipp to that effect.

The Court: He knows that?

The Clerk: Yes, they had told him that, I presume, in getting his permission to operate. And that is as far as any information I have in the matter.

The Court: What is the reaction of counsel to that, Mr. Hallinan?

Mr. Hallinan: Having just gone through something like that, [8135] I know what the man is up against; and if the wife dies, he would have to be excused anyway, so as far as we are concerned, I would make no objection.

Mr. Donohue: I would make no objection under those circumstances.

The Clerk: May I make this statement, Your Honor, in that regard?

The Court: I would say this, if you are perfectly content to take Mr. Mitchell's statement of the report of the doctor's talk—or if counsel would like to verify this——

Mr. Hallinan: I am perfectly willing to take his statement.

The Court: The doctors, the hospital, or either.

Mr. MacInnis: We would never question his statement.

Mr. Hallinan: He is one of the jurors that we wouldn't like to have leave, but if the situation is that, I don't think there is any question.

The Clerk: I have formerly stated the doctor's name and the hospital.

Mr. Hallinan: Who is the next alternate?

The Clerk: That would require that Alternate Joseph Batch, Alternate No. 2, replace Juror No. 5.

The Court: The second matter that I have in mind, gentlemen, is that it is my desire, in the light of the extensive arguments thus far on the part of Mr. Hallinan, if possible, to charge this jury no later than Friday of this week. [8136]

I have expressed myself that I full well realize the tremendous amount of evidentiary matter that has run through the mill here. At the same time I feel, after a rather careful analysis of the arguments engaged in thus far, both by the prosecution as well as Mr. Hallinan, that we could very well adhere to this rather definite program: Mr. Hallinan conclude his argument at noon today.

Mr. Hallinan: Judge, I would like if you will extend that until 3:00; that will be——

The Court: May I continue? I think we can work it out some way.

Mr. Hallinan: Very well.

The Court: I am thinking in some fluidity.

Mr. Hallinan: You have been fair on the time.

The Court: Let us see if we can work out some time under our time schedule; Mr. MacInnis could then take up at 12:00 o'clock and conclude——

The Clerk: Not at 12:00.

The Court: At 2:00, and conclude within a day and a half. That was his original proposition. "Or at the maximum a day and a half." And thereafter Mr. Donohue or the government close, permitting me to charge the jury Friday.

Now, I am not going to foreclose Mr. MacInnis. He has been waiting patiently, and he has much to say on behalf of his two clients. I feel, however, that a great deal of the groundwork, [8137] so far as an attack made upon the several witnesses, has already been engaged in by his co-counsel, Mr. Hallinan. I mean, he has laid the superstructure. The matter of conspiracy and the other matters that he desires to take up should be properly gone into. But I am not going to foreclose you. Maybe you gentlemen can work out the situation between yourselves. How do you feel about it?

Mr. Hallinan: Judge, I was going to suggest this: I went over my argument, what I had left, over the weekend, and if the recess were not too long this morning, and if we start on time and started at 2:00 o'clock, I could be finished by 3:00, and that would only be an hour more than the schedule you set. Then how long does the Government expect for rebuttal?

Mr. Donohue. A good bit will depend on how long Mr. MacInnis takes.

Mr. MacInnis: I would attempt to stay within the time set.

The Court: Will you gentlemen between yourselves and the defense counsel work out a schedule wherein and whereby I can charge this jury some time during the day Friday, as early as possible.

Mr. Hallinan: Suppose we are certain to be finished Friday morning some time—I mean Thursday morning, some time before noontime. That would only extend it an hour——

The Court: That only gives the Government——

Mr. Donohue: That doesn't give us any [8138] time.

The Court: That only gives the Government a day to close.

Mr. Hallinan: Oh, but——

The Court: Pardon me. If you conclude at 3:00 o'clock today, Mr. MacInnis may well conclude late tomorrow afternoon or Wednesday morning some time.

Mr. Donohue: If Mr. MacInnis will conclude by noon on Wednesday, Your Honor, Your Honor can charge the jury not later than Friday morning.

The Court: He may conclude before that.

Mr. Donohue: Or before.

The Court: Let us not crowd him to the point where he has to watch the clock, because, as I say, Mr. Hallinan has already had six days or six days and a half.

The Clerk: Five and a half.

Mr. Hallinan: Yes. If I do not argue after 3:00, I think we will be finished by noontime Wednesday, and suppose we make our own time.

The Court: Does that suit you, Mr. Donohue?

Mr. Donohue: Yes.

The Court: I don't want to send this jury out late Friday afternoon. I don't want to harangue them late in the afternoon. I would like it to go to them some time during Friday morning.

Mr. Donohue: You can do it Friday morning if the defense will finish by noon on Wednesday.

Mr. Hallinan: We will do that.

The Court: Is that understood?

Mr. Donohue: Yes. [8139]

The Clerk: The case of United States of America v. Harry Renton Bridges, Henry Schmidt and J. R. Robertson, on trial.

The Court: Mr. Mitchell has made a statement for the record and in chambers this morning concerning illness in the family of Mr. William Chipp, one of the jurors, No. 5. Without further comment on his part, I believe counsel on both sides have already stipulated that Mr. Chipp may be excused from further conduct as a juror in the trial of this case, and that the next alternate, Mr. Leon Batch, may serve in lieu of and in place and stead of Mr. Chipp. Is that a correct statement?

Mr. Hallinan: Yes.

Mr. Donohue: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Is it so stipulated?

Mr. Donohue: So stipulated.

Mr. Hallinan: So stipulated.

The Clerk: Mr. Leon Joseph Batch, Juror No. 5.

The Court: Mr. Batch has been heretofore sworn as a juror?

The Clerk: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: You may proceed.

Mr. Hallinan: Now, to end up, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, about counsel warning you of tricks of the defense, being open, avowed and unconcealed efforts to trap perjurers, we have the last of the things that became so noticeable that [8140] they have trapped even our slow and inexpert attention, and that is a similar concealment of the Wilson hotel record. They concealed the Michener hotel record and produced it when it looked like Michener might be tied up in a knot, that the only record of his attendance here was in February, 1940. The Wilson hotel record they were not even going to do that with, but fortunately when we went through the records of the hotel the clerk notified us that one of the documents had been abstracted by the Immigration Service, and when we objected they very graciously came in, and for the first time, after holding it out for months, turned it in. But of course, if the clerk had not notified us, we would not know about it at all.

The clerk in the Shaw Hotel concealed the document for them, concealed it in their safe, and when we made a search of the records nothing was said about one of the documents being put in the safe, but the clerk at the Wilson hotel told us.

But as a trick to end all tricks, as the master trick, in the very first days of the trial the matters that have already been elucidated to you happened. We have all heard of the ancient device of the wolf telling the sheep to get rid of the dogs. But there is an improvement of that that has been manifest in this case. To let you in on some of the principles of our trade, lawyers do not accuse other lawyers of contempt of court and try to get them locked up in jail. In fact, it is considered trickery. If the Court takes exception to what [8141] a lawyer says, gets sore at him and wants to do something about it, the other lawyer, realizing the frailty of the other man, will get up and try to beg him off. But these gentlemen, instead of doing that, not only started the accusation, calling me a mad dog and trying to turn the court into a bawdy house—which we have not had explained yet—counsel probably will—and with all of those invidious appellations they get up and demand and beseech the Court in ringing tones to lock me up then and there and not to give me a stay of execution, to force Harry Bridges to go in the streets and byways, hire himself another lawyer, and come in and defend the case, advising him, in my presence, he is much better off if he did not have me as a lawyer—which might be true, but still is not playing the game according to the rules. Not that we take any exception to that. All right. They come in here and want to cut out one of the flock. They look at me as some old watch dog, standing around here, so they figure, "We will get Fido out of the way." They sidle up friendly-like, and the first thing you know it is, "Get 'em, Brother Paisley, catch 'em by the jug'lar vein! Brother Donohue, rip out his vitals!" And then Mr. McMillan bringing up the end, yapping and yelling, and I am standing around—"What is this all about?" As I say, I didn't mind it too much, but it surprised us to see what we were up against, that this was a new sort of case, and that it would not be tried on the usual formal basis we had been [8142] instructed to follow, but we have blackjacks and stabs in the back by the Marquis of Donohue. We did not want to follow that proceeding ourselves, but we were alerted to the things that happened as the matter progressed. As far as name-calling is concerned, let me suggest this: We have not uttered one single name or affixed one single appellation to these gentlemen who took the stand except the ones by which they designated themselves, and any statements about the activities of certain Government agents, including the glorified FBI, emanated from their witness Krolek in his description of what they had done to this wife and himself, plus one additional thing that we added, the statement of Harold Ickes, who, after all, was Secretary of the Interior under all of Franklin Roosevelt's regime and Secretary of the Interior for part of the time under the Truman regime.

We said originally here that a jury stands between the Government and a defendant, and the jury is really a weapon of the defense and not an arm of the prosecution, and that is its historic role. Now, to give you a sort of corollary of that, a few days ago, August 24, 1949, the Hon. William Lemke of North Dakota introduced in the House of Representatives a statement or document containing what he said would be an ideal platform for the Republican candidate for the next election, and among them he put this:

> "We demand that all branches of our Government again [8143] observe the Constitution, the Constitution that protects minorities and the unfortunate from persecution at the hands of a reckless bureaucracy. We pledge to the nation that we will undertake to rehabilitate the Federal courts so they will again function, not as a part of the Executive branch, but as an independent, coordinate branch of our Government. Political judges are incompatible with impartial justice."

Now, I do not know what he is referring to, and we do not assume that judges who are appointed are any different from judges who are elected, but that is the attitude taken by the Federal judges, the last one I enunciated, not what this gentleman says, may be borne out by this language. It was uttered in this district and one of these courts. Here is what the gentleman said: He said:

> "The Federal judge stands between the Government and the defendant. The Federal judge > stands between the Government and the defendant. He must without fear and without favor protect the citizen against the excesses of the Government."

Now, that statement was made on July 18, 1946. It was made by Hon. Louis Goodman, who is one of the judges of the Federal Court in this district, and it was made in the ceremony of the induction into this office of Hon. George B. Harris.

Now, if that is the function of the judge who is, after [8144] all, appointed by the Executive Branch, if that is the duty that the judges feel is their duty, and so say publicly and so act, what about the jury that even in other lands and other places has had to stand not only between the Government and the defendant but between the judges and the defendant? So that the jury is really in the position that it should not be looking for something upon which to convict the defendants, but should be looking for something upon which to acquit the defendants, and they appear to a jury so constitutionally and traditionally fixed and built up a sordid mess of trickery, corruption, bribery and lies, perjury, bought witnesses and such intermingling of it that it is impossible to separate them, so that Schomaker's verifications of Irene Harris' statement, or Krolek's statement, and Hitchcock's, or whatever his name is—all of them are such that it is impossible to tell which one is lying, which is telling the truth, who prepared what. Rathborne's testimony is intricated and interlaced with that of the others.

Krolck's statement of what the FBI did to him reflects upon Wilson's testimony. And at every point, all the way through, the trail of the serpent is over them all. They are all smeared with the same thing.

There are frequently tried in these Federal courts cases under the United States Pure Food and Drug Act. That is an action against the commodity itself, not the owner, as to whether or not this is fit for human consumption, and if not, [8145] what will be done with it. Well, they bring out an exhibit, let us say a dozen cases of walnut meats, and they knock the cover off one of them and they see in one corner a number of maggots and in another place a cobweb. Now, they don't go and sift out what is good and what is bad and box up the good ones again and return them for human use. They take the whole mess and throw it into the fire. They send it to the incinerator without further inquiry because they assume some of the infection there has or may have spread throughout the entire mess. But what do these people do? They take this hamper full of bloody, slimy, stinking, scummy inhabitants of a cesspool, traitors, liars, perjurers, hired witnesses, they mix them up with tricks, fraud, concealments, and they expose this whole thing before the jury, and then they admit that so much of it is rotten and foul. But they are going to feel around and get something that you can handle.

"Now, here's a nut. There is no maggot on that. That's delicious. You may safely ingest that." That is the attitude that they are taking toward a jury that is supposed to look for the reason why of doing the defendant did this. Suppose they put some human charity, some human justice into their decision and not attempt to destroy people, but willing to accept inferences that will preserve and save them.

It might be said, too, "All right, granting each and everyone of these people is fragile, weak and rotten, doesn't the [8146] whole bunch of them together carry some evidence that Harry Bridges was a member of the Communist Party?" Well, certainly it does; certainly it does. It deepens a suspicion, possibly in inference, that what any one of them may be saying may be true. If they were on trial for perjury, it might be sufficient to assure their acquittal, that that may raise a reasonable inference that they are telling the truth. But that is going a devil of a way from that extreme over to the other extreme of saying there is not one reasonable doubt that they are telling the truth, and that is what they are required to prove in this case.

I am not going to waste time pointing out matters that would show Harry Bridges is not a member of the Communist Party, aside from his own testimony, B. B. Jones, Mrs. Teixiera and Mrs. Murray. What is the use of doing that if they have no case in the first place? We could suggest things like Schomaker running back and forth with messages from the Communist Party. If Bridges was a member of the Communist Party, why do they have to have a go-between to carry and deliver things to him? It looked, as suggested, that Darcy was a member of the Communist Party and not a member of the labor union; Bridges was a member of the labor union and not a member of the Communist Party; Schomaker was a member of both and transmitted messages to them, according to his own statement. Then we have Schrimpf's statement that Bridges supported Marlow against Schrimpf, [8147] an acknowledged Communist. We have this: William Schneidermann was admitted to citizenship although he was an acknowledged Communist. Therefore, a lawyer would assume that whether or not a person had been a member of the Communist Party or was still would not be material on an inquiry for citizenship, and if Harry Bridges had been a member of the Communist Party, the lawyer in a preliminary investigation would have instructed him not to answer the question as to whether he had ever been a member of the Communist Party. He would say, "Don't answer that. There may be something that will afterwards come back to smite you. If Judge Foley does not give you United States citizenship, we will go to the United States court, even go to the Supreme Court, and they will make no distinction between you and Schneidermann. You won't have to answer the question at all." That is what any careful lawyer would advise the client and wrestle with it for a year or so if necessary.

In addition there were other little matters. Schomaker was a member of the District Committee of the Communist Party. He never heard that Bridges was a member of the Central Committee, something they omitted to fix him up with. He never heard the name Dorgan or Rossi, neither did Michener. When Rathborne was expelled from the Communist Party, six months afterwards Bridges makes a laudatory speech for him and takes up a collection for him. Ross never met Bridges at the Communist headquarters during all the time he was out here, and as far as what he did for the Communist Party, here is a man who is [8148] within himself a great organizational genius. He is like those people, oh, Samuel Gompers, Andrew Carnegie, Lewis, in having the ability to organize people and inspire them to come together and get together with their own people. With all the years he is supposed to be connected with the Communist Party, and all the necessity of keeping himself under concealment, the danger he ran, his friends ran, what do they finally bring he did for the Communist Party? What was the purpose and use of having him in there at all? And here is the answer: In the 1941 convention in Oakland he read off a resolution prepared by Paul Crouch, a resolution that ten other people had put in before that. There is the only thing they say he did for the Communist Party. [8149]

However, they have another method; you might call it a negative basis. "He didn't come out and rap the Communists; he didn't come out and denounce them and say, 'Kick them out of the unions.' He didn't get up and make speeches against Russia, Vishinsky, the Soviet Union. Particularly, he sat down and talked with these people. Even on the witness stand he wouldn't speak against Communists. There is proof that he is a member of the Communist Party." It isn't proof at all. As a matter of fact, it is proof the other way. If Communists trained men as perjurers, trained them to deny their Communist association, then the proper procedure for Harry Bridges would be to get up on the witness stand and lie and denounce them and say, "I hate them. I said they are a lot of rats," and so forth. According to their own philosophy, that would be the proper thing to say. But he doesn't do it. Why doesn't he do it? Any of two or three reasons. First, when he was weak and the Communist Party had some little strength in the ownership of a paper for the dissemination of propaganda, in the waterfront strike of 1934, they lent it to him, and he was grateful for it. He is not an ingrate enough now to come in and repudiate them and denounce the people who were once his friends because they are objects of great assault.

And then there is another little feature: Some people—it is too bad that there are some of them,—some people have gained prominence by kicking the other guy when he was down. The [8150] Communist Party is smashed, broken, beaten to practically nothing; they are denounced in all the press. Every flag-waver and patrioteer has proved what a great patriot he is by telling what a lot of scoundrels the Communists are. But Harry Bridges, powerful though he is, is not going to stamp his foot in the face of the fellow who is down. He is just like the man in the story of William Butler Yeats. He tells of a man who was going to Glenmora. An Irishman was wrapping up his belongings in the taproom one night and some of his friends asked him where he was going. He said, "I am going to Glenmora." They said, "You mean you are going to Glenmora, God willing." He said, "I mean I am going to Glenmora." So God being wroth, reached down and turned him into a frog, picked him up and deposited him in a frog pond and there he lived for seven years. Then God relented, took him out, released him, restored him to his human form, and he went back to the inn and he searched for his belongings again to pack them up once again. And they said, "Where are you going?" and he said, "I am going to Glenmora." And they said, "You mean you are going to Glenmora, God willing." And he said, "I mean I am going to Glenmora, or back to the frog pond."

The Communist Party in the United States, according to the records that are put in here by their own testimony, ran between 50,000 at one low point and 90,000 at its highest point back in 1936, and according to the Attorney General, it had at most 70,000 people. It now amounts to practically nothing. In the [8151] elections when they were at their peak there were 258,000 registered voters in San Francisco. There were 140,000 registered Communists, an insignificant party, only one-half of one per cent of the population of this great powerful country. And a great many of them, of course, are women, and a great many, of course, are elderly people. And that is the organization that we are supposed to be so terrified about that are so insane with their ability to conquer that they are going to overthrow the government by force. Maybe they have that plan, I don't know. If they do, it is an extremely foolish thing. I don't think that this government is particularly afraid of any such thing or that this assault upon the Communist Party has ever really been made upon that ground, for this reason: there is an organization that has been flourishing in this country for many years called the Ku Klux Klan. It is avowedly lawless. It goes and it takes the law in its own hands, beats people, lynches people, burns fiery crosses, and terrifies whole sections of the country. According to their records, they had a million and a half members. That is twenty times the size of the Communist Party. We haven't had any attacks upon them.

Now, let us assume that there has been some proof that this Communist Party intends to overthrow the government by force. We have had some testimony to that effect in here. Ross testified they were. Crouch testified they were. But Ross testified in another hearing that they weren't, and Crouch testified in [8152] another hearing that they were not; that they had no such intention, said the only thing they intended was if they gained the vote of a majority of the people and then if the minority attempted to keep them from introducing socialism, they would have to resist that by force.

I have been wondering for a long time what kind of heroic, insane people Communists must be to have an insignificant party like that talk about overthrowing the United States Government.

I ran across a little story in a book called Natural History of Nonsense, in which a man dissects traditions and folk stories, in which he proved that the lemmings do not run down into the sea at all. He said one of the most easily refuted of this kind of stories is the one in which the dog escapes from a boxcar in Keokuk, Iowa, and two weeks afterward staggers sick and weary into the home of its owner in Oakland, California. He says the refutation of that story can be found by turning the pages of the newspaper to the want ads and reading the ads asking for the return of dogs who obviously could not find their way home from the next block.

Now, these fellows like Johnson and Crouch and other people of that same stable of government witnesses have been running around over this country for several years, Hawaii, New Orleans, San Francisco, and none of them has ever gotten a black eye. We older persons who went through the 1920's, the bootlegging days, will remember how a little handful of bootleggers kept [8153] the country in terror for years. If somebody took the witness stand and testified against them, he would be lucky if he got one foot on the floor of the courtroom before he was cut down with a fusilade of machine gun bullets.

Some of you remember the terror—I am afraid I used to assist them in Ireland—in the good old days when we tried to get rid of the English, how they gave an illustration of what a desperate and determined people will do; and in Israel, the last few years when a handful of determined Jews ran the English out of Israel.

Another thing that Johnson does say: the ordinary person, he says, in the outside Communist movement, the ordinary Communist wouldn't know that it was the intention of the inner steel core to overthrow the government by force. Well, I would like to see the day when the inner steel core would come out and hand a musket to a guy like B. B. Jones and say, "Come on, start marching on Washington." He would say, 'What is this all about? What the you trying to tell us? You had a peaceful method of introducing public ownership. Now you tell us you believe in the overthrow of government by force. We will use the gun on you." The puzzle is it isn't very difficult to reconcile a lot of people with that being true, the Communist Party having that position. Why is it so much the object of this campaign? Well, I think you don't have far to look. Within several years last past, there has been all over the world a great struggle [8154] now between the principles of private ownership and public ownership. The reflections of that struggle exist right here in the United States. There are many people that hold the government should own things; there are many people holding private ownership is the best. We do not have to determine the merits of the controversy.

The United States is far behind, or far ahead, whichever you want to call it, the European countries in such matters. France, for instance, owns not only its railroads and public utilities, but owns the Renault automobile factory and manufactures its own automobiles; it controls the coal and steel industries. Other manufacturing industries within the country. That is true of all the European countries. Of course, over there you see a greater degree of socialism and public ownership. But I was surprised some two or three years ago when Eamon Devalera was out here and made a little public speech. With all due respect to the Auld Sod, it certainly is a rather backward country. And he expressed surprise that the United States had not advanced as far even as Ireland in public ownership.

In this country there is only one state that controls its own power, that owns its own power. That is the state of Nebraska. And just here a few months ago the state of South Dakota passed an enabling law to enable it to buy its power companies because the example of Nebraska was so encouraging for public ownership that that was deemed a proper thing to do. [8155]

The campaign against public ownership, using certain stalking horses as diversions, has made such strides that the agitation for public ownership has decreased rather than increased.

In 1870 the first San Francisco charter was drawn and it contained the provision that one of the fundamental principles of San Francisco was that it would as soon as possible acquire all its public utilities including street railroads. The city of San Francisco now, after eighty years, owns the street railroads and the water distribution, but does not own its gas and electricity and continues to violate the Raker Act of Congress in selling the power that it gets from Hetch Hetchy to the Pacific Gas & Electric Company.

More astounding still, in 1910, William Randolph Hearst ran for mayor of New York on the Socialist ticket. But now there is a great agitation against these things.

The original Roosevelt—when the Democrats took power under Roosevelt, there was a great move toward public ownership—Tennessee Valley Authority, the Grand Coulee Dam; all these great public projects started in to collect the waters and save the power and the waters to be owned by the government. When Roosevelt went out, the trend started the other way, and, as I say, it is without criticism —I don't know nor care which is better, which is more efficient, but the Truman Administration obviously is anti-public ownership. There was eased out of the cabinet within a short time such stalwarts of public ownership as Rexford [8156] Tugwell, Henry Wallace and Harold Ickes. All of these plans stopped. All of the plans for public ownership stopped.

And just within the last week a cooperative housing bill for the government to lend money to persons of the middle income groups so that they could build their own houses was massacred in the United States Senate. Lest the camel should intrude its nose into the tent, the adocates of private ownership, the enemies of public ownership have moved against anything that reflected upon our national health program, or anything that looked like socialism or public housing, not that they were opposed so much to them, but they didn't want to get that principle started in government because they called it paternalistic.

If you go into any doctor's or dentist's office now, you will find heaps of pamphlets now telling you about what a fizzle the health plan is in England. I read one of them one day and was half amused, half ashamed. It advanced as the reason why the health plan in England is so bad that the number of doctors is insufficient to cover the people; that if you went into a doctor's office, you would find a hundred people in there and he has to attend to and you are going to be neglected, whereas with a private doctor he attended you right away. The astonishing part of it is what used to happen to the other 99 under the old system who had tumors and cancers and bacteria running around in their system. The answer is they did. All this is being addressed to you. Your security is involved, [8157] your health is involved, watch out for yourself. Pretty good argument. Unfortunately human nature is selfish; we look to Number One; we are concerned with our own injuries and not that some other poor devil could be cured by part of the care that is lavished upon us.

In this country—and I say again without criticism—90 per cent of the wealth of this country is owned by ten per cent of the population. That isn't bad. Forty years ago five per cent of the population owned that proportion. It is kind of working out a little bit with income taxes, inheritance taxes, and so forth; there is a greater distribution of wealth. But the ten per cent of the people didn't get that wealth by standing around and bleating, and they are not going to lose it, voluntarily or otherwise, without doing something about it.

You can't get up and in and of itself attack public ownership too much. You can't get up and say to people, "You are a lot of fools; you let me run your gas pipe for you; I will do much better than you. Get out of it; let me run it for you. If someone tells you you should own it, he is just a political fellow looking out for his own health." So there is a great campaign going on against public ownership, but not under the guise of being against public ownership, just as this is an assault upon Harry Bridges, but is not an attack upon Harry Bridges in the open until they came popping out like jacks in a box; when the high brass in the CIO want to get rid of a recalcitrant [8158] and insubordinate, through the means of the Immigration Department. The camouflage is put forth in a little different way. Here is how it goes: The "Communists are in favor of public ownership; the Communists point with pride and delight to the achievements of the Soviet Union in that respect; therefore the Communists are friends of the Soviet Union, and therefore anyone who is advocating any of these things the Soviet Union goes in for is a Communist and a friend of the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union is our great national enemy." They build that up by showing that the enemy is there and these people are transpiring together; that anyone who advocates any kind of social advancement is a socialist, therefore a Communist, therefore a friend of the Soviet Union, therefore a traitor, and therefore endangering your security. If you don't have public ownership and these projects that the Roosevelt Administration put in, these public works, you have unemployment and you have depression.

There is one answer to that. Keep the armament industries moving, build up and keep a big fleet and send arms and ammunitions all over the earth; sell them all over wherever they can be sold. And then we go and we build bases in Iran and Iraq and Greenland and Korea and all around the Soviet Union we have these military bases. Well, we are only doing it to protect ourselves; that is our first line of defense, and if Harry Bridges says this shouldn't be done, that we should stop antagonizing Russia, then he is a friend of Russia. After [8159] all, the government is only our employee, we put them in to carry out our wishes.

If your little boy is having a squabble with the McCoy kid next door and it is liable to lead to an open feud between you and that family, it won't do you any good for you to go over and tell old man McCoy to stop his kid from starting fights with your boy. You better get hold of your own kid and say, "I don't know what the trouble is, but you stop it, because I don't want to be boxing old man McCoy out here on the street corner some day."

Let me read you a little document that almost formed the basis of the foreign policy of this country, and you can gather yourself in a moment how close it came to being the foreign policy. If you will listen to it, first, then I will tell you who said it. It was said on March 8, 1949, two months before Harry Bridges was indicted.

> "So far as it is humanly possible to judge, the Soviet Government, under conditions now prevailing, does not contemplate the use of war as an instrument of its national policy. I do not know any responsible high official, military or civilian, in this government or any government, who believes that the Soviet State now plans conquest by open military aggression.
> "It can be assumed that the Soviet State would use their Red Army if its leaders felt that their homeland was [8160] imminently and seriously menaced. That is why in our statement on Soviet-American relations made two and one half years ago we (the churchmen) said that the United States should not seek military bases so close to the Soviet Union as to carry an offensive threat that is disportionate to the defensive value.
> "That is why our fellowship with the peoples of Western Europe and particularly of Scandinavia ought not to seem to bring the United > States' military might directly to Russia's border.

> "It would indeed involve a high tribute to Soviet leaders to assume that under these circumstances they would exercise more self-control than would our people under comparable circumstances, as for example, if the Soviet Union had military arrangements with a country at our border."

That was published in the New York Herald Tribune on March 9, 1949. That was part of an important keynote address made by John Foster Dulles at the Federal Council of Churches of Christ meeting in Cleveland on March 8, 1949. And if Dewey had been elected in 1948 instead of Truman. John Foster Dulles would now be Secretary of State and that would be the keystone of the arch of American foreign policy. There is a reasoning man who knows what he is talking about, and a great many people feel that way. Whether they are right or not, they are entitled to [8161] feel that way. I wouldn't be so free as to suggest that solution if we did not have numerous historic parallels to illustrate and confirm it.

You know, originally all the radicals were Americans, and the ringing phrase, "All men are born free and equal," was more radical, more disconcerting and more shocking to say than any phrase that "people should own the means and instruments of production ad distribution" is now. That phrase emanated from the backwoods of America. went out over the whole world and was the thing that dropped kings off their thrones and made people all over the globe advance politically, socially and economically./ It stirred up the Irish to that terrible tragic struggle in 1789 that was led by Richard Brinsley Sheridan; that sent Kosciusko to his death; it toppled the rotten and corrupt French monarchy that had exploited and betrayed the people of France for centuries. Then it spread across into England itself, who could more easily be excited by the fires of freedom than their continental neighbors. In 1790 Pitt was prime minister of England and the Whigs were in power. They owned all the means of production, the factories throughout England. They had taken away some of the authority from the Tories, but they by no means intended to defeat the English peasantry. The working conditions in the English factories were notorious and terrible, and there was agitation for laws that would ameliorate the conditions. The [8162] Whigs were determined to prevent the passage of these laws. So they used the French Revolution first, then the Napoleonic wars, as a means of preventing that. The people who had been agitating for the French Revolution and people who were agitating for universal manhood suffrage were lumped with people who were agitating for the French Revolution. They were charged with sedition, being subverters of the peace and security of the nation; that they were conspiring to overthrow the British constitution.

Edmund Burke was the mouthpiece for Pitt. As they couldn't say anything against the English working man or the honest English peasant, or say that giving him a vote was something that would be doing a wrong thing, they popped over to France and took as a stalking horse to shoot at this working man that France was a cannibal island republic; a nation of murderers and atheists —atheistic France; they were plotting to come over to England and overthrow this country; those scoundrels who were agitating for universal manhood suffrage as a means of overthrowing our nation were just tools of France; they were getting ready to pour in in great numbers into England, and they would immediately be pending from the nearest lamppost. Indictments poured out. The best men were placed on trial. Thomas Paine was condemned in absentia. Muir and Morris Margarot and other men of worth and courage were persecuted. * * *

As Buckle says in his History of Civilization, the jurors [8163] were bribed, witnesses were suborned, perjury was purchased, judges appointed by the crown, directed verdicts against the defendants, insulted them and upbraided their counsel. Lawyers were afraid to go into court. A stable of hired witnesses similar to the Crouch-Johnson gang was maintained in London who went over the four nations of the kingdom testifying against these seditionists. The conduct of some of the judges has come down to us as examples to be avoided. For one, there was a Lord Brachtsfield, a Scotchman, who had so thick a burr he was hard to understand. When Thomas Muir was on trial for sedition for advocating that every man adult should be allowed to vote whether he owned $5,000 worth of property or not, he was arrested and tried for sedition. He wasn't even allowed a lawyer. He couldn't get a lawyer. They were terrified. In the course of his argument, he said, "After all, Christ himself was a reformer." Brachtsfield glowered down from the bench, "What good did it do him? He was hanged." Muir was sentenced to the Barbadoes, and the French sent a privateer to intercept the ship. George Washington, Benjamin Franklin and a number of other patriotic Americans, privately and secretly, plotted and outfitted a privateer in Boston, intercepted the French ship at the Barbadoes, rescued Muir, took him off and took him around the Horn and landed him on the shores of California.

There was Morris Margarot.

Brachtsfield asked him, "Have you counsel, mon?" "No." [8164]

"Do you want one appointed?" "No, but it might be an aid if you gave me an interpreter to help me understand what you are saying."

Finally, the tide was broken by one thing. The juries refused to convict. The evidence was the same, the judges were the same, the type of prosecution and the juries were the same. Finally the jurors said, "We are through with this," and the first turn in it was when a man named John Warren Took was acquitted in London. I always recall one story about him. George III, the king, asked him: "Do you play cards, Mr. Took?" "No, sir, I have no aptitude for cards," he said, "I could never tell the king from a knave."

But by these campaigns the great industrialists in England prevented universal manhood suffrage for forty years.

And the curious condition, the curious situation is that the people of the nation that inspired and fired all those people are now themselves frightened, conservative, and reactionary. That is a fable that is fed to our people.

We used to be the haven for the oppressed people of other nations. Priestley, discoverer of oxygen, a great chemist and one of the benefactors of the human race, finally made the mistake of sticking his nose into politics and he started to advocate universal manhood suffrage, addressed a meeting of the people.

Anatole France says: [8165]

Priestley was an example of that. The people started cat-calling, and reviling the man who was trying to help them. He escaped over the back fence, hurried home, wrecked his physics laboratory, rushed off to the seacoast and got on a boat, came to the United States and never again had anything to do with physics, chemistry or politics.

Now, we see people up here kind of surprised at Betty Teixeira. Her mother is a Daughter of the American Revolution. Ben Jones' grandfather fought in the Civil War. Here is an amazing little touch. That little Jane Murray, her mother is a Daughter of the American Revolution, and she wouldn't let us ask her that. She is ashamed of it. She is ashamed of it for the weirdest reason. It seems that that organization has a beautiful marble structure down in Washington, D. C., an auditorium. A couple of years ago the Daughters of the American Revolution would not allow that auditorium to be used by a singer named Marian Anderson because she is a Negro. So Jean Murray is ashamed of it.

But the quest for justice on the earth certainly leads one to strange abysses. [8166]

On her statement about the government and so forth, she is not alone in that. There is a wonderful man here in the United States, Theodore Parker, a Unitarian. He is a lance in the forefront of every cause for the advancement of humanity, the struggle for equality. He used to quote Plato's apothegm that justice is the interest of the strong. And he also pointed out that the government and the courts were being used by the persons in power.

And around this time another man, Brooks Adams, famous lawyer and writer, said that this country, having a strong anti-militaristic bias, the powerful and the wealthy used the courts as their Swiss Guards, their only concern being whether it was cheaper to bribe or to coerce. Parker's grandfather was the Captain John Parker who led the Minute Men at the Battle of Lexington. And Brooks Adams was the great grandson of John Adams, the second president of the United States.

There used to be an organization of people in this country, not too long ago, and they were called "subverters of the public peace, destroyers of the government, and overthrowers of our Constitution," the greatest Constitution that ever has been, and the highest example of man's intellectual achievement since the world began. They were claimed to be stirring up race and class hatred, that they had a lust for power, they were trying to interfere with the national distribution of things as God saw it, and with the relationship that people naturally bore to [8167] each other. One of them was taken out of his printing office, his presses were thrown into the Ohio River, and he was lynched in the State of Ohio—hanged by the neck until he was dead. Another of them was dragged through the streets of Boston by a mob with a rope around his neck, and reluctantly rescued by the police. Who were they? The Abolitionists. The people who a few years before the Civil War were advocating the abolition of salvery in the land of the free.

Shall we take the recess?

The Court: Yes, we will take the morning recess, ladies and gentlemen; the same admonition to you not to discuss the case.

(Recess). [8168]

Mr. Hallinan: Finally, and to finish this phase, the one man started the agitation that was most successful, and he was an old New England fellow who looked like a Baptist preacher—thin, gray hair and glasses, tall, shambling fellow. He started a newspaper called The Liberator, and his motto was, "I am not afraid, I am sincere, I will not retreat a single inch and I will be heard." His name was David Lloyd Garrison, and he was the man who was dragged through the streets of Boston with a rope around his neck.

But while he was being dragged through them, there was a young man watching this, a young man of aristocratic lineage—ruffles of lace at his throat, elegantly dressed, fine, handsome man—a young Boston lawyer. He surveyed this, and it exicted in him some concern and apprehension for what this meant. When he went to his home, he started to make a study of the background of all this controversy. His name was Wendell Phillips. He came to the realization that men were being enslaved for the economic benefit not only of those who owned them but the merchants in the north who dealt with them and were dependent upon the Southern slave traders. He started out on a campaign—a man of great courage and force and eloquence, so that someone said of him that when he spoke, the air seemed to be full of stars.

There were people who spoke against Wendell Phillips. One of them was Daniel Webster. When the United States Supreme [8169] Court held, in the Dred Scott decision, that ~~the~~ fugitive slave act was constitutional~~, that~~ if a man set his feet on free territory he was not free, he was but a chattel and could be returned, Garrison took a copy of the American Constitution out and burned it in the Boston Common and said, "If that is what it means, it is a pact with death and a covenant with Hell." They weren't being tied to any parchment or paper or written words.

But Daniel Webster got up and made a speech sustaining the decision and urging the people of the North to fall in with this matter.

But Ralph Waldo Emerson, the elegant, the erudite, the Plato of New England, described Daniel Webster and exposed all of his shallow brilliance in one terrible, cutting sentence that I won't repeat here, because despite the fact that it came from a man like Emerson, it contains a vulgarism that might cause the lady to stiffen again, as the gentleman tells me, and I will tell you what it was afterwards if you wish to know.

But Wendell Phillips carried on and was finally the driving force that led to such agitation that ultimately another old American, whose ancestor was one of the passengers on the original trip of the Mayflower, John Brown of Ossawatomie, gathered twenty-one other souls like himself and engaged in the fantastic and incredible adventure of seizing the Federal arsenal at Harpers Ferry and calling on the armed revolt. [8170] Something that he couldn't stand any more. And, of course, he failed, and after sufficient of his men had been killed, the remaining seven were captured. They were all hanged from the same gallows. It must have been a kind of bitter thing for old John Brown to look out there and see fronting him a handsome and elegant man, still in the uniform of a colonel of American cavalry, seated upon a great steed—the man who had led the attack that defeated him and his followers and led to their capture, and reflect that back there in the shambles of Harpers Ferry lay the dead bodies of two of his own sons. And the elegant man who was sitting out there in six years was to be cursed as a traitor, a rebel. He was Robert E. Lee. And the men of the North were marching to the tune of "John Brown's Body."

When that cause had been finished and laid away, Phillips had become an old man. And then they started up a new sort of agitation. That agitation which we call trade unionism. Something to alleviate, now, the condition of the white slaves. And a couple of the old abolitionists were together discussing it, and one of them said, "Well," he said, "I have burned out my life on these causes, and I haven't it in me any more." Phillips said to him, "Well, you are right. Go you in and sit by the fire," he said, "but I propose to go out in the brush." Those were Americans, not Russians or foreigners. And the background of all this agitation about the Constitution and its [8171] sacredness, and the flag waving, all that came from the money background of the people who profited in the institution of slavery.

And in our own times, I have read of fine women who went out and paraded in picket lines in front of the White House and were catcalled and stoned and thrown in jail. Susan B. Anthony, Carp Chapman Catt, Sylvia Tankhurst, in my youth were names of derision, infamy. Why? Because they were trying to emancipate from political serfdom half the people of the United States. In other words, they were advocating woman suffrage. And the opposition to them ran into this seditious line, too. Why? Why did anyone want to keep women from having suffrage? There was a good reason for that, too. The chief agitation came from the mill owners, who were afraid that if the women got the vote the first thing they would do would be to advocate the abolition of child labor in the United States. Well, they needn't have concerned themselves; women are constitutionally more conservative than men. They have had the vote now for a long time, and for fifty years a constitutional amendment against child labor has been kicking around in the State Legislatures in this country, and it hasn't any more chance of being passed now than it did when it was first enacted.

In all these matters, however, union matters, woman suffrage, the lamentable people are the free riders. You know, [8172] there are all kinds of people who accept the blessings, the advances that have been achieved, as something that they sort of fell into naturally, without any notion that those things were won for them by the sacrifices of other people, and who accept them not only without any gratitude and without any intention of doing something in their turn to benefit some other fellow, but even with a certain contempt for the people who fought and suffered to get them the exact things that they wanted. And many a proud banner has trailed in the dust of a beaten and stricken field, through the apathy of the people that the cause was being fought for.

I have known all sorts of people—well, we have the example here in picking the jury of the young bank clerk who was here. He has a certain contempt for labor unions. Violent; the strikes were unnecessary. If he had lived long enough in the past, he would have been working fourteen hours a day for $60 a month, six days a week. If it hadn't been for the fight and the struggle of dock workers and stevedores and streetcar men and fellows a little more violent than the people that sit at the desks.

And I have known young ladies, stenographers, getting a couple of hundred dollars a month and working five days a week, look with contempt upon a picket line of girls outside a store, girls who are trying to raise their wages. And they look with contempt upon a picket line outside a telephone exchange, not realizing that the five days that this young woman is working [8173] now and the $200 a month that she is getting, although she is not a member of a union and although she is a member of an unorganized group of workers, was actually won for her by the people who went out and suffered and starved and made themselves ridiculous and got themselves catcalled and imprisoned on the pavements in front of the retail stores and the telephone exchanges. All sorts of people that refuse to concede that they are members of the working class themselves. They are the sort of people who will favor Stanford to beat California because it sounds like the swanky thing to do. They are the free riders, the fellows who go along. And then when the advance guard is beaten and smashed, then that fellow starts wondering why his wages start being cut down, and he is educated out of making any resistance.

You know, something like that has happened to the British working people. The British working people were those who stood up first and foremost for the freedom and equality of mankind. The English working people were a wonderful race. The English people have fallen victim to the curse that is contained in those lines.

"Ill fares the land, to hasten ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay;
Princes and lords may flourish or may fade;
A breath can make them, as a breath has made.
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
When once destroyed, can never be supplied."

In the 1790s to 1870s the leaders of the English Labor Party were arrested, indicted, sentenced to imprisonment and sent out to Van Diemen's Land, to Australia, New Zealand and places like that, with the result that the English labor class of today are smaller, weaker, and have not half the courage of the laboring classes in Australia and in New Zealand, who are big, strong men and tough men, and men of spirit and men who still fight for their rights. [8174-A]

And aside from what profit might stem to himself, there is a little poem written by a man who wrote while he was in jail, and he was called the Poet of the IWW. I suppose it is a bad thing even to mention such organizations in this court. Here is what he said. He said:

"Mourn not the dead who in the cool earth lie,
Dust unto dust,
Of calm, sweet earth that mothers all who die,
As all men must.
Mourn not your captain, comrades, who must dwell,
Too strong to strive,
Within steelbound coffins
Of a well-buried life.
But rather mourn the pathetic throng,
The cowed, the meek,
Who see the world's great anguish and its wrong,
And dare not speak."

The conditions, let us say, 150 years ago of the working classes in industrial countries like England was such as to excite the horror of people today. I have a friend, a very, very fine man. He is a famous moving picture director—you know, handsome, talented and, might be expected, in his position he has been the objective of the solicitations for friendship of the wittiest, cleverest men and the affection of the most beautiful women in the world. His life is one of gaiety. He basked in this effulgence which was centered upon him and he enjoyed the fine things that he ate and the fine company that he kept, all the things that went with it—a man of fine character, but interested in the joys and happinesses of life. [8175]

A war came along and he became an officer in the United States Army. He was a lieutenant colonel. He was in charge of the photographic detail, and went right behind the spearheads of the Army to recount for posterity the achievements of their armies and the dramatic events that were happening.

One day his command stopped at a railroad siding. On two or three lines of railroads were those type of boxcars called gondolas, stretching off into the distance, and the men were gazing with horror into those cars. They were full of the wasted, emaciated bodies of dead men, women and children. The American Army had arrived at the gates of the concentration camp at Dachau. Anon, from the mass of poor humanity that was lying there, a groan would sometimes escape from someone not yet dead, or more terrible still, some form would rear itself briefly from the mass of cadavers and then fall back whence it had come. The army proceeded into the concentration camp. That man returned to the United States after the war was over and he took up his life where he had dropped it. He started in with the same people, in the same activities, but they no longer had, and they never have had since, any content of pleasure or contentment. He does not care about them any more. There has entered into him something of the tragic sense of life. I do not know how it has affected the members of this jury, but if people like Mr. MacInnis and myself, who thought we knew something about what went on, and I know from [8176] others who have been present here, this Bridges case has been a terrible awakening. It has brought to their minds something of the brutality of existence, something of the concept and recognition of man's inhumanity to man. The struggle for emancipation, the struggle to get some of the things that one would think everyone was entitled to. From whom do they come? Again from our witnesses? No.

Schomaker: A man had been killed by the speedup, the excessive loads. Do we have to recount again the shapeup? The degradation of men appearing in the wet, cold, at five o'clock in the morning, and the hungriest getting the jobs because they could afford it; they turned back the largest amount to the people employing them. Wages, $10 a week, sellout by the leaders of the workers, the police riding down and clubbing the men who were trying to correct those conditions, pumping tear-gas into their halls to drive out those who had been wounded; two men shot in the back and left dying on the pavement.

Schrimpf: The terrible conditions on the waterfront. A little vignette of his experience that illustrates it more than anything else, the insult from the straw boss, being driven from the dock, from the shelter of it out into the cold and the rain, and he stood and leaned against a boxcar and cried. "I cried."

And the victory? What did it give them? A sense of security. What did Robertson say they sought? A sense of security. [8177] Always a sense of security. How about what Hancock had to say? Arrested and imprisoned for turning the water on for people too poor to pay their bills; two workers shot in his vicinity; a group of agricultural workers assembled in a hall to discuss their grievances; suddenly they are surrounded by a band of men with black bands on their arms; armed with pickax handles and an armed deputy standing by to protect them. And he said, "I will never forget the sound of the crack of those pickax handles on the skulls of the people in the hall." Fifteen cents an hour they were paying those people. If a man worked ten hours a day, thirty days a month, he could make $45 a month to support himself and his children. He is arrested and imprisoned for his activities, not the vigilantes, and they come out and burn a cross and leave a box with a noose in it as an indication of what might happen to him. Up in Santa Rosa, he says, some of the strike leaders were taken out and tarred and feathered. Down where he was Grover Johnson, the son of Hiram Johnson, the ex-governor of the State, is taken out, beaten up on the steps of the courthouse, driven out into the desert, his shoes taken off, turned loose and his car run into the river. And they talk about trade unionism and what the workers do and all these things, how they have been gotten by peaceful evolution and by a recognition of mankind, what he owes his brother? Not at all. They have all been gotten in the same kind of struggle. [8178]

After the agitation for universal manhood suffrage had made such progress that something had to be done about the factory laws, the English Parliament appointed inspectors to view these matters. You should read some of the documents. The men tried to make them as statistical, cold and impersonal as possible, but they couldn't.

In the Welsh mines, says one of them—and you will find this not in any Communist literature but in a very interesting and amusing and exciting series of documents that I would recommend anyone to read by Justin McCarthy, a member of Parliament and a Tory, a great upholder of Queen Victoria,—he wrote a history called "The History of Our Own Times," and he gives the improvement of conditions of working people and he quotes some of the reports made by the English factory inspectors. For instance, that in the Welsh mines the veins of coal were small, so it was not deemed economically advisable to open passages that were too large; so the workmen, the women workers there would go down on their hands and knees, they had a strap around their neck running down to the middle, and then a chain running between their legs, which was attached to the little car, and they would creep through the passages on their hands and knees dragging the coal-laden car after them.

And they say of another incident, little children four, five and six years of age, are dragged from their squalid couches at five o'clock in the morning and sent to work ten or twelve [8179] hours a day in the Birmingham cotton mills. That was the thing that they were up against.

When we were in the first year of law school we received instruction upon criminal law, and among them was one of the issues that confront you ladies and gentlemen, the matter of conspiracy.

There was the celebrated case called the case of the six carpenters, and it was shown that where these six men had conspired together to commit an atrocious crime and that one of them had carried on the overt act that led to the consummation of this crime, but nevertheless the other four who participated with them and encouraged them were just as guilty as they were, and all six were sentenced to penal servitude for life, and the crime that they were committing was the formation of a labor union. That is less than one hundred years ago.

Gradually the agitation became such that there were changes made. People wrote terrible, bitter and biting things. There was one little poem and it had a line in it which said, "The golf course runs close by the mill, and almost every day the little children can look out and see the men at play."

Of course, those were other times, other places. Those conditions, I assume, scarcely deserve thought today. But then there are other little things of less importance. About six months ago I saw a photograph in a big, nationally distributed magazine, a very artistic thing. The photographer, while showing the whole scene, had concentrated his lens upon one [8180] little ~~central~~ object in it that gave a sort of touch of drama to it, and yet his camera had included a whole portion of a great city; and the object that he had focused his attention on was just a little child, a little child. And he was doing the strangest thing. He was sleeping. He was lying asleep, and he had chosen the strangest place for his nap. He was on the sidewalk, just off the curb of the street. There he lay with his hand on his face, and outside the limousines were going by with liveried chauffeurs delivering well-groomed men and magnificiently-gowned women to the great shops filled with luxuries and objects of adornment on the other side of the street. People were hurrying by, busy on their chase after wealth and power. Nobody noticed the little boy. The reason they didn't notice him was it was a very common sight; it was an everyday scene in the street. The world passed by. There was a little Chinese boy, about four, maybe five, years old, a beautiful little child, a little round face, and his long lashes made lovely crescents above the curve of his cheek. And it was kind of strange that nobody noticed that little boy. It was strange that everybody went by without paying attention to him, because all the time he was lying there, there was coming from him a strange sound, a sort of voiceless cry, a loud and bitter cry that soared above all the luxuries and all the scene of opulence and despair and ringing against the gates of [8181] Heaven demanding vengeance for the wrongs and injustices of life. Because he was not sleeping at all, my friends, he was dead. He was dead of starvation in the streets of Hong Kong.

Well, that is only one person, isn't it? My boys have a moving picture camera and a projector that shows lovely pictures upon the silver screen, and they were asking advice about documentary films that were available to them, and they produced a letter from the persons who edit Time and Life. Those magazines are run by Clare Booth Luce and her husband, extremely reactionary people. They are not talking for the benefit of the downtrodden and the oppressed. If you want to find out how much money is being spent in this country in the great fight against public ownership, in erecting stalking horses across the land—I had an experience the other day. I bought Newsletter, Reader's Digest and Time and started to read them. At least a third of them were devoted to tirades against public ownership, Communism, Communists, Russia, anything—the camel's nose is being kicked out of the tent as hard as it can be, and the people who were publishing those were not doing it out of any sense of public duty. The magazines were being paid for it. [8182]

Well, the United Nations Film Board hired the March of Time film organization to make a film for it. It is a 16mm. sound black and white, available for purchase or rental at $55 per print. At the March of Time, Forum Films, 369 Lexington Avenue, New York City. "The United Nations Film Board presents: "Battle for Bread." And then it says, "Produced by the March of Time under supervision of the United Nations with the cooperation of F.A.C." And here is the advertisement for it:

"Half the people of the world are starving—not starving to death—just plain starving. This is the United Nations' report on how the food and agriculture organization is beginning to solve the tremendous problem of doubling the world's output of food."

Half the people of the world are starving! Of course they are starving in India and China, poor places like that. They are ~~not~~ starving in the United States of America or in California.

On December the 11th, 1949, the San Francisco Examiner started the publication of a discussion of conditions in that same valley that Hancock testified to.

"Dr. J. J. Bocian, pathologist at Fresno Community Hospital, scribbled his autopsy report on the latest infant death in a San Joaquin Valley cotton camp.

"The body of this four and a half months old female child appears as that of one only two weeks old, with the [8183] skin markedly wrinkled due to weight loss * * *

"Malnutrition must be accepted as the final cause of death.

"His report caused no great stir, malnutrition being a term in common usage in the six cotton counties.

"This child died in a migrant labor camp at Huron in western Fresno County. She was the eleventh recorded 'malnutrition' victim in Fresno, Kings and Kern Counties this fall.

"A couple of the earlier deaths were attributed by the authorities to 'starvation,' but that term is in disfavor.

"These babies did not 'starve,' but poverty, ignorance and neglect left them 'imperfectly or improperly nourished,' in the midst of plenty * * *

"Whose problem is this?

"Many of the southern valley's 117,000 transient farm laborers are illiterate or semi-literate dustbowlers, Mexicans and negroes, incapable of caring for themselves."

In other words, at 15 cents an hour, they can't take care of themselves or their babies.

"These thousands of society's least well equipped eke out a hand-to-mouth existence most of the year and become public wards in the agricultural off-season."

Of course, my friends, except for the dustbowlers who are only [8184] Okies, we can relieve ourselves from any contact with those people or from projecting our own selves into it. Because after all, they are Mexicans and Negroes; they are people with more pigment in their skin than we have, and so they are of a different type. Those 11 little children that starved to death last fall in 1949 in San Joaquin Valley, the richest valley in the world, within easy distance of where we are sitting assembled here today, are only the children of migrant workers and dustbowlers. So who cares? What differences does it make? The little child that had gone down to four and a half pounds and looked like a child of two weeks old; who cares? Possibly she who held her darling little babe in her arms and watched it wither and perish before her eyes—but no one else.

"And by and by the baby died
And they buried it in the pauper's side of the yard.
Only the mother cried for the poor beggar babe

Who used to cling to her lonely breast and kiss her cheek
Ere it sank to rest like a little bird in a happy nest.
Poor little beggar babe!"

And one of the reasons it is out in the forefront now is that Governor Warren is running for reelection. And he came out with a brave fanfare, so that everyone must congratulate him. I saw the headline, "Warren Welcomes Communist Opposition." Why, that is a brave position for any politician to make; with 140 votes here in San Francisco, he might take the chance of [8185] sacrificing the entire bloc.

But his opponent, who happens to be a Roosevelt, says, "How much of the deaths of the 13 children that died last year in the San Joaquin Valley, Governor, will you acknowledge should be laid at the door of the government of the state of California?" and one of the newspapers who was supporting Governor Warren repudiated that. It came out with a document called "Foul ball in the first inning":

> "The charge of James Roosevelt, made recently at Santa Cruz, that the Republican administration in Sacramento was responsible for the starvation deaths of 13 children in San Joaquin Valley, was as blatant a piece of demagogery as we have encountered in years."

And then they go on to explain that Roosevelt had no right to say in the midst of a bumper crop that we find 13 children dying in San Joaquin Valley of starvation, in our fruitful interior valley. The paper says they didn't die of starvation, they died of "malnutrition." In other words, they didn't starve, but they died because they couldn't get enough to eat.

And down in that same section on March 16th, just this month, "Hungry Rabbit Killer Begins Jail Sentence":

> "Corcoran, March 16. An unemployed farm worker today began a 50-day jail sentence imposed when he shot a rabbit out of season so he could feed his hungry wife and child. Morris Hay, 26, of Corcoran, was given the [8186] jail sentence in lieu of a $100 fine he could not pay. The sentence was imposed by Justice of the Peace W. I. Nonhof."

And let's not forget this, that Franklin Delano Roosevelt said at one time that one-third of the people of the United States are inadequately fed, clothed and housed. In other words, one-third of our co-citizens are hungry and cold. And there are 3½ million people residing in this country over 65 years of age who have no income at all—wages, pensions, care, anything else.

Now, what has that to do with this case? Well, we don't want to send the boys back east with their carpetbags empty, so we might make a couple of suggestions to them.

Down in Tennessee about a fifth of the people vote. The state is overrun with pellagra, hookworm disease, poverty, ignorance, discrimination. It is against the law to teach the Darwinian theory of evolution there. I invite you, sir, to return to your own domain and see what you can do about it. It will be much more important than knowing these three fine men.

Up on the East Coast, sir, they have been concealing for a long time the Irish Catholic—I am ashamed to say it because I am an Irish Catholic—hooliganism and anti-Semitism, rampant in Boston. On Thursday, November 17, 1949, this item was carried over the country:

> "Lynn, Massachusetts. Larry Goldstein, 11, was beaten and kicked into a gutter by other boys because he is a Jew. Today his mother, Mrs. Sylvia Goldstein, invited someone [8187] to answer her son's question, 'Mama, why did my daddy have to die?' Larry's father died in combat November 20, 1944, with the Second Armored Infantry, 41st Division, fighting against Nazi Germany."

Here is an excerpt from Pravda?—saying, "Washington * * * disgrace to the nation." Surprised? No, it is not Russian, it is from the San Francisco Chronicle, a reprint of an article running in the Woman's Home Companion. It is dated Friday, January 20, 1950, and here is what it says:

> "Everybody knows that America is the world's finest democracy, but behind the beautiful facade of the nation's capitol lies squalor —bigotry—political slavery.

"Washington, the nation's capital, has hidden long enough beneath its glistening white facades as America's show window, democracy's living monument the world over. What is the capital city really like? Let's take a tour no sightseer ever took.

"We'll find slums so vile that Michigan's Senator Homer Ferguson, after he saw them, scrubbed his hands and said, 'But you can't scrub out your soul after sights like these.' We'll see men with trousers rolled up to avoid the vermin and women carrying sticks to protect them against rats. We'll find a city touted as the heart of democracy—with its one million people deprived of the right to vote. Worse, we'll find a dread lest democracy [8188] be turned loose in the District of Columbia and drive out special privilege.

"We'll find city hospital facilities so bad that doctors and nurses all but weep at what their patients suffer. At Gallinger, Washington's big city hospital, we'll see a man virtually rotting to death because facilities for his proper treatment are lacking. We'll find a Jim Crow town. In the citadel of democracy we'll see Americans barred from restaurants, hotels, movies, hospitals and schools because of the color of their skin. This is the lame-duck District of Columbia, governed by a Congress which is too busy pleasing the folks back home to give two hoots about a million voteless people on the Potomac.

"The District of Columbia contains more than a hundred thousand dwellings. Of these, reports the National Capital Housing Authority, forty-four thousand are substandard. Nearly half of the dwellings in the capital of the richest nation on earth do not meet civilized standards of safety, health and fitness for human habitation. 'In these squalid slums,' reports Dr. Leonard A. Scheele, surgeon general of the U. S. Public Health Service, 'the tuberculosis death rate is 99 per cent higher than for the rest of the population, the pneumonia rate 25 per cent higher.'

"Perhaps you have been to Washington. Perhaps, as I did, you regarded Washington as a city of beauty and [8189] inspiration. The illusion smashed abruptly for me. I was touring Washington in a police scout car. Suddenly it turned off one of the large open streets, nosed into an alleyway. 'Like going through a rathole, eh?' one officer joked. My eyes darted over rows of filthy, tumbledown shacks, with people swarming in and out of them; unpainted gray boards and sagging walls; a litter of garbage and bones, with scavenging dogs and cats and buzzing clouds of flies.

"It was the center of a city block, hollowed out to make a slum. You could walk around that block for days and never dream such a rotten inner core existed. 'But I had no idea Washington had slums like these,' I said. 'Nobody does. They're hidden,' replied the policeman. I came to know dozens of other rotten hollow cores of city blocks that look respectable on the outside. I found rats so abundant that I learned to flush them by tapping a stick ahead of me as I walked up dark, smelly stairways.

"Would you expect to find outhouses in Washington, D. C.—within sight of the Capitol? The courts and alleys are full of rows of ramshackle privies, some with slats broken out and doors that don't close, sitting in the garbage-cluttered backyards, emitting a horrible stench. The slum dwellings, occupied by Negroes mostly, have neither steam heat nor running water. Kerosene lamps and [8190] candles provide light; coal stoves provide heat—for those who can afford to buy coal. In the yards there are water spigots, one to half a dozen families. Some are cross-connected with toilet plumbing so that there is no telling when bacteria from the toilet wastes pour out in the drinking water.

"Senator Ferguson, during his tour of the slums, blurted in astonishment, 'Aren't there any health laws?' 'No, Senator, there is no modern plumbing and sanitation code in Washington. The Housing Authority drew one up ten years ago. It would have ruled these slums off the map. But for ten years the code has gathered dust in the District Commissioner's desks. Meanwhile, the district clinic must continue treating the babies who are brought in with festering red holes on their fingers and foreheads—rat bites.'

"Gallinger is Washington's only city hospital. It has fifteen hundred beds—for a city of one million.

It is forced to pack the pneumonia cases so close together they cross infect one another. 'We don't have enough anesthetists to keep our surgical services going,' reports Dr. Joseph Fazekas, chief of staff. 'Patients who need elective surgery just don't get it.' A doctor described the X-ray department as 'the worst equipped I've seen in any hospital.' Last August the American Medical [8191] Association refused to O. K. it for residency training.

"The hospital is so short of drugs that Dr. Fazekas must beg for handouts from the large drug companies. Nurses have impossible loads—up to sixty patients. One nurse said, 'We don't even know what's ailing some of the patients. We haven't time to find out.' The staff wants to change Gallinger's name to 'The Nation's Capital Hospital.' Why? 'Because that might shame somebody into doing something,' Dr. Fazekas explains."

Read the rest of it (handing to Mr. Donohue).

The Court: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, at our brief conference in chambers this morning, Mr. Hallinan assured the Court, and I in turn assure the jury, that his argument and discussion will have been completed at 3:00 o'clock this afternoon. Thereafter, according to the time schedule we worked out, Mr. MacInnis will take up his argument on behalf of Mr. Robertson and Mr. Schmidt. Thereafter the government will close their arguments, according to the schedule we have worked out, and it is hoped and it is our expectation that the Court will charge this jury as to the law on Friday morning next. I thought you would be interested in that general outline, to the end that you may be guided accordingly in your home life and your other matters. Thank you.

The same admonition to you.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to 2:00 o'clock p.m.) [8192]

Afternoon Session—Monday, March 27, 1950

Mr. Hallinan: Now, what is the role, my friends, that Harry Bridges plays that parallels any of the incidents that we have discussed? Well, he has been the William Lloyd Garrison and the Wendell Phillips and the J. B. Priestley in the emancipation of the workers of the maritime trades on the Pacific Coast.

The conditions we have described exist because amelioration of them will cost somebody money. The conditions that existed in the past that were won by the sacrifices of men like Harry Bridges required those sacrifices because getting rid of them cost somebody money. The spear-head is the one that suffers.

We are told, relayed to us by Mr. Clark, that Harry Bridges is a bad influence among labor. Well, he is. He is. He has taken away from them their degradation, their willingness to be treated as they have been treated. He went down on the waterfront and he dried Henry Schrimpf's tears. He went around among those other men, degraded, mistreated as they were proved to be from the mouths of their own witnesses, and he raised them up to some human dignity, some belief and some pleasure out of life with the one word, "Organize." "Organize" has been the yeast, the ferment, the enzyme; not any strength in himself, but showing people how by their united strength they can do something to benefit themselves and gain some of the things that they are entitled to. [8193]

He has been one of the leaders in the struggle for equality. He was like Rienzi, a Roman going down into the forum saying, "Rouse ye, Romans; rouse yourselves! Why should Romans who ask for justice be answered by the lash?"

Of course, he will tell us these things would have come about anyhow. Well, they would not; they would not. Regardless of how you may feel, how moderate you may be yourself, protect the gadfly. There is no progress without it. The troublemaker, the fellow who is willing to go out and take the shafts and blows himself, is the necessary one. What is needed, you know, is the man who will rush into the breach while it is still not filled, who will plant the banner in there on the highest peak. When the fort has finally fallen, there are plenty who will rush in and take the banner from his dead hands and plant it on the highest point of the citadel.

What, my friends, is the answer? Mr. Donohue says he was looking for power; he wants power for himself. He started out by apparently professing to work for money, but when that is brought in, if your Honor please, and his pay envelope shows his pay received and his expenses, this man who is working fourteen and fifteen hours a day, he was getting less money than Schrimpf was as walking boss. So it had to be something else. It was power; he was looking for power.

When he was poor back in 1934 and could have gotten any bribe that he wanted, $50,000 he was offered and it would have [8194] been small, to throw the waterfront strike, he turned it down. What do you think he could have got from the Five Companies in Hawaii to break the strike in Hawaii?

Father Paul says that he advised him to return into the Church where he would have the backing of fifteen million Catholics in this country. He turned it down. He didn't want any outside interests. He didn't want it, be it the ACTU or any other organization that might require a splitting of loyalties to the union that he had helped build up, of which he was so proud and which he felt himself so much attached to.

Mr. Michener says that if he had abandoned what he calls his Communistic affiliation he could have had Phil Murray's place, and he turned it down.

And then he is supposed to have sold out his union to a little scattered, beaten minority of 70,000 people divided over these whole United States. For what? So he could associate with Manning Johnson and Paul Crouch? So he could sit opposite the table and work out details with John Schomaker and Mervyn Rathborne? For those people he is willing to sacrifice himself and to run the risks and take the chances that he has been taking? That is what he is supposed to be. That is the power that he is supposed to be seeking. Even if the Communist Party had the power sufficient to drive this man from his allegiance to the union, the Communist Party would still have all those finks supporting it, relying upon it. No. He wasn't looking for [8195] power. He wasn't looking for money. There just is something wrong with him. He has a defect in his nature, a defect in his character, a self-destructive defect, a defect that characterizes and plagues every man who feels within himself that he is his brother's keeper.

There is a medieval story of some woman who stood in the marketplace at Antwerp and watched her husband burn to death at the stake. And after his ashes had dried, she went and she took some of them, took them home and sewed them into a bag and tied it around the neck of their little son, and he kept that bag around his neck all his life. And whenever he passed by oppression or injustice his father's ashes burned him and he could not find surcease from the burning until he went out and did something about it.

And somebody sewed that kind of a bag around Harry Bridge's neck. I hope it was Katie Dorgan. I hope that the Irish haven't lost all the warmth and sympathy that we once had for mankind in general. [8196]

We need Harry Bridges. The world needs people like Harry Bridges. We need him right here in California and in these United States. Perhaps if and when he is released from this burden, he can turn his eyes down to the disorganized people in the San Joaquin Valley, the richest valley in the world, where 13 children starved to death last year, and do something about it. Should we discourage him? It might be unpleasant. It might create violence. The black-banded vigilantes might be out again with the pickaxe handles. He knows something about how to handle those things. But we don't want violence, we don't want trouble! Well, it is hard to get by without it.

There is a story by Ariosto of a beautiful and beneficent fairy, who is condemned by some mysterious circumstance of her nature to spend a portion of her time in the guise of a hateful and venomous serpent. Those who sought to injure or destroy her while in this degraded condition were forever foreclosed from the benefits which she afterwards conferred. But to those who then recognizing her intrinsic goodness sought to protect her, she afterwards revealed herself in the beneficent and ethereal costume and form that was native to her; she followed them all their lives, showered them with blessings, made them fortunate in love and successful in war.

Such a spirit is that of human equality. At times it assumes hateful and venomous forms. It writhes, it hisses, it stings. But woe unto those who then seek to destroy and oppress [8197] it. And happy he who, realizing its essential goodness, protects it and deserves to share its blessings in the hour of its glory and triumph.

What he did, the sort of man he is, have been made manifest here. Then where is the prejudice against him? What does it stem from? Here after 15 years of diligent search, consulting God knows how many hundreds of people, and God knows how many rejected their offers and instructed them that they were on the wrong track with Harry Bridges, they are unable to dig up under bribery or coercion any but this small body of suspect men that they have brought up here.

Bob Robertson told you, and he could have been contradicted from the record, how the Lafollette Committee found that for a decade, powerful interests, powerful financial and industrial organizations, assisted by officers of the United States Government, had tried to destroy Harry Bridges, essentially, by building up a paid propaganda campaign of hate and vilification, accusing him of being a Communist; and that the newspapers had taken that up and spread it broadcast, so that it was untruthfully assumed by almost everybody that Harry Bridges was a Communist.

How could it fail? How could it fail that the suspicion and the belief would be engendered in people who innocently read those things? And how could it fail that persons of the caliber of Rathborne, Schomaker, people who were for sale [8198] to anyone and for any project, that they wouldn't see their way clear to take advantage of this and to build upon it the means of enriching themselves, as they have built it?

There hasn't been one word of credible evidence introduced here; and yet they go right ahead relying on the prejudice that has been created. They assume that people are like the little Jewish boy who, when his mother used to make a certain Yiddish dish called krepla, some kind of a little meat pie. The little fellow would get frightened and throw hysterics and go into a fit. So the woman took him to a psychiatrist. The psychiatrist suggested that she employ this device, that she have the little boy assist her in making this condiment without telling him what it was, and have him cook it, so that it was of his own manufacture. And then he would realize there was nothing harmful about it. So she got the little boy home and asked him if he wanted to help make something. He said yes, and they chopped the meat and the onions and spices and made the pastry, spread it out and put it in the oven, and she sat him down and said, "You read the funnybook and then don't let anyone open that oven, and you will see what is in there." So finally the dish was cooked and then the mother came in and she said, "Now, you look and see what it is." And she opened up the oven, and the little boy looked and said, "Oi, krepla!"

So it is the same way with Harry Bridges. Regardless of what the proof is, there are still people who will yell, "Oi, [8199] krepla!"

Now, you might be surprised, Mr. Donohue, to hear an Irishman knowing so many Jewish stories.

The explanation is rather a strange one. You see, while my immediate ancestors settled in Ireland and assumed the customs, the religion and even the names of the inhabitants, my remote ancestors were all Jews. I am descended in a direct line on both sides from Adam and Eve.

And finally, and ultimately, my friends, what is the crime that this man is accused of here? He comes in here, and it is pointed out the monstrous crime of which he is guilty. What is it? He wanted to be an American citizen! There is the bloody corpse, there is the outraged woman, child, the robbed people. That is it all. That's the heinous offense, that is the self-aggrandizement, that is the dishonesty and that is the corruption that Harry Bridges was guilty of. He wanted to be one of us. He had come over here, selecting this country of all those on the globe that he wanted to live on. The people whose spirit he most admired, the country he most admired. He wanted to be one of us. He wanted to be admitted to American citizenship, and that is the crime.

But it is said, he didn't want to be a patriotic American. He is trying to undermine our sacred institutions. Our sacred institutions—like the slums in Washington, the exploitation of men on the Pacific Maritime unions. He wanted to overthrow those excellent things. He is not a patriotic American. Why, [8200] there was so much patriotism going around here some time back, people military shoes and so forth, that I went home and broke out my old navy blues, with the firm intention of coming here in bell bottomed trousers. But the moths had done more to them than the termites have done to the underpinnings of Mr. Bridges, and I had to pass that up.

Patriotism. Samuel Johnson once said that patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel. All these people who got on the witness stand, like all the people in the past who have sent real patriots to the gallows and to the prison, called upon their patriotism to excuse their past villanies. Julius Stein, the art critic, who is a brother of that Gertrude Stein who used to write things like "A rose is a rose is a rose is a rose" in an essay discussing separating art from the people and not letting the mob mingle in with it and sully it, said that he had always discovered that those who spoke about the purity of art were like those who spoke about the sacredness of the flag, but loved neither the land nor the people.

There is a poem by Browning that you probably have all read, about Abou Ben Adhem, who woke one night and saw within his tent an angel writing upon a book of gold. He addressed the angel and said, "What is it you write?" And the specter said, "The name of those who love God." Abou said, "Am I one?" And he said, "No." "Well, at least, then," said the man, "write me as one who loves his fellow man." The angel wrote and [8201] vanished. The next night he reappeared with the tablet bearing the names of those who loved God, and lo, Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.

And some day when America starts to count her patriots, she isn't going to say, "How many times did you cry out, 'Fie, fie, Vishinsky,' or 'Let's go over and drop an atom bomb on those Russians.'" She is going to say, "What have you done for my children? What have you done for my poor and my outcast and my oppressed? What have you done for my starving and my homeless?" And then we will see how low down on the list Harry Bridges' name will fall.

Of course, there is this: His work in that direction is finished anyhow. You know, you have been told that pending right in this court, to go on after this case is finished, is a civil suit in equity, if you please,—"equity" is the term—to cancel his citizenship and deport him. We can't get any jury on that. There won't be any jury of American citizens trying that. That will be tried before a judge. I won't be here, of course. I won't be here. And I don't see how he can evade losing that suit. So if you don't like his policies and his principles and you want to get him out of here and you think that the work that he has done for the labor people of the Pacific Coast is something detrimental to the employers of America, why, you can console yourself that he won't be here much longer. They are going to do something like what they did [8202] with the English labor leaders. They will send him to Australia. They will send the American labor leader to Australia, too. And really, we hadn't expected that. We always looked upon Harry Bridges as part of the San Francisco scene. If you go out to some of these restaurants where they put pictures of people like Jimmy Rolph, et cetera, up on the walls, you generally find Harry Bridges' picture up there, too. You come to look at him with a sort of endearment, despite all of the aura of vilification that has been shed around him. [8202-A]

San Francisco has always been a city that has not been afraid of new ideas. It was not afraid of radicalism. We used to send people out of here to disseminate that kind of spirit throughout the rest of the nation. Mark Twain went out of San Francisco protesting bitterly against the injustices of mankind, but he did not know how to organize people. He did not know the answer to it. He only knew the question. His only answer would be the adoption of Schopenhauer's idea that the human race ought to finish itself. That was the only solution there was. And then there was Henry George, who went out of San Francisco with his single-tax philosophy and revolutionized the thinking of a generation, and with him there was a priest, Father McGlynn, who was unfrocked as a Catholic priest for his economic principles and afterwards restored to the grace of the Church and reinstated in his benefices. And we had Jack London, who also spread around a rough and virile curse upon all the things he saw about him, all the inequality, the injustices, but still knew not what to do except to write about it.

And I remember when I was a young fellow meeting old Father Peter York, an old man who came here from Ireland when he was a boy but brought Ireland with him. He never moved out except when he would move out to go down to the waterfront and lend his Leader in the same way the Communists lent the Western Worker as a propaganda agent and as a disseminator of [8203] information to the people of San Francisco as to what they were doing to their fellow men on the waterfront of San Francisco. So we have never been the sort of city that feared and dreaded the innovator, the radical, the man who asserted the dignity and quality of mankind.
